To the moſte puiſſaunt prince, and our moſte redoubted ſoueraigne Lord Edward the ſixthe, by the Grace of God King of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande, defendour of the faith, and on yearth next and immediatly vnder God, of the Churches of Englande and Irelande the ſupreme head, your moſte humble, louyng, and obedient ſubiecte, Nicolas Vdal wiſheth al grace and peace from God, with long and theſame moſte proſperous Reigne ouer vs, in all honour, health, and condigne felicitie.

MOſte noble and moſte worthie Soueraigne, it myght in me ſo baſſe and ſimple a perſone appeare no ſmall preſumption to write vnto your Emperiall Maieſtie, were not the cauſe of our publique gratulacions ſo iuſt and ſo greate, that no manne, what euer he bee, hauyng occaſion to wryte, maye thynke hymſelfe boyde of crymefik he ſhoulde omytte to declare and teſtifie the vnſeinable comforte and ioye, whiche your vnmeaſurable moſte louyng and obedient ſubiectes, daily more and more doe take of your Maieſties ſinguler good proceadynges and moſt excellent towardneſſe. For where, by ꝑ ſpace of many yeres vntil it pleaſed the goodneſſe of God to ſende you vnto vs, the earneſte prayers of all Englande was that we might haue a Prynce: and after the tyme of your natiuitie, whan God had ſo graciouſly heard our petitions, we ernſtly prayed that ye myght haue grace to folowe the godly ſteppes and proceadynges of your moſte noble father: euerye man ſeeth nowe in your Maieſtee ſuche towardenes of vertue and godly zele, that we haue conceyued no leſſe then an vndoubted hope ꝑ ye wyll (by Goddes gouernaunce) ferre paſſe your ſaied father, to whom our daily wyſhinges and prayers thought it enough to haue you equall. We all ſee in your highneſſe ſuche liuely ſparkes of vertue and Chriſtian regiment toward, that we cannot but thynke Englande the moſte fortunate Royalme that euer was, to whome God hath geuen ſuche a kyng, as in his minoritye of tendre babehood, learneth to haue mynde on his funccion, and to conſidre whole myniſtre he is. If Royalmes (after the ſaiyng of Plato) are than and neuer els in bliſſed ſtate, whan eyther Philoſophiers, that is to ſaye, ſuche as knowe and loue God, doe reigne ouer theſame, or els the kynges geue themſelues to philoſophie, that is to ſaye, to the due knowledge of God, to the diſcipline of vertue, and to the vpryght execucion of their office towardes all people: howe happye are we Engliſhmen of ſuche a kyng, in whole chyldehood appereth as perfecte grace, vertue, godly zele, deſire of literature, grauitie, prudence, iuſtice, & magnanimitie, as hath heretofore been found in kinges of moſt mature age, of ful diſcrecion, of auncient reigne, and of paſſing high eſtimacion? But ſuche is the goodneſſe, of God, that to a people eagerly hongreyng and thyrſting his iuſtice, earneſtly ſekyng the wayes of his trueth, tendrely enbrayeng his moſte holy woorde, readily acceptyng the grace of his gholpel, wyllyngly conformyng themſelfes to the ſincere doctryne of his commaundementes, he forgeateth not to geue a ſapient kyng and gouernour. And that God hath of a ſinguler fauoure and mercye towardes this Royalme of Englande ſente youre grace to reigne ouer

ys. ꝑ thyng selfe by the whole processe doeth declare: the summe whereof I shal in a shoꝛt discourse no moꝛe but briefly touche & passe ouer, lest I might seme rather to haue sought an occasiõ in the waye of flatery to extolle you and youꝛ pꝛogenie, then as this pꝛesent cause enfoꝛceth me, to geue due testimonie of the trueth. In dede youꝛ singular excellẽcie in al kindes of pꝛincely towardenesse is such, ꝑ no place, no tyme, no cause, no booke, no person either in publique audience oꝛ els in pꝛiuate cõpaygnie maketh any mencion of youꝛ Maiestie, but he thynketh hymselfe euen of a veꝛay conscience bound to powdꝛe the same wt̃ manyfold pꝛaises of youꝛ incõparable vertues & giftes of grace. All which pꝛayses & magnifying though they bee in dede muche inferioꝛ to youꝛ meste woꝛthye desertes hytherto, yet youꝛ maiestie muste take and repute, not as a matter of insolence by youꝛ moste louyng and faithful subiectes mynistred vnto you, but rather as a thyng wꝛought in them by the instincte of god, to admonisshe you of the Regal estate that he hath cãlled you vnto: not as a pꝛouocatiõ of woꝛdelye gloꝛying in youꝛ self, but as an instrumente of admonicion to continue you in remembꝛaunce of thankes geuing, and of discharging youꝛe office: not as the baites of flatery meaning to fede youꝛ Maiestie in any concepte of pꝛyde, but rather as a glasse wherein to beholde youꝛ self what ye are, and how ye ought to continue: not as the pleasaunt tickeling oꝛ clawyng of adulacion, but rather as a caucion that ye dooe nothyng in all youꝛ life whereby ye maye bee founde oꝛ thought vnwoꝛthie the laude that is geue youꝛ: and finally not as a nourishmente of any humaun vanitie, but rather as a spuꝛ of exhoꝛtacion, not onely to beware that ye goe not backe, ne degenerate, oꝛ decline fꝛom the godly tꝛade of religiõ, of vertue, of litteꝛature, of pꝛudẽce, of benignitie, of iustice, of pꝛincely regiment that ye are nowe entred into: but also that ye pꝛoceede as ye haue begconne, and still goe foꝛwarde encreasyng in all godlinesse, that youꝛ pꝛocedynges and consummacion mate bee aunswꝛable to youꝛ moste pꝛincely and Christian begynnynges. Neyther is there any subiect of youꝛs woꝛthie life, whiche woulde to any other ende oꝛ purpose, attempt to magnifye you in thys tendꝛe age, but in hope, that if ye bee not alreadye come to the perfection pꝛopouned vnto you, ye wyll labour and contende (as age maye suffꝛe,) to gꝛowe and reache vnto it. Foꝛ if Philip of Macedonie, being an ethnike and a pagane kyng, when he was ratled at and muche euil spoken of by the Athenienes, toke theꝛeof occasiõ well to reigne & gouerne his people, all sayng himself to bee enforced and cõstreigned theꝛũto, ꝑ he might pꝛoue his enemyes vntrue men of their repoꝛtes: howe muche moꝛe necessitie of well doyng is incumbent to youꝛ highnesse, that ye maye in tyme comyng, verifie the pꝛaises and cõmendacions, w̃ hiche the publique consent of the woꝛlde dooeth nowe attribute vnto you. Howebeit we youꝛ moste feythfull louyng subiectes dooe nothyng doubte, but that God beeyng the geuer of all good gyftes, the fathe of all mercie, and the God of all coumfoꝛte, who of his infinite goodnesse hath pꝛounded you to reigne ouer vs, wyll also in suche wyse diꝛecte all youꝛ wayes, that he wyll euydentely declare hymselfe by his eternall wysedome, and by his counsayll inscrutable, to haue purposely oꝛdeyned and appoynted you to dooe high thynges, whome he hath by his myghtifull arme so woondefully sent. Foꝛ where youꝛ moste noble fathe of famous memoꝛie King Henry the eyght beeyng

otherwyse by al tokens of natural constitucion, a man hable and also likely to haue chyldren, had alreadye by the twoo moste faire blossomes and moste fresshe floures of the world, the lady Maries Grace, & the lady Elizabethes Grace, your Highnesses moste noble and moste dere issue, yet kinyng, declared himselfe apte to be verye fruitefull of procreacion: yet had he continued eight and twentie yeres kyng of this Royalme, ere he had any sequme in lawfull matrimonie begotten, to whome he myght leaue the succession of this his Emperiall crowne and sceptre. In the meane tyme kyng Henry as a moste vigilaunt pastour ceaseth not with perpetuall trauayll to procure for the commodities and wealth of Englande, he ceaseth not by moste politique and moste holsome lawes to prouide for the establishyng of Englande in peace and tranquilitie. And because by the diligent readyng and meditacion of holy Scriptures, he founde and obserued the true blissynges of God, and the fountayne of al grace and prosperitie to proceede of the knowleage of God, and the due obseruacion of his lawes, lyke a moste christian Prince and a true defendour of the fayth, he conuerted and employed al his studie and cogitacions to the redresse of such abuses in religion, as by the moste corrupte doctrine of the Romishe papacye had by degrees crepte into Christes churche, and preualeyng throughe continuaunce of yeres, were nowe so confirmed and established throughout all partes of Christendome, that the Romishe Nabugodonozor held vs in foure subiection, then euer was Israell holden in the captiuitie of olde Babilon, and so shoulde we haue stil continued, had it not pleased almightie God of his botomlesse mercie, to reise vp a Christian Cyrus your moste puissaunt father, to restore vs agayne to our freedome in Christes bloud. For the Romishe Nabugodonozor had ouerwhelmed and peruerted the holy scriptures of God to the establishyng and maintenaunce of his blurped supremitie clymed so high: that he was not nowe content to sitte in the chaire of Moses, but had moste blasphemously exalted himselfe aboue all that is called God, that is to say, had made Goddes worde frustrate, that his moste corrupte and moste pestilente doctrine myght take place. He had by his detestable inuencions caste such a foggie misse of ignoraunce ouer Goddes moste holy Bible, he had with his Phantasticall interpretacions in suche wyse polluted the sinceritie of Christes doctrine, he had so infected the clere fountayne of Goddes woorde with the fuddes of humayne traditions, and the dregges of vayn ceremonies, he had by meane of papisticall trompetrie so peruerted the vnderstanding of holy scriptures, he had so defaced the puritie of the faith with the beggerly patched cloke of superstitious woorkes not commaunded by Goddes lawe, he had so perplexed the grace of the ghospell with the false feigned merites and woorkes of supererogacion, he had so mangled the Christian profession with mo then an hundred soondry sectes of counterfaicte clopstreers of Antechristes owne generacion, keping like idle lorreers and verat vanes, and vnder the pretence of religion deuouryng the common wealth that woulde maynteyn theim, he had so oppressed the true religion and worshyppyng of God wyth pilgremages to dead stockes and stones of mannes handie woorke, with transferryng the honoure whiche was due to God alone, vnto Sainctes and to feigned miracles, wyth other kyndes of idolatry innumerable, and wyth a purgatorye of materiall fyer, and (to make some ende of speakyng in a matter of it selfe infinite,) he had so clene subuerted al good and godly conuersacion and doctrine: that Satan had no more power of the worlde whan Christe came downe to yearth for to redeme mankynde, then religion was nowe brought oute of frame by the tyrannye of the Romyshe Babilon, nor God and hys soonne Jesus Christe any where lesse founde, than whan he was moste busshly named and spoken of in pulpites. Keeping under the title and name of Christe, the moste eagre aduersarye of Christe and his ghospell, he toyned hymselfe to the Philistines, and beyng their Goliab more nere sixtene cubites high, neuther feared, ne shamed to shewe hymselfe in playne battayl of defiaunce, ne spared to open hys blasphemous mouthe, ne to drawe hys tyrannous swoorde, ne to shake his huige murderyng speare, agaynst the true Israelites of Christes litle selie flocke, and moste presumpteously to vraggue agaynst all that euer wolde profesſe the syncere and vpryght doctrine of Gods woorde, tyll it pleased God to reyse vp vnto vs an Englishe Dauyd your moste noble father, who without anye armoure or weapon of yron and stele, without any harneſſe of mannes makyng, without displeighing any banners in araye of humaine battaile, shoulde out of the slyng of his Regall auctorytie, cast the corner stone of Goddes woorde, whiche lyghtyng vpon the forhead of the sayd Goliab, felled his papacie stone dead, & crushed it to poudre, neuer to be hable any more to nope or to face Englyshe Israel. Out sayd Dauid kyng Henry the eyght had learned by the boke of Deuteronomie, in whiche booke the feithfull seruaunt of God Moyses charged that whomsoeuer Israel shoulde make kyng ouer them, thesame from the tyme that he wer sette in his Regall tyrone, should all the dayes of his lyfe haue continuall meditation, and should styll reade therin, to the entente he myght learne to feare the Lorde his God, for to kepe all the woordes of hys lawe, and his ordinaunces for to dooe them, and that he should not turne from the commaundementes eyther to the ryght hand or to the left, that bothe he and his children myght prolong their dayes in his kyngdoome: he hadde (I saie) learned in the same booke, on the one syde the blessynges of god promysed to all suche paynes as on theyr owne parties wolde for the lone and feare of god walke vpryghtly in the execution of the sayde commaundementes, and wolde partly by theyr good exaumple prouoke theyr subiectes to dooe the same, and partly by due execution of iustice make them ashamed and also afeard to swerue or declyne from the lorde their god: and on the other syde the terrible malediccions and plagues of gods wrathe, threatned to all suche as neglected the vprypght obseruyng of all his preceptes and wayes. He loued the goodnesse of God, and feared his stroke, he sawe religion to bee ferre out of frame, he sawe some parte of his moste earnest trauailes and endeuour to sette Englande in moste quiet and blissefull state, to fayl of condigne effecte through defaulte of reformacion in matters of religion. He saw & found by experience of his owne manyfolde moste princely enterpryses, the onely cause why Christian Kyngdomes are plagued wyth warres, derthes, famyns, pestilences, & other mortall extremyties, to come of Gods indignacion, because the worlde was so ferre gone astraigh from Christe, that nothyng was nowe wearied so odious or detestable as his holy woorde, nothyng reputed so blasphemous, as Christes holy ghospell, nothyng so lyght estimed as Christes blood and passion. He sawe the onely waye to Goddes fauour to bee the enbraceyng of his holy Scriptures, the drounyng wherof had enforced God to power his indignacion vpon the Christian worlde. He sawe and well perceyued cepued that God of his mercie was wylling to ceasse his wrath and vengeaunce, if the Christian people wolde returne to hym. He perceyued God to offre his grace vnto the worlde by openyng their eyes, if leauyng theyr errour and ignorauncе they wolde enbrace the clere lyght of the ghospell. He sawe moreouer that his moste louyng subiectes of Englande, (whome his godly exaumple had prouoked to tendre and seke the glorye of God) dyd nowe houngre and thirste the rightcousnesse of God, and the knowleage of his worde. He playnly sawe that no waye there was to a reformation, but by this onely meane, yf the autozitie and vsurped supremitie of the See of Rome were extirped, abolished, and clene extincte. For he sawe his countrymen the Englishe Israelites to bee holden in suche extreme bondage wythin the Romithe Egypte, that there was no hope of deliuerauncе, but by the onely power and mightifull arme of God reysyng vp some Moses that wolde in the face of that same moste cruell Pharao require that Israell myght bee freely leat goe. The huige seuenfold headed dzaguon was to the simple inferiour people, suche an obstacle, that they myght not come to Christe, and to all Christen princes suche a terrour, that they durste not. This dzaguon beſydes the monstreous hissing of his curles and excommunications, and beſides the contagious infeccion of idolatry and superstition, wherewith he had by his whelpes the cancarde papistes so ablasted the worlde, that he had enwrapped and dzowned all Christendome in blindnesse and errour: he hadde also a moztall styng in his taill, wherewyth he ceassed not by all kyndes of deathes and tozmentes, to destruye and mourdze as manye as wolde once open theyr lyppes agaynste his moste detestable and moste blasphemous abominacions. This dzaguon ceassed not continually to persecute the woman clothed in the sunne, that is to saye, Christes dere spouse the churche of England, but as a rampyng and rozyng lyon, he stoode euer ready watchyng that he myghte deuoure ster chyldzen the Christian flocke, whiche she nowe groned to bzyng footh to Christe, had not the Englishe Michael kyng Henry the eight taken in hande to fight agaynst the sayde dzaguon, and been strengthened of God wyth hys Aungelles the lordes, and godlye prelates, to caste the sayde dzaguon that olde serpente and his Aungels oute of Englande.

This was the great harlotte that sitteth vpon manye waters, wyth whome the kynges of the yearthe haue committed foznication, and the inhabiters of the yearthe been made dzounken wyth the wyne of her foznication: the woman sittyng vpon the rosecouloured and tenhozned beaste full of names of blasphempe, she sitting araied in purple and rosecolour, and decked with golde, precious stones, perles, and in her hande a cuppe of golde full of abhominacions and filthines of her foznication, and in her fozehead a name of great misterie written, great Babylon the mother of whoredome and abhominacions of the yearthe: and the same whoze dzounken with the bloude of Saynctes, and with the bloude of wytnesses of Jesus. Thys was the huyge monstre Hydra, (to whome the poetes attribute seuen heades, some eyghte, and some an hundzed heades) whome aswell king John of Englande, as also soondzie other Cristen princes had attempted to banquithe, but as soone as they had cutte of one heade, thzee other heades grewe vp fozit, so that euerye wounde that was geuen him was a moze confirmation and encrease of his strength, vntyll our Hercules kyng Henrye the eyghte perceyuyng that no power, no puissaunce, no weapon was hable to confounde hym sauyng onelye the consumyng fyer of Goddes woorde, prouided the Byble to bee sette forth in the Englische tounge, and to bee sette vp in euerye churche, where it myght bee read of his people. Long time endured this conflycte betweene our Englyshe Hercules and the Romishe Hydra ere he could bee destruied, so fast grewe vp a moze numbze of serpentine heades, whan any one was cut of. For besydes the manyfolde moste monstruous heades of Idolattre, Hypgremages, superstitions, counterfaicte religions, and innumerable abuses mo, whiche kyng Henry had to cutte of, his whelpes the indurate generation of papistes deuised all meanes possible to kepe hys auctozitie styll in Englande, ne lefte any engin vnattempted to staigh and lette the abolishyng of hys vsurped power, abusyng the symple people wyth all kyndes of deluslon and iuggleyng of counterfaicte myracles, of feigned visions, of lyyng in traunces, of raptions euen vnto the thyrde heauen, of sophistycall learning, of holy contestations, of subtilly inuented prophecies, of bolde comminations and threateninges, of voices auouched to haue come from heauen, of peruertyng the sence of scripture to maintcine his power, of wryting bookes in derogacyon of the kynges proceedynges.

And to the ende there shoulde not lacke any kinde of wickednesse that the saied Hydra and his adherentes, moonkes, fryers, and other clopstrers were hable to worke, he founde meanes belydes many other stozmes of forrayne warres and conspiracies, to ferre to abuse the credulitie of the simple ignorannte people, that he brought theim halfe in a detestacion and hatered of Gods woorde, and seduced theim to aduenture wyth a lytle blaste of sedicion, to disturbe the cogitacions of suche a noble and a good kyng, beeyng than moste earnestelye yea (I maye saye) onely lette in studyeng for the establishemente and continuacion of peace and tranquilitie in this Royalme for euer. All whiche terrours coulde not appalle kyng Henryes moste stoute courage, but that he wente thoroughe with the reformacion, whiche the spirite of God so wrought in hys harte and conscience, that he sawe it to bee necessarie, and hymselfe to bee chosen of God, to bee the instrumente therof.

All this whyle Englande thoughe not yet berap wpllyngly ne vniuersally receyuyng the grace of the ghospell offreed vnto vs, together wyth the moste heauenly iewell and treasure of Goddes holy scripture, in the mother language: yet neuertheleste (as oure partyes and moste bounden dueties were) tenderlye consideryng the moste vigilaunte care and studie, and moste earneste trauayle of oure moste gracious soueraigne employed for our behoute, and daily bestowed in forterlyng all parties of the Royalme agaynst the malicious assaultes and conspiracies of the said Romishe Hydra, or any other enemies by his procurement: Englande (I saye) ceassed not with continuall prayer to beseche the goodnesse of almyghtye God, to rewarde the godlye mynde and doynge of our kyng nowe wearyng oute hys bodye in trauayllyng for vs, and spendyng his lyfe in procuryng for our wealth and safegarde, wyth a soonne, to whome, whan he shoulde departe hence to heauen, he myght safely committe and leaue his crowne, with the gouernaunce of vs his moste dere beloued subiectes: Thus did all Englande by the space of many yeres perliste in continuall prayer: but almyghtie God wpllyng to shewe for what personnes he reserueth hys blyssynges, as soone as we had throughe better instruccyons conformed our selues to the expulsyng of the Romyshe Antichryste, to the gladde endeaeryng enbzacyng of hys woozde, and to the recepuyng of his ghospell in all partyes: immediately heard our lamentable peticions, and sent your most noble mother Quene Jane of famous memozie, whom (as it maie be thoughte) hys pzoupidence and counsailles vnscrutable had purposely ozdeyned, prepared, & caused to be borne foz none other office, but that she myght bee moste dere wife to suche a kyng, and mother to suche a Pzynce. Foz as soone as she had in moste lawfull mattymonye bzought foozth your grace, she departed this worlde: as thoughe she should haue saied: I haue dooen the offyce þ I was borne foz, nowe fare ye well. The freashe flouze of my pure virginitie, I haue moste safely committed to my moste dere spouse kyng Henry foz to kepe, and to you his moste feithfull louyng subiectes, I leaue behynde me my onely soonne, the iewell that ye haue so long desired, so ioze longed foz, and so often craued of God. As log as ye shall tendze his welfare, ye shall satisfye my desyze, whome I bzoughte foozthe foz that purpole. If it maye please God to sende them longe lyfe, I haue the fruitfull fruicte of my trauaple, I haue hy deathe abundauntly recompensed, and my comme emong you euen to my mynde supplyed. I haue nowe no moze to dooe on yearth. If I haue demerited any loue oz thanke at your handes, bestowe it wholly on my soonne, whan I am gone from you? Thus departed the moste vertuous ladye Quene Jane, whole deathe we haue the lesse cause to lamente, because that by hope we are assured, that she is gone from peyne to ioye, from care to reste, frō sozowe to blisse, frō this trāsitozie world to immozталitie. We haue cause to suppose that God foz the exceadyng great loue and fauoure that he beareth towardes Englande, whan she had bzoughte foozthe to the worlde suche a soonne, tooke her awaye immediately of purpole to rewarde her with a croune eternall, foz whome all tempozall and wozldely rewardes were incomparably ouer basse, ne any yearthly croune sufficient: so that to lamente her, is rather to enuye her felicitie and blisse. And the beeyng nowe in heauen with her moste desired ioye Chzistes, muttech and requiretb vs that our beneuolente loue and affection, whiche muste haue been deuided betwene you and her, maye bee wholy transferred and bestowed on your highnesse, whome to bzyng foozthe she was not onely well contented, but also muche desyzous to dye. So that we are all double bounde to loue youre Maiestie, fyzste because youre moste dere mother was taken from vs ere she myght receyue any fruicte of our grate and thankfull herres foz bzyngyng foozth to her coūtrey suche a soonne, and than muche moze, because that in your moste Royall persone is reposed al the wozldely ioye, coumfozte, hope, and expectacion bothe of vs that are nowe liuyng (whom I truste your Grace shall surviue,) and also of our posteritie. Neyther can I iustely affyrme her to be dead, that hath leafte behynde her suche fruicte of her bodye, whome to bzyng foozth (I dare auouche) she thaugh her death so well bestowed, that in cale she myght returne to lyfe again, and be in her former state of maydē & Quene, she would readily paryshez couenaūt with God, on theselame pzyce to bzyng foozth your Grace vnto her countrey. And so greate was the ioye and gladnesse of Englande in the natiuitie of your highnesse, that the weray pzouidence of God thought it necessarie to temper our immoderate mirth & reioycing with the death of your most vertuous mother (foz neuer was þ decease of any Quene in England moze lamēted) lest we myght haue ben so inebzyate with our vnestimable felicitie, þ theselame might haue made vs proud, and perchase haue bzought vs in suche flatterye of our selues, þ we would haue

forgotten, or perchaunce not acknowlaged no not espied you to bee sente unto vs aswell by the moste mightie and moste woondrefull power of Goddes hand, as also of his exceadyng mercie, and fauoure towardes Englande. He myghte haue taken her awaye ere she had cum to the bearing or conceiuing of you in her wombe, if he had not specially loued and tendred our good king Henry and vs. It was in his hande and pleasure to haue taken you bothe (whiche thynge god forbydde) if he had not by leauing the better of the twoo with vs, been willing bothe manyfestelye to declare his almyghtifull power ioyned wyth hys moste gracious mercie and tendre compassion towardes England, and also to bridle the insolencie, which by hauyng you both still wyth vs (suche is mannes frailte, and readinesse to swerue) he paraduenture foresawe, would haue growen in vs. God in takyng awaye her at your birthe did plainlye ministre unto vs, both an earnest warnyng, and also a full prouocation of vnfeaynt prayeng for the life and prosperous continuaunce of your Grace being of nature and by the condicion of your birth, mortal as your mother was. The birth of your Maiestie was the more sweete, because it was so long wished for, so long looked for, and so long reaued ere it came. A great benefite is muche the sweeter that it is not obteyned without great and long suit. The pleasure of a good turne is much diminished whan it is at the first obteyned. The desire fulnesse of our myndes muche augmenteth and encreseth our pleasure. The admittion also and (as who shoulde saye) the sawcyng of pleasures with some kind of misfortune either afore going or in the middes adtempered, gracetly altogether, and maketh it the more acceptable. Honye is waloweish and ouercasteth the stomake, if it be plentcously taken by it selfe alone: but if wyth vinegre it be made eagre douce, than is it not onely delectable and pleasaunt of relice, but also comfortatiue and holsome too. The deathe of the moste vertuous lady and moste worthye Quene Jane your mother, beyng ioyned with your birth, made such a temperature of sorowe and ioye together, that bothe our mourneyng whiche otherwyse shoulde scarce haue founde anye ende, was soone mitigated: and also our moste tendre desire of enioyeng your Maiestie, much the more encreased. We had so long groned, we hadde so long cryed to God for a Prynce: that except he hadde in the moste desired birthe of the same, aspersed the deathe of your swoote dere Mother: we shoulde by our immoderate felicitee haue tempted, and prouoked hym to take you bothe from vs. It was hys goodnesse that woulde not suffre vs to fall. For muche sooner and sorer doeth immoderate ioye drounde manues reason, then immoderate doloure. Thus than (as I haue sayd) as soone as we willingly applyed our selfes aswell to ỹ crilling of al papistrie, as also to thembracing of the woorde of God, he immediately fulfylled and satisfyed our desyres by sending your Grace unto vs after a woondrefull sorte: as if he shoulde in playn wordes haue sayde: Now that ye haue gladly receiued my word, ye shal haue that whiche ye cannot but of my gyfte obteyne, that is to wete, a Prynce, and wyth him al worldely coumforte, ioye and securitie that ye maye wel perceiue both ỹ nothyng is impossible to God & also that if ye abyde in me, and my woordes abyde in you, alike what ye wyll, and it shalbee doen for you. When I saye, the woorde of God, ỹ law, the preceptes, or ỹ cõmaundemẽtes of God, I mene not fantastical dreames of mãnes inuenciõ (for these thynges are nothyng lesse thẽ ỹ woorde of God) but I mene the true & lively woorde of God conteyned in holy scriptures: I mene his holy gospel & testament, purely & sincerely taken without the venomous corruption of the pythie dregges, or of the sowre leauen of any the above reherced pestilences, accordyng as your moste noble father our late souereigne lorde kyng Henry the eight with vnestimable care, studye, and trauayll, mynded and labowred to haue it sette foorth, & to be daily preached and taught to hys people without any declynyng eyther to the ryght hande or to the left. Whiche thyng if he could not so throughly accomplishe as his moste earnestie hertes desyre was, I truste y almyghtie god, who hath prouided and kept vs your highnesse a moste worthye soonne to succede suche a worthye father, wyl by his especial grace illumine your herte to proceede in the • way of trueth whiche your father hath opened vnto you, & wyl geue you grace al thinges to perfecte whyche your father moste godly begāne to your handes. And although to mayntein, vphalde, & conserue y kyng Henry prepared and hath nowe lefte to your gouernaunce, is of it self so muche matter of immortall honour & renoume, y it wer enough for any kyng to doo: yet hath God prouided y ye shall not haue cause to fare as Alexāder the great conqueror, whan he considered the great & manyfold actes of his father Philip kyng of Macedonie, said: My father wil leaue nothing for me to doe. For god of a verate pitye that he had on kyng Henries vncomparable & the same vnceassāt trauayles for the publique behouk & welth of Englande long yeres sustained, tooke hym awaie from this troublesous worlde as soone as he had prepaired your Grace in a readinesse by due succession of inheritaūce to receyue at his hādes y keepture & croune of his royalmes & dominions. God by a special dispēsatiō breake of y course of his life ere al thinges wer brought to a ful perfectiō, because he would declare hymselfe to haue appoynted your Maiestie, not to lyue altogether in a carelesse supinitie, but in a perpetual exercise of al princely vertues, y ye might consūmate & finishe suche regall enterpryses as he begoonne, partely in other worldly affaires, & especially concernyng y redresse of abuses in matters of religiō. Kyng Hēry was the Moyses who God elected stoutly to deliuer vs out of the hādes of y Romishe Pharao, & to conueigh vs throughe the read sea of the wauerynge iudgemētes of mē, & the troubleous sourges of y popishe generatiō swelling & ragepng against him, and throughe the wildzeneste of wepng lefte alone destitute of y assistēce or counforte of other Christē princes, whiche in this so noble and so godly an enterpryse might laudably haue sette in foote w him, & throughe this wildzenes to conducte vs as ferre as y lāde of Moab: but peace the Iosue, whom god hath appoynted to bryng vs into the lande of promissiō, flowyng and renyng wyth milke and honey, & to sette vs Englishe men in the lande of Canaan whiche is the sincere knoweleage & the free exercise of Goddes • moste holy woorde. He was the Moyses, who by goddes ordeinaunce & dispensation wrote the booke of Deuteronomie, whā he caused the holy Byble to bee turned into Englishe, & laied it in the tabernacle, whā he cōmaūded thesame to bee laied in al & singular the churches throughout his Royalmes & dominiōs: chargepng the Lordes, y is, the Bysshops, Pastours, & Curates, in the time of the free yere, y is, at al due & conuenient seasons, to read and declare it vnto al y people gathered together, both mē, women & chyldren, yea & the straungiers y were in any his cities, y they might heare, learne, and feare their lorde God. But where some of the priestes y lōnes of Leui, had now in these last yeres throughe their raglepng, their falsse packpng, and their playn sorcerie bewitched kyng Henry with a wrong persuasion, & had so craftily cōpaced and conueighed the matter, ꝯ vnder the pretence & coulour of religion, they kept the worde of God frō the eyes and eares of the people, beatyng his moste faythfull louyng subiectes frō the knowleage therof, wyth a mortal whyppe made of fyre deadly knotted thordes, & in the meane tyme kept the booke of the lawe hydde, vntyll they had so ferre obscured, derkened, & oppressed ꝯ worde, ꝯ all thynges were replete with errour and insincerite: it now euidently appereth your Maiestie to be the faythfull Iosias, in whose tyme the booke of ꝯ law is found out in the house of the Lorde, & by your moste godly iniunccions read in the hearyng of all your people, and a couenaunt made with the Lord ꝯ they shal walke after the Lord, & shal kepe his commaūdementes wt al their hertes & al their soules, whervnto all your people moste willyngly dooeth consent by glad receyuyng of all suche good ordre & reformacion as by your Maiesties moste godly direccion is mynistred vnto them. Your most noble father was the Dauid, who of a good hert & zele entended, yea & made moche to build an house for the Lordes name: but we all trust your highnes to be the Salomon, whō god hath appointed and by special dispensacion elected to builde & finisshe an house for him for euer, by restorying & establishyng the true Christian religion. Which thyng ꝯ your Maiestie maye haue the grace & spirite to doe, ye lacke not the perpetual wyshinges and prayers of al your most louyng and obedient subiectes. The world seyng these your moste princely begynnynges in this your tendre yeres of childehood, is confirmed in a sure hope and expectacion ꝯ your Maiestie wil in processe of time growe to bee in this behalfe a verye Phenix emong Christian princes, & a mirrour and spectacle vnto them all. And certes your Maiestie is in muche other case the other kinges of England before your tyme haue been. For where (the frowardnes or fortune beyng suche, that moste parte of thynges lyke as they are through her aide and fauoure eaſie to bee achieued, so the same through her malignaunt wickednes are moze easie to be lost again) it deserueth no lesse but rather moze glorie wil to kepe and maintein thynges wel gotte, the to acquyre moze to it: some of your moste worthie progenitours haue had a readye path-way to renoume, and haue had but an easie trauail to succede & folow ꝯ prince nerte afore goyng in the laudable exaūple of politique regimente, of worthye enterpryses, of Marciall prowesse, of noble but yet common actes of chiualrie, of notable and famous enterpryses, but yet enclosed within the copmpace of mannes reache. But your grace succeadyng Henry the eight, shall not be hable to satisfie nor aunswere the earnestie expectacion of the worlde, onlesse ye doe excell. Nothing maie serue your grace but singularitie. Ye haue in his exaumple suche a marke set vp vnto you, as without the sweat and labours of Hercules (of whō the Poetes feigne, ꝯ he boze vp and stayghed heauen self wt his shoulders) ye shall not be hable to clyme vnto. Ye must surmount and passe a kyng whiche was in his tyme peerlesse, & a matter of publique admiracion to the vniuersall world. And suche are your begynnynges alreadye, aswell in Marciall chiefalrye, as also in politique ordinaunce of ciuile lawes at home, aswell in destruying the image of Baall, and rootyng vp of al Idolatry, as also in settyng a ferther good ordre for matters of religion: that it wil not suffice if ye bee but equal to him. King Hēry the eight besides his felicitie & luckie fortune in al his most Regal enterprises aswel by martial chiefalrie as also i politike gouernaūce, besides his manyfold cōquestes and victories in Fraūce, Scotlande, Irelande, & els where, besides his vnestimable high triūphes, voiages, and actes doone

He was a continual welspyng fountayne of eloquence, a veray rare spectacle of humanitie, of ciuilytie of good nourture an absolute president, a speciall paterne of clemencie and moderacion, a worthie exaumple of regal iustice, a botomlesse spring of largesse and benignitie. He was in al the honest artes and faculties profoundely seen, in al liberal disciplines eguall with þ chiefest, in no kynd of litterature vnexpert. He was to þ world an ornamente, to his countrey a treasoure, to his frendes a coumfozte, to his foes a terroure, to his faithful and louing subiectes a tendze father, to innocentes a sure protectour, to wykkull malefactours a sharp scourge, to his common weale and good people a quiet hauen and ancoze of safegarde, to the distoonders of the same a torche of extermination, in hainous and intolerable crymes agaynst the publique weale a seuere iudge, in the lyks offences committed agaynst hymself a readye pozte & refuge of mercie, except to suche as woulde persiste vncozrigible. A man he was in al giftes of nature, of foztune, & of grace, peereles, & (shoztly to breake of in a matter of it selfe infinite,) a man aboue al prayses. Suche a king hath God sette vp before your Maiestie foz an exaumple, a spectacle, & a paterne of al princely vertues whome equally to matche, wil bee with the veray iesse that is looked foz of these your moste Regall & Christiã begynnynges in thys youre tendze age. ſeſſion of the twayn. Neither is there in this behalfe on our parties, your Maieſties moſte benevolent & faithful louing ſubiectes, any leſſe hope to be conceyued of you for that ỹ is to come, then we doe alreadie fele ſope and coumfoꝛte of that we ſee preſent. For ſuche excellent begynnynges beyng furthered by the publique and daily prayers of al your faythful & true hertes ſubiectes, cannot but haue ſtil better and better degrees of continuaunce and encreace, eſpecially hauyng ſuche noble and ſapient Counſaillours as ithath pleaſed God to pꝛouide for you, and to geue you in this your tendre babehood. For that all ſuche well doogynges in young kynges, and by reaſon therof proſperous ſucceſſe in all thynges, proceedeth of faithfull and godly Counſaillours: it maie euidently appeare by the notable exaumples of the twoo younge kinges of Iſraell Manaſſes and Iohias. Whoſo wyll peruſe the bookes of the kynges, ſhall fynde that from the begynnyng of Achabs regyne vntill the tyme of good kyng Ezechias, true holineſſe, religion, ryght knowleage of God, yea and the verave mynde to woꝛke oꝛ ſeke Goddes gloyꝛe, lay as a thyng oppreſſed, reiected, buryed, and vtterely extynct, and in ſtede of Godlineſſe reigned al iniquitie: in lieu of true knowlage, all was poſſeſſed with ignoꝛaunce and errour: in place of true wurſhyppyng of God, ſo ferre pꝛeuayled Idolatrye and contempte of Goddes lawes, that Iſraell paſſed the Gentyles not onely in theyꝛ owne gentyltie of wurſhypping Baal and many falſe Goddes, but alſo in al other kyndes of theyꝛ moſte deteſtable abhominacions. The crafty and ſubtile ſuggeyng of Baals pꝛieſtes, and of the falſe pꝛophetes foꝛ the aduauncyng of their owne lucre and eſtimacion, had vnder the coulour and pꝛetence of holyneſſe, and of religion, by litle and litle ſo allured, enueigled, coniured, and bewitched the pꝛinces: ỹ they were vtterly blynded and ſeduced to condeſcende to the wicked and couetous inuencions of the pꝛieſtes. Thy perſwaded the Princes to theyꝛ waies by policies, they beſtowed all theyꝛ cũning clergie, & woꝛkemãſhyp of peincted eloquence, vntyll they had peruerted them and drawen them clene a ſtraygh from all the wayes of the Lorde theyꝛ true God, well knowyng that the people, ſome foꝛ loue, ſome foꝛ feare, and ſome thꝛough craũple, would without any buſineſſe folowe the trace and ledyng of theyꝛ king & gouernour. They made the kynges & rewlers ſure on theyꝛ ſyde, well wetyng that the ſubiectes, ſome foꝛ obedience ſake of theyꝛ owne accorde would, and the reſt by their cruell ſtraſes myght by tyranny be enforced to drawe after theyꝛ Pꝛinces line. Whereof the auncient pꝛouerbe ſayeth, that euery kyng is to his ropaime and ſubiectes cyther a ſinguler pꝛecious benefite, oꝛels a very pernicious deſtruccion, becauſe ỹ ſuche as euery kyng is, ſuche wil his people bee. Wherfoꝛe lyke as a wrete oꝛ a wolle ſtandyng in a bodyes face is a moꝛe blemyſhe, a greatter deſoꝛmitee, & a wurſe diſgracing, then if it ſtode in ſome pꝛiuie place of the body, where cyther the pꝛouidẽce of nature hideth it, oꝛ mãnes own reuerẽce and good pꝛouiſion doeth kepe it ſecrete: ſo is a vyce oꝛ any euil qualytie a moꝛe fault & greatter diſhonour in a Pꝛince, then in an other pꝛiuate perſone, becauſe that euery his ſaying, doyng, yea & euery his looke & geſture, is taken vp as a publique exaumple and paterne foꝛ all hys ſubiectes to folowe: ſo that the kynges of Iſraell could not be euill, but to the verale pernycious enſaumple and coꝛruption of al theyꝛ ſely people. But at length came good kyng Ezechias, of whom the Scripture in his due commendacion teſtifieth, that he did that pleaſed the Lorde in al thyng, lyke to his foꝛefather and pꝛogenitour Dauyd.

Hys

His well doynges he begoonne with the redreſſe of religion, and the extirpyng of idolatry vp by the rote. For whyle idolatry reigned, nothing could he doe ꝑ myght be pleaſyng to God. Fyrſt of all therefore he put awaye the hil alters, & brake the images & cutte downe ꝑ groues, and all to brake the brasen serpente that Moyſes had made. (For vnto thoſe dayes ꝑ chyldren of Iſrael dyd burne ſacrifice vnto it.) He trusted in the Lorde God of Iſrael, he claue to the Lorde and departed not from hym, but kepte his commaundementes, and the Lorde was with hym, ſo that he proſpered in all thynges whiche he tooke in hande. &c. Thus, duryng ꝑ time of his reygne by ꝑ ſpace of twēty nine yeres, he renewed religion & reſtored the lawe of God to his perfection: he reduced his people to the trade of holy and vpryght converſacion in the ſyght of God, of walkyng in the commaundementes of the Lorde, deteſting al Idolatrye & abhorryng al ſuche abomynacions as myght iuſtely prouoke his wrathe & vengeaunce. All this whyle the ſubtyl & craftye falſe prophetes and prieſtes of Baall diſſembled & played mum, they folowed the neceſſitee of the time, and for feare of the iron rodde, did as the worlde vnder ſuche a kyng required. But as ſoone as good kyng Ezechias was once dead, leauyng behynde hyme his ſoonne Manaſſe, a chylde of twelue yeres olde to reygne by ſucceſſion euer Iſrael in his ſtede, than the falſe prophetes and prieſtes of Baall thought it a litte and prayſes tyme to ſhewe themſelues in theyr owne colours. As ſoone as by his death a gappe was opened to theyr falſe iuglyng, to theyr craftye practyſes, to their wyly diſpleſes, and theyr ſubtyle conueyghaunce, they anon ſhewed theyr affections as they were. They leat not ſlyppe theyr occaſion to reduce Iſraell to the former trade of booyng ſacrifice to the Idolles whiche they had learned in the tyme of wicked Achab, wherby theyr lucre and aduauntage hadde a long ſeaſon come in thicke, and vnder Ezechias vtterlye decaied, in whole dayes they were of force compelled to haue the lawe of God in honour, and the ſame onely to lyue and to teache to the people. In ſtede prieuely they ſtyll cōtinued moſt deteſtable & moſt pernicious fauourers, mayntayners and worſkers of Idolatrye, though they had for the tyme thrugh hypocriſy and for feare of puniſhement interrupted theſame. But ꝑ youth of Manaſſe beyng a babe eaſye to be inticed allured and trayned to the luſtes of ſenſualitie, thrugh flatterynge perſuaſions, and beyng deſtitute of fayethfull and godly counſaillours that might and wouldo ꝓtect his tendre childehood, and bryng hym vp in the knowledge of God, in the way of his preceptes, was for the ſayde falſe Prophetes, and couetous prieſtes of Baall a mete praye. Hym therefore they enueygled w̄ many ſweete woordes of flatterye (doubte ye not) with many woordes of coumforte, with muche circumſtaunce of glorious peincted eloquence, with allegeyng of many politique conſiderations, with many ciuyll reſpectes of ꝑ ſtate of the worlde ꝑ than was, with many gaie and ſolemne promiſes of innumerable and theſame right high commodities that ſhoulde thereby enſue to him and his common weale, with many aſſured warauntiſes of welth, peace and tranquilitie, if he would ble their counſayl in folowyng the wayes of wyle Achab, beyng (as they alleaged) a noble Prynce, and a politique wiſe man in folowing ꝑ trade of his forefathers, & not of ſuch a newefound teade of learnyng and religion as Ezechias had lately inuented & brought vp in Iſrael, to the great troublyng & diſquieting of himſelf, the grieuous annoyaūce and veracion of his ſubiectes, and the extreme perill of his cōmon weale. For Almanazar king of Aſſyria had in the daies of Ezechias come vp agaynst Samaria, and beleged it, and woonne it, and had carried awaye Israel into Assyria: and after him Sennacherib kyng of Assyria had cõe vp agaynst all ỹ strong cities of Juda, & had take them: albeit God by his power deliuered Ezechias & his people & Cities, & the Aũgel of the Lorde slewe of the proud blasphemous bragguig Assiriãs, an hũdred fowre score & fiue thousand at a clappe. By these meanes ỹ false prophetes & wicked prestes of Baall coũpace and weigh young Manasse though he succeded his owne father beyng so good & so godly a kyng as ỹ cryselle testimonie of holy scripture cõmendeth vñ these woordes, that after hym was none lyke hym emong all the kynges of Juda, neyther were there any suche before him: yet ỹ not withstãding by ỹ lyger-mouthed false prophetes, & by the couetous prestes of Baall through defaulte of good & godly Counsaylours, whome (doubte ye not but this wicked rable founde meanes to wring out of fauour, & to remoue awaye from the kynges presence) he was so coumpaced, beyghed, persuaded, woonne, bewytched, peruerted & so fowle seduced: ỹ (as the scripture recordeth) he did euil in the syght of the Lorde euen after the abominacyons of the heathen. For he went & buylt the hill altares, whiche Ezechias his father had destruied, & reared vp alters for Baall, & made groues (as dyd Achab kyng of Israell) and worshipped all the hoste of heaue and serued them. And he builte alters in the house of the Lorde, of whiche the Lorde had sayd: In Hierusalem will I putte my name. And he buylte alters for all the hoste of heauen: euen in twoo Courtes of the Lorde. And he offered his soonnes in fyre, and gaue hede vnto witchecrafte and sorcery, and mayntayned wordzers with spirites, and teilers of fortunes: and wroughte much wickednesse in ỹ syght of the Lorde to angre hym. And he put an ymage of a groue that he had made, euen in the Temple, of whyche the Lord had saide to Dauid & Salomon his sonne: in this house and in Hierusalem, whiche I haue chose out of all the tribes of Israell, will I putte my name for euer. And Manasse led them out of the waye, to doode more wickednesse then dyd the hethen people, whome the Lorde destroyed from before the chyldren of Israell, and he wrought more wyckednesse then all the Amorytes, whiche were before hym, did: and made Juda also to synne with his Idolles and dyd shed innocent bloude exceedyng muche euen tyl he replenished Hierusalem from corner to corner wyth the bloode of the true Prophetes, and of as many as myght be founde to be the true worshyppers of God and sincere kepers of ỹ lawe. After so wicked a father, (who reigned liklye fyue yeres in Hierusalem) succeded as wicked a sonne Amon, beyng twẽty two yeres old whan he begoõne to reigne. And he lyke wyse dyd euill in ỹ syght of ỹ Lord, as his father Manasse had doen, and walked in all the waye ỹ his father walked in, & serued ỹ Idolles that hys father serued, & worshypped them. And he forsooke the Lorde God of his fathers, and walked not in the waye of the Lord. &c. Whan Amõ was deceassed, his soõne Josias was in his stede made kyng, and was but eight yeres olde whan he was enoynted kyng. And where he reigned thyrtie one yeres, and begonne to reigne so young: yet (as the scripture plainelye meneyoneth) he did that whiche is right in the sight of the Lorde, and walked in all the wayes of Dauid his forefather, and boughed neither to the ryghte hande ne to the lefte, vndoubtedlye throughe the speciall grace of God, and the helpe of good Gouernours, who well consyderynge and ponderynge the vngodlye lyfe and doynges of Manasse, coulde not of theyr kydelyne fynde in theyr hertes to suffre suche an innocent babe in lyke sort to be seduced and abused as Manasse had rusalem and Juda: For beholde (sayd the Lorde) because Manalle king of Juda hath done suche abhominacyons, &c. I will bryng suche euyls vpon wiped it, turneth it vpsyde downe. &c. And to Josias thus auntswereth the Lorde by the prophetisse in the howerth of the kynges: Because thine herte did melte, and because thou hast humbled thy selfe before me the lorde whan thou heardest what I spake against this place. &c. Beholde therfore I will receiue thee vnto thy fathers, and thou shalt be put into thy graue in peace, and thine eyes shal not see al the euils whiche I will bring vpon this place. They were both of them young kinges, and immediate successours, the one to Ezechias who had extirped idolatrie by the roote, and the other to a worshipper of false Gods, & otherwise also a very wicked man: And yet Manalle through peruerse enticers fel from God to all naughtines, and Josias beyng younger of age then he, did by the helpe of faythefull and godly Counsaylours, apply himselfe to all goodnes, and thereby prospered. These two very notable exaumples, moste gracious Souerayne, I haue some what the more at large propounded and set before the your Maiestie: partely that ye may marke and consider what fruite and reward shall of your godly doo ynges redounde to yourself, youre people, youre Royalmes and dominyons, yea and to youre Posteritie also for your sake: and partely to declare vnto youre hygthnesse, that herte to the speciall gifte of Gods grace, to be of your owne good disposicion playne, gentle, and muche enclined to vertue: the chiefe and principall porcion of all suche good happes is to bee ascribed to the discrete gouernaunce, the fatherly diuersion, the vertuous trayning, the vpright guydyng, the godly aduer-tisements, the holesome admonicions, and the vncorrupt educacion in vertue and litterature ministred vnto a yong kyng by faithfull and woorthy Counsaylours. Which thing forasmuch as it so is, how happy a blysse is your Maiestie of gods owne hande, who hath prouyded your Grace of suche noble and woorthy Counsaylours in this time of your minoritie: and how much are we your most faithful louing subiectes bound to laude, praise and magnifie his moste holy name, for that in this so daungerous a tyme he hathe so mercifully & graciously prouided for vs, whole welth and safegard in this worlde must wholly and onely depende of your godly educacion & vertuous trainyng, or our extreme confusion of the contrarye? And certes this your innocent babehood and tendre minoritie, is the verate time, in which it may euidently be tried what persons doo faithfully tendre your welth, your honour, and your godly procedinges. They are aboue all precious Jewelles and aboue all worldely treasoures to bee estemed, loued, regarded, thanked, and folowed of your Maiestie, whiche in thys your mynoritie shewe themselues faithfull, earnest, diligent and careful, not onely as touching the safe-garde and preseruacion of your most Royall persone, but also concernyng your minde in this your tendre youngth to be furnished with literature, with the due knowlege of God, & with such disciplines as many confirme you in all Princely vertues for your honour, welth and renoume, whan God shall make you a manne of yeres and stature, as your moste noble and moste honourable Counsaylours doe their true and diligent endeuour to make you a manne in maners and learning. Wherein like as Philip King of Macedonie at the birth of his sonne Alexandre the great, alleged himselfe for two causes principally to reioyce, the one because he had now a sone borne to succede him in his croune & sceptre, & the other because the same was borne in the time of so noble a Clerke as Aristotle was, to whome the tuicyon, gouernaunce, and instruction of Alexandre, might be committed, so did your most noble father, and so doe al we your most benevolent subiectes yet stil reioice, that your hap was to be borne hauing two such worthy vncles to serue and assist you, and especially such an one as your most dere vncle Edward Duke of Somerset is, to whome alwel the gouernaunce and vertuous institution and training of your most Royal person, as also the protectyon of all your Realmes and dominions and of al vs your most feithfull louing subiectes during the time of this your minority, might be fayly committed. Of whose fidelitie now a long season alwel in King Henries time as since the beginning of your Maiesties most noble and victorious Reigne throughly tried, and the same alwel in peace as also in soondry warres approued, neither at home only, but also both in fraunce & Scotland more then once or twise declared: of whose dexteritie alwell in martial feactes as also in ciuile affaires, and in ordring of the common weale: of whose fortunate and lucky spede in al his worthy enterprises: of whole happye and prosperous successe in all thinges that he taketh in hande: of whole passyng great clemencye & moderacyon towardes all people in euerye behalf: of whose prudence in all ciuill matters: of whole feithful and vigilaunte administracion vnder your Maiestie in your common weale: of whose indifferencie in al causes of iustice to be ministred to your people: of whose most vpright integritie not onely in ciuil counsayles, but also in matters of religion for the worde of God purely & sincerely to be set forth to Gods glory, and to the welth and honour of your Emperial croune and Dignitie, though no manne is hable to say ouermuch: yet wil I rather abstayne to say that I coulde and iustly might doe, then I will fill his eares with the troumpe of his owne particular prayses, whiche I knowe hym to bee nothyng desirous ne willing to heare. Onely I shall pray almyghtie God as al Englande and your other dominions with publique and the same vnceassaunt prayers doe) so preserue and kepe him, vntil such time as your Maiestie being growen to full maturate and absolute discrecion, may rewarde him with condigne thankes for his long and the same most feithful and diligent seruice, and the same thing also to doe vnto al the other your moste noble and godly Counsaylours. For the bluffull state that your Maiestie endeuoureth and daily trauayleth with their assent & consent to set this your Empiere in, enforceth as many as loue either you or God, daily to breake out into this acclamacion: O happy King, of suche worthy Counsailours, and o happy Counsailours of such a toward King. Neither doe we your most benevolent subiectes any thing doubte, but that your Maiesties godly beginninges so prosperously and earnestly to set forth Gods worde and glory, shal dayly more and more occasyon al Christian kinges & princes not onely to spoyle the Romishe Egipt by resuming euery one his owne most due & rightful title of supreme head within his own Royalmes & dominions, & by abolishyng ỹ vsurped primacie of the papacie of Rome with al the Antichristian tradicions issuing from the same, but also in publishyng

the pure and ſincere worde of God to theyr peoples and ſubiectes euery one. And than is it not to be doubted, but that Chriſtian loue, peace, vnitie, and concorde, whiche hath long and many yeres through the malicious practiſing of the See of Rome been exiled & banished from al partyes of Chriſtendome, ſhall vniuerſally in a momente returne agayne to the great glory of God, to the quieting of the worlde, to the benefite of all Chriſten common weales, and to the confuſion & diſcoumfeighteyng alwell of the Turkes, as alſo of al other the enemies of God and good people. And within your Maieſties Royalmes and dominions it is in the meane time nothing to be miſtruſted, but that by your moſt gracious prouiſion, ſuch knowlage of Gods worde ſhal grow, that your people ſhal be to al others a perfect enſaumple of all godly conuerſacyon and behauieour. And where Ezechias and Joſias maynteyned true religion and the ryght worſhipping of God, but either for his owne time & no lenger, I truſt your Grace ſhal conſtitute & eſtabliſh it for euer in the hertes and bowels of all youre moſt tendre louing ſubiectes. Wherūto certes there cannot be any ſo ready or ſure a way, as by publiſhing the holy ſcripture a goſpel of Chriſt & by eſtabliſſhing the vſe therof through moſt holeſome ordenaūces, ſtatutes, lawes, iniunctions, ſincere preachers, moſt godly omelies, and expoſicions, in the vulgare toung. And in this behalfe, if common writers in trifling profane matters do with much high ſuit make meanes to obteine and vſe the fauourable acceptacion of Princes, vnder whoſe name, title, & protection any ſuch worke may be the more commended and the better habled vnto the readers: how much are we al bound doe willingly ſet forth in the Engliſh toung ſuche fruteffull bookes wherby all your people may bee edified in religion. Emong which verely I knowe not any one booke, whome for this purpoſe of brieffy, pithily, ſincerely, and familiarely expounding the new teſtament, I may iuſtly compare, or at leſte wiſe preferre to thys preſente Paraphraſe of Eraſmus, whiche lyke as the moſte vertuous ladie Quene Katerine late wife of your moſte noble father, and now of your ryghte derebeloued vnkle Syr thomas Seimour knight, Lorde Seimour of Sudley, and high admyrall of your Seaes, did ryght graciouſly procure to be tranſlated into our vulgare toung, ſo your Maieſtie more graciouſly hath by your moſt godly iniunctiōs willed to be read, & ſtudied by euery curate and preeſte to the vndoubted edifying alreade or heare the ſame. For as a wynnower powereth the chaffe from the corne, and the boulter cryeth out the bryanne from the mele: ſo hath Eraſmus ſcourged out of all the Doctours and commentaries vpon Scripture, the dregges which through the faute of the times or places, in whiche thoſe writers liued, had ſettled it ſelfe amonge the pure & fine ſubſtaunce: he hath tried out the refuſe that cleued in any the workes of ſuche as wrote when the doctrine began by patchyng & clokyng to decline to inſyncerite: the traſhe and bagguage ſtuffe that through papiſtical traditions had founde a waye to creepe in, this man hath ſifted out frō the right doctrine: ſo that alwel in al other his moſt clerkely wrytinges, as alſo moſt ſpecyally in theſe his Paraphrales vpon the newe teſtament ſo aunciently wryten as cannot be emended he bringeth in and briefly compriſeth the pith of al the myndes and meninges of all the good Doctours of ꝑ churche, that euer wrote. In iustification of feith, in honouring God onely, in repentaunce & puritie of a Christen mans life, in detesting of imagery and corrupte honouring of Saincte, in opening and defacing the tirannye, the blasphemie, hypocrisie, the ambicion, the vsurpacion of the See of Rome, in noting the abuses of al the abhominable sectes and rables of counterfeicte religions & idle cloisters, in bewailing the iugling sleightes and fine practise of poperie, in choice of meates, in estemeing the differēce of daies, in manifesting of vaine ceremonies vnder the coulour and pretence of holynesse crept into Christes churche, in reprehending pilgrimages with al circūstances of idolatrie and superstition, in describing of a Princes office, in teachyng obedyence of the people towardes their rulers and Gouernours, In declaring of a pastours duetie, in shewing the parte of an Euāgelical preacher, and what or how his doctrine ought to be out of the Scriptures, in blasing the Antichristiā decrees of poperie vnder the name of traditions & constitucios of our mother church, in decising the right difference betwene the spirite and the lettre, and finally in al other pointes of articles of our religion, hauing now of late yeres ben in controuersie, Erasmus like as he is no where ouer vehement, so is he euery where both sincere and ful. Neither doeth any writer more wittily, more earnestly, more aptly, more finely, more substauncially, more pithtily, or more playnely describe & peynte out the vsurped estate, preeminence, and pompe of the bisshope of Rome, then he doth: aswel in all other places where iust occasion offereth it selfe, as also directely (though vnder a preaty couloure) in the eleuenth chapitur of the Euangelist Marke. Erasmus ferthermore is wonderful in comparing of sygures of the olde testamente, in applying of allegories, in declaring of parables, in discussing of doubtful questions, in secreing and explicating of profound misteries, wherin he euidently declareth himselfe, that he was a man of an excellent witte, of much study, of exquisite learning, of profounde knowelage, of an exact iudgemente, of notable diligence, of worthy & famous industrie, of singular prudēce, of incomparable memorie, & of an vnestimable zele towardes ꝑ setting furth of Christes most holy gospel. And yet doth he with such prudence and semely circūspection so teper his stile, that his very enemies (as he cannot lacke enemies enough whosoeuer wil be an opener & teller of ꝑ trueth in matters of religiō, he cānot lacke enuie of Satans brode, whosoeuer wil endeuour himselfe to ferther the knowlage of Gods word, he cannot lacke neither priue backebiting nor yet open reprooche to slaunder him, to bring him out of credit, to deface him, to tredde him vnder foote, whosoeuer wil be diligent to help bring the gospel to light: he shal not auoide to be oppressed with false crimes whereby he may be vtterly defamed, whosoeuer wil trauaile to manifest the glory of Christes bloud: he shal haue enough to write & speake against him, whosoeuer wil attempt to discouer the iugling castes & practise of poperie:) his very enemies (I say) that hated him because they hated the veritie, could neuer yet finde how to geue him any folle, or how to take thaduantage of any such holde against him, whereby to confounde his doctrine. Neuertheles whan I do in my mind make a comparison of you thre together, Erasmus in writting this Paraphrase, Ouene Katerine in procuring ꝑ same to be turned into English, and your highnes in publishing the same by your godly

inſtuccions to bee had in vſe throughout all partes of thys Royalme, me ſemeth I do wel note Eraſmus to haue doen the leſt act of the three. For Eraſmus fact did helpe onely ſuch as are ſene in latin: the Quenes goodneſſe extendeth to the help of the vnlearned alſo which haue more nede of helping forewarde: and your Maieſties benefit it is, that maketh ſo precious a treaſure cõmon to as many as may take profit or fruict thereby. And in dede no Chriſtian Prince there is, to whome the tuicion, protection, & ſtabliſhing of any ſuch bookes or woorkes, as concerne the pure ſetting forth of Chriſt and his goſpel, doeth ſo aptely or ſo duely appertaine, as to your moſt excellent Maieſtie, to whome by a moſt iuſt and right deuolucion and diſcente of inheritaunce of the crounes of England, Fraunce, and Irkland, the title alſo of Defẽdour of the feith, doth moſt nerely, moſt peculiately, moſt ſpecially, and moſt directly belong. Now as touching the tranſlatours of ſuch bookes as this, although I haue at this preſent the leſſe to ſay, becauſe I my ſelfe haue in a ſmall porcion of this woorke filled one roume of ſome other man that might haue ben hable to do it better then I haue doen: yet can I not but wiſh that emong ſo many your Maieſties moſte ample & bountious exhibitions, & ſo many other godly actes to be doen as are daily brought & offred to the gracious direccio of your highnes, of your moſt dere, vncle being Gouernour of your Royal perſon during thys time of your minoritie, & vnder your Maieſtie our protectour, and of the other your moſt honourable Coũſaillours: this thing alſo might be preferred to your conſiderations, how neceſſarie a thing it were, that ſome hable, worthy and mete perſons for doing ſuch publique benefite to the cõmon weale as tranſlating of good woorkes, and writing of Cronicles, might by ſome good prouiſion and meanes haue ſome condigne ſuſtentacion in the ſame. For what Royalme almoſt (Engtãd excepted) hath not al ỹ good authours that euer wrote trãſlated into the mother tong, whereby the people are made prudent and expert men in the tract of all affaires, either touching any diſcipline or els any ciuile matters? And in Germany, what good woorke of diuinitie is there, which they haue not in their own language to the vneſtimable edifying of the people in ỹ due knowlage of God? For what hath ben or is in any common weale the foundacion of ſpreading abrode the knowlage of Goddes woorde, but onely the ſetting forth of the Bible with other good and godly tractiles for the declaracion of the ſame? What thing hath ỹ whelpes of ỹ Romiſh Antichriſt ſo fiercely alwaies barked againſt, as at the tranſlating of Scripture and other bookes cõcerning matters of religion into the vulgare tong for the vſe of ỹ people? What any one thing is there, againſt the whiche there hath in all Chriſten Royalmes (as long as it might preuayle) been eyther ſore decrees, lawes, or inhibicions ordeined, or more terrible execucion of all kindes of tormentes and deathes inuented, deuiſed and put in vre, then againſte the ſetters forth of bookes concernyng religyon? What one thing hath papiſtry in all countreyes more eagrely conſpired, more ſubtelly compaced, or more earneſtly practiſed to oppreſſe then the coming forth of Scripture and other diuine woorkes in the vulgare tong, whereof the rude multitude might gather knowlage? Againſt what thing hath there in theſe laſte yeres, vntill Chriſt (like fier being hidden vnder wood) would nedes mounte vp and appere aboue maugre ỹ head of the Romiſh Pharao & al his tiranny, againſt what thing(I say)hath there been eyther more sore thunderbolles shot, of depraying,of accursing,of slaundering, of defacing, of condemning,and of burning:then against bookes of scripture matters,translated or writen in the mother language,& against the autours of the same?Until the Bible & other good tratises for ꝓ explanaciō of ꝓ same were in Christian regions turned & set forth in the vulgare languages:what kind of idolatry,supersticiō,poperie,errour,ignorance,or counterfeict religion,did not reigne?As long as the candel light of the gospel was kepte hidden under the bushell: what king, what Prince, what countrey, what people did not the blind popish guides lede(as one that is blindfolde may be led)till both fel in the pit?But whan and wherseuer it hath pleased God by his special mercy,grace,& prouidece to shew open the light of the gospel and true doctrine:there hath at once all popish troumperie euen of it selfe vanished away,as a mist is dispersed with the heate of the sonne,as smoke is consumed in the ater,as duste is blowen and scattered abrode with a puffe of winde,as the nyght geueth place to the bright day,and as darkenes vanisheth at the clere light of the sunne. Contrariewise where the worde of God can not yet geat any entrie to take place,ne the bookes of holy Scripture obtein to be published to the people,what ye doth not see,and what Christian hert doth not lament and blede,to consider in what blindnes,superstition,errour, vnquietnes of conscience and trouble of minde,the sely people doe liue?It is therfore no smal benefite that suche persons do to a common weale,which are willingly trauailers in this kind of writing. For as for newe bookes of trifleing vanities and prophane argumentes we nede none,there are daily so many writen:but to haue such workes made common to the publique vse of ꝓ vnlearned multitude,as are the principal best,& haue ben written by noble Clerkes of vndoubted learning, knowlage,and godlines,therin consisteth such a publique benefite,as(if I should not now be suspected & demed to hunt for my selfe)is in mine estimacion,worthy publique thankes and regarde. For(as Erasmus in his third booke of Apothegmes,aswel by a sapient aunswer of Socrates,as also by two other prectie stories,the one of Leonicenus and thother of William Archbyshop of Canterbury doeth declare)muche more good, and a much greater benefit to a common weale doeth such an one, as translateth or composeth any fruictful booke or traictile, which by going abrode throughout a whole Royalme may profit all pastours, curates studentes, & al people vniuersally:then any man is hable to do by preaching teaching, or geuing instruccions to one cōpany alone,or in one place or countrey & no mo,though he should neuer so rightly,neuer so diligently,or neuer so cunningly doe the same. Now besides that such a translatour trauaileth not to hys own priuate commoditie,but to the behoufe & publique vse of his countrey: besides that the thing is such as must so throughly occupie and possesse the doer,and must haue him so attent to apply that same exercise onely,that he may not during that season take in hande any other trade of busines whereby to purchase his liuing:besides that the thing cannot be doen without bestowing of long time, great watchyng, muche peines, diligente studye,no small charges aswell of meate,drinke, and bookes,as also of other necessaries,the labour selfe is of it selfe a more peinful and a more tedyous thyng, then for a manne to wryte or prosecute any argumente of hys owne inuen-

cion. A man hath hys owne inuencion readie at his owne pleasure without lettes or stoppes to make suche discourse as his argument requireth: but a translatour must of force in manner at euery other worde staigh, and suspend both his cogitatiõ and his penne to looke vpon his autour, to that he might in egual time make thrise so muche, as he cã be able to translate. But whether of both a man shal apply hymself to doe, he can in the meane while dooe nothing els, he cannot duryng the season bestow himselfe on any other occupatiõ for his liuing, & his necessities & alsо charges in the meane time neuertheless dooe growe aswel as other mennes. Of herof it cometh to passe, that a noumbre of suche as would be right willing and diligent to dooe good in the commõ weale with this kinde of seruice: yet through default of necessarie maintenaunce, cannot: and certain that hath both liuing & vacaunt time enough, for as muche as they see the paines of this trauile so great, the hyre nothing at al, and the capciousnes of some maligners against the trueth, so readie to depraue the diligent laboure of studious writers: are for the moste parte of the better contented (according to the accustomed prouerbe) to plaie for naught then to worke for naught. And by this meanes lye almoste all good bookes hidden from the people, & al disciplines vnknowen. But thus hauing vnder the gracious sufferaunce & correction of your Maiestie shewed my poore opinion, I surcesse any further to tracte of this mater, lest I myght seme to speake as myne owne frende, whiche in dede I do not, in so muche that hauyng your Maiesties benigne fauoure therunto, I mind and entende no lesse, then al my life enduring either in wryting or translating, to emplope my simple talente, according to the porcion whiche it hathe pleased almyghtie god to measure vnto me: Albeit in this present worke, nothing it is that I doo or euselye maye take vnto me as mine acte, sauing the translation of the paraphrase vpon Luke, and the digesting and placing of the text throughout all the ghospelles, and the actes, except the ghospel of Marke) to thentent the vnlearned readers maye perceyue where & how the processe & circũstaunce of the paraphrase answereth to ỹ texte, & how it toineth therwith. Wherin my rude & grosse doyng if it may please your highnesse for the reuerence of my good wil and honest zele to pardone, for as for thanke I confesse my selfe to haue worthily deserued none for so rude a thing: your Maiesties benigne & gracious fauour shall be vnto me suche an encouraging & spurre towardes further industrie: that emõg the riche iewelles of other better learned mennes studies, who haue aboũdaunce of treasoures to cõferre & bestowe to the publique edifying of the ignoraunt people, I shall at no time be I lacke cuen of my penurie and scarcitie to bring my poore farthing also, & to cast it into the cõmon bore of helping the ignoraũt multytude towardes more knowelage of god. For truly there is none so good, so sure, ne so ready a waye to plante the knowelage of God in mennes hertes, to engraue in me true loue & obedience towardes their Princes and rewlers, to rote vp idolatrie & superstitiõ out of menes stomakes, to bring the people in ỹ good mind to detest & abhorre al kinde of naughtines, to bring al folkes to a perfect securitie of cõscience in Christes bloud, to reduce the people to an vpright trade of Christian religion: as to fede their gredie houngre and thirst of Christes righteousnes, with the Bible, with suche godly omilies, and with this paraphrase and other like bokes of wholsom doctrine, as your Maiesties zele and deuocio towardes god hath alreadie moued you to do. For of this yong and grene foundacion being yet very newly laied, thus much good edifying hath already growen in all persons consciences: that blasphemie, periurie, mourdre, theefte, whoordome, making of affraies, and other abhominacions are more detested, then they were in the blinde worlde very late yeres gone: which is a token, that Christ beginneth to dwel emong vs. For as Christ groweth, so shal vice weare away. And by equal degrees shal the loue of vertue and the hatered of vice grow in our hertes. A great mayny that haue hated matrimony, and yet haue not hated fornicacion, meeste, and aduoutry, begin now to abhorre and manifestly to flee these and other like pestilences, and to exercise the contraries. Which thing if some persones shal percase deny, and affirme to be otherwise, truely in mine opinion it is not so, but because it is in so great a numbre emended, looke where suche corruption stil remayneth, there doeth it better and more notably appere, as straunge thinges are commonly more wondred at. For al good and godly folke doe now wondre, that, Gods worde being spred abrode & being now almoste in euery bodies hand and mouth so common, there should be any creature in whome any of the enormities afore mencioned shoulde reigne. But by Goddes grace and your Maiesties most holsome prouision it is to be hoped, that thorough this salue of Goddes woorde, and other deuoute woorkes for declaracion of the same sette foorthe to the people, if any shepe eyther be scabby or els doe yet renne astrayghe: the same shall by the right leedyng of the head belleweather theire Pastor, and by the whystle and voyce of their good Pastours, be reduced to suche a concorde & vniformitie, that they wil full and whole goe the streight pathway of Christes doctrine, vntil (accordyng to his promisse) there shal of vs al be but one folde, and one shepeheard, as your most excellent Maiestie by setting forth suche bookes as may edify your people of all states and degrees in the knowlage of goddes woorde & in innocencie of life doth labour to haue it. Which your godly purpose and desire (if I may with your graciouspardone saye myne opinyon) I veraylye suppose that no creature is of suche wicked herte to hinder, except if any such there be, (whiche thing God of his great mercy and grace forbid that would) not with his good wil haue your highnesse so wel to prosper, flourish, and growe, as to the honoure and glory of God, to the comfort and reioysing of all your wel willers, to the terroure and drede of all your foes, and to the welth and honoure of all your Royalmes and dominions (God be thanked) ye nowe dooe. And doubt you not, moste excellent Souerayngne, but that so long as your Maiestie by the aduise and assistence of your sayde most dere vncle and the other your moste honourable Counsailoures, shall rendely seke and setforth Gods glory, framing and trayning your people to walke in his preceptes: so long wil God prosper you in all affaires, who can no more be false of his promisse, then he can ceasse to bee God. If ye reade the sixth chapitur of Josue, and the fifth chapitur of Judith, (beside many places mo aswell in the bookes of the kinges, as also in other bookes of the Scriptures) ye shal plainly finde how meruelously God protected, saued, prospered, and preserued the people of Israel, so long as they walked in his preceptes truely & sincerely worshipping him and keping his lawes, against all the force and violence of all their enemies, were they neuer so innumerable, neuer so puissaunt, neuer so well appoynted for battayl,nor neuer so fierce. In the fifth chapitur of Iudith emong other notable testimonies of Gods tendrenes ouer Israel,and by their example ouer al such as truely serue him,it is contrened,that whan two?de came to Holofernes,Prince and Captain general of the warre of the Assirians vnder the king Nabugodonosor, how the children of Israel prepated themselues,to make resistence against him and his armie Royal,and he demaunded many questions of the Princes of Moab & of the Captaines of Ammon concerning the power of the Israelites: Achior the Captaine of all the Ammonites,whan he had in a long processe declared vnto Holofernes how wo?derfully Israel, whan they truly serued god, had euermore from tyme to tyme been preserued,and had preuayled against all their enemies, and contrarie wyse howe God had alwayes plagued them whansoeuer they fell from him to wurshippe false Goddes: thus doeth he conclude and knitte vp his o?acion. Therefore my lo?de, (sayth he) make diligent inquisicion: If this people haue doen wickednes in the sight of their God,than lette vs goe vppe against them. For doubtlesse their God will deliuer them into thy handes,and subdue them vnto thy power . But yf this people haue not displeased their God,we shall not be hable to withstand them. For their God will defend them, and so shal we be a shame to al the wo?lde. &c. Therfore with all tendrenes of herte,beseche almighty God that this your godly purpose of setting fo?th the wo?de & glory of god,(whervnto his moste holy spirite,first moued your most noble father,and hath now more strongly and effectually wrought the same in your Maieste, may neuer slacke. And than I nothing doubt,but that,according to the most earnest and the same vnfeaffaunt prayers,not onely of all vs your most feithful louing subiectes, but also of all other good and godly people,he shal in al thinges most prosperously continue your most noble and most gracious Reigne ouer vs, pouring and heaping vnto you,as vnto a vessel of singular prerogatiue peculiarely chosen,the right & true administracion of his lawes and of your common weale,which by his special grace he gaue vnto Moses and vnto Iosue:the like testimony of feithfulnes,and of being a manne chosen after his owne hert,which he gaue vnto king Dauid: the singular gift of wisedome richesse,magnificence, and renoume,wherwith he notably aboue al others endewed king Salomon: the fortunate and prosperous successe in battayl (if necessitie of war must come vnto you)that he sente vnto Abiamo lesse integritie and purenes of liuing ioyned with effectual taking away of superstition,then the scripture reporteth of good king Asa:the same grace to set your people in good o?dre,and to constytute echewhere within your Roymes and dominions,prudent, vpright, and discrete Magistrates to minister iustice,and to haue God with you in al affaires therfore,as we reade of noble king Iosophat: the like prosperitie and contynuance of most victorious reigning that God sent vnto Ioathan king of Israel:the like addicion of yeres to your natural tyme, that Ezechias had: and finally the luckie and prosperous olde age, which God gaue vnto Abraham, with semblable happe for propagacion of sede for your succession by suche a noble Sara as may be a condigne spouse to be coupled with so noble a king. Wherunto al true Englishe heartes that shall fortune to reade or heare these presentes doubte not wil with one voyce saye. Amen.

To the

To the lentle christian reader

Nicolas Vdal wilheth health, grace and peace in God the father, and in hys sonne Iesus Chryst our saluiour

Thou hast here, good Chrystiã reader, the paraphrase of Erasmus vpon ꝑ gospel, that is to say, a treasour & in maner a full library of all good diuinite bookes. For whatsoeuer thing any of the auncient doctours of the church left behynd him, whatsoeuer in any catholyke writer is conteined, whatsoeuer any notabl good expositoure hath sette forth: the for the sincere & playne declaration of the new testament: the pith and substance therof hath this man with a clerkely iudgment compendiously and briefly, as it were in a summe, couched together in this one worke. Neither was there euer any worke so easy to be vnderstãded of the reader, which hath more cunning shewed in it, as by his owne annotacions vpon his trãslacion of the new testament it may euidently appere, in which annotacions he approueth & declareth himselfe with such diligent obseruacion and marking to haue perused al libraries, al writers, al bookes: as very few studentes dooe vse to reade and labour any one autour in any one particuler facultie or discipline. Accepte this autour therfore, deuout reader, and with glad wil embrace so profitable a meane & instrumẽt, wherby thou maist (without any further trauail then onely reading marking, & hearing it awap,) so easily attain to the clere vnderstanding of ꝑ gospel. Reade it with a pure & a charitabl hert, with a single eye void of al maner parcialite of affeccion or of enuy: & thou shalt espy therin such edifying, as may be mete for thy state of knowlage & aptitude or capacitie, what euer it be. For like as in ꝑ most holy & blissed testamẽt there is both pappe for yonglinges in the feith & in the knowlage of Gods worde, and also sounde meate for such as are wel entred & hable to broke higher thinges: euen so in this auctour, are al thinges aptly tempered to enduce & traine the grosse & the rude multitude aswel of Curates & teachers as also of other priuate readers: to fede ꝑ weake with such doctrine as they are hable to receiue: to sharpen and make eagre such as are hungrie of ferther knowlage: & to minister vnto the learned or eloquẽt teachers matier sufficiẽt wherein to groũd much profoũd & the same right Chrystiã doctrine. Accept it willingly & render thãkes first to God, who of his infinite mercy & grace hath in these our daies set such a numbre of suche good writers (and emong them Erasmus as one of the chiefe and principal, not onely to geue clere light, but also to open a way vnto the pure & perfect knowlage of Gods worde: and than to your moste excellent Soueraine good king Edward the furte, who emong the other his most princely and most Chrystian actes, doeth so soone and so effectually begyn first with the promoting of Gods worde and glory, being the fountain and ground of al good successe, welth, and prosperite: and thirdly to Quene Katerine by whose good meanes and procurement this present worke hath ben by soondry mennes labours turned into our vulgare roung, wherby the kinges Maiestie, (whose principal desire & trauail is to doe all thinges possible possible, wherby his most tenderly beloued subiectes knowlage may be further-red, their conscience staighed in a sincere doctrine of Christ, with a perfect framing & confirming of the same in a good conuersacion of life, (muche hauing so notable a good matter in redinesse: be the better occasioned to put forth so fruitful an exposicion of the gospel. For a paraphrase is a plain setting forth of a text or sentence more at large, with such circumstaunce of moe and other wordes, as may make the sentence open, cleare, plaine, & familiar, whiche other wise should perchaunce seme dare, vnfruitful, harde, straunge rough, obscure, & derke to be vnderstanded of any that were either vnlear-ned or but meanly entred. And what is this, but a kinde of exposicio, yea and that of the most profitable and effectual sorte? Now muche therefore art thou bound deuout christian reader, (and especially ye preistes, and Curates that either haue not ben brought vp in studie of letters & of diuinitie) or els haue not such store of bookes, as may be sufficient for maintenyng of your studies) how much are al ye bound (I say) vnto the kinges moste excellent Maieste and his most honorable & worthy Counsaillours, who of a speciall regarde and consideracion of the ignorance & defaute of litterature (which hath reigned in most part of þ Clergie of England aswel to þ great detriment, harme and decay of religion in the christian flockes to their spirituall charge comit-ted, as also to their owne intolerable peril and daungier, whan at the general day of accompt and audite to be made at the throne of God, it shall be required at their handes how and what they haue taught to the ignoraunt multitude, for whose soules (as touching their institucion in the feith & in the lawes of God) they must answer before a rightful iudge, whome no mã shal be able to corrupt, beguile deceiue, or escape) haue by their most good polit-icie founde a meanes, how both ye and all the people may with a great dele lesse time, study, labour, yea & also charges, then were wonte to be bestowed in playing at tables, boules, cardes, & other vnlawful games, haue in a few leaues a whole library of good doctrine, both for the priuate edifying of euer-ry one particularely, and also for the enstruccion & teaching of eche other in common. And whatsoeuer ignoraunt person is destrous of knowlage, & can be contented to learn: whosoeuer is not of an hert so indurate but þ he can abide such good bookes, as may further Christes doctrine, whosoeuer is not of an extreme malignaunt stomake against the due setting forth of Gods worde:

whosoeuer is not such an enemie to þ glory of God, that he enuieth the benefit of Christes bloud vnto England: whosoeuer is not eyther of such blind-nesse that he cannot see the trueth, or of such peruerse & frowarde malice that he will not, or of such canearde obstinacie that he wil against the spirite and against his conscience wilfully withstand & resist al good thinges which may induce men to the knowlage of God: whosoeuer doth not hate the light of þ gospel: whosoeuer is in his herte a fauourer of the trueth, and of the kinges Maiesties most godly proceedinges, hath no lesse cause but to embrace Erasmus, whose doctrine the most & best parte of al Christiã Royalmes & vniuer-sities hath euermore allowed & iudged to be consonaũt to the truth, & also is bouñ with immortal thankes to praye for the kinges most excellẽt Maieste, for this his most gracious setting forth & publishing this present worke to the vse of such as haue nede therof. And where the sayd Erasmus for otherwise then a great nũbre of þ scholastical sorte, & other vnlettred expositours

of these

of these last blind seasons, hath written these his paraphrases in as ornate a stile as he hath the most parte of hys other volumes: is not (as some barbarous blounderers haue for safegard & defence of their owne poore honesties alleged) a thing vnseming for bookes of holy scripture matters. For diuinitie like as it loueth no cloking, but loueth to be simple and playn, so doth it not refuse eloquence, if the same come without iniurie or violation of ỹ truth. For who writeth more ornately then the Greke diuines, Basilius, Gregorie Nazianzene, Theophylactus, Chrisostome? or who in laten more elegauntly than Lactantius, Hierome, and diuers others? Albeit in this English paraphrase the translatours haue of purpose studied rather to write a plain stile, then to vse their elegancie of speche, partely because there cannot in al poyntes be expressed in the English tong the grace that is in the laten, much lesse (of my self I speake) the pleasauntnesse that is in the stile of Erasmus, a man of moste excellent learnyng and exquisite eloquence in this kinde (thoughe in dede not altogether a Ciceronian, but yet exact, pleasaunt, swete, elegaunt, & sensible) & partely because there was a special regarde to be had to the rude and vnlettred people, who perchaunce through default of attayning to the high stile, should also thereby haue been defrauded of the profit and fruicte of vnderstanding the sence, which thing that they might doe, was the onely pourpose why it was first translated, and now by the kinges most excellent Maiestie willed to be read. For as for the learned are hable enough to helpe themselfes without any translations at al. Neither are these translations to be deprayued, because some reader would perhaps otherwise haue turned soe thinges then he shal here rede it. For no two enterpreters there bee, that in translating out of any one tong into an other, would agree in al poyntes of stile or enditing, as (best for this purpose) it may appere by the auncient fathers of the Churche, whose allegations of places of holy Scripture, moste commonly varie in wordes, & agree not but in sense. And the same interpreter that would haue translated some part here of better thē it now is, would in some other poinctes perchaunce haue doen it worse. Therefore euerie man gentilly take and interprete an others labours, & beare with his infirmitie, if not in consideracion of his studie & trauail, yet at lest wise for respect of his good zele & godly entente to further knowlage. If it come to the handes of suche as can and wil without disdeigne or arrogancie take his penne and emend any thing that his good and vncorrupt iudgement shal see mete to be corrected: I suppose that besydes the rewarde of God, & the publique thankes of his countrey, he shal also priuatly deserue and receiue immortal thākes of the translatours, whose desire is to haue it wel. Neither do I suppose any to be of such mind that he would disdeigne or be greued to see his thing bettered, as in this great worke some thinges are in dede here & there other wise penned, then the firste translatours wrote it. For this is a common worke of building, to the which are hired many sondry men of occupacion: and in case some man be making a doore, a windoore, or a frame: though an other of the same occupacion put his handē to the bettering and perfectyng of it, yet is not the so dooyng any displeasure, nor cause of grutche to the other: but rather a beautifying of his dooing, & a cause of rendryng thankes to the partie that of good wille and zele without presumpcion, did put hys helping hande to a good purpose. And semblably in this commō worke of the ghospels

the gospels vineyarde, for asmuch as euery labourer hath his eye directed to the onely marke of setting foorthe the glory of God, and hys moste holy worde, no man meaneth any rebuke or derogacion to his felow, whan he emendeth something that was to be reformed or altered: but rather semeth to craue the like help of the other agayn in his owne doinges, because it is euident that any man can farther see, and can be a more indifferent iudge in an other mannes doinges, then he can be in his owne. Geuing therefore firste laude, prayse, and thankes to God for all his giftes, and than to our moste excellent king Edwarde the sixth for so gracious accepting, fauouring, and maintening honest and godly studies: Ieat euery man employ his good talentes that God hath geuen him, to the publique vse of seruing and profitting his countrey, & to the common edifying eche of other in Iesus Christe our Lorde: to whom together with the father and with the holy ghoste be all honour laude, and glorye worlde without ende. Amen

To the moste vertuous Ladie

Quene Katerine late wife to the moste noble, and moste victorious kyng, Henry the eight of moste famous memorie, Nicolas Udal your moste humble seruaunt wisheth health, grace, and consolacion in our Lorde Jesus Christe euerlastyng.

Where your excellent highnesse, moste gracious Quene Katerine, serueth the time of your firste calling to the estate and dignitie of espousal & mariage with the moste noble p̄ince that euer reigned, kyng Henry the eight, hath neuer ceassed by all possible meanes that in you might lie, to minde, to auaunce, and to encrease the publique commoditie and benefit of this common weale of Englande: I finde on euery side so great, and the same so worthy matter of gratulacion, and thankes geuyng vnto God, that I cannot tell on whose parte firste to commence and begynne the same: whether on your owne behalfe, whome God of his goodnesse ād for your singuler and the same most notable vertues, without any your expectacion or hope, soodainly putte in kyng Henries myndе to chose, call, and auaunce to the dignitie and estate of a Quene: or on kyng Henries parte, whose good happe it was, so aptly to choose suche an one as shoulde afterwarde bee a faithfull and continuall coadiutrice vnto hym, in all hys moste deuoute and godly p̄ceedinges concerning the knoweleage of God and his worde to bee sette forth to the people: or els for Englandes cause, to whose publique benefite and edifying in true religion, all these your vnfeaynte peynes and trauayles doe finally redounde. Leauyng therefore the p̄secucion of so large a mattier as neither my slender witte can wel conceyue, nor my rude penne is hable to wielde: I shall at this p̄sente onely thanke God in you, & you in God, for causing these Paraphrases of Desiderius Erasmus of Roterodame vpon the newe testament to be translated into Englishe, for the vse and commoditie of such people, as with an earnest zeale, and with deuout study, doe hongre and thirst the simple and playne knowlage of Goddes worde: not for contentious babling, but for innocent liuing: not to be curious searchers of the high misteries, but to be faithfull executours and doers of Goddes biddinges: not to bee troubleous talkers of the Bible, but syncere folowers of Goddes p̄ceptes therein conteined: not to bee vnlearned reasoners in holy scripture, for vain setting out of their penneted sheather: but to bee humble and lowly worshers of Goddes glorie: not to bee curyous disputers in the ghospell for the defence and mayntenaunce of their inordinate lustes and carnall lybertie, but to bee vprighte walkers in holy conuersacyon of lyfe in the rule of the ghospell p̄scribed. Which kinde of doctrine, forasmuch as no one writer hath laboured in all poyntes and behalfes more vnoriuptely or more playnely to ministre vnto the symple reader, then this authour by a perpetuall discourse and continuacion of the texte doeth: your highnes vndoubtedly in p̄curing the same to be to be turned into Englisshe, hath not onely after a moste godly sorte bestowed your charges: but also hath in the thinge selfe doen vnto the common weale a benefit by so many degrees surmounting and passing any other act of your great largesse and beingnitie, as the soule is better then the body, as spirituall edifying is aboue temporal suppostacion, as goostly foode and coumforte exceedeth corporall relefe or cherishing, and as heauenly treasours excell all worldely giftes or richesse. And in that your highnesse for the more spedy expedicion of your moste godly purpose to bring Goddes worde to the more light, and to the more clere vnderstanding, distributed this worke by portioons to sondry translatours, to thentent it might al at once be finished, for the deuout Englisshe readers any long time defrauded of so fruitful and so profitable a worke: ye haue therein, moste gracious Ladie, right well declared both how much ye tender Goddes honour, and also how earnestly ye minde the benefit of your countrey. Whiche your countrey, what they are not able in facte with condigne thankes to requite, dooe and euer will, (as they are moste bounden) supply with perpetuall commending your highnes to God in prayer, wh che I thinke to be the onely rewarde ye looke for or desire. As touching the translations (because they are of soondry persones doinges) though there appeare in them some diuersitie of style and endicting: yet is there in the whole worke no contrarietie of doctrine. Though euery translatour folow his owne deyne in turning the Laten into Englisshe: yet doeth none willingly swerue or dissente from the minde and sence of his autoure.

Albeit some goe more nere to the wordes of the lettre, and some vse the liber-tie of translating at large, not so precisely binding themselues to the streight interpretacion of euery woorde and sillable, (so the sence be kept: yet dooe they all agree (euery one as his deyne serueth him) in feithfully rendreing the sence of their booke. So that if any persones there be either of such high conceipte and opinion of themselues that they can like no mannes doinges but their owne, or els of such vnlearnednesse that they wil not well interprete simple mennes doinges, whiche themselues can for the moste parte sooner finde faulte withal then emende, or els of such morositie and waywardnes that their stomakes cannot beare with any other mannes labours, be they neuer so honestly entended or bestowed: such are in this behalfe rather to be contemned and left to their insolent disdeignefulnes, then either to be pacified or aunswered vnto. The partes of deuout readers are, with immortall thankes to receiue and take the fruicion of honest and godly studies: the office of learned mens, without depraueing or derogacyon of other mens diligence, & without any arrogancie on their owne behalfes, to employ their good talentes to the publique behoufe of their countrey, and to the furthernaunce of godly knowleage: the office of euery studious and diligent writer is, to haue his eye directed to the publique vtilitie onely, and than to thinke his vpright wel doinges a sufficiente price & rewarde of themselues, and so without respect of any worldely rewarde or thanke, to referre the fruite and successe of his labours to God the mocioner, the authour, and the worker of all goodnes. As touching Erasmus and the doctrine that his bookes dooe sowe, although I haue before this time somewhat sayd alwel in my preface vnto your highnes before the paraphrase vpon the ghospel of Luke, as elf-where: yet can I not omitte thus muche to say in hys defence, that in case any persons

ny persons

nye persons bee enemies to Erasmus wryting, it procedeth more of their enuie, of their vnquietnes of minde, and of their hatered against the light and grace of the ghospel clerely now arisyng and plenteously spreading it selfe abrode, then of any faute or rust deserte in Erasmus. Whoso wincheth and kitseth at the gospel, in dede cannot but spurne at Erasmus, who hath with incomparable study & trauail shewed himselfe a diligent labourer in Christes vineyard. And truely whomesoeuer I perceiue to be an eagre aduersarie to Erasmus writinges, I (as my poore iudgemente leadeth me) cannot but suppose the same to be an indurate enemy to the gospel, which Erasmus doeth according to the measure and porcion of his talente feithfully labour to sette forth and promote. But lyke as whan manus is in a feure, or with any other greuous infirmitie distempered, the better that the drynke is, the worse it tasteth in his mouth: so whan the herte is corupt with malice and hatred of Gods trueth, the better that the doctrine is, the more it offendeth. Soore eyes cannot abide the brightenesse of the sunne, nor a corupte hearte the clere veritie of Gods woorde. Persons indurate are the woorse for reading of holy scripture: neyther dooe they of any thing take more occasion of slaunder and offence of conscience, then they dooe of holy scrypture, whereby their conscience shoulde be edified. Some there be of suche malicious hardnesse of herte, that they can abide neither booke, ne teaching, ne reading, ne any thing els, that may helpe or emende the ignorraunt peoples knowlege. And suche, because they woulde lette and stoppe Goddes glory, depraue all good thinges, and pronounce them to be naught. But suche are in this behalfe not to bee passed on, ne to be hearde. For as a body corupted with yll humours or diseases, the more and better that it is nourished with good meates and drinkes, the worse it is: so a cankarde stomake and a wicked hert, the more holesome doctrine that is minustred vnto it, the more it is indurate, the more doeth it enuie the publique welthe vnto men. and the more doeth it striue, and wraste against the veritie. Pharao was neuer more eagre in persecuting the people of God, the whan he was by dayly plagues and miracles most of all prouoked to conuerte. The Pharisees neuer more furiously, swelled, enfourged, or raged against Christ, then whan he alleaged holy scripture vnto them, or brought against them the testimony of their owne lawe which they coulde not deny. The scripture of God is all good and godly, yet like as the same to the good spirite is a sure porte of tranquillitie and peace, so is it to the wicked conscience a stumbling blocke, and a stone of offence. Out of one and the same floure the Bee gathereth honey, and the spider sucketh venome: so great diuersitie of operacion there is in good and euill natures. And the common faulte that malignaunt persones doe allege against the publishing of Goddes worde in the mother tongue, and against the setting foorth of holesome and godly exposicions vpon the same, is, that suche bookes cause sedicion against the doctrine, and than lay their facte to the doctrines charge. This hath euermore hitherto ben the practise and conueighaunce not only of the Romish Pharisaical sorte, but also of the auncient enemies of Goddes trueth, euen from the beginning. Neither haue this malicious generacion euer as yet vsed any other way or coulour to deface the trueth, to let the good proceding of Gods worde, or to stirre and prouoke the indygnacion of Princes and Magistrates agaynste the publishyng, or agaynſt the true preachers and teachers therof: but onely by allegeyng that it wyll moone ſedition: and teache errour: where in dede Goddes woorde is (as ye would ſaye (a perfecte touchſtone whereby to fynde out and to trye ſuche rancard ſtomakes, as would fain rebelle & moue ſedition, and would gladly haue it ſo to bee. For otherwyſe a great wonder it were, and a verye ſtraunge thyng, if the woord of God, or this paraphraſe, or any other lyke godly expoſition of the ghoſpell (whyche is in ſenſe none other but the doctrine of Chriſt and of his Apoſtles) ſhould corrupt the readers or teache errour, or moue ſedition. God and his moſte holy woorde is altogether peace, vnitie, concorde, and perfecte charitie. Goddes woorde teacheth none other doctrine but peace humilitie, ſubiection, and to muche obedience to the Princes and Magiſtrates, as the Romiſhe Babyloniangs would not by their good willes haue to be put in the heades and hertes of the ignozaunt people. But this colour haue the enemies of Goddes woorde euermoze vſed to ſuppreſſe the ghoſpell. So did they by all the Martirs, ſo haue they doen by the true preachers, ſo did the olde Jewes by the auncient prophetes of God, and ſo did ỳ old Phariſees by Chriſt himſelfe, whoſe moſte grieuous crymes were, that he dzew al the woorlde after hym, that he taught and ſowed erroneous doctrine, that he ſeduced the people, and that he made hymſelfe a kyng. And the malicious Jewes layed to Paules charge, that he begoonne to be a ſeditious moouer of rebellion againſt Ceſar: not that the thyng was ſo in dede, but becauſe theſame was a cockeſure waye to make al obedient people hate the ghoſpell, and to prouoke the rewlers & Magiſtrates to ſuppreſſe it. But the lozde, who of his mercifull goodneſſe hath of late ſent out the clere radiaunt ſunnebeames of his holye woozde and veritie to ſhyne ouer all chriſten regions, will (I truſt) ſo continue the light of the ſame, that the ſimple flocke ſhall ber hable to diſcerne the ſpirites of men, & liuely to know the vngodly maligners, whiche by cauiling and depzauyng all good thinges, dooe wzaſtie and ſtzougle (as muche as in them lieth) to kepe the ignozaunte multitude in blindneſſe. In the meane time all the ſimple Engliſhe congregacion, is bound continually to pzaye foz your highnes, that haue foz theyz vſe and behouſe pzocured the tranſlation of this pzeſent paraphzaſe vpon the ghoſpell of Mathew, and vpon the reſidue of the newe teſtament, wherby they may with a moze couenfortable and pleaſaunt readyng in theyr owne mother tounge, bothe encreace from daye to daye in knowelage, and alſo continually bee edified in true religion, nouzeled in right opinions, trayned in ſincere doctrine, and confirmed to walke in perfect innocencie and integritie of a true Chriſten lyfe accozdyngly.

To the moste victorious Emperour Charles, the fifte of that name Erasmus of Rotterodame, greteth.

Seyng not ignorant, Charles Emperour moste victorious, howe muche godly feare and reuerence also, is of due congruence to be geuen, partely vnto all holye scriptures, whiche the holy fathers throughe the inspiracion of God, haue left vnto vs, and especially vnto that part of scripture, whiche maketh an vpright and faythfull relacion of suche thinges as the heauenly father eyther wrought in facte, or spake in woordes, for the healthe and saluacion of the whole worlde, throughe his soone Jesus: and being further prone to myne owne vnwurthynes, where not many yeares gone, I firste attempted to set hand to making a paraphrase vpon Paules Epistles, for the playner vnderstandyng of them (which thing to doe came vpon me at that time of a sodain pangue, euen of mine owne mynde) I did no lesse, then thinke myselfe to enterprise a verie bolde and presumpteous acte, and an acte (as the prouerbe sayeth) of a right daungerous hazarde, in so muche that after I had in one or twoo or three chapiters, taken a proufe, and assaye of the woorke, how well it would doe, I was vtterly mynded to pulle downe my sayles againe, and to surceasse from the course that I had afore appointed to take, vnlesse a wunderful consent of my frendes beyng men of learnyng, had perforce constrayned me to proceede with that I had begon. Neyther couldе I for their most earnest desires, be at any rest or quiet, vntil I had fully ended and finished all that euer there was of the Epistles Apostolicall, whereas I had not taken in hand to medle, but only vp thole epistles whiche without all controuersie or doubte were wryten of thapostle Paule. It hath not at al tymes framed wel with me, ne come to good ende, when I haue ben ruled to doe thynges at the motions & instaunt pricking forward of frendes. But yet in this thing neuertheleſſe I was not a litle proude of my selfe, that this my bolde auenturyng had come muche more happily to passe, then was loked for, as well for myne owne parte that was the maker, to whome it purchased leaſt enuie and grutche of men, of al the woorkes that euer I wrote: as also on the behalfe of all suche as are studentes and lurers to atteigne to the philosophye of the gospell, who doe euery man more then other, geue me thankes for that by meanes of myne industrious labour, they haue to the better knowlage of thapostolicall wisedome, eyther been moued and stirred vp, or els furthered. But whā I had cleane dispatched myself of this great charge and taske, I loked not that I shoulde at any tyme afterwarde, haue any more to doe with this kynde of writing, & beholde the right reuerende father Mathew, Cardinall of Sedune (by whose aduise and instigacion I had afore made vp all thepistles canonical) at what time I spake with him at Bzurels, to welcome hym into the countrey, accordyng to my ductie, after his returne from the counsell, whiche had than been holden at the citie of Wournes, euē by and by at the first entring in talke with me, euen lyke a man that had deuised vpon it afore, begynneth to exhorte me, that what I had afore doen vpon thapostolicall Epistles, the same I shoulde also doe vpon the gospel of Mathew.

thew. For my parte anon made myne excuſe by many thynges, firſte that it was alreadye an acte bolde and ouerbolde, that I had attempted the ſame vpon the writinges of thapoſtles: ſecondly that the Apoſtles in dede wer godly men, yet neuertheleſſe men they were, but the maieſtie of Chriſt to be more great, then that it myght be lefull to auenture the doynge of ſuche a thynge in his wordes. And though the maieſtie of the worke did not put of ſ doubte one awaye, yet the nature of the argument or matter of the goſpels to refuſe the thyng, ſ not to ſuffre one that ſhould go about to make a Paraphraſe: and not onely for that there are in the goſpell perſons of diuers and ſundry ſortes, vnto whome while the wordes and talke is ſo applied as to euery of them for his rate or degree maye beſt accorde, it commeth to paſſe that the writers penne is kept ſhut within the encloſure of an exceadyng ſtrepght grate, becauſe it is debarred from that libertie, whiche all other ſortes of commentaries doe ſuffer and receiue (for a paraphraſe alſo is to be reputed as a kynde of commentarie.) Furthermore where as a good portion of the goſpell conſiſteth in makyng report of this and that acte doynge, and that of a ſimple and a plain report without any curioſitie, one that ſhoulde in thys parte make a paraphraſe ſhall feme nothyng els to doe, but at noontyde to light a candell, as the prouerbe of the Grekes doeth call it. Nowe ferther, whereas the auncient doctoures and writers doe in expoundyng the allegories, partly datie, not declaryng it all after one waye: and partely ſo handle themſelues, that to me they ſeme oft tymes to playe and dallie with it, nor myght expreſſe or bryng in the ſame allegories, but vnder the perſones, either of Chriſt, or els of the euangeliſt, it is euidente and well to be knowen in what narowe ſtrerghtes I ſhould trauayle. I let paſſe and ſaye nothyng, that Chriſt in ſuche wyſe ſpake certayne thynges, as he wouldde not haue the ſame to be vnderſtanded at the time of the ſpeakyng of them: of whiche ſort this here enſuyng is one: Deſtroye ye this temple, and within thre dayes ſpace I wyll buyld it vp agayne. And alſo of bying a ſwearde: of the Phariſeis leuen to be eſchued. And truly in that ſame his talke, where he foreſheweth the diſtruccion of the citie of Hieruſalē and prophecieth of the ende of the world, and of afflictions long after to enſue vnto the Apoſtles, Jeſus doeth ſo intermedle and temper his talke, that me ſemeth his will and pleaſure was to be darke and not vnderſtanded, not onely to the Apoſtles, but alſo vnto vs all. There be alſo certayne places (as I thinke) almoſte vnpoſſible to be expounded, of whiche ſort one is, concernyng that ſinne againſt the holy goſte ſhall neuer be remitted: an other, concerning the day of iudgement, reſerued to the knowlage of the father onely, and vnknowen euen to the very ſonne ſelfe. In theſe places and ſuche lyke, yf one wrote commentaries, he maye at his pleaſure without daunger repoſte the ſundrye opinions of ſundrye expoſitours, he hath libertie frankly to confeſſe and acknowlege that he dothe not vnderſtand the mening of the place. But one that maketh a paraphraſe hath not ſ lyke libertie nor power. Moreouer certayne thinges there be in ſuche ſorte ſpoken, that they touche and concerne euen theſe verie times that now are, in which our tymes right many thinges there be, ferre diſagreyng from the inſtitutions ſ ordinaunces of the Apoſtles. And ſuche thynges although the Euangeliſtes foreknew them by ſ ſpirite of prophecie, yet certes vnder the perſones ſ names of the Apoſtles, they can not be reported, but both coldely ſ alſo cuttedly: There was yet alſo an other point that moued my minde, which was, that in caſe I ſhould take and beſtow this labour vpon Mathew only, there would peraduenture be ſome that would make inſtaunce & earneſt requeſt for to haue the ſame doen vpon all the reſidue of the Euangeliſtes: whoſe wyl & deſire if I ſhould folow, than muſte it cum to paſſe, ſ I muſt many tymes more then once make repetition of one manier mattiers, that is to were, of all and euery matter in whiche the Euangeliſtes did amonge themſelues accorde. Or, if on the other ſyde I ſhoulde tye and linke together a certayne continuall proceſſe of teilyng the thynges, & ſo to make but one whole tale of them all together: than (foraſmuche as to declare and to open all the places which in the Euangeliſtes ſeeme to diſagre, is nothyng els but to be coumbreously entangled as it wer in a certayne maſe) could I neuer haue been hable to do that is to be doen, for the clereneſſe and light that a Paraphraſe ought to haue. Whan with theſe & herat many mo argumentes and reaſons, I deſired to be ridde of the charge that was layed vnto me to go in hande withall, wheras I thought my ſelfe to haue a good cauſe, and an excuſe that might haue preuailed: yet did the ſayed Matthewe banquiſh me by his eloquence, he got the ouer hande of me by reaſon of hys auctoritie wherby he might commaunde me, takyng on hymſelf the daungier and haſard of all the whole matier. Neyther durſte I bee ſo bolde as any longer to ſtriue or ſtrougle agaynſt the aduiſe and councell of hym, whoſe counſailes your Maieſtie cuſtomablie vſeth in moſte high and weighty affayres, not bawylyngly to folowe. And yet where as I had not euen plainly taken the matter vpon me, but had onely prompted that I would one daye allay ꝑ happily the thyng would frame & go forward: he than tourneyng towardes Villayn, had made aſſured warantile vnto ꝑ Germaines in my behalf, that the worke ſhould this inſtant winter ſeaſon cum forth. Wherupon I cummyng backe my ſelf againe vnto Baſile, was in ſuche wiſe on eche ſide continually called vpon of my maiſters the Germaines, being crauers not of the leſt importune ſort, that becauſe I would in any wiſe diſcharge both his prompte, & myne own honeſtie to, I finiſhed by the worke with litle more then a monethes labour. And God be graunte that bothe the cõmaundement of hym and the obedience of me, may be to all perſons luckie and fortunate, and I truſt it wyll ſo be if your maieſtie will fauourablie acknowlage and accepte this ſlender gifte & preſente, to the ſame dedicated. But here perchaunce ſome man that knoweth you by none other title ſauing onely by the name of Emperour, wyl ſaye: What is a booke of ſuche an argumente or matier as thys for a prince ſecular, whiche it had been more mete and conuenient to haue dedicated vnto abbottes or biſhops: for aunſwer wherof, firſt me thinketh it a thyng aptlye geuen, whatſoeuer thyng beyng honeſt, is put vp to a Chriſten prince. And beſides this, where as no prince is ſo ſecular, but that he hath a doe with the profeſſion of the goſpell, the Emperours are anoynted & ſacred for this very purpoſe, that they may cyther maynteyne or reſtore, or elles enlarge and ſpreade abrode the religion of the goſpell. Ergo than, wil ſome man ſaye) the Emperour is not a teacher of the goſpell, but the defendour of it. I graunte that: but in the meanwhyle mete it is not to be ignoraunt what maner thyng it is, for whiche one taketh armour to defende it. And forſoth whã I conſider that herte and mynde of yours in ſuche wiſe to bee geuen vnto religion and to godly deuotion, that to Biſhops & Abbottes it may towardes

the studie of godlinesse, bee as well a rule, as also a spurre, me seemeth, I can not dedicate this gifte vnto any man, more conuenientlye, then to youre maiestie. So that the thyng whiche I myght aptly haue dedicated to any Christen prince, and more aptlye to a Christen Emperoure: I doe moste aptly of all dedicate vnto you Charles. Muche lesse apte thynges doe they bringe vnto you, that geue you great gyftes of precious stones, that are gaylon to bee found, of lustie fierce horses, of houndes, & of riche hangynges, that come oute of farre straunge countreyes. And moreouer forasmuche as the Euangelistes haue written the gospel vnto all folkes, no persone excepted: I do not see why it shoulde not of euery man bee read. And I haue so handled it, that it maye bee vnderstanded, euen of suche also, as are vnlettered. And furelye shall withe excellent good fruite be read, if euery bodye shall take it in his handes of the only mynde and entent, to bee made thereby a better man then he was afore: and not apply scripture of the gospell to his owne affections, but contrarywyse reforme and correct his lyfe and his desyres, according to the rule and prescripcion therof. I haue in this present worke chiefly folowed Origenes, beyng singularly aboue others experte in diuinitie, and Chrisostome and Hierome, of the catholique writers most best allowed. That Lorde and Prince of heauen giue and graunte vnto you Charles, Emperour most emperiall, suche thinges to minde and to go about, as are of the principall beste sort, & thesame lord well prosper your endeuours in that behalf, to the ende that the moste noble Empier, whiche ye haue hitherto had without bloudshed of mā, ye maye semblably as well enlarge and amplifie, as defende and maintayne. And this poince in the meane while it maye please your merciful graciousnes frō tyme to tyme to haue in your remembraunce, that no warre there is vpon so iust & lawfull causes taken in hande, nor with so good moderacion executed, that draweth not after it an huge heape both of abominacions, and also of miseries: yea, and remembre also the greatest portion of all the harmes, to light in fine, vpon persones bothe giltles and also vnworthy thesame.

Matthew whiche was other wyse also called Leui, beyng of a Publican made an Apostle, first of all others compiled and wrote in Iewrye, the gospell of Christe in the Hebrue tounge, for them behoulde and caule, whyche beyng of the circumcision had believed: whyche gospell what person did afterwarde translate into Greke, it is not verie certaynly knowen. But truely the verye Hebrue selfe is had euen vntill this presente daye in the librarye of Cesarea, whyche librarye Pamphilus the martyr did with all possible studiousnes set vp and make: And I my selfe also had the same gospell of Matthew in Hebrue, leue me to coppe it out, of the Nazarites, whyche in Beroea a citie of Syria, doe vse thesame booke. Wherin is to be noted and obserued, that wherfoeuer thee Euangelistes, either in his owne person, or els in the person of our sauiour, doethe vse any allegacions of the olde Testamente, he doeth not folowe the auctorite of Septuaginta, that is to saye, of the tyme seore and ten translatours: but of the Hebrue. Of whyche sorte are

The Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gospell of sainct Matthew.

¶ The firste Chapter.

If men so gredely embrace a booke, which is set foorth by the industrie of man, concernyng the preseruacion or restorying of health, or the waye to increace worldely substaunce, or touchyng any other facultie whiche maketh only for worldly commodities, with howe muche more feruent loue and desyer ought this boke to bee receyued of all men: whose profyt and cõmoditie belongeth indifferently to all men. This boke promiseth not worldly commodities, whiche laste but a whyle: but it teacheth all heauenly wysedome, delyuered vnto mankynde from the heauenly doctour Christe Iesus: And it promiseth also a wonderfull rewarde, not ryches, nor kyngdome, nor pleasures, but true and euerlastynge felicitie: vnto the whiche felicitie this booke sheweth the moste ready and easye way for all men. It sheweth also the author & meane, through whome euery man hath health and saluacion, and without whome no man maye hope for healthe and saluacion. What man wouilde not be moued and prouoked with a sure hope of suche a good thynge, be he neuer so barbarous or vnlettred? And thys wunderfull saluacion (whiche neyther mannes inbeuour, nor the paynfull labour of the Philosophers, nor the superstitious religion of the Gentiles, nor the diligent obseruacion of Moyses lawe, couilde fully performe or geue) God the maker, the preseruer, the ruler, and restorer of all thynges visible and inuisible, dyd sheawe and declare in tymes paste, by the sayinges of all his Prophetes, beyng replenished with his heauenly spirite, vnto all the worlde, but moste specially to the people of the Iewes (whyche at that tyme wer a figure of Christes churche, whiche shortly after shoulde be enlarged throughout all the world) signifying & shewyng before by dyuers dark figures & shadowes, whatsoeuer he hath now plainly made open vnto the world, by his sonne Iesus Christe, who was the messinger of this free felicitie, beyng amballadour in yearth of God his father, in suche wyse, that he was also the teacher of the holsome philosophy, he was ỳ example, he was both the pledge, the promiser, and the author of the euerlastynge rewarde. For God by his secrete counsell whiche mannes wit is vtterly vnhable to serche oute, hath suffered mankind, beyng of disposicion lyke his first parent, and prone to all vice, to be entangled with false religions, with sondry vices of life, and naughtie desyres, to the intent that in this time of al times most to bee desired and wished for, the whiche Goddes wisdome the ozdorer of all thinges had appoynted to it selfe, al men shoulde with the more desyrous & agreable myndes embrace this philosophie, beyng bothe very holsome and of marueylous efficacie, after that they haue once perceyued, that neyther by those commodities and healpes whyche the worlde promyseth here to be chyefe, nor by so many fine & exquisite preceptes

of the

of the phylolophers, nor by lo many foxtes of religions, nor by the lcrupulous obleruation of Moles lawe, they coulde attayne vnto true godlyneſs and true felicite: Naye rather the more earneſtly they laboured to cum vnto innocencie and felicitie, as long as they truſted to mannes help & ſtrength, the more they wer intangled with vice and filt by deſyres. Therfore yf the Je-wes, whom it behoued chiefly to accept and imbrace the thing that is offered vnto them, beyng ſo often promyſed, and ſo longe loked for, yf they alone negleet ſo greate godnes, whiche is frely offered vo all men, and yf they had rather alone to lacke it, than to haue it common vv others, they can impute their deſtruccion to nothyng but to theyr owne incredulitie and vnbeleef. The ſayynges and prophecies of the holy Prophetes, prophecied these thynges chiefely for them. They ſawe Chriſte with their eyes vvorkyng miracles, they heard with theyr eares the doctrine of the goſpell. The kyngdome of heauen was preached firſt to them. But trulye whoſoeuer are wearye of theyr former lyfe, as many as loue true innocencie and godly lyuyng, whoſoeuer deſyreth true, perfect, and euerlaſtyng felicitie, let them receyue this goſpel, this pleaſaunte and mery tydinges, with mery and thereſull hertes, whether they be Grekes, or Jewes, or Romains, or Scithians, or Gallians, or Britans. Lyke as God is not only God of the Jewes, but indifferently God ouer all, and common to all, lyke as there is one ſunne whiche is common to the whole vvorlde: ſo Je-ſus Chriſte the ſonne of God came to ſaue all menne, dyed for all, aroſe agayne for all, aſcended into heauen for all, and ſente his holy ſpirite to all, refuſyng none, neyther for diuerſitie of kocke, or of age, or of kinde, or of ſtate, or of lyfe.
All the ſinnes of the former life be drowned once by his death in holy baptiſme.
And thoſe ſinnes be not imputed, be they neuer ſo greuous, for the cleanſyng of whiche, that bleſſed innocent once dyed: ſo that the reſte of the life be paſſed ouer after the rule of Chriſt, that is to ſaye, after the doctrine of the gholpell:
from the tyme of baptiſme, a man is iudged or taken to be a chriſtian, to the perfourmaunce of the whiche ſo high a profeſſion, he will graunt his fre aſſi-cour and ayde, and will graunte alſo plentifull rewarde to them that do perſeuer vnto thende. He requireth of no man the burden of Moſes lawe, onelye he requyreth lpuely fayeth, vpon whiche maye redily beleue whatſoeuer is the-wed, and with a ſure truſte looke for that whiche is promyſed. The eternall verite doethe not deceyue: God the promiſer diſappointeth not. Further, mans lawe ſhall not nowe preſcribe what is to be doen, but Chriſtian charitie ſhall playnly tell.

The booke of the generacion of Jeſus Chriſte, the ſonne of Dauid, the ſonne of Abra The texte. ham. Abraham begat Iſaac. Iſaac begat Jacob. Jacob begat Judas and bys brethren.

And hytherto we haue trulye delyuered vnto you the gholpell by mouthe, and haue made all men partetakers of thoſe thynges whiche we haue ſeene with our eyes, and hearde with our eares. Nowe becauſe there is daunger, leſte the thyng beyng ſpred abrode daylye more and more, leſte the tellyng of it, paſſyng by many mennes mouthes, maye harme, or elles leſte the tale tolde by mouthe, be not ſo well beleued as whan it is written in a booke, and furthermore to thintent that the thyng that is written maye the more eaſily cum vnto all men, than the voyce of the mouthe: we ſhall compyle in this booke, the ſumme of the whole matter, ſo muche as ſhall be ſufficient to the obteynynge of saluation, as the natuite, the doctrine, the miracles, the deathe, and the resurrection. And fyrste of all we shall recite the geneologie and petigree of Jesus Christe, takyng oure begynnyng not from the highe heade, but from Dauid and Abrahame, eyther for because the memorye of these twoo is verye ryfe and common, and verye acceptable among the Jewes, for they glorye is chiefly of Abrahame as of the autour and beginner of theyr nacion, and Dauid the kynge beeynge so muche prayed by the commendacion of God, sayeth the moze in theyr myndes, because the memorie of hym is yet but freshe and newe: oracles because Christe whiche was looked for so many yeares, was promysed chyefly vnto these twoo, and that in the bookes and oracles of the Hebzues. To whome euen those that be directly agaynste Christe, gaue great credyt. For in the boke of Genesis God speaketh vnto Abrahame, promysyng that in type to come, there shoulde spzynge one out of hys stocke, thzough whose free benefit, not onely the nacion of the Jewes, but also all the people of the whole woylde beyng receyued into the ryght, and title, and loue of chyldzen, shoulde obteine with Christe, the kelowchyppe of the kyngdome of heauen, not by circumcision, whych was not as then setforth, but by fayethe of the gospel. For thus sayethe God vnto Abrahame: In thy seed, that is to saye, in Jesus Christe all nations shall be blessed. Further Dauid in the misticall psalmes speaketh thus: Of the fruite of thy wombe shall I set vpon thy seat. And this shall we doe, chiefly because of the Jewes, leste they beyng a rebellious nacion, and harde of beliefe (knowyng by the authozitie of prophecies whiche they sufficiently beleue, that Messias whiche shoulde come, was promysed) maye make cauillacions, and saye that there is an other sautoure to be loked for, and that this is not he, whome the scriptures promysed. For many of them because their mindes be blinded with desires of woyldly thynges, not takyng aryght the sayinges of the Prophetes, (suche was theyr carnall and grosse affection) loked for some myghtye and glozious kynge, who being balsaunt with armes or hostes, weapon, riches, and suche other defences of this woylde, shoulde promote hys people to ryches, honour and emperie, and shoulde subdue the whole woylde to the dominion of the Hebzues. But Christ although he be lozde ouer all, came not into the woylde, to the entent to entryche wyth woyldye goodes one nacion, of the whyche he was borne as touchyng hys body, he toke, but to the intente to auaunce all the nacions of the whole woylde vnto true ryches, that neuer shoulde decay: and to make them blessed euerlastingly wyth heauenly ryches, to ouercum the tyranny of deathe by sufferyng and dyeng, to subdue enemies by gentill deseruinges, to kill the monsters of vice, and the rebellious prouocations of concupiscence by the sweard of the spirite, and they beyng once ouercum that fighte agaynst the spirite of God, to geue vs of his own rightwousnesse & innocencie: Finally by spirituall weapons to winne vnto vs a spirituall kingdome. But these Jewes cannot haue hereafter anything to saye, whan they shall see all thynges to consent and agree vnto hym, whome we knowe to be come, and constauntly preache the same: whyche thynges the holy prophetes inspired with the heauenly spirite, had prophecied with a full consent and agremente, so long before in holye bookes, that is to saye, the stocke, the familie, the manner of byrthe, the lyfe, the doctrine, the myracles, the afflictions, the rebukes, the kynde of death, the burtall, the resurrection, thascendyng into heauen, the holy ghoste sente sente downe from heauen, the wounderfull toungues of the Apostles, the conuersion of the Gentiles, and other thynges whiche we sawe and dayly see doen by them that profesſe the name of Chriſte. Finally the tyme also doeth agree, in ꝑ which he was prophecied for to come. And all these thynges were prophecied, not only by the sayinges of the Prophetes, but also were signified by the actes and dedes of ꝑ Patriarches. Nowe seing that know these thinges, if thei cõpare thẽ with these whiche we shewe to haue been doen, they shall vnderstande that they loke in vayne for any other Messias, then this whom we speake of, he came once humble and abiecte concernyng the fourme of mannes bodye (for so Esai prophecied he should come) to deliuer all mẽ by his deathe from the tyranny of deathe. And he shall cum againe in thende of the worlde, not as now, a sauiour, but a iudge of all, bothe lyuyng and deade. Now no man is excluded frõ his benefite. Than no man shal escape his iudgement. But than shal they ioyfully see ꝑ iudge dealyng euerlasting rewardes, whiche now doe not despise hym a meke sauiour & easy to be entreted. This therfore is that only and very Messias, whose genealogie and pedigre shal forthwith be shewed, touching the body whiche he toke for our cause: for by hym shoulde spryng and cum furth a new nacion not carnall but spirituall, which should rather replenish heauen than yearth, the which also shoulde be encreaced or multiplied, not by the seed of man, but by the euangelical fayth, whiche is the heauenly seed of Goddes worde. Of this faith the autour and father in a misticall fygure was represented by Abraham, who (the law of circumcision not yet publyshed,) deserued the prayse of righteousnes, not before men, but before God, not by the kepyng of the law, but by the sincerite of faith, wherby he doubted nothing of Goddes promises, although they wer farre palling the power of nature. And for this trust and confidence, he was called the father of many nacions, which after the example of hym should beleue the gospel of Iesus Chriſte. He nowe, his body beyng decated for age, his wife also beyng weake and barain, begate Isaac whiche was promised vnto hym, who also was a figure of Chriſte, wearyng wood to the sacrifice, wherevnto he was appointed. Isaac begat Iacob, which though he wer the younger brother, yet he set his elder brother beside, & purchased the inheritaunce to hymself, wherin he was a figure of the churche that should be congregated and gathered together of the Gentiles, the which, the Iewes being excluded, encreaseth daily more and more, receiuing the grace of the gospell by faythe, of the which the Iewes through vnbeleue haue made themselues vnworthy. For thus sayeth God: I haue loued Iacob and hated Esau. And in the Prophetes ofte mencion is made of this name. Iacob begate Iudas, of whome the tribe had his name, of the whiche Chriſt was prophecied to cum of. and by whose name, as by inheritaunce, was promised the newe lawe of the gospel, for thus speaketh Hieremie: Beholde the dayes do come, sayeth the Lorde, and I wyll dispose a newe testamente to the house of Iudas & the house of Iacob. And he did not beget him onely, albeit he deserued chiefly to be recited in ꝑ genealogie, but also he begate the other eleuen brothers of Iudas, which seuerally gaue names to ꝑ seuerall tribes of the nacion of Israell.

Iudas begat Phares and Zaram of Thamar, Phares begat Ezrom: And Ezrom begat Aram. And Aram begat Aminadab, Aminadab begat Naasson: Naasson begate Salmon, Salmon begat Boos of Rahab. Boos begat Obed of Ruth. Obed begat Jesse, Jesse begat Dauid the kyng. Dauid the kyng begat Salomon of her that was the wyfe of Vrie. The texte

Further

Further Judas had two chyldren of a burden: named Phares and Zaram, not of his lawfull wyfe, but of Thamar hys daughter in lawe. whyche was maryed to Her, the eldest soonne of Judas, vnto whome when Judas did not performe hys promyse, that is to saye, that she myghte be maryed to Sela, brother vnto her houbande that was dead, accordyng to the order of the lawe, the woman pakyng all measure destroug to haue a chylde, tooke the habite of a common woman, and couerynge her face by crafte and decepte, laye with Judas her father in lawe, and after warde by shewyng of the token whyche she had receyued of hym before that she woulde suffer hym to lye wyth her, auouched and proued hym to be father of both the chyldren, when he otherwyse earnestlye woulde haue bzente her accordyng to the lawe. The thyng thus doen is not without offence and blame, but yet the mysterie hyd vnder thys vnhoneste couerture maketh muche for the matter of the Ghospell. Lyke as also Phares was a figure and significacion of the churche and Synagogue, whiche Phares preuented his brother when he endeuored to goe furthe of his mothers wombe, puttyng foorth his hande fyrste.

Of this Phares Estrom was borne, of Estrom Aram, of Aram Aminadab, of Aminadab Naasson, and of hym Salmon. Salmon begat Boos of Rahab, whiche though she were not of the nacion of Jewes, but of the Canantes, yet because she preserued the spyalles sent from Jesu the captain a guyde of the Jewes, and because she betrayed the citie of Hierico, she deserued her place in the geneologie of theym, whiche thzoughe faythe were made prayse worthie of God, and she exempted out of the lore and order of common women, was chosen and admitted emong the people of God, and maryed to an houbande of the nacion of Jewes: signifyng euen at that tyme, that synners & heathen people beyng alienate from the religion of God, houlde be coupled vnto Chzist thzoughe the merite of faythe. Boos also hade a soonne named Obeth, by Ruth a Moabite, the whiche also renouncyng her countrepe, and her bodily affections, had rather to be planted emong the people of the Jewes, that is to say, suche as professe the doctrine of Chzist. Thus at that tyme figures and shadowes signified before, that no hynde of men houlde be bzpuen and kept of from the felowshyp of the gospell. So that he beyng with hym faith and a desirous minde of true godlynes. Of Obed came Jesse, whiche was called also Jsai, of whole name Esay prophecyng of Chzist, maketh mencion saying: A rod shall cum out of the roote of Jesse. Of hym was borne Dauid derely beloued of God, both he kynge and prophete, buylder of the citie of Hierusalem, noble, thzough the slaughter of Goliah: and after that the wicked kyng Saul was deposed by the cõmaundemente of God, from a poze shepeherd he was consecrate kyng ouer the Jsraelites. Out of whole stocke the whole nacion of the Hebzues did loke that Chzist houlde cum, as it was prophecied before of men that wer inspired with God. And he also did repesente by manywayes the fygure of Chzist, his offspzing. Dauid begat Salomon that kyng of peace, and the buylder of the Lordes temple: and he begate hym of Bethabee whome he loued: whome he coupled vnto hym in marpage, after that Urias her former houlbande was slayne by his fraude & gyle: and that was doen not wythout great sinne yf a man consydze nothyng beside the outwarde parte of the histozie: but agayne not without signification of thynges to cum, yf a man serche the misterie.

Salomon

Salomon begat Roboham, Roboham begat Abia, Abia begat Asa, Asa begat Josaphat, Josaphat begat Joram, Joram begat Ozias, Ozias begat Joatham, Joatham begat Achas, Achas begat Ezechias, Ezechias begat Manasses, Manasses begat Amon, Amon begate Josias, Josias begat Jechonias and his brethren about the tyme of the captiuitie of Babylon. And after the captiuitie of Babylon, Jechonias begat Salathiel, Salathiel begate Zorobabel, Zorobabel begat Abiud, Abiud begat Eliachi, Eliachim begat Azor, Azor begat Sadoc, Sadoc begat Achym, Achym begat Eliud, Eliud begat Eleazar, Eleazar begat Matthan, Matthan begat Jacob, Jacob begat Joseph the husbande of Marie, of whome was borne Jesus which is called Christ. The texte.

Of Salomon was borne Roboham: and of Roboha Abias: of Abias came Asa: of Asa Josaphat, from whence came Joram, of him Ozias: of Ozias was borne Joatham: of Joatham Achas: of Achas Ezechias, and of him Manasses: of Manasses was born Amon: of Amon Josias: of Josias, Jechonias and the other brothers of Jechonias, about the tyme whan king Nabugodonozor burned the temple of Hierusalem, and caryed the king and the people of the Hebrues, captiue into Babilon, which wer figures, signifiyng the tyranny of the deuill toward mankynde, and against libertie restored thorough the benefit of Christ. In this nere and narowe poynt betwene seruitude and libertie whan the people of God wer about to be restored to theyr religion and dwelling places, Jechonias begat Salathiel: Salathiel zorobabel : zorobabel Abiud: of Abiud came Eliachim: of Eliachim Azor: of Azor Sadoc: of him Achim: of Achim Eliud: of Eliud Eleazar: of Eleazar Matthan: of Matthā Jacob. And this Jacob was the father of Joseph , vnto whome was maried Mary the mother of Jesus, who was promised to be the sauiour of all men, whome the Hebrues call Messias, that is to saye Christ, or anoynted: because he onely beyng kyng ouer all, and high preest, with ꝑ sacrifice of his owne body, hath pacified God the father beyng displeased and grieued with the sinnes of mankinde. And the tiranny of death vtterly put away, he hath opened the kingdome of heauen vnto all men. The cleane was marryed to the clean, the moste chaste to the chaste, of the same trybe and famiilte, that is of Dauid, accordyng to the order of Goddes lawe, leste any man should thinke that this order and geneologie of kinred were of litle profit concernyng the declaracion of Christes stocke, wherof he came as touching his humanitie.

All the generacions from Abraham to Dauid, are, xiiii. generacions. From Dauid vnto the captiuitie of Babilon are fourtetene generacions. From the captiuitie of Babilon vnto Christ, are fowertene generacions. The texte.

And if any man list to herken the tyme that Daniel described many yeares past by certaine orders and degres of weekes, he shall fynde the sayinges of ꝑ Prophetes very agreable to ꝑ thyng that is now cū to passe. The sūme of ꝑ wholle geneologie resteth in thzee fowertenes. For if ye counte frō Abraham ꝑ patriarche vnto Dauid ꝑ author of ꝑ stoꝛishing kingdōe, ye shall fynde, xiiii generacions. Agayne yf ye counte from Dauid, vnto the decaye of the kyngedome, ꝑ is vnto the exile into Babilon, ye shal finde. xiiii. generacions. Agayne if ye counte from ꝑ time vnto Christe, the beginner & the finisher of the newe euangelicall generacion & newe kyngdome: ye shall fynde fowertene generacions. Hitherto we haue shewed you truly ꝑ geneologie of Christ, to ꝑ intent it may appeare to al men, ꝑ this is he, whō ꝑ true sayinges of ꝑ Prophetes & tymes paste promised to ꝑ worlde. And so many argumētes agree in one, that it cannot seme to be done by chaunce, and that withall it maye be euident, that he was verye man whiche came as touchyng the flesshe of suche auncestoures as were notablie knowen.

The texte. The byrth of Christ is on this wise. For whan his mother Mary was espoused vnto Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child, by the holy ghost.

But, although he were man borne of man, whiche came to redeme mankynde by his death: yet he was not borne after the common and vulgare sorte of them that be borne. For it was seemely, that he whiche came from heauen, whiche called vnto heauen, whiche taughte and promysed nothing but heauenlye thynges, finallye whiche after so many Prophetes and doctours was made ambassadour, to thintent that once and for altogether he should make al thynges newe, and cum forth into the worlde with a very bodye in dede, but yet after a newe maner, and that the true natiuitie of man should bee declared in suche sorte, that it should not be thought vnseemely for God: and Esaie prophecied this thing to cum to passe, that because men dyd in maner slepe at these common myracles of nature, by reason of custome, God shoulde shewe a newe myracle and that in the yearthe, to the intente it should be more euident to all mennes sight and vnderstanding. He is borne verye man and mortall, and yet the same very God and immortall. He is borne a man of man and yet of a virgin. He is borne of the stocke of Idā whiche was the first of mākynde, and yet without the spot of synne. He is borne in matrimonye, but so, that the woorke of his conception was not of man, but of the holy goste: who by a wōderfull meane, fourmed and fashioned the straunge and marualous fruite, of ꝑ substaunce of the vndefiled virgin, as in an heauenly temple consecrated to God. And he ordered this matter wyth suche a marualous wysedome, that he couered and hyd it from the wicked, as a thyng incredible: and persuaded it vnto godly myndes with moste certain & sure argumentes, the whiche no eloquēce of man was bitterly able to proue and perswade. Wherefore whan the holy virgin eternally appoynted to this great misterie, to be the mother of Jesus, by the aduise of her parentes, whose heartes were ordered and directed by the power of God, beyng spoused to an honest man of her tribe, named Joseph, kepte company with him in house, she was founde greate with chyld before they came and coupled together as manne and wyfe, eyther because true honestie, is not hastie to the lust of pleasure, or because God dyd so ordre thys matter. For the maidens wombe waxyng daylye greater and greater, declared it vnto Joseph to be so, beyng her housbande, whiche both loued her well, and was not insensible in suche thynges. And she fledde not from the sight of her housbande, as though she had in her conscience yelded her self culpable, neyther disclosed she the secret, whiche she had learned of the Angel: eyther because she was in despayre, ꝑ the thyng might as yet bee beleued or perswaded, or because she reserued this vnto god to be declared in tyme conueniēt. Therfore the cōception was certayne & true declaryng it self by manifest & accustomed tokens, especially vnto Joseph, who by reason of conuersation in housholde, marked, more easily in his spouse, the habyte and fourme of her body. But this young thyng came not furthe by the imbracing of man, as other women by the common lawe of nature be wonte to conceyue, but by the holy ghoste: whiche by the angell Gabriell than messinger from heauen, entering into the moste holy temple of the virgines wombe (the inuisible power of the father hye godhed ſhadowyng and ouer ſhadoynge the whole body and mynde of the moſte holy virgin) without any hurt or detriment of chaſtitie, made her great with chylde.

¶ But Joſeph her husband beyng a righteous man, would not put her to ſhame, but was mynded to departe from her ſecretly.

Furthermore Joſeph beeyng yet ignorant of ſo great a miſtery, whē he ſawe euident argumentes and tokens of conception in his wyfe, and knewe well that he had neuer to do with ỹ mayde, whereby she myght becum great with chylde, and yet had founde the maners of her to be ſuche, that there couldbe no ſuſpicion of aduoutery in her, and beſydes that true honeſty is neyther ready to miſdeme, nor haſty to reuenge: he began to call in his minde, by what meanes he myghte both ſee for the good name, and the life of his wyfe: and alſo cōmit the matter vnto god, whereof he himſelfe couldbe kynde no ende nor vſe. By the reaſon of great familiaritie, he founde the maners of the mayde vtterly without blame. For that godly ſpirite, whiche dwelled wholy in her harte, dyd appere in her eyes, and in her countenaunce, and dyd declare it ſelfe euery where in her goyng, in her geſture, and in her communication. He had eſpied in her a certayne heauenly thing & aboue the common rate of other mortall creatures. And yet he ſawe her great with chylde, & ſhe was awaye frō home certayne monethes, whyle ſhe went to ſee her coſyn Elizabeth. Furthermore he conſidered howe greate the weakenes of that age and kynde was in other maydens. What buſines would ſum other huſbande haue made here, chiefely if loue had tyred vp gelowſy whiche is a very ſore diſeaſe of the mynde. But to proue this matter to be true. Joſeph was choſen out to be a witnes, leſte any man myght ſaye, the chylde of Marye was eyther another womans, or els vnlawfully gotten. He was a man well eſtemed of all menne, a maane of knowen and tried honeſtie and wiſedome, ſo that no man might ſuſpect him, eyther to be ſo notably naughtye that he would be his wyues bawde, or of ſo foolith patience, that he would nouryſh & bryng vp with the child her whom he knew to be an aduouteresſe. There be none more cruell againſt their wyues that do amiſſe, than they which bee defiled with many aduoutryes theſelues. Joſeph himſelf being very innocent, was ſo far from al deſyre of vengeaunce that he dyd not ſo muche as once in woordes fynde faulte with her, leſte he ſhould diſcourage the virgins harte with any ſorowfulnes. He is troubled with himſelf with ſecrete cares of the mynde, and doth deuiſe a gentle kinde of diuorce, that he might be deliuered from her company whiche was with chylde, in ſuche wiſe, that the myght beare no blame, nor be in any leopardie or perill.

¶ But whyle he thus thought, beholde the Angell of the Lorde appeared vnto him in a ſlepe, ſaying: Joſeph thou ſonne of Dauid feare not to take vnto the Mary thy wyfe. For that whiche is conceyued in her, is of the holy ghoſt. She ſhall bring furthe a ſonne, & thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus. For he ſhall ſaue his people from their ſynnes. The texte.

And thus farre God hath ſuffered this innocent man to be troubled and diſtracte with doubtefull deuiſes. For this was expediente for the certentie of his fayth. But nowe it was tyme for him to be deliuered out of theſe griefes of his minde, being worthy doubtles to be made partaker of this miſtery, for the greate honour that he dyd to the virgyn thus conſecrated to God. And for the approued grauitie and ſobrenelle in ſuppreſſyng the cares of hys mynde, he was thought mete to conteyne and kepe truſtely this ſecret miſtery, whiche

was not yet to be published, because of the peruerse and frowarde suspicion of the Iewes. Beholde the angell Gabriel, (whiche signified vnto the virgin the maruelouse conception, appearyng with great lyght vnto her waking, because of her pureness whiche was more than angelical, beyng wel acquaynted with suche kinde of visions,) presenteth himselfe vnto Ioseph in his sleepe: as he was musing in his sleepe of suche like matter, the messenger of the heauenly oracle, spake vnto him in this wyse: Ioseph the sonne of Dauid, what carnall suspicion troubleth thy mynde? why art thou vered? why doest thou wauer in and out? or why doest thou muse vpon dimocrement? or why wilt thou be dismissed from her, whiche is coupled vnto the with so great loue, and also by the kinred both of tribe and familie? There is none other spouse worthy for that virgin, and she is appointed to none other by the ordynaunce of God, but to the. Thou must know, that Dauid is the author of thy stocke, vnto whom was promised in tymes past the thyng that nowe beggynneth to be performed. All that is done, is godly. Thou needest not to feare that thy wyues woombe rising without thy doyng shal seyme thy matrimony with any spot of dishonestie. Thou doest suppose that she is greate with chylde, and doest suppose aright. But thou must not therfore remoue her from thy companye and conuersacion, but rather take her and adioyne her vnto the, because thou seest her great, vnto whom by goddes ordinaunce thou art geuē to be an husbāde, to the intent that hereafter thou maiest be a witnes of the fruitefull virginitie founde in thy wyfe, and that she in the meane tyme by that that she is maryed vnto the, may be in safetie agaynste the suspicioulse crueltie of the Iewes, vnto whome this misterie is not yet to bee opened, especially vnto them that bee not yet worthye, neither of capacitie to receiue it. This matter shalbe communicated and opened vnto the, to the intente thy wyues innocencie shall suffer none vnworthye thyng. For this newe fruite, wherwith thou seest thy wyues woombe dayly to encrease, lyke as it is not of the, so it is of none other mortall man. The Angel brought the message beyng as a goer betwene God and her, in makyng this godly coniunction, the father hath ouershadowed her: the holy ghoste hath prepared her woombe, the sonne of god hath replenished it.

All is newe for that a newe chylde shall be borne. It proceedeth from heauen that thy wyfe shall bryng forth, who shalbe more chaste also after that she hath brought forth chylde. And she shall beare a sonne: not for the, but for the worlde. In the meane season, thou shalt be called his father, and thou shalt be the keper of the mayde, rather than the housbande. When the chylde is borne, thou as the father shalt geue it a name, not a name after thine owne fantasie, but that name that God, agreably vnto the thyng, hyd destinate and appoynt vnto hym, before the creation of the worlde. And thou shalte call his name Iesus, that is to say, Sauioure, for this is that same Messias desired & loked for so many yeres, who accordyng to the sayinges of the Prophetes, shall deliuer all his people from theyr synnes: not by the sacrifice of beastes, but through his owne bloude. And he will not onely be content to geue freely this so great a benefyt, but whan we are purged frō the synnes of our former lyfe, he will geue vs also perpetual and eternall saluacion.

The texte. All this was done that the thyng myght be fulfylled whiche was spoken of the Lorde by the Prophet, saying thus: Beholde a mayde shalbe with chylde, and shall bring forth a sonne, and they shall call his name Emanuel, whiche is by interpretacion: God with vs.

And

And surely none of all this matter is brought to passe by chaunce or fortune, but by the decree and prouidence of god. For the thyng that we thewe to bee doen, the same in tymes past the lorde himselfe promised that he would do it, speakyng by the mouthe of his prophete Esay, and setting furth in fewe wordes bothe the straunge, newnes and ỹ greate fruite and profit, of this conception. Beholde, sayeth he, a virgin shall conceyue and bryng furthe. And this is the straungenes of it: for when was it euer hearde, a mayden to haue borne a child without blemish of hir virginitie? Nowe herken what is the fruite & profite: And his name shal be called (sayeth he) Emanuel, which foundeth in Hebrue, God with vs. For this only one shal reconcile his people vnto god, and where as he was offended and displeased, he shall make hym fauourable and mercifull, and beyng conuersaunt emong men, he shall powze the moste aboundant goodnes of god in them, and at last they hauyng knowledge and experience of his effectuall doctrine, of the myght of his miracles, of his present efficacy and strength, and of the vehemencie of his diuine spirite, chowyng it selfe after a new sorte in them that shall beleue, they shall crie and not without a cause: God is with vs. If thou acknowledge the prophecy (as truely thou doest acknowledge) geue attendaunce and honour to this mystery, and kepe close this secrete pruitie.

Now whan Joseph awoke out of slepe, he dyd as the Angell of the lorde had bidde him, and toke his wife vnto him, and knewe her not tyl she had brought furth hir first borne sonne, and called his name Jesus. The texte.

Whan the messinger of the hygh God had spoken these thynges, Joseph waking from slepe both merely and cherefully, dyd obey the oracle. He setteth aparte al his purpose of discorde, and taketh his wife more nerely vnto hym, ỹ no man might suspecte any discorde or disagreement to be betwene thẽ. And now he perceyuing ỹ she was wholly dedicated vnto god of heauen, doeth honoure in hir the godlye mistery, nor dareth not touche hir, whome god had taken onely to hymselfe. He is diligent in seruice, but he forbeareth to company with hir as hir husbande. In the meane season that heauenlye fruite wareth ripe in the holy woumbe of the virgin, whiche cumyng furthe at his time of his mother the virgin, toke not away the integritie of his parente, but did consecrate and sanctifye the same. Further Joseph (as he was commaunded of the angell) bearing the countenaunce of a father hitherto gaue a name to the chylde, Jesus, whan after the fashion of the countrey, he was circumcised the eyght daye.

The.ii. Chapter.

Whan Jesus was borne at Bethleem a towne in Jewrye, in the tyme of Herode the kyng: beholde there came Magians from the east to Hierusalem saying. Where is he whiche is borne the kyng of the Jewes? For we sawe his starre in the east, and are cum to worship him.

The texte.

Whan Jesus was borne. &c.

HItherto ye see howe many thynges do accorde and agree with the godly sayinges of the prophetes. He is borne of the same auncetours and of the same tribe and famille, that the prophecy promised he should be borne. Also the supputation and counte of the wekes, when Daniel prophecied that he shoulde cum, dothe consente and agree. Also the strange Natiuitie dothe agree, in that that he was borne of a birgin without helpe of man. And the name doth agree. A Sauiour was promysed, a Sauiour was loked for, a Jesus signifieth a Sauiour. Furthermore the name of the countrey, and of the towne, doth answere to the sayth of the prophetes, for he was borne not farre from Hierusalem in a litle towne called Bethleem, and that in the countrey of Jewry, (for there is a towne in Galile also of this name, in the tribe of zabulon,) and he was borne in the time when Herode an Idumean by birthe and not a Jewe, obteyned the kyngdom ouer the Jewes, that no man neded for to doubte but that now was the time that Messias should be borne, the whiche Jacob the Patriarche many yeres before prophecied should cum to passe, saying: The scepter shall not be taken from Juda, nor a ruler from his thighe, till that he cum which should be sent. Truely this is he, the holyest of all, at whose entring all the anoynting of the Jewes ought to haue ceased, and geue place. Nowe ye shall understande by what wonderfull meanes he began by litle and litle to be knowe to the worlde. For he would be manifest & open vnto all, whiche came to saue all, that both he might be knowen vnto good men to their saluation, & that he might take away from the wicked all excuse of ignorance. He was promised chiefely to the Jewes, he was borne of them, he was firste preached vnto the of the Angels, syngyng glory on high vnto God, and in the yearth peace emong men of good will. The shepherdes beyng taught by the voyce of the same Angels, & told of the childe y was borne, offered the firste fruites of sayth at the maunger where the babe was borne. By the secrete inspiracion of the spirite he was knowen of Elizabeth, of Symeon & Anna the prophetisse. Firste of all he shewed himself vnto poore & humble persones, whom he knewe to be most prest & redy to receaue sayth. For the proude woulde not lightely receyue him beyng hũble, nor the riche, him being poore, nor the stoute him beyng meke: nor they that wer intangled with the delyces of this worlde, woulde receyue him that was heauenly. And because he was promised not to the Jewes only, but also to the Gentiles, yea to al the nations of the world, he would euen at the very entery of his begynnyng, be knowen of them also, to thintent he might declare and showe, that saluatiõ was also offered vnto them, and that he might styre and prouoke the Jewes by their example, to cum to sayth and to beleue.

And he did not drawe all men by one meane to the knowledge of himselfe, but he allured euerye mane by lytle and litle by suche thynges as they already knew knewe and were well acquainted with. The Jewes gaue fayth vnto the Prophetes, they were moued with signes and woonders, therefore he entised the by the allurement of these thynges. The Persians and the Caldeans dyd attribute muche to the starres, as menne muche geuen to this kynde of Philosophie, thoughte the knowledge whereof they had perswaded themselues, that there should be a certayne wonderfull restorer of the worlde. Therfore they had knowledge of the birthe of the chylde, not by any Prophete or Angell, but by a certayne straunge and a woonderfull apperyng of a starre, truelye of that starre, the whiche the prophecie of Balaam dyd shewe before, to rise out of the house of Jacob. And now they had knowledge by the common fame that this king was chiefly promised vnto the nacion of the Jewes, and that he was not a meane kyng, and of the common sorte, but very notable, and without comparison: of whose power, of whose wisedome and of whose goodnes, far exceedyng the power, wisedome, and goodnes of man, the whole worlde shoulde haue experience. Further (as the yll man when he hath occasiō is made worse, and a wyse man as he hath occasion is made wiser,) certayne Magians (for by this name the Persians called them that be notable in the science of Philosophie) to thintent they might come nere and learne more exactlye the thyng that the starre shewed vnto them as in a dreame, beyng nothing afearde at the great tourney, they come vnto Hierusalem, the star guydyng them the waye: eyther because there dwelled the Scribes and Phariseis whiche were perye expert in the law and the Prophetes, or because they vnderstode that the kyng should be borne not farre from Hierusalem. For now knowyng certaynly that he was borne, only they inquired what place it was ỹ was made happy with so noble a birthe. For they thoughte that the natiuitie of so great a prince could not be hid emong them, whiche lobed for his byrthe so many hundred yeares, especially seing he should be borne not onely emong them, but also of them. But Christ is no where later or with more difficultie knowen, than in riche cities, and in princes courtes, and emong them that be arrogant in the profession of wisedome. But they, ignorant of these thynges, inquire simplye and openly. Where is he (ỹ they) whiche is lately borne the kyng of Jewes? For we haue seen his starre in the East, we sawe his starre of a meruelous bryghtnesse and bewty. We sawe the starre and felte the inspiracion. Therfore because we know that he is borne to the commoditie and profite of all men, though we be straungers, yet be we come hither to honour and worship him, and to geue the first fruites of honour due vnto the newe kyng. Knowing well that they shall be happy and blessed, that shall haue his power and might mercifull vnto them.

Beholde there came &c.

For we saw his starre in the East, &c.

When Herode the kyng heard these thynges he was troubled: and all the cite of Hierusalem with him. And Calling together all bishops and Scribes of the people, asked them where Christ should be borne. And they sayed to hym. At Bethleem in Jewrye. For so it is written by the prophete: And thou Bethleem in the land of Juda, arte not the least emong the princes of Juda. For out of the, shall haue a captayne come, that shall gouerne my people Israell.

The texte.

What tyme they had suche communicacion simply with all men, by and by the rumoure and tidynges was brought to Herode the King, whiche a good while had feared & trembled at the name of him that should be borne, fearyng lest he shoulde be let beside the kyngdome, whiche he beyng a straungier than beld it so great a prynce had been borne of the stocke of ỹ Iewes. For Herode dreamed of nothing els, but of an earthly kingdome, litle knowing that Christ broughte in another kynde of kyngdom, whiche shoulde perteyne vniuersally vnto all men. Therfore after that he hearde that he was borne, whom he feared to be borne, and hearde it of the Magians, men both of learnyng, and (as concerning worldly pore) not to be despised, truely he was troubled in his minde, and with him also the whole citie of Hierusalem: diuers men diuersely, either fearyng or hopyng. But the wisedome of God so ordered the affections & endeuours of men, that both the simplicitie of the godly, and also the rage of the vngodly set forth the glory of Christ on euery syde, and made the thynges that were incredible the more to bee beleued. And this was the cause that the lordes sterre of the wayr, lest the Magians for a tyme entering into Hierusalem: that they re enquirie might showe abrode the fame of the childe that was borne, and yet the place where the childe was borne, should be kept secret fro m the cruell king. Therfore king Herode blynded with enuy and anger, beyng wholly bent to destroye the childe that was borne, pretended a cloke of Godlines vnto his wicked crueltie. He calleth vnto him all the chiefe of the order of p rieſtes, and the Scribes of the people of Iewry, whose speciall profession w as this, that if there were any newe matter that dyd arise, they should make answere out of the sayinges of the Prophetes, and theyr godly bookes, beca use they professed the exacte knowledge of them, to ye intent that both the nur aber and the authozitie should make the thyng of more credite. Therfore whe n these were called together, the king so muche the more wicked, because he c ounterfeited godlynes, demaunded of them in what place the ozacles oz sayinges of God, did promise that Christe should be borne. And they not yet ra geing with hatred against Christe, whome they had not seen, answered fun plye and without delaye: In Bethleem of Juda. And lest theyr authozitie should haue bur litle weyght, beholde they haue in a redines the prophecie o f the Prophete Micheas: And thou Bethleem in the lande of Juda, art not the least among the Rulers of Juda, for out of the shall spryng a ruler whi che shall rule my people of Israel.

D.i. lest

Than Herode priuily calling the Magians, diligently inquired of them what tyme the sterre appered. And sendyng them to Bethleem, sayde: Go, thither and searche diligently for the childe. And when ye haue founde him, bryng me worde agayne, that I maye come and worship him also.

And these thynges then answered the prieſtes and the Scribes, who afterwarde procured him to be slayne, bzought and notable with miracles, & doing good vnto all men. The king fyrst of all greatly moued with the saying of the Magians, was vtterly amased with this so ripe and ready an answere, chiefely that the prophecie promised manifestlye a ruler of Bethleem whiche should rule the people, of whom he was borne. Wherfore the prieſtes & the Scribes beyng sent awaye, because he was in despeyre for to deceyue them, he calleth ỹ Magians priuily vnto him, leste the Iewes might suspect any craffte oz guile, and so openyng the matter on eche syde as though he and they both purposed one thing, inquired of the diligently how long it was synce the sterre appered fyrst vnto them, by whose showing & poynting they had passed ouer so great a iourney, and came to Hierusalem: meaning and purposing this, the noye certenly to vse and exercyse his crueltie to the distruccion of that one new borne childe. The Magias (for godlines is not suspicious) kepe not hide nothyng from him, not thinking him to be so cruell a fierce that he would shewe crueltie vpon an infante yet skante borne, neither so furiouse that he would suppose to suppresse by mannes deuise, the thyng that was doen by goddes might: Whenethey had shewed the tyme, he of the other syde shewed the place whiche he had learned of the Scribes. And now he confirming a sure hope that the childe might be take by these two shewinges, geueth commaundement in his owne name to the Magians, which of thē selues were willyng to go, that they should go to Bethleem, and seke out the childe with great diligence: and when they had found him, to returne ageynes vnto Hierusalem, and geue him knowledge of all the matter: (he pretended a verye godly cause, and nothyng displeasaunte to the myndes of the Magians) that I also (sayd he) maye folowe you and worshyp hym. He himselfe would be sirste haue knowledge of the childe, to the intente he might destroye hym before that the people of the Jewes had cleare vnderstandyng that he was borne. God in the meane tyme made this prouision, that the Magians returned safely to preache Christe in their owne countreyes. Otherwyse yf this vngracious man had not bene deceyued of his hope, he would haue vsed extremely the Magians themselues, which brought him so vnlucky tydynges.

¶ When they had heard the king, they went forward: and loe, the starre which they saw in the East went before them, till it came and stode ouer the place where the childe was. And when they sawe the sterre, they were meruelously glad, and went into the house, and found the childe with Mary his mother, and fell downe and worshypped him, and opened their treasures and offered vnto him gyftes: gold incense, and myrre. And beyng warned of God in their sleape that they shoulde not go ageayne to Herode, they turned into their owne countrey another waye. The texte.

The godly simple Magians, after that they had heard the king, made haste vnto Bethleem, whom the sterre which called them furth, for a time did forsake, to the intente, that the barbarouse people should fyrst shew vnto the Jewes that Christ was borne, whome they lokyng for so many yeres, afterward did put to death. But when they had passed ouer this parte of Goddes ordinaunce, agayne appered that wonderfull starre, whiche serued their Godly purpose in suche wyse, that it shewed vnto the not onely Bethleem, but also the cotage it selfe, beyng very lowe, poore, and base, and therfore verye harde to fynde, yea and hangyng very nere ouer the childes head, it did shewe and pointe, as it were with a finger to the infant, whom they so feruently desyred. Therfore when the starre began to appeare agayne, it shooke of and put away all carefulnes frō their myndes: and nowe replenyshed with sure hope and ioye, and passyng litle vpon mennes tellynges, but folowing the heauenly guyde, they espye the palace of the newe kyng: a filthy and a vile cotage or stable. Sincere Godlynes is nothyng troubled with these thynges. They enter in: they fynde the infante not differyng in apparaunce from others: they fynde the mother nothyng gaye or gorgious to loke to. All theyr stuffe shewed and testified powerte and simplicitie. The Magians whiche did not worshipp nor fall downe before Herode, magnifying hymselfe in his seate with a And when they sawe the starre.

kingly pompe, fall downe at the cradle of the crying babe: they adoare and honour groueling on the grounde, hym that could not yet speake. And they were not content with this goodlynes, but they take out of theyr boxes, giftes purposely apointed of those thinges with increase of the whyche, the nacion of the Persians was chiefly enriched, that is, golde, incense, & myrre: lest that he which shortly after should be compelled to flee, should lacke in his vyage. And with these fyrst fruites of fayth, the Gentiles that were farre of preuenting the Iewes, which were thought to be next vnto God, do constitute Christe to be theyr kyng: and of the other side do dedicate themselues vnto hym, offering knewe sacrifice in three kyndes of thinges. And now as by a ryddell or a darke figure, they professed that ineffable Trinitie of the father, and the sonne, and the holy goste, acknowlegyng also in one man mortalitie, priesthode, and kingdome. For golde is for a kyng, incense for a priest, myrre for hym that shall dye. He was borne mortall, he did sacrifice on the crosse, he conquered rising fro death, he reygneth in heauen. The Iewes sawe so many wonders, and when they knewe hym, they reviled hym. The Magians sawe no notable thyng as concerning theyr bodely lyues, and they reioyce that they had so fortunate a iourney. But what tyme they deuysed with themselues whether they shoulde returne vnto Herode to satisfy his mynde and delyre, they were admeniched in theyr slepe, by the diuine oracle, not to returne agayne to Herode. For that was neyther suertie vnto them, neither to the childe, neither expedient for such a weighthie matter, whiche in tyme and by parsell meale, should be promulgated and published vnto the world. They spedely did obey thoracle, and returned into theyr countrey and ther waye, to be newe preachers of the newe kyng among theyr countreymen.

And beyng warned of god. &c

The texte. And when they were departed, behold the Aungell of the Lorde appered to Joseph in his slepe, saying: Aryse and take the childe and his mother and flye into Egypte, and abyde there, tyll I bryng thee worde. For Herode will seke the childe to destroye it. So whan he awoke, he toke the childe and his mother by night, and went alyde into Egypte, and was there vnto the death of Herode, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lorde by the prophete, saying: oute of Egipte haue I called my sonne.

Now the helth and safetie of the Magians was prouided for, and that the tranquillitie both of the mother and of the childe might be sercht with deseen for, and that also the vngodlines of Herode accordyng vnto his desertes, might more and more be exasperated & greued to the glory of Christe: the same heauenly messinger whiche sente awaye the Magians, appered vnto Joseph in his slepe, exhortyng hym that now beyng priuye vnto the mistery, he would contynue aware secretely the mother and the childe into Egypte: whereby the diuine counsel intended this, that that region also beyng wholy geuen to the monstrous worshippyng of goddes, whyles it is become the hoste and receyuer of him that is fled from his countrey: by the touchyng and hauing to do with him, it might be prepared and made redy to some entry and beginning of true godlines. Therfore the angel spake vnto Joseph with these wordes: Aryse, and take with thee the childe and his mother, and flee priuily into Egypte, and tary there vntyll I returne vnto thee, and shewe thee the tyme to come hither agayne. For it will come to passe, that Herode shall seke by all meanes to destroye the chylde. Not that it is harde vnto God so denly to extinct and spill Herode, and to preserue the childe, yf it please him, but this ordre of the matter is more profitable for the confyrmacion and establyshment of faythe. For it is goddes wyll that the fury and the rage of the tyranne shall set forthe his glory. Joseph not tarying, toke the mother a mayde, and the chylde, and flying in the night, sealso conueyed them into Egypte, there remaynyng tyll that Herode was deade. Truely this thyng chaunced not by the feare of man or by fortune, it was the will of God to prepare and to establyshe the kyngdome of his sone by these aduersities, by the whiche, worldly chynges be wont to be decayed and brought to naught, leste that the world should take vpon it any thyng in diuine matters. And that thou mayest the better beleue it, God who would this thyng to come to passe, prophecied many yeares past by the mouthe of his prophete Osee, saying: out of Egypt I called my sonne.

Than Herode whan he sawe that he was mocked of the Magians, he was greatly greued, and sent furth men of warre, and spilled and slewe all the chyldren that were in Bethleem, and in all the coastes therof, as many as were two yeare olde or vnder, accordyng to the tyme, whiche he had diligently knowen of the Magians. The texte.

In the meane season kyng Herode, after that he perceyued in dede that the Magians had deceyued hym, now rageing in anger, caste away the clobe of godlynes and bruste out into manifest rage, and sendyng furth ministers of his madnes, spilled all thinfantes as many as were in Bethleem, and as many as were in the coastes and the compasse of the same towne, which were of the age of two yeare or yonger, folowyng the suppuracion of the tyme, in the whiche the Magians tolde him, that they sawe fyrste the starre of the chylde. Cruelties enlarged the tyme and the place, compassing in al the young chyldren, supposing that by this wycked counsell, he had prouided surely ynough, that he should escape by no meanes, whom onely he desyred to be extincte and slayne. But in vayne trauayleth the crafte of meme against the counsels of God. By these thynges was shewed a manifest example, what they should suffer of wycked princes, that would beleue the gospel, & what they should paciently that by cruelties trauayled to extinguishe the faythe of the gospell, beyng yet tender and springing vp in the hartes of the godlye. To be killed for Christ, is to be saued. Herode had an occasion to repente, and not to rage, yf gredines to reygne and to beare rule had not blynded his mynde. But while he through his owne default turneth al thinges into matter of greater madnes, by his maliciousnes he did set forth the iustice of god. For it is manifest to al men, that the innocent children were slayne, with great cruelties, and that he is worthy an horrible distruction, where with afterwarde he was surely payde.

¶ Than was that fulfylled whiche was spoken by the prophet Hieremy, where as he sayeth. A voyce was heard in Rhama: lamentacion, weypng and greate mourenyng: Rachell weypng for her children, and would not be comforted because they were not. The texte,

But lest any manne might doubte, that this thing came to passe by the ordinaunce of God: harke to the prophecie of the prophete Hiermy, seeyng through Goddes inspiracion this thyng, as though it had than been doen already, whiche many yeres after should come to passe. A voyce (sayth he) was heard in Rhama, a voyce sore weypng, sore wofull and lamentable. Rachel dyd be waple hir children and would receyue no comforte because they wer all slayne. Rachel bearing Beniamin, that is to saye, the sonne of sorowe, by and by vpon hir delliuery dyed, and was buryed not farre from Bethleem, wherof the Prophet dyd expresse in her persone the sorowe and waylyng of the mothers, lamentyng theyr children whiche Herode kylled.

The texte. But whan Herode was deade, beholde the Angell of the Lorde appeered in a slepe to Joseph in Egypt, saying: aryse and take the chylde and his mother, and go into the lande of Israel, for they are deade whiche sought the childes lyfe. And he arose and toke the childe and his mother, and came into the lande of Israel.

In the meane season after that Herode was taken out of the worlde by punishment and vengeaunce moste worthy for hym, the angell agayne which gaue counsell to flye awaye, apperyng to Joseph in his slepe, moueth hym to leaue Egypte, and to bryng agayne the childe and his mother into the lande of Israell. For he sayed that they were dead that would haue the chylde destroyed. And he redely obeying in all thynges the will of God, conueyed Mary beyng mayde and mother together with her swete babe, into the countrey of Israell. For it behoued him firste to be knowen vnto them, vnto whome chiefely he was sente, to thintente the people of harde beleefe, should haue nothyng why they might make any reasonable pretence of their vngodlynes, denying hym to be theyr Messias, but to be some other apoynted vnto the Gentiles.

The texte. But whan he heard that Archelaus reygned in Jewry in the roume of his father Herode, he was afrayde to go thither, but beyng warned of God in a slepe, wente aside into the coastes of Galile, and wente and dwelte in a citie called Nazareth, that it might be fulfilled whiche was spoken by the Prophetes: he shalbe called a Nazarite.

And as soone as Joseph entred into the coastes of his countrey, and had knowledge there by a constante fame that Archelaus the sonne of Herode that was deade, hauyng the one halfe of his fathers kyngdome reygned in Jewrye in his fathers place, fearyng leste the sonne had succeded hys father in cruelnes, lyke as he dyd in his kyngdome, durste not go thither: and agayne beyng established by the aunswere of the Aungell, whereof nowe he wholy did depende, wente aparte into the coastes of Galile, whiche parte had than chaunced vnto Herode the Tetrarche brother to the king that was deade. Here the Aungell promised all thing to be safe, also the loue of the countrey was an inuitacion, and the counsell of God wrought withall, that Christ by many occasions should be made common to many, whose cumming was to euery manne. Bethleem doeth glorye of his byrth, at Hierusalem he was circumcised and purified, Egypt was happy of so noble a geast, Nazareth maye well glorye of his bryngyng vp. For this was the countrey of his mother, in the whiche she conceyued her sonne, a base and a poore byllage of Galile, a countrey not regarded but dyspised of the Jewes, but it was a secrete corner, so muche more meete for the child against the crueltie of Archelaus. And this poinct herein god doth teache vs, that there is no nede of helpes, riches, power, partetaking, or nobilitie of birth, in those thinges which are borne by the wyll of god. May these thinges annexed and put vnto, rather obscure and darken the glory of God among men. For that this thyng came not to passe by fortune it maye appere, in that the prophecie long before declared, that the Messias should be called a Nazarene, the whiche to be doen, euen the tytle doeth declare, which Pilate ignorauntly of the prophecie, commaunded to be set vpon the crosse. Jesus of Nazareth the kyng of Jewes. And at this daye they that professe Christ be therfore of many called Nazarenes. And the worde it self hath his mistery. Nazareth among the Hebrewes hath his name of a flowre, because that that godly and swete flowre the sanctifier of all virginitie was borne of a virgin; lyke as Bethleem signifieth vnto the Hebrewes the house of breade, out of the whiche came that heauenly breade, which whoso eateth, shall lyue euerlastingly. He therfore lyued certaine yeares as one vnknowen, with his mother and his foster father Joseph, whose sonne he was thought of all menne, vntyll the tyme he came vnto mannes state, and then he shewed hymselfe vnto the worlde by doctryne, miracles, death, and resurrection, beyng knowen or notable in nothing, nor excellyng other menne, but that he went forwarde dayly and encreased in all kynde of honestie, and heauenlye giftes, that euery man loked for some great and notable thyng in the chylde. He was also in the meane season a diligent obseruer of the lawe, because he would geue none occasion vnto the euyll wyllers, of euyll saying or backebytyng, but satisfye all men in all thynges. He had rather for a tyme byde pyng of the lawe, to bring the Jewes to more perfection, than by despysyng it, to alienate and withdraw theyr myndes cleane from hym. Onely once he shewed himselfe at Hierusalem, beyng twelue yeres of age, at what tyme he pryuely leauyng his parentes, was founde in the temple sitting emong the doctours, hearing them, and by course questioning with them, insomuche that he was a wonder to them all. Euen than his godly disposicion had a desire vnto those thinges for whiche he was sent into the worlde: but as this was a praise of a redy mynde, so it was the example of moderacion and obedience to tarry the tyme prescribed of his father. That it myghte bee fulfilled. &c.

The paraphrase of Erasmus vpon

The.iii. Chapter.

¶ In those dayes came John the Baptiste, preachyng in the wyldernes of Iewry, and saying: repent ye of your former lyfe. For the kyngdome of heauen is at hande. For this is he, of whome the Prophete Esay spake, whiche saieth: The voyce of a crier in the wildernes: prepare the ways of the Lorde, and make his pathes straight. And this John had his garment of Camels heere, and a gyrdell of a skynne about his loynes. Further his meate was Locustes and wylde honye. Than went out to hym Hierusalem and all Iewry, and all the countrey round about nere to Iordane, and were baptised of hym in Iordane, confessyng their synnes,

The texte.

Owe is it worthy the hearyng, to know how our Lord Jesus Christ began and entred with the matter, that he came forth. He thrust not in sodenly to men vnawares, when they thought not vpon it. First he wolde that all mennes myndes shoulde be prepared, and made in a redines by his vsher and messenger John the sonne of Zacharie, a man known and allowed of the Iewes themselues: to thentent that the thyng whiche euer should be beleued, might by lytle and lytle be stilled and put into the hartes of men. Therfore when the tyme drewe nere, in the which it was decreed by the eternall ordeynaunce of God that the whole worlde shoulde be renewed through the doctrine of Christ: John came furth, the sonne of a priest, and of a prophetisse, whiche John was iudged afterward to be more than a Prophet by the testimonie of Christ, who also euen in his byrthe and beginning, had made men to conceyue great hope of hym. And he came not out of kinges courtes, or out of commō resortes of mē, but out of wildernes, where from his childhode he led an aungels lyfe, beyng contente with a most simple and common diet, clad with a garmēt woue of Camels heres, girded with a letheren girdell. His dyet was agreable vnto his apparell. For he lyued with ceurle meate, and easy to be gotten, which he found in the wildernes, that is to sate, with locustes and wilde hony. Suche dyet, suche apparell, suche a place, was moste mete for a preacher of penaunce: Whose wonderfull holynes so amased all mens myndes, that many supposed that he was Christ: chiefly when many were perswaded the other which was thought to be Messias, to haue perished in the number of the infantes of Bethleem. But he did not challenge vnto him the glory of others, insomuche that he shewed Christ openly to al men, and sayed that he was not worthy to lowse the latchet of his shoes. And yet he rushed not furth of his owne twinge to preache: but when he was admonished from heauen, that now was the tyme to playe the preacher. For he came not by chaunce to his office of preaching, or by the sendyng of man, but this was he, of whom Esaye prophecied so many yeres before, both that he should vtter openly in wyldernes the voyce of his preachyng, and also that he should be set before to prepare the hartes of men to receyue the doctrine of Christ, because he perswading repentaunce of the former lyfe, should make them able to receyue the grace of Christe, who by baptisme shoulde

pardon all men of theyr sinnes. And that (the course of thynges beyng so deynly chaunged) they that were puffed vp before by the payne iustice of Moyses lawe, and by the folyth wisedom of this worlde, should haue their combes cut, and be brought lowe. And finally that thei which before semed vyle, abiect, and vnprofitable because of theyr ignorawnce and hu-bienes, should nowe be made liuely and strong through the doctrine of the ghospell, and ryche with heauenly ryches: and those thynges whiche by the rigoure of the lawe semed hard and intricate, through the faythe & grace of the gospel, should be made right and easy: and that this healthe and sal-uacion, should be opened and publyshed not onely to the Iewes, but also to all nacions of the worlde. All these thynges prophecied Esay, the most assured prophet of the Lord. And this is the prophecie: A voyce of the cryer in deserte, prepare ye the waye of the lorde, make his pathes plaine and euen. Euery valey shall be fylled, and euery mountayne & hyll shalbe brought lowe. And the croked shalbe made straight, and the rough shalbe turned into plaine wayes, and all mankinde shall see the saluacion of God. And nowe a certeyne rumor and fame of the cumming of Christ, secretly spred abrode by many, and farther the conscience of theyr naughty lyues (for there was no tyme more sinfull and fylthy than that was) and finally a certaine secrete inspiracion dyd cause and brought to passe, that many of them were wery of theyr life, beyng very desyrous of him, of whom they had a certeyne sauour and vnderstandyng (simple though it wer:) who so-denly should rene we all kynde of men, and theyr synnes clerely abolyshed, beyng them vnto the kyngdo of righteousnesse. Wherfore whan they came flockyng vnto Iohn not onely out of the citie of Hierusalem, but also out of whole Iewry, chiefly out of those coutreis that be nere vnto Iordane: Iohn himselfe cummeth and approcheth to satisfie theyr redy wyll & de-syre. And the thyng that he preached in wyldernes, the same he doth beate into the people, beyng now more thycke assembled and gathered together nere vnto the water of Iordane, that through repentaunce of theyr former lyfe, they might prepare themselues to Messias now at hande, and offer themselues to be healed of hym, who should bryng helthe and saluacion. He is in the waye of heith, that knowlegeth his disease, and hateth it. For now (sayeth he) the kyngdome of heauen, and that same moste fortunate & moste to be desyred kingdo is at hand: yea and that very nere, but there is no entrie into it, but to suche as be pure and cleane, from this worldly fil-thines. At this preaching, in figure & toke that the filthynes of the mindes should shortely be clensed away, many wer baptised in the water of Ior-dane condemning theyr former lyfe, and acknowlegyng theyr offences o-penly. For so it was thought good vnto the wysedome of god, that Iohn which was the bound and border of Moses lawe, being nowe at an ende, and of the grace of the gospell nowe cumming on, with this sygne and to-ken, should go before, not to abolishe synne, whiche thyng Christe proper-ly reserued vnto himselfe, but to prepare mennes myndes, that they might be the more able to receyue the benefite that should furthwith ensue.

And were baptised of hym in Ior-dane, &c

But whan he sawe many of the Phariseis & Saduceis cummyng to his baptisme, he sayd vnto the: O generacio of vipers: who hath taught you to flee from the vengeaunce that is to come? Bring furth therfore the fruites that becummeth penaunce. And be not of this minde, to saye within your selues: we haue Abraham to our father. For I saye to you, that God is able to bring to passe, that of these stones, children shall rise vp to Abraham. Euen now is the axe also put to the roote of the trees. Therefore euery tree, which bringeth not forthe good fruite, is hewen downe and cast into the fyer.

And this was doen in the. xv. yeare of Tiberius Cesar, beyng Emperour of Rome, and Pontius Pilate hauyng rule ouer Iewry vnder hym, & Herode the brother of hym that dyed, beyng Tetrarche of Galile, where Christ made his abode: and his brother Philip Tetrarche of Iturea, and the countrie Trachonitis: and Lisanya the Tetrarche of Abiline: and Anne, and Cayphas, beyng the chiefe of the priestes. And thus the realme of Iewry beyng deuyded vnto so many rulers, further came he whiche should call thynges to the power and rule of one prynce. And laste of all, a great numbre of people flockyng vnto him, whā John sawe a great multitude of Pharisees and Saduceis come to baptisme, and was not ignorant how this kynde of people was arrogāt, fierce, and standyng in their owne conceyte; for the notable obseruacion of Moyses lawe as it semed to themselues, & for the merites of the patriarches, of whome they craked and gloryed muche, for that they came of them. For they enuyed and layed wayte to hynder the baptisme of John, beeyng in vse and reputacion, sent a craftye message vnto hym into Bethabaram, (for John at that time did baptise there) demaūdyng whether that he were Christ. If he had been, forthwith they would haue obiected, that Christe had been promised of the tribe of Iuda, whereas it was manifest that John was of the Tribe of Leuy. Further when John protested plainly that he was not Christ, no nor no Prophete, especially of thole olde and auncient Prophetes, whom they thought would returne agayne the worlde; they demaunde of hym further, how he durst promyse remission of sinnes by baptysme, whiche properly was referued vnto Christ. He answered, that there was muche difference betwene his baptisme, whereby he dyd stirre and moue mē to repentaunce and forthynkyng of the former lyfe: and the baptisme of Christ whiche forthwith should folow, wherby all sinnes should be forgeuen. Therfore when he sawe many of this kynde of men come runnyng to baptisme with others: he biteth they? conscience with bitter wordes wherby he might the rather moue them to penaunce. O crafty (q he) and malicious kynde of men, nay no menne, but rather the offspring of vypers, the murderers of your auncetours, subtyll and yll mynded towarde all men: Seyng that hytherto ye haue daunted your selues emong men, vnder the tytle and name of fathers, whiche for their holines be muche praise worthy with them, and vnder the false pretence of righteousnes, haue reigned so negligently and idelly, as though Hellias should neuer haue come, who tolde you, and put you in remembraunce, that the inenitable punishmente was at hande, vnles ye had runne with others to the remedy of penaunce. And how is it, that now ye delyre to be baptised as sinners, among whome ye appered as men of great holynes. Ye haue perceyued that your trust should be but vayne, vnles ye should escape from the vengeaunce of God now beyng at hande, by the refuge of penaunce. For neyther the merites of the fathers, nor the obseruacion of the law, deliuereth from euerlasting punyshment, but euery mannes owne purenes of lyfe maketh hym commendable vnto God. Seyng therfore ye repent your former lyfe, hereafter to bryng forth fruite w godly affections and dedes, that they may testifie, that ye haue truely repented. Hytherto for the grosnes of menne, figures and shadowes hath hath been sumwhat made of, that mens pʳomitie to naughtines, being compassed in with these stayes, might be refrayned from fallyng into farther inconuenience. Hitherto with enlarged Phylacteries, with long pʳayers, with washinges, with often mencioning of father Abʒaham the holy Patriarche, with buildyng of the pʳophetes shʒynes, of whose posteritie ye desire to appere and to be counted, ye haue obteyned vnto you a certayne coloure and appearaunce of holynes emong men. Hereafter because that shadowes shal banyshe away at the light of the gospel, ye must go truely and sincerelye to worke, if ye will obteyne euerlastyng healthe. Neyther vsent sacrifice, ne bloud of beastes, is requyred of you for your olde sinnes: onely fe that there be penaunce without counterfaytyng, and god wyl freely pardon the offence: further Messias himselfe wyl teache you, yf he fynde you apte and willing to learne, what be the fruites of true penaunce. In the meane seakon set ye aside vaine trust, and flatter not your selues thus: we be holy, we come of the holy father Abʒaham. The iuste Abʒaham shall auayle nothyng them that come of him, vnlesse thei folow his faith and obedience, which wer so muche commended. The blessyng that is now at hand was pʳomised vnto Abʒahã: but cosinage and kynred be it neuer so nere, is not sufficiente to obteyne this blessyng. Whosoeuer distrustyng God doeth leane vnto the soucoures of this worlde, they be fallen from the kinred of Abʒaham. And hereafter the posteritie of Abʒahã shall not be counted by the kynred of bloud, but by the sinceritie of feyth. And yet god shall not therfore lacke the posteritie of Abʒaham, to whom he may perfourme and paye the blessing that he pʳomised, though ye swarue from the maners of Abʒaham. May be ye afterayned, yf ye dispyse the grace offerd vnto you, that god is of power, yea out of these stonys to rayse vp chyldren farre better than ye bee, to his frende Abʒaham. And there is no cause why that ye should be the more negligente for that the cummyng of Messias hath been differred hytherto. For now the extreme parell cummeth vpon you, and now all the matter is euen vpon the edge of the rasor, eyther ye muste come vnto the kyngdome of heauen withe cleane and syncere myndes, or elles ye muste receyue eternall punchement. Saluacion is pʳesent at hande to them that wyll embrace it, and to them that wyll refuse it, pʳesente payne and vtter destruccion is readye at hande. For now the axe is sette to the tree, not to the boughes or to the body, but to the rootes, whiche shal vtterly cut it downe with a deadly wounde, that cannot be recouered, vnlesse it bʒyng furth fruite meete for god. There muste be no lingering, the daungier is so nere at hande. Haste muste be made, all impedimẽtes and lettes quite cut of. Yet ye may chose which ye wyll take. The axe wyll not stryke yf ye wyll sodenly chaunge your myndes. In the naturall tree it is long and hard to chaunge the iuyce wherof the fruite taketh his taste. Here the matter is bʒought to passe by the onely will. But as they that make haste are partakers of health, so they that linger are al partakers of peryll. None shall be deliuered hereafter neither by riches, neither by noble birthe, neyther by wisedome, as many hitherto haue supposed. Euery tree that beareth not fruite, and that no meane fruite but excellent good and woʒthye the kyngdome of heauen, is cut downe and caste into the fyer.

¶ I baptyse you with water vnto penaunce: but he that shall come after me is mightyer than I. The texte. whose shoes I am not woorthy to beare. He shal baptise you with the holye ghoste and fyer. whose fanne is in his hande, and he wyl purge his floore, and gather his whete into the barne, but he wyl burne the chaffe with fyer that cannot be quenched.

Hitherto

Hitherto god hath suffered and wynked at mens sluggishnesse. Errour and ignorance deserued some pardon. Mankynde was in a maner deaffe at the law of nature. Small profit came by ỹ law of Moses. The threatninges of the prophetes were set at naughte, theyr dreames and visions were not hearde. Now is he come after whome none other shalbe sent. Whose cúming leste it should be sodeine and vnwares, I (sayeth Johan) am the messenger sét before. If ye be penitẽt, yf ye knowledge your diseases, yf ye receiue ỹ Phisicion with feruent desire, he will be with you, profitable & healthfull to all: For I am not he, whom ye loke for. Truthit is I baptise you, but to this intent only, ỹ ye being penitent may be meete to learne of him, & redy to receyue health wha he shal come. For forthwith he will come, yea euẽ now he is cum, & as he is behinde me in ỹ order of preaching, so he is aboue me & passeth me by all meanes, so ỹ I whom ye thinke to be of sum estimatiõ, am not worthy to be his drudge & slaue, that is either to cary his shoes, or to lowse ỹ latchet of his shoes. I am none other thig but a preacher, neuertheles both trusty & doing mine office, which god hath enioined me by ỹ prophecy of his prophet. He is the autor, he driueth wt him al might & power both to forgeue sines, & to cõfer & geue al kinde of vertues. Let euery mã approche to his doctrine & to his baptisme, for he shal baptise you wt effectual & liuely baptisme, not wt water only but wt ỹ spirit & fier. With ỹ spirit he shal alter & trãsforme you, wt fier he shal pluck you vp vnto heauẽly thinges. He will require nothing of you but sincere penaũce, wout coũterfeyting. He wil geue you his good thiges frely, yf your yl thinges displease you hartily. Onely he willeth ỹ there be no colourinces, which shall preuail nothing vs him. There is nothing hid from him, he feareth no mã. The thing shalbe doen with seuere iudgemente, whiche can not be voided. Hereafter there shalbe no meane, either ye must thoroughly be good, or thoroughly euil. He will passe nothing vpõ cloked holines. He hath a fãne in his hãd, he seeth also ỹ inward secretes of the hartes. Before him either ye must be chaffe or fyne wheate. But in the meane season whether of both ye wyl be, he hath partly put in your choyce. It shalbe but bayne for the chaffe mingled among the clean corne to lurke and to be hidde. He shall vtterly cleanse his flooze, and lay vp the wheat in his granard, but he shall burne the chaffe with fier that neuer shall be quenched. Wherfore either ye must endeuour with all your herte to the high pzycke of vertue, that ye maye worthely be receiued into the euerlastyng kyngdome: or elles yf ye despise the goodnes of God nowe offered vnto you, ye must nedes thereby be extremely naught, because ye refuse so great helthe offered to you, without your seking, and through your owne merite (forasmuche as ye reiect the heauenly reward), ye must be appoynted to the euerlasting fier of hell. The myndes of the common sorte were so moued with the sayinges of this holy man, that a great numbre whiche hitherto had put theyr trust in the obseruacion of the lawe, came vnto hym trembling for feare, and sayd: If thus stãdeth the case, what than thinke ye best for vs to do? but he dyd not exhort them to the ceremonies of the lawe, and the constitucions of men, as the phariseis wer wont to do, but vnto the workes of charitie, saying: The first way to pacifie God is the fere wel ioyng vnto your neighbour. He that hath plenty of garmentes, let him geue vnto the naked: he that hath plenty of meates, let hym geue vnto the hungry. There came vnto hym also the Publicanes, the which kynde of me ye Jewes abhorre, because comenly either for to please the princes, or to satisfy their auarice they are wot to poul ye people. They demaunde of him fearefully, what he thinketh best for them to do. And he doth not refuse them from baptisme, & agayne he appoynteth them not to geue their goodes, who now of long time were wont violently to take away other menues: but to thintent they might come nere by some degre vnto the perfect doctrine of Christ, he commaundeth them that they should exact nothing of the people, beside that, that was prescribed of the prince. Fiftily there came also souldiours, a violent & a defamed kynde of people. Neyther put he them away from him, declaring manifestlye vnto the Jewes by that dede, that Christ would despise no kinde of men. They confesse nothing: for, to professe a souldiour is of it selfe to confesse the puddle & sinke of all mischiefe. They demaunde also what counsayle he would geue them. And he teacheth them beyng so rude, rather what oughte to be auoyded & shunned, that they might be lesse yll, then what was to be doen, whereby they might be perfectly good. Abuse not (ye he) your weapons which ought not to be stirred but agaynst your enemies, at the commaundement of the captayn: beate no man nor stryke no man violentlye, seyth you be hyred for this purpose, that through your diligence the countrey should be quiet. Nor abuse not you familiaritie with great rulers, falsly blamyng and accusyng any man, whereby any filthy lucre or gayne might come vnto you. Finally be content with your wages, and defraude and spoile no man. For princes geue wages to thintente no man by necessitie should be forced to take other menues goodes. So he through easye preceptes accordyng to euery mennes capacitie, made al men in a redines for Christ to come, forseyng Christ in spirite, whom he had not yet seen with his bodily eyes.

¶ Then cummeth Jesus from Galile to Jordane vnto John, to be baptised of him. But John forbade him, saying: I haue nede to be baptised of the: and cummest thou to me? Jesus answered and sayd vnto him: Let it be so nowe. For thus it becummeth vs to fulfyll all righteousnesse. Then he suffred him. The text.

Therfore the rumour & fame beyng now spred abrode, and dayly more & more encreasing, & that by diuers meanes, by the angels, by the shepherdes by the Magyans, by the cruel carefulnes of Herode, by the prophecye of zachary, by Simeon, by Anne, by litle and litle secretely: but most of al by Johns open & manifeste setting furth beeyng ioyned with a great auctoritie, in so muche that yll men also beyng now amased with feare did frame themselfe to the cumming of Christ, thus declared & set furth. For truly it was time for him to come furth into the sight of the world to declare himself not by ye testimonies of others, but by his own vertues, ye it might appere what maner of one & how mighty he was, & that he might obscure & darken al men, by whose testimonie he was hereto fore set forth & commended. Therfore Jesus left Galile where he had been in secrete hitherto, & nowe goig about his fathers busines he leueth his mothers cuntrey Nazareth, & maketh spede vnto Jordan, where he should haue a great copany gathered together out of diuers coastes of Jewry, to be a witnes of the thinges ye should be there spoke & doen. He who alone was defiled wt no spot of sin, merly Jesus, yea who alone should take away ye sinnes of the world, through ye middes of the sinful copanies, euen lyke a sinner goeth vnto John, & requireth to

But Iohn forbad him seruing & marking a meruaylouse semelynes and honesty appearyng in his yes, in all his countenaunce, & in his maner of going, he doth exsule his dis-ordered office & ministracion, honozing his dignitie and worthines as yet with no certayne commendacion. Onely he saieth, it were mete & conuenient that I which am far beneth & vnder thy vertues, should require baptisme of the: And how cummeth it to passe that thou doest humble & adbase thy selfe so lowe, to require baptisme of me, sith no manis moze pure & cleane krō al sinne than thou? These thynges wer thus doen by the ordinaunce of god, to thintēt both that we should haue an exaple of the merueilous mo-destie & humilitie of Christ, and also that it might appere vnto all men by the testimonie of Iohn, that Christ being without cōscience of any sinne or euil, required to be baptised. For he was baptised like as he was circūcised, as he was purified in the tēple w his mother, as he was scourged, & as he was crucified. He suffered all these thinges for vs, & not for himself.
Wherfore whē Iohn declaring constātly his own vnworthines, & setting Iesus answereth. forth þ worthines of Christ, did refuse þ office of a baptiser, Christ by no sinister suspicion did steine his own innocencie, which it behoued to be knowen & beleued of al men. Euery parte (þ he) of this busines hath his time.
Be thou content in the meane sea'on that I be baptised of the, thynke not vncūly for the, if thou baptise him, who (as thou saiest) is better the thou.
Certainly it shal becū me, which desireth to bring al vnto me, to fulfill all iustice. For he that teacheth al, & teacheth perfectiō, must see that no likely-hode or apparaūce of vnrighteousnes (be it neuer so lit e) be founde in his life and maners. I must become all thinges to al men, that I maye winne and bring al vnto my father. When Iohn heard these wordes, he descen-deth into Iordane with Christ, and baptised him. And here appereth an holsome exaple of humilitie in Christe, and of obedience in Iohn, but the thyng, & the effecte is of contrary order. For baptisme doth consecrate vs, but he through the holy touchyng with his body did consecrate baptisme.

The texte, And Iesus when he was baptised, came straight waye out of the water: and lo, heauen was open vnto hym: And he sawe the spirite of God descendyng lyke a doue, and lyghtyng vpon hym. And lo, there came a voyce from heauen saying: This is my beloued sonne in whome I am well pleased.

And to thintent he might declare vnto vs what we ought to do after bap-tisme, & what felicitie was geuen vs by baptisme, Iesus going out of the water therefully & spedely as though he had cast of a great burde of sines (teachyng vs that we should not tarry nor linger in wathinges, nor oftetyr mes returne vnto thē by sirning again, but to make haste to the dueties of a spiritual life, the sines of the former life once cast of, and buried in bap-tisme:) kneled downe vpon his knees, and lifted his hādes vnto heauē, beseching his father þ he would vouchesafe that this matter of sauing mankinde, which he toke in hande, might be happy and fortunate to all men, & that he would commend and set forth his sonne vnto the world with his fatheris auctozitie: and lest Iohns auctozitie should be of smal estimacio, albeit this for þ time was profitable for the grosse & rude people. And behold the father did manyfestly auctorise his sone in the presence of suche a multitude of people. The heauens opened and shewed hym the a certayne wonderfull light. John also sawe the heauenly spirite in the visible lykenes of a doue, to descende out of heauen, and to sytte vpon his holy head: from thence came the voyce of the father soundyng to all mennes eares, saying: this is my derely beloued sonne, the delight of my mynde, in whō I haue a singuler pleasure, heare hym the expouder of my mynde, and the distributer of my goodnes towardes you. And because at that time Jesus was vnknowen to the multitude which had a great opinion of John, lest the voyce, whiche cūming frō a doue poynted no man certaynely to theyr vnderstandyng, should be thoughte to perteine vnto John: therefore there was added a visible signe of the heauenly doue, whiche sitting vpon Christes head, showed nowe playnely vnto al mē (as a man would poynte with his fynger) to whome that voyce dyd perteine. With the whiche signe also John hymselfe was playnely and certaynly monished, that he was the sonne of God. And after he did openly testifye that this sygne and token was prompted him before of the father, to the intente that in suche a multitude of people, he might certaynlye knowe him that afterwarde should baptyse all men in the spirite and fyer. And with these ceremonyes the Lorde Jesus was declared and consecrated oure mayster, whose diuinitie, and heauenly doctrine who so wyll followe, he shall be truly blessed.

The. iiii. Chapter.

Then was Jesus led of the spirite into wyldernes, to be tempted of the Deuyll. And whan he had fasted forty dayes and forty nyghtes, he was at the last an hungred. And whē the temptour came to hym, he sayd: If thou be the sonne of God, commaunde that these stones be made bread: But he answered and sayde: It is written: Mā shal not lyue by bread onely, but by euery worde that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

AND yet these entries & beginninges made, he tepeth not furth byfore he do preache, although auctoritie wer giue him from heauen, but sodenly he withdraweth himselfe frō the sight of the people into wildernes, because ỹ departure frō the cōpany, of people doth increase the auctoritie, and prouoketh a delyre. Now ỹ spirite (that is the prouoker of the vyll) doeth specyally assaulte them which leauyng the desyres of the worlde, do fall into meditacion of the pure and heauenly life. Therfore Jesus secretly teachyng vs the same, goeth into wyldernes. And this he doeth not by ỹ motion or instigacion of any mā, but moued of his own spirite. For he that is baptised, hath now cast of carnall affectyons, & being made spirituall by regeneration, is led and moued by the counsell of the holy ghost: he remembreth not Bethlem, he retourneth not to Nazareth, he goeth not again to his mother or to his foster father, but by the behemēcy and rauishing of ỹ spirite, he goeth into deserte, folowyng the exaūple of the olde prophetes. Solytarines doeth quicken & make lusty the mynde of a Christian souldier, & some tyme it is more sure for a man to commit himself to the wylde beastes, than to men. Baptisme taketh away all synnes of the former lyfe, but for all that, no man is sure from the assaultes of Sathan whiche lyueth slugghyly. But yet the naughty desyres endeuour to sprynge agayne, chiefely in them that be rude and young, and lately entered and cummen to Christ. And that frowarde Satan enuying as muche mannes saluacion, as Christe is desyrous of the same, styrreth and prouoketh him with merueylouse engins and sleyghtes, to fall awaye and departe: insomuche that he possesseth and vseth him that is replayed with moze tyranny, then he dyd possesse and vse hym whan he had him before. Agaynste these perilles and daungers Christe sheweth thekelye thre remedies, often and harty prayers, forsakyng of company, auoydyng of excesse, and kepyng abstinence, not without diligent meditacion of holye scriptures: for otherwyse there maye be daunger in vse solytarines. And because the deuill goeth about to deceyue them chiefly, whiche do endeuour to attaine vnto this strength and Angelicall lyfe: Christe hymselfe lyke a good captayne encounteryng with him, hath taught his champions, by what meanes that malicious and crafty olde fyre maye be ouercome, & howe lytle he can do against them that be sober and vigilant, and with all their harte do leane to the godly scriptures. And this also the Lorde Jesus in the meane tyme wente about, that this misterie might, by litle and litle appere vnto the worlde after suche sorte, that Sathan (whiche desyred for none other purpose to knowe certaynly whether he were the sonne of God, whome he heard that the father did honour with this style and name, but to lette the redempcion of mankynde) might bee holden in suche doubte, that he might not certeynlye knowe this to be Messias, before he sawe his owne tyranny vtterly subuerted & ouerthrowen. Christ also putteth vs in remembraunce of this, that no manne is mete to preache the gospell, but he that hath tryed hymselfe, and is fyrme and strong agaynst worldly desyres, agaynst excesse and her companions, that is, bodily lust, ambicion, auarice, and suche lyke diseases of the minde, wherewith oure enemye beateth and shaketh the myndes of the symple and weake as it were with most violent engyns of warre. Thereto/ whan Christ had fasted fortye dayes, folowyng Helye, and Moyses, whiche thyng was in seche wyse aboue mannes power, that yet the Jewes beleued, that it was doen of men: at laste to shewe a manifeste token of mannes imbecillitie in himselfe, he made no couysaple, but shewed playne signes that he felte the tedyousnes of hungre. For after the common nature of mannes bodye, the lacke of humour greued and payned the stomacke.

And whāne had fasted forty dayes

The temptour came.

Whiche thyng whan the crafty temptoure perceyued, thynkyng hym to be nothyng but a man, (althoughe in dede a notable and a wonderfull man), he casteth his hooke bayted with ꝑ enticement of payne glozy for therwith chiefly they be taken, whiche seme to endeuour to the hyest perfection. If thou bee the sonne of God (qꝺ he) what needeth thou to be greued and pined for hungre? Commaund rather these stones to be turned into bread for thy behouse. Thou canste perfourme thy desyre with a becke. Ye maie well know of olde that this is the same lyer in waite, for teptour whiche did entice that firste Adam into the snares of death, by the bayte or traine of gluttony: But Christ the latter Adam beyng in spirite heauenly, so auoided with his wordes, this craftie and deceytfull waiter, that neither he refused the name of the sonne of God, nor yet hymselfe to be ouercome with hungre after the common sorte of men. And because he wouldde not take vpon hym to aunswere of his owne authoritie: he layeth vnto hym a manifest scripture, saying: It is written in the Deuteronomi: Man shall not lyue onely of bread, but of euery worde, that commeth out of the mouthe of God.

But he answered.

Than the deuyll taketh hym into the holy cittie, and setteth hym vpon a ꝑpynacle of the temple, and sayeth vnto hym: if thou be the sonne of god, caste thy selfe downe backewarde.

For it is wrytten: he ſhall gene his aungels charge ouer the, and with their handes they ſhall holde the vp, leſte at any tyme thou dasshe thy foote agaynſt a ſtone. And Jeſus ſaide to hym: Agayne it is wrytten: Thou ſhalte not tempte the Lorde thy God.

Than Satan breyng cluded and ſhaken of with this doubtful anſwere, doeth euen of his partye alſo abuſe the woordes of ſcripture to dooe hurte and myſchiefe: And as he deceyued the fyrſte parente of mankinde with the baite of ambition, promyſyng hym eguall honor and immortalitie wyth God: by a lyke guyle aſſayling the lorde, he toke hym vp into the holy citie, and whan he had ſette hym vpon the hygh Pinnacle of the temple, he exhorted him if he were the very ſonne of God, that he wouldе fal doune hedlong, alleagyng that he could take no harme by ſo dooyng. For God hymſelf had thus promyſed in the myſtical pſalme. He wil gene his aungels cõmaundement and charge ouer the, and they ſhal take the in their hãdes, leſt thou ſhouldeſt hurt thy foote at any ſtone. But the lord Jeſus layeng ſcripture againſt hym again, geueth a ſecrete vnderſtandyng, howe peruerſely he wreſted the ſenee of the holy ſcripture. Contrarywyſe (ſy he) it is wrytten in the Deuteronomie: Thou ſhalt not tempt the lorde thy God. For ſcripture doeth exhorte vs to this poynete, that whan aduerſitye and daunger is at hande, we ſhould haue a good hope truſtyng vpõ the helpe of god, and not put our ſelues raſhely in daunger. The miracles of godlye men be not treyed by ſekyng of perylles, but by auoydyng daungers whan they chaunce. For it is no godly poynete for to caſte a man headlong into the eyuer, that by deliuering of hym thou mayeſt ſeme to be a man of great feates, but it is a godly thing to pluckе out him yͤ by chaunce is falle in. Nor miracles be not to be donne for euery thing, nor emongeſt all men. Jeſus would not once vouchſake to ſpeake before Herode, who was deſirouſe of ſuche thynges, ſwuche leſſe would he ſhowe any ſigne or token of hys godly power, at the requeſte of Satan. So often as charitie inſpired with the holy goſt, deſyreth it, ſo often as the glory of God requireth it, the power of God is to be ſhewed abrode.

Agayne, the deuill taketh him vp into a very high hil, & ſhoweth him al the kingdomes of the world, & no the glory of them, & ſayeth vnto hym: all theſe wil I gene the yf thou wylte fall downe and worſhyp me. Than ſayeth Jeſus vnto hym: auoyd Satan. For it is written: Thou ſhalt worſhyp the lorde thy God, and hym only ſeruе. Than the deuill leaueth hym. And beholde the aungels came and miniſtred vnto hym. The texte.

Nowe to thintente that Chriſte myght teache ſuche as be his not to gene themſelues to a careles ſecuritie, after they hadde the hygher hande once or twyſe, but alwayes to kepe watche, and to be in a redineſſe for all aſſaultes of Sathan, he ſuffred alſo the thirde tyme, thimportune aſſalting of the temptour who as he deceyued the fyrſt Adam, with the bayte of curioſitie and anarice, promiſing hym the knowlege of good and euyll, ſo in likewyſe he ſetteth vpon the latter Adam, and toke him from the pinacle of the temple, and ledde hym into a verye hygh hyll, where he might loke at libertye farre and wyde, and ſee all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and the woondrefull glorye and pompe of eche of them. Surely he knewe by experience of other menne, that there was nothing ſo wicked and ſinful, but they wouldе take it in hande to obtayne rule and dominion. But albeit God is yͤ authour & maker of al thynges in heauen and yearth, & the deuil hath no title nor interеſt in them, vnleſſe he hath vſurped & defiled any thing: yet as though he were lorde ouer all, he is not affrayed thus to ſpeake vnto Chriſte: I will gene the al theſe kyngdomes, if thou wylte fall downe and honour me. O blynde impietie. The vngracious spirite promyseth an other mans gooddes, and asketh honour due vnto god onely. But Jesus who hitherto tooke the reproche of hymselfe wel in worth, cannot beare his fathers ignominie. Hence Sathan (ꝙ he:) Thy counsel is farre from the doctryne of holy scripture. The scripture sayeth: Thou shalte adoure the lorde thy God and him onely shalt thou serue. After that the deuil had tempted hym by these and lyke other wayes, finding hym alwayes to be valiaunte and an inuincible champion, agaynst all inuentions & ingins, he left him at last, beyng

dispayred of his purpole two wayes. First in that he perceyued that Christ was inuincible. Secondly, where as he came to searche, whether he was the sonne of God or no, he departed more vncertayne then he came. Thys conflicte was made in the syght of God and hys Angelles, the whiche the lorde Jesus would not haue vnknowen vnto his, to thyntent we myght knowe with what a cumberous enemy we should haue to doe, & with what wages and rewardes, he would stirre and prouoke ignoraunt & vnware myndes. And this did he not that we should dispayre, but that we should diligētly watch & take good hede. Christe ouercame hym to shewe vnto vs that he was vincible & taught vs how we also myght geat victorye of hym. Finally he ouercame for vs and not for hymselfe, purpolyng by vs to ouercome thesame, if we deserue to haue hym presente with vs. And by vs he shall heare Christe saye: Hence Sathan, and he shall feare the seruauntes of him of whome he was ouercumme. Further like as in worldly warre, thinges haue theyr courte and ordre, and labours bee eased with rest, & sorofull thynges with pleasaunt, and after sore conflictes triumphes be made: so in the warre of Christe sore stormes of tentacion be mitigated with mythe and ioyfulnes. After the cumberouse frowardenes of the filthye spirite, by and by the Aungelles be ready to serue & wait vpon Christ the conquerour. Surelye this exaumple teacheth vs, howe in aduersitie we shoulde stape oure myndes with hope of better, trustyng vpon ꝑ goodnesse of god, whiche so doethe ordre al thynges, that nowe & than he doeth exercise and proue the valiauntnes of his warriers, with trouble and aduersitie: and agayne with sum solace doethe prouoke them to reioysyng and thankes geuyng, whiche is the tryumphe of Christen men. And in afflictions thorow the helpe of God, they be inuincible: and if any prosperitie come vnto them, thet ascribe it wholly to the goodnes and bountifulnes of god. And so it commeth to passe that neyther they be discouraged in aduersitie, nor insolente or proude in prosperitie.

And behold the angelles came,

The text. And whan Jesus had heard that Johñ was taken, he wente aparte into Galile: and left Nazareth: and wente and dwelte in Capernaum, which is a cyte vpon the sea coast, in the borders of Zabulon and Neptalim: that it myght be fulfilled whiche was spoken by Esai the prophete, saying. The lande of Zabulon and Neptalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordane, Galile of the Gentyles, The people whiche sate in darkenes, and in the shadow of deathe, sawe great syght, and to them whiche sate in the region, and shadowe of deathe, the syght is sprong vp.

Therfore whan Christe began to be of auctoritie and estimacion, chiefly after that Johñ had in maner deliuered hym and commended hym to his disciples poynctyng with his fynger, and saying: Beholde the lambe of god, behold him that taketh awaye the synnes of the worlde: and after that he hadde ouercum the deuil and was fully inspired with the holy gost, nothing nowe remayned, but to take a tyme and place, to begynne and enter his preachyng.

John

John had wrought no miracle, being content only to preache penaūce. Christ kepte silence so long as he preached, leste any discorde myght ryse emong theyr disciples, beyng yet rude, carnal, & geuen to worldly affections. Surely it is ꝑ parte of a good teacher, to conforme hymselfe to the capacitie of hys audience. But than and not afore entrethe he the office of teachynge, whan the tumoure was blowen abrode, that John was caste into prison of Herode the Tetrarche, enioyning the rewarde that they be wont to haue, which dare boldly speake before the Princes of this world, & wil rather speake holsum thinges than pleasaunt. For he tolde the Tetrarche of his vnlawfull mariage, because he mary-ed his brother Philippes wyfe. And sumtyme euill princes, desyre to haue in housholde with them, men of greate and notable honestie, not that they woulde obeye the counsell of suche, but because they make seme to the ignorannte people, to doo by theyr aduise and counsell, whatsoeuer they doo after theyr owne lust & appetite. And in other thynges of lyght importaunce, he had oftentymes ben obedient to his monicions, but here, where he oughte moste to haue been obedient, at the fowle request of a filthie daunting damsel, and at the desyre of her filthye mother, he had cast that very good man into prison, and afterward with the cruell deathe of suche a greate man, he defyled the feaste of hys Natiuitie, and the tyes of hys nobles. Jesus therfore whan he hearde of this, not because he was in feare hymselfe, but to teache his not wyllingly to put themselues in daunger, yf they maye conueniently be auoyde it, but whan it cummeth, boldely to neglecte it, leauyng Nazareth wente a syde into Galile of the Gentyles, (in the whiche Salomon gaue vnto Hira kyng of the Tyrians .xxv. cytyes,) and went into the citie of Capernaum, therfore taken to be bordering vpon the sea, because it is nere the standyng water of Genezareth, in the coastes of zabulon and Neptalim, whiche were two tribes, and in the fyrste is Galile, in the seconde is that, that is called Galile of the Gentiles: whereby Christe than as by a figure, in manier tyretned, that whan the Jewes dyd refuse and persecute the preachers of the gospell, than the gospel should be brought vnto the Gentyles. And leste that a man myght thynke that thys thyng was doen by chaunce, Esai beyng inspyred with the spirite of prophecie, prophecied long before that it should so be, saiyng: in the land of zabulon and the land of Neptalim, whiche bordereth vpon the sea, in Galile of the Gentyles, the people whiche heretofore dwelled in darkenes, hath seen a great and a merueylouse light, and vnto them which heretofore were in a thicke darkenesse suche as is in hel, lyghte is sprong vp. Therfore, as cōcernyng the tyme, where John left, there Christ beginneth. For at the clere lyght of the gospel, the shadowes of Moyses lawe do vanishe awaye. And thys is spoken directely concernyng the mistical figures of the lawe, and to expresse the trueth of the gospell. But as touchyng the place, at the fyrst affliction and trouble of the holy preacher, the name of the Gentyles is goen vnto, and the lyghte whiche the Jewes blynded with filthye desyres, coulde not suffer, is as it were in a picture declared to passe ouer from them to the Gentyles, beeyng very Idolaters: but after suche sore that the coastes of nepther is forsaken, so that of both sydes the trumpe of the voyce of the gospell maye be hearde. And yet furthermore that countrey was no vnprofitable auditorie, by reason of the commoditie of hauens, and certen notable cities standyng vpon the sea syde, which by the reason of the course of marchandise, wer frequented and vsed also of farre cummers, out of other straunge countreyes.

Whan Jesus hadde hearde, &c.

That it myght bee fulfilled. &c.

The texte. ¶ From that tyme Jesus began to preache and saye: repent, for the kyngdome of heauen is at hande.

Nowe let vs heare the begynnyng of his preachyng. As he succeded after John, so he begynneth with his doctrine, whiche was wel knowen, and familiar, lest he shoulde haue driuen them awaye from him, which had John nowe in so greate veneracyon. And he vseth the weake with mylke, that afterwarde he might bring foorth strong meate to them whan they wer of more strength. And truely this is thorder of teachers, which desire rather to profite the heares, than to set foorth, and magnifie themselues before other. The preachyng of Christe is not onely more milde and gentle than Johns his preachyng (for he maketh no mencion neither of ire, nor of fame, nor of hell that neuer shalbe quenched) but also more to be commended, for many benefites bestowed vpon all men indyfferently. Jesus therfore folowyng John, strictly and sayeth: Chaunge your myndes and repent your former lyfe. For nowe the kyngdome of heauen is at hand, the whiche as it shall be shut vnto no man, so it shall be open onely vnto them that be pure & cleane, and seke after heauenly thynges, and cut away al worldly desyres. What can be more playne and symple than this Philosophy? Lette euery man be displeased and grieued with his owne naughtynes, and heauenly thynges be redy for hym at hand, and that freely.

The texte. As Jesus walked by the sea of Galile, he sawe two brethren, Simon whiche was called Peter, and Andrewe his brother, castyng a nette into the sea, (for they wer fyshers) and he sayeth vnto them: Folowe me, and I wyl make you fyshers of men: And they straightway lefte theyr nettes, and folowed hym.

And nowe the tyme was come, that Jesus shoulde gather together a company of disciples, whiche should be familiar witnesses of all his doynges and sayinges, and by whome he myghte teache other afterwarde. But marke what maner of men he chose, not Philosophers, not Pharisees, not Priestes: not ryche men. For he would not that the glorie of the gospel should be defiled with any worldlye apoc and succour. But as he walked neere the water whiche (as we sayed before) was in the border of bothe Galilees, he espied two brothers germaine, the name of the one was Symon, and he was called also Peter, the other was named Andrewe, whose fathers name was John. These before that tyme heard John, through whose prouocacion they began to folowe Jesus. But they lefte them both, and turned again to theyr faculte and craft, whereby they were wont to get theyr lyuyng. And nowe they were bustlye occupied castyng theyr nettes into the sea. It was a sygne of good lucke. Fyue youth more ready to receyue the newe doctryne: further the agreablenes of brethren one readye to helpe another: Again a craft and facultie in whiche was no hurt: wherby they got a poore liuyng out of the common mere or poole: Specially the fishyng put them in remembraunce of the newe fishyng, whiche serued not to take fishes with nettes to feade the belly, but wyth the nette of the gospell to catche men drouned wyth worldly cares, into desyre of the heauenly lyfe. Therfore as they were occupied about necessaries for theyr bodye, Christ speaketh vnto them, saiyng: Folowe me, ye shall learne a sciencе of me, better than euer ye learned of your father. And yet ye shall not leaue your science, but ye shall chaunge it to a better fashyon. For I will make you hereafter fyshers of men, that ye whiche wayte for fishes to destroye them, maye catche and take men into euerlasting saluacion. They knewe the voyce of hym, whome before they did beleue, and whose gentilnes they hadde proued before wyth fa-brought to passe, that foꝛthwith at the woꝛd of the caller, they foꝛgat not one-ly theyr fishe, but also theyr nettes as they were they lefte them there, and not bydding theyr acquayntaunce once fare well they folowed Jesus euen as he walked. They sawe no greate thyng yet in Jesus, notwithstandyng they slap-ed not noꝛ lingered nothyng, noꝛ were not careful howe they should gette theyr living hereafter. but ioyned themselues to hym, calling them with hys onelye woꝛde, and folowed hym, and would not awate to dye theꝛfoꝛe.

The texte. And whan he was gone foꝛth from thence, he saw other two bꝛethꝛen, James the sonne of Zebede, and John hys bꝛother, in the shyp with theyr father. Zebede, mending theyr nettes and he called them, and they furthwyth lefte the shyp and theyr father, and folowed hym.

Jesus going a litell further espyed other two bꝛothers, James and John the sonnes of Zebedeus: he was the better pleased foꝛ that the bꝛethꝛen and the father agreed so well togeather. They wer al in one bote, endeuoꝛyng one thing euen the same that Peter and Andꝛewe were aboute. But these went not spedily foꝛwaꝛde with theyr businesse, because theyr nettes were bꝛoken with longe weaꝛyng, whiche was a token of powꝛtye: Jesus theꝛfoꝛe passing by as they were earnestly occupyed in mendyng of theyr nettes, spake vnto them, and bad them folowe hym. The young men of a playne confidence and truste, without any taryng, furthwith leauyng theyr nettes, and foꝛgetting theyr father also, bend themselues to folowe Jesus: so the preachyng of John hadde framed and fashioned them, so deliuered the towardenesse and redinesse of theyr haꝛtes, so had the inspiracion of Christe dꝛawen them, who wholly bꝛeathed and sauouꝛed of the heauenly spiꝛite, wheꝛwith he was replenished.

The texte And Jesus went about al Galile, teachyng in theyr Synagoges, and preachyng the ghospel of ꝓkyngdome, and healyng all maner of sicknes, and al maner of diseases emong the people. And his fame spꝛed abꝛode throughoute all Syria. And they bꝛought vnto hym all sycke people that were taken with diuerse diseases and gꝛeppynges, and them that were possessed wyth deuils, and those that were lunatike, and those that had the palsey: and he healed them, and there folowed hym great multitudes of people from Galile, and from Decapolis, and Jerusalem, and Jewry, and fꝛo the countreyes that lye beyond Jꝛdane.

Ye see the entrynges of our Philosophye, wheꝛeby it was thoughte good vnto god to saue all mankynde. Ye se the pompe and ruffling of the euangely-call schole. Loꝛde Jesus beyng accompanyed with these few fishers, vnlerned, of the common soꝛte, and poꝛe men, walked ouer all Galile, not nowe in coꝛneꝛs noꝛ in desertes, but in theyr Synagoges, where was moste resoꝛte: ꝓeachyng and shewyng that the kyngdome of heauen whiche had heꝛtofoꝛe been promysed was nowe at hande: not puttyng them in feare of helle fyer lyke as John dyd, but inuiting and allurynge all men with free benefites. Foꝛ where-soeuer he wente he healed all mennes diseases indifferently, and freely, refusing no man, were he neuer so vile, and of the meanest soꝛte, and with lyke easynesse he chased awaye all diseases, were they neuer so incurable: to thintent bothe to set furth and declare by miracles, his power to be greater than mannes, and also through free benefites, to purchase and winne the loue of all menne. Foꝛ hym we gladly truste and beleue, whome we loue.
Yea euen the wylde beastes also bee wunne with benefites. Surelye there is no benefite moꝛe godly, than freelye to restoꝛe health. By these meanes it came to passe, that the fame of hym spꝛedde abꝛode throughout all Syꝛia, and manye bꝛought from a farre theyr diseased folke incumbred with diuerse dyse-eases and griefes, and beſydes theſe ſuche as were poſſeſſed with diuels, and Lunatikes, and diſeaſed with the palſey, whome Phiſitcyons commonly eyther take not vpon them to cure, or els be wonte to cure in vayne, becauſe the diſeaſe paſſeth theyr arte and cunnyng. But Jeſus healed all eaſily, not with mannes medicynes, but wyth heauenly vertue, wherwyth he was hable alſo to rayſe the dead. It was a ſmall matter to hym to take awaye the diſeaſes of the bodyes, whiche take awaye the diſeaſes of the myndes. It was a ſmalle matter for hym to prolong the lyfe of the bodye, whiche came to geue euerlaſtyng lyfe vnto all men. There came therfore from thys parte and that parte, a wonderfull numbre of people, not onely from Galile of the Gentiles where he was, but alſo out of the other Galile, whiche was beyonde the water, and oute of the countrey that was called Decapolis, becauſe of the tenne cities whiche were in it, alſo out of Hieruſalem and the reſidewe of Jewry, and out of the places whyche were beyonde Jordane. All menſas they haue nede runne to a benefit. Many be moued wyth nouelties. Sum came for malice with a mynde to waſte diſpleaſure. Jeſus (for his parte) draweth all vnto hym, but fewe bee mete for the heauenly Philoſophye, for the teachyng and deliuery of the which, he chiefly came into the worlde. The people is moued wyth care of the bodye, and is deſyrouſe and deliteth muche in newe ſyghtes and gaſinges. But he deliteth not greatlye in ſuche ſightes, that ſeketh after thinges of perfection, and thynges farre a londe, from the affections of the common ſorte.

And thoſe that had the palſey, &c.

And there folowed hym, &c.

¶ The. v. Chapter.

And whan he ſawe the multitude, he went vp into a mountayne, and whan he was ſette, hys diſcyples came to hym, And after that he had opened his mouthe, he taught them, ſayeng: bleſſed are the poore in ſpirite, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen.

The texte.

Therefore, Jeſus ſeeyng the people flockyng about hym more and more, and that of all ſortes, he conueyeth himſelf from the lowe place whither euery man myghte haue acceſſe, and goeth vp vnto the hyll, and beganne nowe to preache and teache the heauenly Philoſophy, declaryng by the highnes of the place, that he wolde ſhewe further and teache no common nor meane thyng, but all hygh and heauenly thynges, folowyng alſo the exaumple of Moyſes, who publyſhing the laws vnto the people (as we reade) went vp to the hill. His diſciples whome he had choſen ſpecially vnto hym, folowed hym goyng vp, in ſuche wyſe yet that the common people were not lefte to folowe hym, if any had ſo muche delyre and ſtrength. Therfore Jeſus whan he came to the top of the hyll, ſate downe, not as beeyng weary, but purpoſyng to teache ſeriouſ and weyghtye thynges, whiche required a diligent hearer. Whan his diſciples perceyued that, they compaſſed hym nere about that none of his holye doctryne ſhoulde eſcape them. Jeſus therfore entryng and begynnyng hys godlye and holſome Philoſophye, not oute of a towre or tabernacle with a golden ſeate (ſuche an one as Jarcas the greate Philoſopher of India had beyng garniſhed with pretious ſtones,) not out of the proude pulpet of the Philoſophers, nor out of the arrogant chayre of the Phariſeis, but oute of a ſeate of graſſe he taught his ſyes, not vpon the common people, but vpon his diſciples: and o-

penyng hys holye mouthe, he began to shewe furthe the lessons of the gospell, whiche hytherto had not been heard, and whiche bee farre from the opinion of all men, that appeared to the very wyse vnto the worlde. All men prompte blessednes, whyche take vpon them to be teachers of wysdome, All menne of what estate or condicion soeuer they bee, desyre blessednes. But muche controuersye hath been emong Philosophers, and muche errour in the lyfe of men. In what thynges the felicitie of man doth consiste: And lozalmuche as this is the marke and foundacion of all wisdome, Jesus fyrste doth open and set furthe straunge sentences, but yet very true. And therefore throughe myracles he obteyned credite to bee geuen to hys saiyng, thoughe it semed sumwhat incredible, for that they that founde his power to bee effectual in healyng of diseases of the bodye, myght truste also his doctryne to bee true, whereby he healed the diseases of the mynde. Yet fewe disciples there were, that did both heare and enbrace this blessednes: For all men heare, for he spake to all, and all shall bee made blessed and happy. Of false opinions spryng all synnes in liuyng. Therfore aboue al thinges, we muste endeuour to plucke them away. And for because that fiercenesse and arrogancie is the moste daungerouse diseake of the mynde, whiche suffereth not manne to receiue the true doctryne (yea it is the verye foundacyon from whence in maner spryng all deadly offences) Jesus fyrste of all healeth this, saiyng: Blessed bee the poore in spirite, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen: whose eares coulde haue abyden so incredyble a saiyng, but after to manye testimonies of John, of the father, and of the doue, and finally yrisesse hys authoritye had been ratified, and credite obteyned through euydent signes and myracles? Manye be made vile, abiect, and humble, and be brought in discourage of themselues, by the realon of powertye, of bakenes of bodye, of lowenesse of estate, or of aduersitye. Truely these bee nere to the blessednes of the ghospell, yf they folowe with theyr harte, as they be called by their state. But thys humanitie of spirite, resteth in the inwarde affection, not in outwarde thynges. But howe shal he haue a kyngdome, whiche taketh nothyng vpon hym, whiche geueth place to all, whych is offended with himselfe, which thrusteth out no man, whiche hurteth no man? for he semeth more nye the seruitude of an alie, than a kyngdome. This kinde of men is trode vnder the feete euerye where, is hurte and harmed without redresse. Liueth lyke an abiecte without regarde, poore and comfortles. But it is true, that rueth saieth: To these only appertayneth the kyngdome, but it is the kyngdome of heauen. Thinkest thou that these fierce and violente men doe reigne? They bee verye slaues, they bee vnder manye tyrannes, they bee vexed with auarice, angre, hatred, desyre of vengeance, with feare, with hope. They vnneches lyue, muche lesse they reygne. But he that is free from all these vexacions and troubles, and betaketh himselfe to innocencie and cleane lyfe, puttyng hys truste in God, lookyng for the rewarde of the worlde to cumme, and is verye quiete and regardeth not the thynges of thys worlde, but seketh after heauenlye thynges: hath not he a goodlye kyngdome, farre passyng the kyngdomes of worldlye kynges? Neyther filthye lust, nor auarice, nor hatred, nor anger, nor other worldlye infections, ouer the mynde, reigne ouer hym: And armed with faith so often as the case requireth he geueth commaundement to diseases, and they flie awaye: he geueth commaundement to deuils, and blessed are the poore in spirite

and they departe. So mighty is the kyngdome of the mynde, whiche dystrustyng hymselfe, putteth hys truste in God, and distrustyng the succoure of man, doethe depende wholye of heauen. It is not the Dyademe, it is not the ornamente, it is not the garde, that maketh a kyngdome: But the other aboue mencioned be the thynges that make a kyng in dede, and bryng hym finally to the heauenly and euerlastyng kyngdome, where there shall be no disobedience nor rebellion. A worldly kyngdome is gotten by violence, and defended by fiercenesse. This kyngdome is gotten by modestly and soberneste, and defended and stablished, by humilitie and meknes. The worlde iudgeth none meete to gouerne a kyngdome, but suche as bee of notable spirite, and of a fleute courage. But God auaunceth vnto hys kyngdome those chiefly, whiche do moste humble themselues.

The texte. Blessed be they that are meke: For they shall receyue the inheritaunce of the yearthe.

Jesus goeth on and sayeth vnto this an other sentence as harde to be beleued and taken. Blessed be the meke, for they shall inherite the yearth. And who bee the meke: they that vse no man violently nor extremely, and whan they haue any harme, they be redy to forgeue the iniuryes done vnto them: they also that had rather lese theyr thyng, than to contende or striue for it, and that regarde more concorde and quietnes of mynde, than large possessions, and suche as rather desyre quiet powerty, than troublesome ryches. But this kynde of men is oftentymes set beside and put from theyr goodes and landes, and he goeth not aboute gredely to get other mennes, but is rather driuen out from the possessions of hys auncetry. But this is a newe fashyon of enlargyng of possessions, for meknesse obteyneth more of them that geue willyngly and of theyr owne accord, than violence and rauenye can purchase or obtaine by right or wrong. The stout and fierce lord doth not possesse the thing that he hath. But the meke and quiete man will rather geue place and leaue hys goodes, than contende or striue for them, therfore is his possession in all places whereas he fyndethe louers of the euangelicall meknesse. Stoutnes and stifnes is hated of all men, softenes and meknes is fauoured of the heathen. Finally, yf the meke lese hys possession, it is no losse vnto hym, but greate gayne and lucre. He hath losse hys lande, but he reserueth quietnes of mynde. He hath wel solde hys lande, whiche hath auoyded trouble and bustnes, and hath kept still quietnesse of mynde. Finally, if the meke man be put from all that he hath, the more sure and certayne is he to possesse the lande of heauen, out of the whych he can not be thrust. The worlde lamenteth and countreth them vnhappie which be banysshed and driuen out of theyr countreye, but Christe pronounceth them blessed, whiche be banisshed for the gospell sake. For they be made denisens in heauen. They bee driuen out of the libertie of one cytie, and caste out of theyr house, and chased oute of one countrey, but the gospell man hath the whole worlde for his countrey. And the godly men be sure of heauen for theyr house and theyr countreye.

The texte. Blessed be they that mourne, for they shall receyue comforte.

Lacke of chyldren or parentes, and suche other as we entierly loue, commonly is counted a miserable thing, insomuche that sum lacking theyr desyres, and depriued of theyr affections, as of wife, parentes, brothers, or chyldren, do sumtyme spill themselues for sorow. And for that cause frendes vse to repayre vnto them in suche cases, to comforte them, and to mitigate the bitternesse of theyr sorow. But blessed be they that mourne for the loue of the gospel, which be plucked awaye from theyr wyfe, chyldren, and other that they loue, and see them

th at they loue moste derely,to be punished and slayne for the reghteousnes of the golpell,whyche also despyse the pleasures of thys worlde, and leade theyr lyfe in weppyng,watchyng,and fastyng. With these, the heauenly spirite wyll be present,he wyll be theyr secrete comforter. He wyll recompence theyr temporall waylyng with inestimable hartes ioye, and after wardes they shal bee translated vnto euerlastyng blisse. Manne comforte entending to heale the greefe, doeth oftentymes make it worse. But the spirite whiche is the true comforter doeth so inwardly refreshe the mynde beyng cleare in conscience and assertayned of the rewardes of the lyfe to cum, that in moste grieuous afflictions of theyr bodyes, they thynke not themselues infortunate,but rather do moste ioyfully reioyce.

Blessed be they whyche hungar and thyrste for ryghteousnes,for they shall be satisfied. The texte

Famyn and hungar by the opinion of al men,is a grieuouse thing,and pouertie is a thyng with all endeuour to be auoyded,and euery man calleth them fortunate and blessed,whiche do notably encrease and establyshe theyr housholde and substaunce,and haue abundantly to lyue and occuppe, but it is not the ryches whorded and heaped vp that satisfieth the myndes,and the fulcrye of man is not to be measured by the fulnes of the belly. What be they than in thys kynde of men whom Christe calleth blessed? Blessed(sayeth he)bee they whiche hungar and thyrst for ryghteousnes. The thynges wherewith the body is nourysshed and fostred vp,oughte to bee despyzed but lyghtly;and yet the common sorte are sore tormoiled with care for them. And sumtime the satisfyeth moze vere them that bee full,than the hunger dyd trouble them before: and by and by after theyr satyrtie,thurste and hunger returne agayne, and must oftentymes be repayred. And these thynges be present euerye where to the godly,whiche be contente wyth a litle,and despse nothyng but necessaries,and are without al carefulnes,for he doeth geue and mynistre vnto them, which feedeth the sparowes,and doeth clothe the lilies. Happy be they whiche doe take thys hunger and thurst from bodilye and casuall thynges,and applie them to the desyre of the euangelicall iustice,where there is euermoze that is to be hungred for,euermoze that is to be thyrsted for,and blessed saciete and fulnes. And this is one parte of blessednes,to hunger for that dreade of the mynde, wherof whoso eateth he shal liue euerlastingly,and to thurst for that liuely water wherof who so drynketh,in hym there shall spryng a well of water,runnyng into euerlastyng lyfe.

Blessed be the mercifull,for they shall obteyne mercy. The texte

The common sorte supposeth them to be blessed,whiche be holpen wyth other mennes aide,and they reioyce and be glad rather for their sakes that bee holpen,than for their cause that helpe them. But I saye: Blessed be the merciful, who for brotherly charitie counte an other mannes miserye to bee theyr owne, and bee sorye for theyr neyghboures hurte,and doe bewayle theyr miseries:and of theyr awne do feede the nedy,and clothe the naked,and monyshe them that do amysse,and teache the ignorant,and pardon the offender: Fynallye what soeuer gifte or good thyng they haue,they bestowe it in helpyng and refreshyng others. And they leese nothyng by it,but they gayne. For the merciful and beneficiall man towarde his neyghboure, shall fynde God much moze merciful and beneficial toward hym. Thou hast pardoned thy neyghbour of lum lyghe offence, God will forgeue thee all thy synnes. Thou hast passed ouer for thy neyghboures sake a tempozall vengeaunce, God wyll pardon thee of eueralstyng punyshement. Thou haste socoured wyth thy substaunce thy brothers powertye, God wyll restoze vnto the hys heauenlye ryches. They that be mercifull wate poore as concerning worldlye thynges, for by geuyng theyr tyrthesse are consumed, but towardes God they were ryche: for theyr worldly stoze beeyng consumed, theyr harte is heaped vp wyth the fruites of godlines.

The texte. Blessed are the cleane of harte, for they shal se God.

The common sorte of men calleth them vnhappye that bee blynde, and because they haue loste theyr moste pleasaunte sense, they saye they bee no longer alyue, but that they abyde in darknes lyke deade men. So pleasaunte a thyng it semeth to the yes to loke vpon the lyght, and to beholde this goodlye spectacle and lyght of the worlde. That it is a thyng so muche to bee wysshed for to beholde the sunne wyth the bodilye yes, how muche more pleasaunt and blessed a thyng is it wyth the yes of the mynde to beholde God, the maker of the sunne and of all thynges? Ye see howe they leape for ioye, whiche haue beene blynde, and nowe do see the sunne agayne. Yea they reioyce as muche as if they had ben deliuered from hell. Howe muche more blessed be they, who beyng deliuered from blindnes of the mynde, haue the gift inwardly to see god, the fountayne of all ioye, whom to beholde, is high felicite and blessednes. As the sunne is to cleare yes, so is God to pure and cleane myndes. As matter of skum me or a webbe is to the yes, so are sinnes to the myndes. Therfore blessed be they whose harte is pure and cleane from all filthines. For they shal haue thys gyfte, which is more to be desyred than all the pleasures of the worlde. They shall see God.

The texte Blessed be the peace makers, for they shall be called the children of God.

The common sorte of men iudgeth them to be blessed whiche hauyng theyr thynges in good quame and staye, lyue in rest and quietnes, and haue no manne to trouble them. But after my iudgemente they bee blessed, whiche after they haue repressed in theyr hartes the rebellion and rage of all theyr fowle lustes, doo studye and endeuour to make vnitye and concorde emong suche as bee at strife and variaunce, not only not reuenging themselues of they haue bene hurt of any bodye, but wyllynglye of theyr owne accorde prouokyng them to peace, of whome they haue suffered harme. And if any manne thynke it harde to be doen, let hym harken to the rewarde. For they shall be called the sonnes of God. What is more honorable than this title and prayse? Yea what is more blessed? For it is no vayne title. He that is the sonne, must nedes be heyre also. But the vnlykenes of manners declareth and argueth a bastarde. The folowyng of the fathers steppes, declareth a true and a naturall chylde. God forgeuyng freely all offences, doeth stirre and prouoke all men whiche hath offended hym, to peace and amitie. He offereth hymselfe of his owne accorde verye mercifull to all them that do repent. He wyll not knowledge them for hys chyldren, whiche do not shewe themselfe to theyr brethren, as he hath shewed hymselfe towardes all. Carnall fathers disherit theyr sonnes, whiche do not agree wyth theyr other brethren. So the heauenly father wil abdicate and put away the hatters of peace and cauilers of discorde, from themherytaunce of heauen.

The texte. Blessed be they that suffer persecution for ryghteousnes sake, for theyrs is the kyngdome of heauen. Blessed be ye when men reuyle you, and persecute you, and speake falsly all maner of euyll against you for my sake. Reioyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heauen, for so persecuted they the prophetes whiche were before you.

And

And because there be many frowarde & euill men in euery place, peace cannot be kayed & continue wyth al men, but thorow sufferaunce of displeasures: It is the part of godly men vtterly to endeuour themselues, that they be at debate with no man, whether they be good or euill, they muste moue and allure all men with curtesy, gentilnes and pleasures, as much as maye be, to loue and concord. But the frowardnes of sum is such that they will bee stirred to anger, yea with benefites also, and wyll vexe them that do for them, and vse cruelnes against well doers, and count them for theyr enemyes that studye to pleasure them. If in this sale peace cannot be conserued on bothe sydes, yet blessed be they for the loue they beare to peace: whom the wicked do persecute for none other cause, but for the vprightousnes of the gospell, which hurteth none but profiteth all. For the selfe same thing prouoketh theyr hatred, for the whiche they ought to loue, and they do iniury for none other thyng, but for the whiche they ought to render thankes. Sum will saye: who can loue such that for gentylnes requiteth hatred and ill doynges? It is a greate matter I graunte, but greate is the rewarde. And what rewarde? not a crowne of oke or laurell, not a bullocke or a goate, or any suche lyke rewarde, whiche worldly men vse to geue to suche as get the ouerhand in worldly maistryes, but the kyngdome of heauen. Ye that be my disciples muste make you ready to this wrastling, if ye esteme the rewardes of the gospell. Ye muste not feare the cruelnes of men. No man can hurte you, yf ye sticke stifly to vprightousnes. The persecucion of euill men shall not take away your innocencye, but shal increase your blessednes. In the middes of aduersityes ye shall be blessed, yea whan they curse you moste bitterlye, whan they shall all raile you with all kyndes of hurtes, whan they shall rebuke you, and laye all offences agaynste you, and that falsely, not for your faulte, but for the hatred and displeasure of me, for the summe of the crymes whiche they shall laye agaynst you shal be, that ye are christen men. Do not lament and bewaile your selues, as men thrust out, afflicted and beaten, misreported and infamed, but rather for these thynges be glad and reioyce, because the more fierse they be in persecuteyng, so muche the more your rewardes increased and heaped by for you in heauen of the heauenly father. God will tourne theyr naughtynes to your good. He wyll tourne the hurtes that they do, to your aduauntage and lucre. He will tourne the ignominie, rebuke, and reproche that they put you to, into euerlastyng and true glory. He wyll tourne the crymes and reproke whiche they falsly laye to youre charges, into the titles and commendacions of true godlynes. He wil tourne theyr malediccions and curses, into prayse and reioyseng on your parties, not onely before God (and yet to please him it is sufficiently enough, yea though ye displease the whole world) but also before men. For, to be rebuked of wicked men for godlynes, is a prayse: to be tormented of the haters of God, is to be crowned. Glory is not to be sought for of men, but glory of her owne accorde customably doeth folowe true vertue. Wil ye haue a redy and playne example? Is this daie what is more holy and honourable than the memorye of the Prophetes? And yet whan they were aliue, did the wicked sorte persecute them with all kyndes of afflictions, as they shall dooe you.

They persecuted the Prophetes for the hatred of my father: ye shall bee persecuted for the hatred that menne beare to warde me. These bee bitterneste thynges I graunte, and passyng mannes weakenes. But it muste nedes bee an excellent and a notable thyng, whiche by his myghte should moue and drawe the whole worlde, beeyng ouerwhelmed with wrytche opinions, and dayne

desyres. For whiche of all these worldly men doeth not abhorre the tormenting of the bodye: who is not afrayed at the daunger of lyfe? Who is not styrred with desyre of auengyng, whan he is prouoked with sore checkes and rebukes? who can quietely suffer his name to bee spotted and hindred without any desire? But to the intente ye maye be blessed, I require more of you, that is, to thynke youre selues blessed for suche cruell afflictions: and rather to haue pytye of youre blynde persecutours, than to bee agreued with them: to saye well by them that saye euyll by you: to offer them euerlastyng healthe, whyche goe about your destruccion. This high and excellente vertue ye cannot performe, vnlesse ye cum vnto it by the degrees whiche I shewed you before. If ye caste away vtterlye the swelling and pryde of the mynde, if ye put from you the desire of reuengyng, yf ye dispise all the pleasures of this world, & embrace the sharpe way, yf ye extinguishe the desyre of worldly thynges, and thyrste for nothyng greatly, but for rygheousnes and godlynes, yf ye be full mynded to succoure and helpe the greekes of al men, and desyre to further the commodities of al me, if ye haue a minde sincere and cleane from all vices and filthye desyres, not regardyng any thyng, nor delityng in any thing but in God alone: finally, yf ye studye and deuise with quiet hartes to nourysshe and to make cõcord and peace then shall ye perfourme thele thynges, the whyche other meanne cannot yet atteyne vnto nor once dreame vpon. But yet they that be curable and not vtterly of a desperate mynde, musyng muche at youre sufferaunce and godlynesse, they shall well vnderstande that it is no counterfeyt thing, they shall well perceyue that it is not a thyng of mannes power, and beyng moued thorowe youre exaumple, shall be turned to better thryfte.

The texte. Ye be the salte of the earth: but if the salte be vnsauoury, wherewith shall it be seasoned: It is henceforth good for nothyng, but to be caste out, and to be troden of men.

Ye be the salte of the yearth.

For I haue chose you fewe, not to the entent I would allure and bryng to the knowledge of the euangelicall wysedome, one or twoo eythes, but the whyolle worlde. It muste nedes bee a lusyye and a puryye thyng that can be sufficiente to saue and sauour the lyfe of all mankynde, beeing so wetyshe and vnsauerye thorowe the desyres and fond opinions of vayne thynges. For I haue chosen you, not to the intent ye shoulde bee of the meane and tollerable sorte, but that ye shoulde be the salte of the yearth: it nedeth not to haue muche salte, but such as is good and strong, that whatsoeuer it doothe touche it maye season, and of wetyshe make sauoury. The yerth is greate and yet the saltnes that it hath, it hath of a litle salte mixte with it. And ye see that a greate deale of meate vnsauoury and wetyshe, with a litell salte syprynkeled vpon it, is made sauourye.

But if the salte be vnsauoury. &c.

It must nedes be that in great noumbres of men, many be found de but meane, and vncath tollerable. But in Apostles, in bisshoppes, in doctoures, & teachers, that quicke and perfect liuelines of the euangelicall charitie, must nedes persseuer and abyde. Otherwyse if your maners be made vnsauoury with the loue of pyarse, with desire of ryches, with the lusse of pleasures, with the gredines of reuengyng, with the feare of vnkampe, harmes, or death, what remaynyth than, wherby the vnsauoury lyfe of the multitude maye bee seasoned: so it shall cum to passe, that ye shall not onelye bee vnmete to season others, but also ye youre selues not perfourming the thing that ye teache, shal cum into extreme contempt of al men. For what is lesse to bee regarded than vnsauoury salte, whyche serueth not for so muche as to doung the lande, for somuche as yf it be cast on the grounde it causeth barraines.

By

By that meanes men shall haue you in veneracion, yea they also whiche cruyously and hatefully backed agaynste you, yf they once perceyue that your doctryne doeth sauour of the liuelynes of the gospell, yf they see all youre lyfe to bee agreable to your doctryne. When ye haue once taken vpon you this profession, eyther ye muste be verye profitable vnto all menne, or verye vnprofytable, eyther ye muste haue greate prayse emong men, or greate dispraise. Dispraise and rebuke ought to bee shunned more than deathe, for it doeth redounde to the inkampe and slaunder of the gospell. Wherfore se that ye be on euerye syde sincere pure, and verye perfect, to thende that the vnpuritie of the multitude maye be corrected throwe your puritie.

The first

Ye be the lyght of the worlde. A citie that is set on a hyll can not be hyd. Neyther do men lyght a candell, and put it vnder a bushell, but on a candelstycke, and it geueth lyght to all that be in the house. Let youre light so shine before men, that they maie se your good workes, and glorifye your father whiche is in heauen.

Ye be the lyght of the worlde.

Let your life and your doctryne be suche, that it maye be a guyde and a rule of good life to all men that doeth behold and loke vpon it. There is but one sunne of this worlde, but the same is so myghtye and plentifull of lyghte that it ronna farre, it shyneth vpon all them that dwell vpon the yearth. So I haue set you in an high place, that whatsoeuer ye speake, whatsoeuer ye doe, muste nedes be spyed abrode throwout the whole worlde. If the cloudes couer the sunne, howe shall men haue lyghte? If your doctryne be darkened with errours, yf the lyght of your lyfe be dimmed with worldly desires, what thyng shall driue awaye the darkenes of the multitude? Wherfore ye muste beware, that there be no darkenesse nor foulshnes in you. Ye cannot be hyd though ye endeuour neuer so muche. Consider wel that ye haue a parte to playe in the stage of the whole worlde, to thintente that carefulnes should sharpen you to bee circumspect and diligent. A small offence in you, is as muche as a great crime. Ye be as a citye set vpon an high hyll, which maye be seene of the waye goers farre and wyde. It can not be hid thoughe it wolde, for the hyll with his highe toppe that beareth it, willeth it, nilleth it, maketh it seene of al men that it may shewe the waye to them that erre and be out of the waye. Thys is the nature of the euangelicall doctryne, it suffereth not the professoures of it, to be hyd and vnknowen, although they fleing the fame of men seke dennes to hyde them in. And why shoulde ye be hid, which is ordeyned for this purpose, to do good to al men indifferently? Salt is geuen to season withe, the sunne is geuen to the worlde to geue lyght, the citie is buylt in the toppe of the hyll, to be seene of all men. In the myght men lyght a candele in the house, to geue lyght to al them that be in the house: And therfore they hide it not vnder a bushel, but set it vpon a candelsticke that the lyght therof maye the better cum to all, and the vse of one lyghte maye extende and reache to manye: So ye ought not to seke, howe to purchase a fame and opinion amonge men: but onely bee ye carefull that ye darken not the lyght, whiche I haue lyghtened in you, and that ye persecuer and continue vpon the candlesticke, where I haue set you. The salt cannot but sesalon. The lyghte cannot but shyne.

A citye that is set on a hyll can not be hyd.

Therfore let your lyght shyne, yea rather my lyghte and the light of my father, vnto all men, that they consideryng your lyfe to be vtterly pure & blameles, and very heauenlye, maye glorifye youre heauenlye father, to whome is due all honour and glorye. For all youre good workes and miracles be they neuer so wonderfull

Let your lyghte so shyne before men.

wonderfull, ye shall chalenge nothyng vnto your selfe, but ye shall referre all glory and prayse vnto hym, from whome cummeth whatsoeuer men doe worthy prayse. It shal be your part, to haue none other care, but manfully and faithfully to perfourme the office committed vnto you. He shall geue the rewarde in tyme conuenient, and that a great rewarde, to whose glorye ye doe seruice.

The texte. Thynke ye not that I am come to destroye the lawe or the Prophetes: no I am not come to destroye, but to fulfyll. For truly I saye vnto you, tyll heauen and yearth passe, one iote or tytle of the lawe shall not passe, tyll all be fulfylled.

Whan ye heare the newe preceptes, which neither Moyses dyd deliuer nor the Prophetes taughte, suppose not that I bryng lyke matter as the pharisees were wonte with theyr additions and mannes constytutions makynge the lawe heauy and sore, and the very pyth and chefe of the lawe vtterly neglecting and abolishyng. I came not to diminyshe and abate the lawe or abolyshe it with newe preceptes: But I came rather to fulfyl and make perfect the lawe. For it doeth commaunde nothyng that any man can complayne that I haue not obserued and kepte. And yf the shadowes geue place whan the lyghte cummeth forth, yf I perfourme in dedes, that whiche the Prophetes saide before shoulde cum to passe, the lawe is nothyng hindered, but rather made perfecte. The lawe had his time, it hadde his honour, it dyd shadowe wyth certayne figures, that whiche nowe is represented and open to the worlde: the lawe dydde in maner hedge about the desires of men, with ceremonies and carnall preceptes, as it were with certayne barres, that they shoulde not fall without anye staye into euery sinne, to thintente they might be the more apte to take the doctrine of the gospell: but nowe that that is perfect, is shewed forth. The carnall and grosse lawe was profitable to this entent, that men myghte acknowledge theyr synnes, but nowe grace whiche washeth awaye synne, is geuen vnto vs without ceremonyes. Therfore the lawe is no more offended, than if the kyng hymselfe beyng alyue, shoulde cum in place where is image was paynted, and allyce all men rather to loke vpon hym than vpon his image: or elles yf a weake chylde in processe of time shoulde growe to be a manne, or yf the rype fruite should succede after buddes and leaues, or yf the sunne sprungyng vp shoulde darken the moone and the starres. What the lawe prompted is nowe perfourmed. what it did shewe before, is nowe done. What it dyd shadowe is nowe made open to al mennes ies, what it endeuoured to perfourme and couldc not, is nowe brought to passe at full. This lyght is prompted vnto al men, but yet so that the Iewes haue no cause to complayne of vs. The grace of the gospel is hyrde offered to them, neither shal they haue the lesse therfore, if that they haue be common to many wyth them. This is certayn, that we breake not the lawe wherein the Pharisees do glorye, in so muche that not the leaste iote, no not one pricke of the whole lawe shal perishe, for there is nothyng written in it, but it shalbe fulfilled. It were a folishe thing to loke for that hereafter whiche is nowe present, it were a mad thyng so to delyght in shadowes, that ye should dispise the true thinges, so to sticke to imperfect thinges, that ye should dispise perfecte thynges, so to embrace carnal thynges, that ye should sooth spirituall thynges, so to bee geuen to worldlye thynges, that ye shoulde neglecte heauenly thynges.

Wholesom

Whosoeuer therfore breaketh one of theyr least commaundementes: and teacheth men so, he shal be called the least in the kyngdome of heauen. But whoso doeth, and teacheth the same, shall be called great in the kyngdome of heauen. For I say vnto you, vnles your rightcousnes exceede the rygtcousnes of ỹ Pharisees, and Scribes, ye can not enter into the kingdom of heauen. The texte

Among the Iewes he is not regarded ne counted a good keper of the law that doeth omitte or lette passe any of those thinges whyche the Pharisees haue added of theyr owne prescrybing, as washynges of handes, of pottes ỹ vessels, and yet these additions and patches profit so litle towardes the perfection of the lawe, that thei oftetymes withdraw men from the obseruacion of the same. But in ỹ kyngdome of heauen whiche is muche more perfect, he that breaketh but one of these small precepte whiche I nowe adde vnto the prescrypte lawe of Moyses, although he teache the thyng to be obserued whiche he hymselfe thorough weakenes and frayltye doeth not perfourme, he shall be counted the leaste and moste despised, in so much that vnlesse he profit and goe forwarde vnto better thynges, he shall be vtterly excluded from the felowshyppe of the gospell. But whosoeuer teacheth these smalle thinges not to be despised, whiche dyspute men farre from those thynges whiche the lawe doeth forbyd, and doethe perfourme that whiche he teacheth, he is to be hadde in veneracion, and shal be counted greate in the kyngdome of heauen. And yet they that be the chiefe and the highest in the Synagoge despiting suche thynges, thinke it enough yf they doo committe none of those thynges whiche be punishable by the lawe, and yet in the meane season they fauour, and flatter, and perdone themselues in the naughtye desyres of the mynde. Truely this is the iustice of them whiche by the feare of pain be restrained from il doing. But thei that be moued to thinges of more perfection by charitie, and by that heauenly spirite, they withdrawe themselues from the approchyng to ill doynges, and they doe not onely forbeare to hurte any man, but they will no hurt to no man. And that ye maye perceyue what difference there is betwene a Iewe and a true Christian man, betwene Moyses disciple and myne, this I do ascertayne you, yf ye doo perfourme whatsoeuer the lawe doethe prescrybe, whatsoeuer the Pharisees ỹ be nowe doe perfourme, whiche nowe be accoumpted and thynke them selues very rygtheous, and yf ye adde nothyng of more perfection, ye shall be so farre of from being great in this profession, that an entry shal not once be geuen you into the kyngdome of heauen. For this profession doeth so farre excel, that thei that be the chiefe there, haue not so muche as the least place here.

Ye haue heard that it was sayd vnto them of the olde tyme: Thou shalt not kyl: whosoeuer kylleth, shall be in daunger of iudgement. But I saye vnto you, that whoso is angry with his brother vnadvisedly, shal be in daunger of iudgement. And whosoeuer sayeth vnto his brother Racha, shall be in daunger of a counsell. But whosoeuer saieth thou foole, shal be in daunger of hell fyre. Therfore yf thou offer thy gyfte at the aulter and there remembrest that thy brother hath ought against the, leaue there thyne offering before the aulter, and go thy way first, and be reconsiled to thy brother, and than cum and offer thy gyfte. The texte.

And yet that it maye be more euident how muche we adde vnto the Pharisaycall iustice, and that our commaundementes be not repugnaunt against the preceptes of the lawe, but rather aide them: we shall make the matter manyfest by certayne exaumples. Ye haue heard that a commaundemente was geuen in times paste vnto the elders: Thou shalte not kyll. And if a man doe kyll, once conuicted and iudged, he shal be punished.

Therfore hitherto he thinketh himselfe to haue fulfilled the lawe, whiche hathe slayne slayne no man, and so hath escaped the threatenynges of the lawe, thys manne as a iuste and an innocent manne shal be receiued into the Synagogue. Howe harken howe muche I adde hereunto. Truely this I affermayne you, whosoeuer is angrye wyth hys brother shall be in daunger of iudgemente. For the dignitie of the profession doeth encrese the faulte, in so muche that what homycide is in the olde lawe, the same in the newe lawe is the vehement motion of the mynde to be reuenged. For the firste degree to homycide is to be angrye. For suche an one hath not yet actually committed homicide, but now he beginneth to go towardes homicide.

Who so is angry with hys brother &c.

Therefore he that willeth yll to hys brother, euen nowe hath committed a greuous offence before God his iudge. And if he dooe not furthwith represse his fearce mynde, but beyng ouercome with anger, dooe burste out with summe woorde whiche toucheth not his brother in deede, wyth any euydent, and plaine reproche, but maketh hym sad with a manyfeste token of contempte, as yf he shoulde saye Racha, or some other lyke thyng, whiche declareth the yll wyll of the mind: now is he (as one nere vnto homicide), not onely in daūger to iudgemente, and sly all sclfce lyghter punishemente, and yet as great as the homicide mencioned in the olde lawe deserueth, but also he is in daunger to a counsell, where he shal be the more greuously condemned. Furthermore if the disobedient moeion of the minde: doeth burst out so farre that a man strike his brother with a manyfest and a certayne rebuke, and calleth hym foole, or suche other lyke, nowe shall he be in daunger to that moste greuous payne, that is to saye, to the payne of hell fyer. So many wayes is he punished whiche is not yet cum vnto homicide & murdre. But he is nere vnto homicide, whosoeuer is falle from brotherly charitie. Whosoeuer wylleth yl to his brother in anger, thoughe he hath not plucked out his swerde, yet he hath strikē in mynde. Whosoeuer hath rebuked in anger, hath striken with the tounge, & peraduenture woulde haue slayne but that he feared punishement. Therfore the lawe of the ghospel which punisheth the angry man, is not agaynste the precepte of ỹ lawe: Thou shalt not kyl: but it diuerteth & putteth of a man further from that, that ỹ lawe commaundeth to be punished. He is more safe and farther from murther, that vtterlye plucketh out from his harte all anger and hatred, qure of the whiche roote springeth hemycide and murther. Therfore whosoeuer hath gotten to himselfe the charitie of the gospel, whiche wylleth wel to them that wylleth yl, whiche recompenseth iniurye wyth wel dooyng, he hath litle nede of the threteninges of Moses lawe, for the auoiding of murther. The vttermoste degree of hatred is to kyl and slepe, and the vttermoste degre of charitie is to wil well to the killer and sleper. Among the Iewes he is counted godlye and deuoute whyche beryng ill will to his brother, bryngeth hys offeryng to the aulter, where as no sacrifice is accepted vnto God, without brotherly charitie, and concord: wherfore chyefly ye must regarde peace and mutual concord. And if any displeasure chaunce among brethren, as by ỹ weakenesse of mans nature it doeth happen, al thynges layd aparte, se that attonement and concorde be made, in so muche as yf by chaunce thou makest in a redines any gyfte to offer vnto God, and beyng nowe nere at the aulter doest remember that thy brother and thou be at square eyther because he hath offended the, or els because amittie is broken through the grefe of both parties, deferre not, linger not, but leaue thy gyfte at the aulter, make hast home, and bryng to passe, that before al thynges I wer amyty amitie may bee restored, and made vp betweene thee and thy brother. That done, returne vnto the aultee and doe thy sacrifice. So no gift is more acceptable to God, than consent and agrement of men. God suffereth no dammage if his gift be differred, but much peril and daunger hangeth ouer both parties by the breache of concorde. For displeasures prolonged and deferred, ingendre hatred: of hatred springeth homicide and murther. And no scripture is acceptable vnto god which is not furnished with charitie. And if thou wilt say vnto me I haue offended nothing, let hym bowe firste and make suite that hath offended, thou arte not to be heard. He that is commaunded to loue his enemy, wil not sticke to restore and make vp loue and concorde, though it were broken through a nother mans default. Forgeue the trespasse of thine owne accorde, and ease thy brother of his heauines, which doth suppose that thou were angry with hym: Thou shalt not finde God mercifull vnto the, vnlesse thy neibboure finde the mercifull vnto hym. Thy gift shall obtaine no thanke ne fauoure at all before God, except thou beare perfect fauour & loue towardes thy brother.

And than come, & offer thy gifte.

Agree with thyne aduersarie quickely, whiles thou art in the way with hym, lest at any time the aduersary deliuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thee to the minister, and then thou be cast into prison. Verely I say vnto thee, thou shalt not come out thence, till thou haue payd the vtmoste farthing.

The texte.

Agree with thyne aduersarie. But perchance some may be founde so vntrust, that wrongfully of his owne accorde doeth drawe men into the lawe, ready to make ruffelmg and businesse vnlesse he haue his wil and play of them. And now they being bent of both sides, with burnyng hartes, they prepare their accusementes, they runne to the iudges. You would knowe of me: what shoulde I doe in this case? Shal I purchase myght by the lawe?

If thou wilt folowe my counsel, in the way as thou goest with thy aduersary, thou shalte spedely finishe and make an ende of the matter, ether with equal and indifferent conditions, or els with vnequal and vntrust conditions. Ende the matter with hym, the conditions beeyng neuer so vnmeete, yet thou shalte haue auauntage and gaine. There shall be some losse of money: but the thyng is conserued whiche is moste precyouse, that is peace and amytie. The quietnes and tranquilitie of the mynde is conserued, the whiche if thou haddest bought with all thy whole goodes, yet thou haddest payde but litle for it. Thou shouldest haue warted vpon the atturneys and the clerkes thou shouldeste haue runne busily vp and downe, thou muste haue sued for the fauour of the iudges. Thou shouldeste haue done and suffered many thinges vnsemely and vnmeete for thee. And where as nothyng is more precyous than time, consider howe muche there of thou shouldest haue spent and losse. Wherefore marke well what greate gayne and auauntage thou shalte haue, if thou fynishe thy suite spedely, seeyng the issue of the lawe is vncertayne. For he that hath the better matter hath not alway the higher hande, and there is daunger leste thy aduersary hauing the vpper hande, deliuer thee to the iudge, and the iudge deliuer thy to the common officer who shal leade the into prison, where if thou bee once layde, it is not nowe in thy power to vnpyshe the matter with thy aduersary, and so thou shalte purchase not onely affliction and punyshement of the body with shame, but also thou shalte not escape vntill thou hast payed the whole some euery farthyng whiche thy aduersary did demaunde, where as thou mightest haue compounded with hym for lesse, whan he was yet more gentel and lesse angrie. So in makyng of concorde and amitie, way not sowely nor extremely whiche is more in faulte. Let thys onely bee thy endeuour, yea though thou geue ouer parte of thy right, that concorde and amitie suffer no dammage.

Thou shalte not cum out thence, &c

Ye haue herde that it was sayde to them of the olde time, thou shalte not commit adultery. But I say vnto you: that whosoeuer looketh on an other mannes wyfe to lust after her, hath nowe committed aduoutry with her in his herte. And if thy ryghte eye hinder the, pluche it out and cast it from the. For better it is vnto the, that one of thy membres perysshe, than that thy whole body should be caste into hell. And if thy right hande hynder thee, cut it of and caste it from the. For better it is vnto the that one of thy membres perish, than that al thy body should be cast into hell.

The tertolutory.

Hytherto we haue treated of loue and hatred, of the whiche one is the roote of al euangelical godlynesse, the other is the pestilence and poyson of the same. But next vnto murther is aduoutry, and there is no loue more tender & streicht than the loue of matrimony. Let vs therefore treate of this matter also, what the law hath commaunded to your elders, and howe muche we doo adde thereunto. There was nothyng more sayde vnto them in the lawe, then: Thou shalt not commit aduoutry, if thou dooeste, thou shalt bee stoned of the people. Therfore hitherto among the Iewes he hath ben coūted holy and perfecte, who being content with his owne, hath abstayned from an other mans wyfe. But after the lawe of the ghospell, whiche I bryng, he dooeth not onely commit aduoutry whiche dooeth defyle another mannes wife, and embraceth her body with his, but also he whiche with vnchaste yes dooeth beholde an other mannes wyfe. For as he that is angrie with hys brother is nygh vnto murther, so he bendeth toward aduoutry, whose minde is now vnchaste, and whose yes be aduoutrous. The husband hath not to punish the for aduoutry, but God hath for to condemne thee for aduoutry, before whome he that hath willed, hath committed the offece. Therefore as it is in murther to bee angrie, so is it in aduoutry to luste: As it is there to say Racha or foole, so is it here to delighte the yes, and through the wantonnes of them, to intice the mynde of another mannes wife to vnclennes. But here a carnal man will say, no man can forbeare to lust and desire in his harte the thyng that he loueth. But who can loue an other mannes wife with his owne daunger, and with the iniurie of her husbande, whiche is so bent in his mynde not onely to forbeare to hurte or to harme hym, that is innocent, but also to requite pleasure for displeasure, to them whiche hath hurte hym? perchaunce he will say, I cannot shut myne yes. Yea it were better to pluck out thyne eye, than through it to take losse of godlynes. For there is no parte of the body that oughte to be so deare vnto man, but that it is better to cut it awaye, than by the occasion thereof to loose any of the vertues of the minde. So we muste make spede vnto the high perfection of the ghospel, that whatsoeuer dooeth let our iourney thitherwarde, we muste vtterly cast it away, bee it neuer so swete, be it neuer so wel beloued.

Thou shalte not commit aduoutry.

Whosoeuer looketh on an other mans wyfe, &c.

It

It is a great lucre and gaine to purchase the precious margarite of the euangelical charitie by the losse of any thyng whatsoeuer it be. Wherefore if thy right eye be a let vnto the in this behalfe, consider not how dere a thyng the eye is, but consider from what a more precyouse thyng it dooeth hynder thee: and without any delay dygge out thyne eye that hyndreth thee, and caste it awaye, and so make spede as thou dyddest begyn. Where the whole man is in daun ger of his life, it is beste to laue the reste of the whole body, by the losse of one parte thereof. Thou wilt say: I shall lyue hereafter, an one eyed manne. And what of that? Is it not rather to be wished to lyue with one eye, than to dye with both? There is no member more deare or more necessarie for many purposes, than the righte hande. Who can thys deny. And yet if it be a lette vnto him that maketh spede vnto the high perfection, wherof depedeth the helth & the saluacion of the whole man, cut of thy right hand that hindreth thee and cast awaye the burden that thou mayest make spede and expedicion thither as thou diddste purpose. In this peril and daungier, it is farre better to haue the losse of one membre, though it be very dere, than with the whole body to fall into the distruccion of hel fyer. If men alowe this politie, when there is none other daungier but of the bodye, howe muche more is this to be doone, when both the body and solle be in peril? But these thinges I haue spoken to teache you by a similitude. For I meane not this that any man shoulde cutte of any membre of hys body. For the nature of the membres is not yll, but the abuse of them is to be reproued, but I meane of the membres of the myndes: for the minde hath her noysome membres, and it is a godly thyng spedely to cut them of. If a membre of the body bee cut of, besyde the payne, this harme cummeth of it, that the parte once cutte of can neuer bee restored agayne. But when the noysome membres of the minde be cut of, as hatred, angre, fleshly lust ambicion, and auarice, the minde is not maymed, but made more perfect, by reason that the monstruouse and noysome partes be cut away. And after a short griefe of cutting of, sole weth a continual pleasure. I wil speake more playnly to thentent ye may vnderstande what I meane. Thaffeccions be the membres of the minde. There be some affeccions which of their owne nature leade vnto vngodlines, as yre, hatred, enuy, desire of other mennes gooddes. If any of these begin to spryng in the minde, furthwith it must be cutte vp, for so the yll that begynneth to spryng, shall bee the more easely and lasely taken away. Againe there be affeccions of themselfe not vtterely yll, but yet by occasion they withdraw sometime from that that is good, as the loue towarde oure countrey, thaffeccion to wife, chyldren, and parentes, or elles to kynsfolkes and frendes, the care for a good name. There is no cause why to cutte of these membres so long as they serue and make for the perfection of the gospell. For my doctrine is not against naturall affeccions, but dooeth restore nature to her puritie. But in case thaffeccion towarde thy parent, or wife or children, by occasion dooeth withdraw thee from the loue of the euangelicall godlynes, and plucketh thee to worldlines, cut of that noysome natural affeccion. Like as he that cutteth of noysome thoughtes cutteth not out the hart where they grow but only the naughty desyres: so he that nowe beholdeth an other mannes wife chastely, like as he looketh vpon his sister, or daughter, he hath well cast out hys noysome eye, and taken for it the eye of a doue, a cleane and a single eye. And he that was woonte to exercyse hys hande in robbyng of other, and nowe doeth labooure to helpe the nedines of other, he hath well cutte of hys rauening right hande: that in stede thereof he myght haue a beneficial and a liberall hande.

The texte. It was sayde: whosoeuer putteth awaye hys wyfe, lette hym geue her a letter of diuorcement. etc. But I say vnto you: that whosoeuer doeth put away hys wife, except it be for fornication, causeth her to bee an aduoutresse, and whosoeuer mareyeth her that is diuorced, committeth aduoutrye.

Nowe goe to and let vs shewe an other exaumple. The lawe of Moyses doeth suffre the husband if he bee offended with any faulte of his wyfe, to put her away after his owne deuise. so that he geue her a writing of diuorce, whereby she may bee mareyed to an other, and whereby her former husbande may not lawfully require her agayne, whome he hath cast of.

Wherefore that man hath satisfied the lawe, the whiche hath caste of hys wife for any cause. so that he hath geuen her a writyng of diuorcement: neyther shal he be taken as an aduouterer. no; no man shal note her as an aduoutresse. And though the law wisheth a desireth perpetuall amitie and concorde among married persones: yet not withstanding, the same lawe, knowing the hardnes of the heartes of the Iewes, suffered diuorce to be vsed, lest any worse thing myght chaunce, that no poysonyng no; murtheryng, should be committed and done. But I will haue Matrimony obserued more holily & vndefiledly among them that profesle the newe lawe. For whosoeuer leaueth hys wyfe, but for aduoutry, for than she is his wife no lenger, because she hath intermedled with an other man, he compelleth her and driueth her violently to aduoutry. For if she marrieth another (she marrieth not an husband, but an aduouterer. And whoso taketh her so cast of, into marryage, he taketh not a wyfe, but an aduoutresse. The lawe of Moses punysheth none of these, but the lawe of the ghospel doth condemne them. And yet this is not contrary to that. For the lawe of Moses hath geuen the husbandes libertie to diuorce, lest they should be more fierce and cruell to their wyues that they hated, and yet it restrayned this libertie by the booke of diuorce, both that they should not doe it priuely, a that they shoulde not require agayne, so often as they fantayled, the wyues whome they had cast of vnaduisedly. And the lawe durst not require more in matrimony because it durst not commaunde those thinges that we taught before. For a man indued with the mekenes of the Gospel, either will soone correcte and amende the maners of his wife, or elles he will pacientely beare the same: for whan wil he seke debate with his wife, whiche with his enemies is at peace? whan will he seke the distruccyon of hys wife, whiche is not angrie whan he is harmed: and when he is offended, he willeth no man yll: Or hope shall not he abyde hys wyfe, whyche is in dayly company with hym, whiche sufferth his enemy kyllyng hym? And if the purpose of the lawe bee thus, that Matrimony shoulde bee holye, and diuorces not commonlye graunted, we breake not the lawe, but helpe and susteyne it, whiche woulde haue no diuorce except in case of aduoutry, whiche is contrary to the nature of Matrymony. For Matrimony was made for thys intente that the woman once appointed to the husbande, shoulde bryng forth children to hym onely, and hym onely obey. Further shee nowe turneth awaye from her husbande, whiche hath hath geuen another man the vse of her body. Therefore emong Christiã spouses let there not be greuous displeasures and offences, neither let him nor her seke any diuorce or separacion for light displeasures, but the one muste be reconcyled vnto the other yf any thing chaunce through the weakenes of men.

Ye haue herde howe it was sayde to them of olde tyme: Thou shalte not forswcare thy selfe, but shalt perfourme vnto the lorde, those thynges that thou swearest: but I say vnto you. Swere not at all, neither by heauen, for it is goddes seate: nor by the earthe, for it is his footestole: nether by Hierusalem, for it is the cite of the greate kyng: nether shalte thou sweare by thy head, because thou canste not make one heare white or blacke. But your communicacion shalbe yea, yea, and nay, nay. Further whatsoeuer is aboue more than these, it commeth of euill. The texte.

Now ye shall heare another thing. Commaundement was geuen vnto youre elders none otherwyse, but if they had made an othe, they shoulde perfourme it, and not be forswone, for nowe they are bounde to god and not to man onely. Wherefore emong the Jewes, onely periurie is punishable. But he that deceiueth his neyghboure without any othe made, he is vnpunyshed: but yet the law of the gospel condemneth him, the which, that ye should be the more sure from periury, doeth vtterly condemne al maner of othes, that it is not lefful to sweare neither by god, nor by those thinges which seme to the common sorte to be thinges of lesse religion, that is, neither by heauen, because it is the seate of god, nor by the yearth because it is his footestole, nor by Hierusalem, because it is the cite of the great king, that is to say, of him which hath made al thinges. Neither as the Heathen sweare by the head of another man, wherof thou hast no authorite, but it is consecrate to God whiche hathe made all thinges as he wouldе, for thou canste not make one blacke heare whyte, nor one white heare blacke. And because all thinges be consecrate to God the maker, thou oughtest to be fearefull to sweare by any thing. And what needeth any othe emong them, where no man, because of their symplicitie can distruste, nor no man can desire to deceiue though they might doe it freely, such is their sincerite and perfectenes, specyelly in those thynges, of the whiche they declare themselues to bee despisers. Therefore among you, playne and simple speche oughte to be more holy and more sure, than the deuoute and solempne othe emong the Jewes. For emong you, whose hartes and lippes ought to agree, there is no other vse of speche, but: o expresse youre mindes eche to other. In your bargaynes ye nede none othe, ye nede no execracion or curlung, or suche like to binde the promiser, or to assure him to whome the promise is made. Two wordes be sufficient: Nay, and yea, whereby thou denyest that whiche thou doest not promise, and whereby thou doeste perfourme that whiche thou diddest promise by playn worde, that thou wouldest doe. For there is no man lesse bounde with his simple and bare worde, than the Jewe sweating by all holy thinges: and he whome thou makest thy promise vnto, doth trust thee as wel as if thou haddest made a solemne othe. Yf there be any moe besides these, it must nedes come of euil and sinne. For he that sweareth, eyther he thynketh yll of hym to whome he sweareth, or els he that requireth the othe dothe dystruste. But none of these ought to be in you, whome I would haue perfect in all poynres. Therefore when I vtterly forbid sweating, I doe not abolish the lawe, whiche doeth prohibite periurie, but I make the lawe more full, and I withdrawe men farther from that, that the lawe doeth punishe.

The texte. Ye haue heard how that it was sayd: eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. But I say vnto you: Resist not against euil. But whosoeuer geueth the a blowe on the right cheke, turne to hym the other also. And if a man will sue thee at the lawe and take away thy coate let hym haue thy cloke also. And if any compell thee to goe a mile, goe with him twaine. Geue to hym that asketh thee, and turne not from hym that is desirous to borowe.

Ye haue heard what the law hath graunted vnto our forefathers in reuenging of wrong doinges. It sayeth, eye for eye, and tooth for tooth. For it knew that the mindes were full of reuenging. Therefore hytherto it hath bridled the desire of reuenging, that the faulte myghte bee recompensed with the like punishment after the deuice and discrecion of Iudges: and he that had put out an other mannes eye, shoulde loose an eye, and he that had stricken out another mannes tooth, should be punished with the losse of a tooth. For if the reuenging of the iniurie had ben left to the mynde of him that was hurte, oftentimes he shoulde haue chaunced to haue loste his life for stryking out of a tooth. Therefore the intent of the law was, that vengeaunce should not goe to farre. And I doe not abolyshe this lawe, but establishe it. For my doctrine is, that ye shall in no case reuenge iniuries, be they neuer so fore, that ye shall not geue taunt for taunt, nor hurte for hurte, nor wrong for wrong: yea if a man geue you a blowe vpon the cheke, whiche is counted commonly an vntollerable rebuke, ye shall not requyte it with a blowe, but rather offer the other cheke to be beaten to, and desire rather to suffer a double displeasure, than to requite the lyke. And if any man will goe to lawe with thee, to take away thy coate, stryue not with hym, but rather euen of thy selfe geue hym thy gowne to. Agayne, if any froward person will force thee to goe with him the space of a myle, walke with hym two myles, rather then to fall at contencion with hym. By this gentilenes and sufferaunce it shal come to passe, that he which is redy to hurte, shall not be further prouoked, and that thou shalt the soner be deliuered from griefe, than if one cruell shoulde spring of another, and a great thing made of a smal, and many matters of one: And further thou shouldest not be disquieted in thy minde, and perchaunce through thy gentilnes, of an enemye thou shouldest make thee a frende. It is a great matter that ye do enterprise. Ye must apply your whole study to these things, and litle regarde those trifling thinges, in getting, and increasing, or in auoyding of the whiche, other men doe bestowe their whole life, vnto whome it chanceth oftentimes that whiles they hunte for these thinges, they lese the heauenly goodes: And yet they liue not pleasantly here, for they heape vp griefes vpon griefes vnto themselues, intangling themselues with sundry strieles and hatreds. Through the despising of these thinges, whiche, when you haue them, make you not godly, and whan you haue them not, they make you not vngodly, you shall bothe auoide hatred, and also obteyne you loue and good will, and cause youre doctrine to be of more authoritie and better beleued. Therefore if any man doeth moleste thee for a garmente or a vessel, or for any other like thing, wherof he is gredy, and would fayne haue it from thee, rather than he shoulde goe about to doe the a displeasure other wayes, graunt him his requeste, and so thou shalte bynde him vnto thee through thy good turne, & deliuer thy selfe from molestacion & griefe. Agayne if any man requireth to borow money of thee, let it not greue the to geue it him, yea though it be so that nothing of it shal returne vn-

to thee agayn, neither of the vsurie, nor of the stocke it selfe: for he that lendeth money to vsurie doth rather hunt for other mennes, than geue his owne. And why shoulde it greue the to lende hym though thou shouldeste neuer haue it againe, vnto whome thou oughteste to geue freely where thou haddeste plentie and he lacked? So thyough your example men shall learne vttrerly to neglect these thinges, for whose sake they suffer and doe al thinges.

The texte.

¶ Ye haue hearde how it was sayde: Thou shalte loue thy neighbour and hate thine enemie. But I say vnto you: loue your enemies. Blesse them that curse you. Doo good to them that hate you, pray for them which hurte you, and persecute you, that ye may be the children of your father: whiche is in heauen: for he maketh his sunne to arise on the euill and on the good, and sendeth rayne on the iust, and on the vniust. For yf ye loue them which loue you, what rewarde haue ye? Doe not the Publycans euen the same? And if ye make much of your brethren onely, what great thing doe ye? Doe not also the Publicanes like wise? Ye shall therefore be perfect, euen as your father which is in heauen is perfecte.

But I saye vnto you.

Do good to them that hate you.

Nowe herken you to that commaundement which he is counted chiefe in the law. Thou shalte loue thy neighbour a hate thyne enemie. It requireth good will towarde well willers, and them that haue deserued well, but it suffereth to wil them yll that doe hurt vs. Considre how I doe not hinder this precept, but how I adde vnto it. For I am not content with mutuall benevolence emong frendes, but this I require of you that be the folowers of my doctrine, that ye loue your enemies, and that ye do not only not hate them that hate you, but prouoke the with good turnes to loue you. And if they be so farre out of frame that they will not vse your good turne, but continually trouble you and prouoke you with yll sayinges and yll doinges, yet see that ye in the middeste of your troubles, turne not your good minde from them, but pray vnto god for them that they may chaunge their mindes and repente. Yf ye vse thys gentiles towardes all men both good and euill, ye shall declare your selues to be kindely children of the heauenly father, who destroyng all men to be saued, suffereth his sunne indifferently to shyne vpon them that worshyp him, and vpon them that despise him, and he suffereth his rayne to profit both the iust and the vniust, prouoking the yll thyough his benefit to repent, and styrring the good to rendre thankes. The likenes of maners shal bring you to the heauenly father, and men will beleue that your doctrine cummeth from hym, if they despise in you his notable goodnes. For yf ye loue them that loue you, if ye doe them that doe for you, yf ye wil wel to them whiche beare you good will, what haue ye raped blame: but ye haue not deserued prayse. Not to requyte one good turne for another, is counted a detestable vnkindenes euen emong the heathen and the Publicanes, whose fashion is euil spoken of, euen of the common sorte. To loue him that loueth thee, doeth pertcine vnto nature, and not vnto the vertue of the ghospel. And if ye shewe your selues curteyse and gentle in spechc towarde your kinsfolkes, or countrey men onely, and disdayne to salute others, as though they were straungers, what great thing doe ye? Doth not the heathen men the same? These be common thinges which doe not shew men to be good, but that they bee men onely. And thale thinges cannot seme excellent, whiche doe chaunce also vnto yll men. Wherfore, I wolde that ye would be perfect and resemble your heauenly father with woonderful lighte of goodnes, who being omnipotent, yet of his goodnes doeth good to al men, loking for: rewarde of no man. He is meke and gentle towardes all men and yet he is hable if he will, out of hande to punisshe all men.

¶ The. vi. Chapter.

The texte

¶ Take hede that ye geue not almes in the sight of men, to the intent that ye wolde be seene of them: or els ye haue no rewarde with your father which is in heauen. Therfore whē thou geuest gyftes almes, let not trumpetes blow before thee, as Hipocrites doe in the Synagoges and in the stretes, for to be praysed of mē. Verely I saye vnto you: they haue receyued their rewarde. But when thou wilte geue almes, let not thy lefte hande knowe what thy right hande doeth, that thyne almes may be in secrete, and thy father whiche seeth them in secrete, shall rewarde thee openly.

Haue declared vnto you in what thynges ye ought to passe and excel the righteousnes of the Scribes and the Pharisees, yf ye will bee my disciples. Nowe shall I shewe you what ought to be auoyded in those thynges whiche seme common, and belonging vnto you bothe. For: there is a certayne priuate poyson, whiche doeth infecte all the good dedes of the Pharisees, that they deserue vtterly no prayse of God. It is an holy thyng to releue the nedy. It is a godly thing to talke with god by prayer. Fasting is a deuout thing: And the pharisees thorough the setting forth & bosting of these thinges, doe clayme & obteyne an opinion of high holynes before men, whereas they displease god, who doth beholde, not ỹ outward face, but the inward harte. And they doe worthely displease him, because their hart is foully infected with vaineglory. They hunt for vaine prayse of ỹ people rather than for a good conscience before god, and whyleste they catche after a vayne rewarde here, they be disapoynted of that, whiche onely ought to be desired. This poyson creping in by secrete undermining, lyeth in waite priuely also for: them, whiche be sumwhat entred in the rase of vertue. Wherfore I wil in this behalfe, that ye be ware and circumspect, that when ye goe about to doe any godly worke, ye desire not rather to doe it openly, than in secrete, to thintent ye might be sene of men, and so hūt after prayse and glory of men. Ye ought alwayes to do wel, whether men se you or se you not. For: god doth euer beholde you, of whome you loke for: reward. But if ye go about to get ỹ prayse of man for: your good dedes, ye lese the rewarde of your heauēly father. Your good worke must not alwayes be kept priuie, but ye muste not play your pageaunt in the sight of men, like as players in the stage doe play their playe, whose desire is nothing els, but to please the eyes and the eares of the people. But he can not alwayes folow the bride, whiche dooeth apply hymselfe to the iudgement of the common sorte: For: ye must please men in suche sorte, that ye may allure the to your maners and fashions, and not you to goe out of kinde and fal to them. Though prayse be fled and shunned, yet it foloweth vertue of her owne accorde. And that sikerly is true prayse, whiche doeth chaunce without ambitiouse seking for:. And the whole glory that tyeth of wel doing, must be wholly geuen to god. Ye shall displease him as sone as ye stande in your own conceite and please your selues, chalenging vnto your selues that which is wholly of his bounteousnes.

Take hede that ye geue not almes in ỹ sight. &c.

Therfor

Therefore whosoeuer thou arte that wil folow the lawe of the ghospell, when thou entendest through thy liberalitie, to releue the nedines of the poore: do not as Hypocrites be wont to doe, whiche be men lyke players counterfeted & disguised, whiche when they appeare liberall and mercifull, in harte they be both couetous and cruel. For the misery of their neighbours moueth them nothing, but being destrous of glory & renoume, they bye with a litle money, the praise of the people, and would geue vtterly nothing if they wer alone, and saw their brother welnere dead for hunger. Therefore as oft as they geue any thing to the poore, they seke not to be secrete & alone, but they come abrode in the streetes and where as men resorte. And like as players shoulde play their pageaule, they call furth a numbre of the people with the sounde of the trumpe to toote and to gase, both casting the poore and miserable in the teeth with their mistrye, and hunting for themselues a vayne and a folish prayse of men. Wyll ye heare what they gayne? Let the people prayse them neuer so much, they haue lost their reward of their good dede at goddes hande, whiche doeth measure the godly worke of the sincere affection of the minde. He that geueth for prayse & glory, he selleth his good turne, he geueth it not. Truely thou must be so far from the affection of these men, that when thou geuest any almes, thy lefte hande must not know what thy righthande doeth, and thou must not desyre to be loked vpon of man. yea and if it wer possible, thou thy selfe shouldest not know that whiche thou doest aright, and shouldest forget thyne owne dede, and not impute it to any man, that thou hast done wel, nor stande not in thine owne conceite, because thou hast geuen thyne almes, but only reioyce inward: for thy life, that the poore and nedy is refreshed. Yet what if men knowe not, yea what if he that is succoured knoweth not hym that succoureth hym? It is ynoughe for thee to haue a witnes of the father, from whose eyes nothing can be hid. He wil rewarde thee although thou haue no thanke at all of man.

Let not trest pets blowes before thee

And thy father which seeth in secrete.

The texte.

And when thou prayest thou shalte not be as Hypocrites are. For they vse to stande prayng in the synagoges, and in the corners of the streetes, that they may be seene of men. Verely I saye vnto you: they haue their rewarde. But when thou prayest, entre into thy chembre, and when thou hast shut thy doore, pray to thy father, which is in secrete: And thy father which seeth in secrete, shall rewarde the openly.

They haue their rewarde.

Semblablie when ye make your prayers to god, doe not folow the guise and vsage of Hypocrites, whose special delite is to stande in company of men, and in the corners of the streetes, so often as they pray, for none other entet but to be sene of men, at whose handes they hunt and loke for the prayse of deuout and holy conuersacion. Let them please themselfe and others also with suche glorious prayers. This I assure you, nowe they haue their rewarde, whiche they loked for. And what is more vayne then thys rewarde and for a counterfeit and a false glory they frustrate & set theselues beside that blessed rewarde, which god would haue geuen, if they had offred in his sight, the pure and sincere oblacion of their prayers. Doe thou therefore contrary wise. When thou prayest, forsake the multitude, enter into thy secrete chamber, & shut the doores, and in secrete vtter thy sincere prayers before thy father. It is ynough that he doeth beholde & see thy godlines, from whome nothing can be hid. He wil render vnto thee þ euerlasting rewarde. These thinges haue I set furth, to teache you by playne and homely exaumples. For it is not yll to geue almes sumtime before men, or to pray in a multitude, and where as men resort, but than knoweth not the left hand what the right hande doth, when the worke of charitie is not defiled with any affection of worldly vanitie. Then thou art secrete in thy chaumbre. When thou speakest vnto god with such perfecte clerenes of minde, as though no man did beholde thee. He that prayeth in a multitude of menne as earnestely, yea peraduenture more vehemently than if he were alone, he prayeth in his secrete chaumbre. For the ryghte hande and the lefte, or the secrete chambre, standeth not in the thynges, but in the affections and desyres of the harte.

The texte. But when ye pray, bable not muche as the heathen doe. for they thinke it will come to passe that they shalbe hearde for their muche babblynges sake. Be not ye therefore lyke vnto them. For your father knoweth what thinges ye haue nede of, before ye aske of him.

This also must be considered in prayer. That the affection and the harty desyre that moueth god, not the noyse of the lippes. And it skilleth not how long and how loude the prayer be, but howe feruent and syncere the affection and desires. Wherfore let the example of the heathē men, be farre from you, which do recite and say long prayers, and ful of many wordes, redy framed, and prescribed vnto them, as who woulde say, they shoulde obteine nothyng excepte they wered God with bablyng of many woordes, repeting one thyng oftentimes, and prescribing and appoynting with recitall of many wordes, what, when and howe they woulde haue the thyng performed, whiche they pray for. And yet oftentimes they pray for thynges noysome and hurtefull. We ought to aske of God the best thinges, and not all thynges: and we ought to pray often, rather than much, and vehemently rather than long: finally with the harte rather then with voyce: Neyther alwayes with prescryped and purposed wordes after the custome of the heathen, but so much as the feruencie of the minde, and rauishment towards god, doeth styre and prouoke.

Truely your father loueth to be called vpon, but not to be taught with long prayer what your necessitie doeth require, but to be prouoked through youre goodnes to geue the thing, whiche the slothfull and sluggishe deserueth not to haue: for he knoweth what your necessitie doeth require, yea before that he be called vpon.

The texte. After this maner therfore pray ye. Our father whiche arte in heauen, halowed be thy name. Thy kyngdome come, thy will be done in yearth as it is in heauen. Geue vs this day oure dayly bread. And forgeue vs our trespasses as we forgeue them that trespasse against vs. And leade vs not into temptacion, but deliuer vs from euill. For thine is the kyngdome, and the power, and the glory for euer. Amen.

Therefore be ye vnlike to the heathen men, bothe in life and also in maner of prayng. And if ye will haue a fourme and maner of the euangelycall prayer prescryped and set forthe vnto you, thys is the worthy prayer, wherewith the true and naturall children ioyned with brotherly charitie, may speake vnto the heauenly father: father vnto all men indifferently: of whome although ye haue all thynges, yet those chiefely oughte to be requyred whiche make for the attaynemente of the euerlastyng lyfe. For all the other thynges he will caste vnto you, euen of hys owne accorde, as an encrease and aduauntage, according to the desires of his children, as he is a most bounteful father.

Whose glory ye ought to regarde aboue al thinges, to whome al glory is due in heauen and in yearth. To pertayne vnto his kyngdome is to conquere the tyranny of the diuell. To be subiecte vnto hys will is to rule and regne. Of whose free liberalitie it cummeth, whatsoeuer doeth norishe and reuiue mens hartes to the perfection of the ghospell.

But he will not heare you vnlesse ye accorde and agree in one: and concorde and agreement cannot lightly be, vnles ye forgeue eche others offences, without whiche men do not liue in this worlde, although they endeuour towarde thattrayning of perfection. And through this concorde ye shal be safe by the ayde of your father agaynste the frowarde temptoure, yf ye watche well, and busily call for the helpe of your good father against that naughty one.

For herfore in vaine calleth he vpon the father with this fourme of prayer that I teache, whiche is not of thys sorte, whiche neither feareth, nor loueth God, which loueth to himselfe, which foloweth hys owne glory more than goddes, whiche gapeth for worldely goodes and authoryte, whiche had rather haue thinges pleasaunte to his owne appetite, than thinges pleasaunte vnto God, whiche sueth after earthely thinges more than heauenly, whiche setteth lesse by the qualities of the minde, than bodely commodities, whiche is at varyaunce with his brother, whiche through pryde and displeasures vseth hymselfe sluggishe against the assaultes of the deuil. And the maner of prayer is after this sorte. Our father whiche haste regenerate vs to heauen, who were once vnluckely borne of Adā, & prepared for vs (forsaking earthely thinges) a kingdom & inheritaunce euerlasting, which art sayd to be in heauen because thou doest replenish all, & hast no manner of drosse or earthly infirmitie: graūt that thy name may be honourable and gloryouse emong menne through vs, which by thy benefite, be perfect and pure. For it is not our glory but thy gift, whatsoeuer is well done of vs. Let the tyranny of Satan be abolished, that thy kyngdome dayly may prouaple more and more, whiche dooeth not stande in riches or worldely strength, but in mildenes, chastitie, softenes, sufferance fayth, and charitie: that vices and yll desires once chased away, thy heauenly vertues may florysh, and shewe themselues emongest men, and that it may come to passe at lengthe, that lyke as in heauen all thynges bee peceable and quiet, and all creatures there doe obey most humbly thy commaundementes: so lykewise there be none in yearth whiche be not obedyent to thy most holy will, euery man as farre furth as the weakenes of nature doth suffer, diligently recording now that which shal come to passe perfectly in the life to come. O father nourish that thou hast brought furth, see vnto vs, that the bread of thy heauenly doctrine doe not fayle vs, that we may bee dayly stayed, growe vp, and made lustie by the taking therof, to the obseruacion and keeping of thy commaundementes. And alienate not thy minde away from vs being offended with our trespasses, but for thy clemencie and mekenes pardon our offences, whiche we commit through infirmitie and weakenes, that we may haue peace with thee, like as we emong our selues forgeuing eche other, if one hath offended an other, conserue mutuall concorde and amitie.

Thou being merciful, we feare nothing, and being vnderset with concorde, we be made stronger against our common enemy. Vnto whome we beseche thee (if it be possible) deliuer vs not to be tempted. For we know his malice, we know his frowardnes and craftines. And if thou suffer vs to fall into temptacion, to thintent to trie the constancie of our mynde, o thou merciful father, deliuer vs from that naughtie ciuil. Vouchesafe of thy goodnes, to graunt & make sure these our desires. See therfore how many thinges this short prayer doeth comprise, that nedes he must be perfect whosoeuer doeth rightly pronounce this prayer, that is, who so doeth pronounce it with mouth that the hart and affection agree vnto the same. First it reacheth you to depend wholly vpo none other but the heauenly father, to whom ye owe that ye be made, to whom ye owe that ye be redemed from sinne, to whome ye owe whatsoeuer vertues ye haue. He is called father, that ye may vnderstande he is full of mercye and bountefulnesse: he is sayde to dwel in heauen, that ye shoulde lift vp your hartes thither, despising yearthly goodes. Ye call him youres, that no man should beleue any thing proper vnto himselfe, seeyng that whatsoeuer they haue commeth vnto all men of his onely liberalitie. And in this behalfe there is an equalitie of kinges and seruauntes. Ye wishe onely his glory, that no man in the earth attribe vnto himselfe, prayse of any thing, whereof ariseth insolency and stoutnes of minde. Ye wishe that he should reigne, that he should be obeyed and not you. For the vertues be his which doe worke by you. For his doctrine whiche ye shall deliuer vnto men from me. And it is not ynough to persist and abide in hys vertues, but ye must dayly encrease and goe forwarde in goodnes, and for this ye aske of hym, that woundrefull bread which he will is that it shoulde be dayly asked, because he doeth daily geue it, and he willeth it to be asked of him, to put you in remembraunce that all good thinges come from him. Finally that ye shoulde bee the more ware to fall from the charitie of so bountefull a father, he dooeth monyshe you of that frowarde Sathan, whiche neuer ceaseth to lye in watche for the godly, to plucke them backe into hys tyranny.

The texte. Therefore if ye forgeue men their trespasses, your heauenly father will forgeue you. But if ye will not forgeue men their trespasses, neither will your father forgeue you your trespasses.

Wherefore, before ye speake vnto your father with this prayer, consider with your selues, whether ye desire truely the thing that ye aske, and whether ye be mete persones to be hearde of youre father in suche thinges as ye pray for. But chiefly this ye must duely searche with your selues, whether ye haue amitie and concorde with your neyghboures. Euen suche a father shall ye fynde hym towardes you, as your neighboure findeth you towardes hym. He wyll not knowe hym for hys sonne, whiche doeth not agree with his brother. If ye forgeue them that offende you, your heauenly father wyll forgeue all that ye trespasse against hym. But yf ye will be harde and sore against other menne, your father will not forgeue you youre offences. Wilte thou not forgeue thy fellowseruaunt, whome on thy behalfe at one tyme or at other thou hast offended again, and requirest thou of God forgeuenes of thy trespasse, whome thou arte hable by no meanes to recompence with forgeuyng agayne hys offence made to thee?

The texte, Further, when ye fast, bee not sorye as hypocrites bee. For they disfigure their faces, that it may appere vnto men that they fast. Verely I say vnto you, they haue their reward. But when thou doeste fast, anoynte thyne head, and washe thy face, that it appere not vnto men, that thou doest fast but vnto thy father, who is in secrete: and thy father that seeth thee in secrete, shall rewarde thee openly.

Nowe ye perceiue what difference ought to be betwene your almesse and the almesse of the pharisies, and betwene your prayers & their prayers. Now harken what difference ought to be betwene youre fastes and theyrs, if ye will haue them acceptable to the father, and profitable to your selues. It is not the forbearing of the meate that commendeth fastyng vnto god, but the pure and cleane affection of the minde, feruently desiring to please god onely.

wherefore as often as godlynes shal prouoke you to fast, folow not certeine menne whiche be not fasters, but counterfeters of fasting, setting foo the the colour and cloke of fasting with a sower countenaunce, not intending that in dede, wherefore fasting shoulde be vsed, that is to say, either to pacyfie god, or to chastice the body, whereby the minde might be the more free and redy to apply and ensue holy thinges: but by this coulour they hunt for vaine prayse of men, for whose sake despising god, they play this pagent. For to this purpose they disfigure theyr faces with palenes and sowernes, that by the behauiour of theyr body, menne may see that they doe fast. This is certayne: There is no cause why they should looke after any rewarde of God for these good dedes: For now they haue theyr rewarde: attayning that which they hunted for with theyr fasting. But so often as thou doest fast, appeare rather not to faste, and appeare to be merry, annointing thy head and washing thy face, lest men perceiue that thou doest fast. And thinke not that fast to be vnprofitable, whiche is hid from men. It suffiseth to thee, that thy father seeth it, from whome nothing is hid. And he that seeth in secrete, in the stede of vaine prayse of me, wil rewarde thee with the perfect rewarde. Againe, I say not this that it should be wicked that men shoulde know of thy fasting, but that thy minde shoulde abhorre from the desire of vayne prayse. Than no man seeth thy fasting, when thou doest fast not to thintent to be seene of any man. Than onely god doth see thy fasting, when thou dost fast with this entent, that thou wouldest as gladly fast though no man should see thee when thou doest faste.

¶ Lay not vp for your selues treasures vpon yearthe, where the rust and mothe doeth corrupte, and where theues breake through and steale. But lay vp youre treasures in heauen, where neither rust nor mothe doeth corrupte, and where theues doe not breake through nor steale. For where your treasure is, there wil your hearte be also. The texte

The common sorte of men not considering these thinges, whiles they hunt for smal and visible rewardes of men, be disapointed of the inuisible and true rewarde, which for wel doing God doeth geue aboundauntly. In like wise be they whiche with much thought and care, doe gather together and heape vp riches, and hide them in the ground for losing, albeit this is euen to lose them in dede. He that dealeth and bestoweth his riches rightly, it is he that layeth them vp surely. For that that thou hidest in the grounde, is not profitable vnto thee, but is in daungier of mothes, rust, & theues. So that thou hast nothing of them, but a miserable carefulnes to get them & to kepe them. These thinges must be gotten neither carefully nor vnmeasurably. And when they be gotten or come by chaunce, they must be redily distributed if any haue nede, or els so bestowed, that necessitie of nature may be holpen, and not your mayntayned, nor any disease of the minde be serued and satisfied. And yet all menne for the moste parte vnto this thing apply theyr whole studie and care, as though poouertie made men miserable, and ryches indued them with felicitie. And whyles they folow after these false goodes, which will shortely forsake theyr maisters, they forsake the eternall goodes, whiche indue them with true felicitie, and can not be taken away. But ye of the other side, hasting with all endeuour to the best and most perfect thynges, whereby ye shall be riche in dede, lay vp your treasures in heauen, the keping of the whiche, can not trouble you with cumberous carefulnes.

For

For neyther ruste nor mothe dooeth destroy suche maner of riches, nor theues dooeth not digge it vp nor steale it, of whiche chaunces, worldely goodes be in daunger. If ye lay vp these goodes with your father, he will kepe them safely for you, and your minde shall not sticke groueling on the grounde beeyng oppressed with these filthy cares, but it shall despise these vile and fading thynges, and be rauished vp vnto heauenly thynges, for where as a mannes treasoure is, which he loueth entierely, there is his harte also. Therfore they haue no hope nor heauenly thought, which hath gathered riches and hid the in the grounde. They walke and wander hither and thither, but their harte is in the hole where the money is hid. And if the minde be corrupt, either by the disease of payne feare or auarice, whatsoeuer is done, must nedes be vnpouse.

The texte. The light of the body is the eye. Wherefore if thine eye be single, all thy body shal be full of light. But if thine eye be naught, all thy body shal be full of darkenes. Wherefore if the light that is in thee be darkenes, how great is the darkenes?

For first it is to be considered, what is chiefely to be desired, and whereby we may obteine that which we doe aske: furthermore as the candel is in the house as the eye is in the body, so is the minde in man. If the light of the minde bee not faultie through the darkenes of false opinions, and yll desires, if the eye of the minde dooeth looke none other way, than to the true marke, whatsoeuer is done throughout all the life is acceptable vnto God, and euery thyng helpeth towardes the heape of felicitie. Like as if there be a great candel in the house, there is no stumbling nor falling: so if thine eye be cleare and whole, it geueth sighte to all the membres, and no parte stumbleth or wandreth, the eye being the capeaine and guide. Againe if the eye of the body be faultie, no membre dooeth his duetie well. For there is no right iudgement whan that parte of oures is faultie by ꝑ which only we do iudge. Therfore if that part of thee which is geuen thee for light, be turned into darkenes, how great shal the darkenes of the other partes be, whiche haue no lighte of themselues? If reason be blynded with desires, and iudgeth that to be good which is miserable, & iudgeth that chiefely to bee despised, which is to be despised or not to be regarded, into what darkenes shal men be drawen through ambition, filthy lust, auarice, foolishenes, angre, enuy, hatred, and other perturbations and troubles of the minde, whiche of they owne nature be full of darkenes? Therefore let youre eye bee cleane and sincere, that it may beholde the beste, and let it beholde and looke vpon the best thinges, either onely or chiefely.

No manne can serue two maisters. For either he shall hate the one and loue the other, or els leane to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serue god and mammon. Therefore I The texte. saye vnto you, bee not careful for your life, what ye shall eate or drinke, nor yet for your body what garmente ye shall put on. Is not the life more worth than meate? and the body more worth than rayment? Beholde the fowles of the aier, for they sowe not, nor reape nor cary into the barnes: and your heauenly father feedeth them. Are ye not muche better than they?

Thinke not those men wordy to bee hearde, whiche deuide themselues betwene God and men, betwene the earthe and heauen, and so folowe things eternal, that they wil not despise thinges temporall. For they doe nothing els, but where as they would catche bothe, they obteine neyther of bothe. This heauenly Philosophie like as it doeth promise great rewardes: so it doeth require the whole man.

And

And emong men a man shal not find two of such gētil cōditions ꝑ one seruaūt can be hable to please both. So it cūmeth to passe, that thone must be forsaken or els neither can be satisfied. And if the maisters be of contrary appetites and do square within thēselues by some grēuous debate, it must nedes be that the seruaunt if he wil please the one, must not onely forsake thother, but also sticke vnto the one, & hate the other, whome he hath forsaken. And if he wil go from this agayne vnto thother, he must nedes translate and tourne his loue and seruice vnto him onely, and dispise thother whome he hath forsaken. And who be so contrary one to an other, as God and Mammon? how can one serue two, whan they commaunde so diuers thinges? God commaundeth thee to geue of that thou hast to the neady. Mammon cōmaundeth the to take away other mens by right and by wrong. God commaundeth the to prouide for thy brother which is in danger. Mammon cōmaūdeth the to liue to thyselfe. God commaundeth sobrenes, Mammon teacheth excesse and ryot. Wherefore ye flatter your selues in vayne, if ye beleue that that thing may be doone, whiche is impossible, that is, to serue both God and Mammon. His seruaūt is ether man to whome he is wholly geuen. Ye see howe riches doue possesse them full and whole, which do trauaile for it with so great tumult & busines, which defende them and kepe them with so great carefulnes, whiche for goe the with so great griefe: for these they suffer all thinges, for these they doue all thinges. Whoso hath bound himselfe to this seruice, can not be the seruaūt of god: the requireth the whole manne and cannot abide the felowshyp of so fowle and filthy a maister, nor can not abide a dumy seruant, which is partaker with his aduersary. But the common sorte of ryche men are wont to excuse the sore of auarice, by the pretence of mans necessitie. They lay by these thynges men prouyde for against hunger and nakednes. So speake they which doe not depend wholy of god, but put their trust in their owne defence and ayde. My wil is ye should be voide from this carefulnes, lest it withdrawe you from the desire of better thinges. The necessitie of nature is content with very litle, & euery where it is to be had, that may suffice for such, as I wil my seruantes to be. For either the liberalitie of good menne alwaies ready shal suffice, or elles diligence and labour shall prouyde that thyng whiche may ease necessitie. Fynally yf none of these helpe, the father wil not forsake those that be his: for he that geueth the greater thynges, will caste the smaller thynges to them, whiche with all they hartes desyre after heauenly thinges, although they be not carefull for the worlde. Therefore lay not vp nor hoorde not for a long tyme, bee not vered with carefulnes of meate without whiche ye cannot liue, neyther with carefulnes of apparell that coureth youre body, and kepeth you from colde. Is not the lyfe more precyous than meate? Is not the body more precyous than the garment? He that hath geuen these better thynges, and hath geuen them to suche as were not careful, shall it greue him to nourishe and preserue that which he hath geuen with these thinges of lesse valewe and estimation? If ye desire an exaumple, looke vpon other lyuyng thynges, whiche the maker of all thinges hath made for youre sake. Hath he not prouyded a lyuyng for al thinges that he hath made? Consider the birdes of the aier: they sow not, they reape not, they lay not vp in barnes, carefull for tyme to come, they liue from day to day without all carefulnes: whatsoeuer they get, they take it ioyfully, & yet the heauenly father geueth meate vnto them all. And wil he dispoynte

Ye can not serue God and mām.

What ye shall eate or drinke, &c.

poynte you whome he estemeth farre abour the bydes And if he be carefull ouer you, as he is in dede is not your carefulnes in vayne: If he forsake you, what shall youre carefulnes p̄uayle: As he hath genen a body after his owne deuise, so will he geue a liuing after his owne deuise.

The texte. Which of you be carefull thoughte, can adde one cubite vnto his stature? And why care ye for rayment? Consyder the lilies of the feelde howe they growe. They labour not, they spinne not. And yet I say vnto you: Yo not Salomon in all his royaltie was apparayled lyke one of these. Wherefore yf god so apparayleth the grasse of the feelde which standeth this day, to morowe is cast into the furnace, shall he not much more doe the same for you, o ye of litle faythe?

Marke how p̄fitable ye carefulnes of the minde is about such thinges. What auayleth it there be neuer so carefull, that can adde one cubite to the stature of his bodye? But euery mannes body though he thynke nothyng vpon it groweth with certayne increase vnto a quantitie appoynted of god. If thou cast away all care, thy body shal be nothing the better. If thou be vexed with care thy body shall bee nothyng the bygger. Therefore he that maketh the body bigge and strong without thy carefulnesse he will p̄ouyde liuyng for ther without thy carefulnes, who doeth withdraw ther from care of those thinges whiche be not gotten without our diligence. It is great folishnes therfore to feare leste ye should lacke foode, for as much as ye see that birdes be p̄ouided for sufficiently. And now leste ye should be careful for p̄uision of apparel for the body, consider the lilies whiche doe spring and growe in the feelde without the care of any man. They labour not, nor spinne not, and who doeth p̄uyde them of apparell, as semeth good to hym, who but the heauenly father?

Yo not Salomon in all his royaltie &c. And he doeth so p̄ouide, that neyther Salomon the notable vyche & gay king was euer so apparelled, whan he chiefely did set foorth the glory of his riches, as one of these poore lilies, smally regarded and set by, which growe not onely in gardens, wher man bestoweth some labour and diligence, but growe also in medowes of their own accorde. For the labour & care of mā can make nothing so elegant and fit as the p̄uydence of nature. And if the heauenly father doth garnish and clothe so freshely the vile grasse, which shortely shall perishe and to day is fresshe in the feelde, and to morowe cut downe, and dryed and caste into the furnes: why haue ye so litle trust in him, sith he hath geuē you thinges of greater excellencie, and sith he hath made you to be immortal, and sith also he hath specially prepared you for the glory of hys name, that ye will thinke that ye shall lacke apparell, which ye ought to seke for and prepare, not for adourning and gaynesse, but for necessitie and nedefulnes.

The texte. Therefore take no thought, saying: what shall we eate, or what shal we drinke, or wherwith shal we be clothed? After all these thinges the Gentiles seke. For your heauenly father knoweth that ye haue nede of all these thinges. But rather seke first the kingdome of God and the righteousnes therof, and all these thinges shalbe cast vnto you. Be ye not careful therfore for to morowe, for to morowe shall care for it self. Sufficient is vnto the day, his owne trauayle.

Therefore ye that haue god to your father so benignely p̄ouiding for the birdes, p̄ouiding for floures and grasse, of the whiche the one lacketh reason, the other hath no feling: sith ye se and perceiue that he tendreth & maketh so much of you, enduing your body, which is made with meruelous p̄uydence, with a soule reasonable, and like vnto the angelical mindes, not disdaining that ye should be called his children: chosing you out from emong all men though hys his free charitie, by whole pure lyfe and ſincere doctrine he might be knowen & glorified throughe out all mankinde, whō he hath appoynted to thinheritaūce of the euerlaſtyng lyfe: Caſt away this carefulnes of vile and filthy thynges, & ſaye not doubtfully and fearefully, what ſhall we eate, what ſhal we drinke? or what ſhall we put on? Theſe be the ſayinges of ỹ heathen and not of Chriſten men, for they either beleue not that god is, or els beleue not that he is carefull ouer men. Neither haue they learned that there is any other better life, to ſet their mynde and care vpon. Therfore diſtruſtyng goddes helpe & wyllyng mannes felicitie in thynges of the bodye, they prepare with muche carefulnes thoſe thinges, that do pertayne to their liuing & apparel, or other commoditie of the body. They leape for ioy when theſe thynges chaunce vnto them, they ſounde for feare, when theſe thynges be in daunger: They be bered with ſorowfulnes, and ſumtyme hang themſelues, when theſe thynges bee taken awaye. And thus through carefulnes cleauyng vnto theſe corruptible thinges, they neither liue pleaſauntly here, nor can lift vp their hartes vnto the ſtudy and deſire of heauenly thynges. Emong men, who is ſo wicked a father, that will not prouide for his children thinges neceſſary for the ſuſtentacion of theyr life? Ye haue a father ſo riche, ſo bountefull, ſo circumſpecte, that he is ſufficient for all, to enriche all, and leue nothyng vnprouided for, be it neuer ſo little or vile. And feare ye that he will not prouide for his children theſe thynges, without the whiche they cannot lyue? Laye this carefulnes vpon him, he knoweth well that ye haue nede of all theſe thynges. And he is not ſo harde that he wyl withdraw thinges neceſſary from ſuch as be occupied in his buſines. But ſum wyll ſaye: what then? Shall we not gette vs with oure handye worke whereby we maye norriſhe our ſelues, our wyfe and our children? whereby we maye eaſe the pouertie of the poore? Yes truely, but wythout all carefulnes.

For truely the common people dothe double their miſery, bothe labozyng with the body, and beyng alſo carefull in the mynde. They ſo we, beyng carefull leſte that whiche they ſowe ſhoulde not cum vp, they make beyng careful leſte the warrier or the theefe ſhould take awaye that whiche is cut downe? before it be laied vp in the barne, they lay vp in theyr graner, beeyng carefull leſte any infection ſhoulde hurte their corne, or leſt any fyer ſhoulde ryſe and deſtroy it. Finally becauſe they haue an eye to plenty, and not to the preſent neceſſitie, they heape vppe for a long time, and they neuer haue ynough, as thoughe they were ſure to lyue longe. Wherfore if the matter ſo requireth, ye muſte labour, but without al carefulnes. Yf ye chaunce to haue money without fraude, and muche buſynes, take it: but in ſuche wyſe, that the carefulnes thereof, withdrawe you not thyng frō the buſynes of the gospel. For your matters are greater than that the carefulnes of lighte, trifleyng, & corruptible thynges ſhould withdrawe you from them. Let your cheefe care be aboute that good thyng, in compariſon of the whiche, theſe worldly thynges be of no value nor reputacion. The kyngdome of God muſt be ſet vppe, that is to ſaye, the doctrine of the gospell, by the which we attayne vnto the heauenly inheritaunce. Wherof I haue choſen you to be the preachers and ſetters furth, and haue ſhowed you what excellent vertues be nedeful to the doyng of this thyng, that is bothe to loue your enemyes, and to wyſhe well vnto them, who ſeketh your deſtrucio. Theſe thynges becauſe they be chiefe and higheſt, whiche come not vnto you from youre father without your diligence and carefulnes, ye muſt firſt & chiefly ſeke

ly seke for them. The other smaller thinges whiche pertayne vnto the necessitie of this life, the goods gracious father wyll caste vnto you as an augmentation, and that of his owne accorde, without any carefulnes on your behalfe, that for bothe causes ye shoulde render thankes vnto his bountifulnes, bothe because he hath geuen you those high and chefe thinges, you endeuoryng vnto the same: and also because he hath caste vnto you these thynges, without any carefulnes on your behalfe. He wyll not haue you greued with cares, whiche nobegon more troubled, but not the better. And this busines that ye take in hande, is so great and weighty, that it requireth ỹ whole mynde, eyȝ and boyȝ ded from all cares. Wherfore as men that liueth from daye, to daye, beynge content with thynges presente & at hande, be not greued nor vexed with carefulnes of thynges to cum, lyke as the common sorte of men dothe, doublyng theyr affliction, both doyng what they can to prouide for the present necessitie, and troubling themselues with feare of thinges to cum. Whatsoeuer this daie offereth vnto you, receyue it ỹ thankes geuing. Let the morow care for it self whatsoeuer it bryngeth. If it bryng any good, ye shall not hange in hope: yf it bryng any yll, ye shall not preuent your trouble, with feare of yll to cum. This life hath his afflictions, whiche it nedeth not to double with feare. For it is ynoughe to suffer them, when they cum: so that it is not nedeful for feare to make them presente before they cumme. Tyme doth alter and bryng thyse thinges in mannes lyke, mynglyng sore with sorowe, and yet all shall tourne you vnto good, yf ye take well in worthe whatsoeuer shall chaunce, and sette your care wholy vpon the heauenly kyngdome.

Be ye not carefull for to morowe.

¶ The. vii. Chapiter.

The texte. Iudge not, that ye be not iudged. For as ye iudge so shall ye be iudged. And with what measure ye mete, with the same shall other men measure to you.

Here is an other thyng also, wherin I wolde ye shoulde be farre from the manners of the Scribes and Phariseis. For they pardon themselues in great and greuous synnes, but agaynst theyr brother beyng an offender, they be more vnmercyfull iudges, yea falsely reprouyng thynges that be well, sinistrally expoundyng thynges that be doutfull, makyng very muche of thynges that be light and small: Finally if they see a manne fall into any greuous crime, they endeuour more to destroye hym, than to heale and saue hym. And yet herein they seke for a name of ryghteousnes, because they be very slowe and lose agaynst other mennes faultes, where as they do it neyther for the lone of their neighboures, (whome they beȝe rather to be destroied than corrected, and to be slaundered openly, rather than amended,) neyther for the hatred of vice, whereas they maintayne and pardon theyr owne vices farre greater than the others. But the iudgementes that ye haue, must sauour of the euangelicall charitie, whyche redily dothe forgeue, which misdemethe no man rashely wythout cause, which dothe expounde euery doubtefull thyng to the best, whiche doth gently gently tolerate and ſuffer many thynges, whiche delyteth rather to heale than to punyſhe whiche conſyderyng her owne infirmitie and weakenes, ſo iudgeth other mennes offences, as ſhe woulde be iudged offendyng her ſelfe. Finally ſhe taketh not vpon her an high countenaunce in chiding and checking other mennes faultes, if ſhe finde her ſelfe gylty or in greater. Fyrſt ſhe decummeth her owne iudge, before ſhe blameth or monitheth other. And in the meane ſeaſon it chaunceth to thoſe high minded menne, that the example of an vnruli iudgement, lighteth vpon the iudges themſelues, and they iudge other like iudges ouer theyr like, as they were ouer others. Iudge not ye therfore after ſuche ſorte, leſte ye be iudged in like maner of others. For els it ſhall cumme to paſſe, that as ye iudge other men, ſo other men ſhall iudge you. And as ye meaſure to other men, ſo other men ſhall meaſure to you. For like as a good turne prouoketh a good turne, and mercifulnes prouoketh mercifulnes, ſo reproſe prouoketh reproſe, and crueltes prouoketh crueltes. He that ſpeaketh yll by his neyghboure, ſhall be as yll ſpoken by.

Why ſeeſt thou a mote in thy brothers eye, and markeſt not the beame in thyne owne eye? howe layeſt thou to thy brother: ſuffer me to plucke oute a mote oute of thyne eye, & beholde a beame is in thyne owne eye? O thou hipocryte, firſte caſte out the beame oute of thyne owne eye, and then ſhalte thou clerely ſee to plucke oute a mote out of thy brothers eye. The texte

For no men be ſo ſore agaynſte the light offenſes of theyr neyghboure, as they that ſwarme with much greater vices. One ſladereth his brother becauſe he weareth a loose garmente, where he hymſelfe is full of enuy. An other ſpeaketh euell of his brother, becauſe being ouercome with weakens of the fleſhe he lyethe a concubyne, where as he himſelfe is wholly the ſeruaunt of auarice and ambition. An other abhorreth his brother becauſe he is a greate dibber, whereas he hymſelfe hath in his harte a numbre of murders and ſoceries, beyng ſo blynde that he can not ſee his own bunches, and yette can ſpye a ſpell warre in his neyghbours. What a wrong and waiwarde iudgemente is this? Euery mā ought to be a ſharpe iudge in his owne faultes, and more milde in other mennes. Euery man ought to loke narrowly to his owne faultes, and not to be ouer buſy in other mennes. And euery man ought fyrſt to be hys owne phyſician, before he laye handes on an other man.

Why doeſte thou ſee a mote in thy brothers eye, and canſte not ſee a blocke in thyne owne eye? or howe with what face doeſte thou ſaye to thy brother: Lette me caſte a mote out of thyne eye, where as thou carrieſte a blocke in thyne owne eyes? Thou hypocryte whiche doeſte hunte for prayſe of holynes emong menne, caſte firſte out of thyne owne goodnes, but of other mennes euylles, fyrſte caſte the blocke out of thyne owne eye, and than loke with thy pure and cleane eye, whether there by any mote whiche thou mayeſt caſte out of thy brothers eye. Like as with the eye we iudge the thynges of the body: ſo with the mynde, we iudge the thinges of the mynde. Therfore that muſt be faulties, where with we iudge another mannes faulte. And he muſt fyrſt teache himſelfe, whiche taketh vpon hym to teache others: and he muſt be his owne iudge, whiche entendeth to gyue ſentence of other: and he muſte monyſhe hym ſelfe, whiche goethe about to monyſhe others. Thou hipocryte caſte firſte caſte out, &c

Geue not pe that which is holy vnto dogges, and caſte not your pearels before ſwine, leſte they treade them vnder theyr feete: and the other turne againſt you and all to rente you. The texte

And these thynges perteyne chiefly vnto them, whiche take cure and charge of the people. And although I wolde ye shoulde be prompte and redy to do all men good, and to suffer them: that do you wronge, and to be mylde, gentyll, and indifferent towardes them that fall by mannes infirmity and weakenes: Finally to be suche towardes theim whiche be peruerse and frowarde, that ye had rather to amende them, then to distroye them: yet I wolde not that the mysteries of the euangelicall wysdome, shoulde be vttered and declared indifferently to the worthy and vnworthy.

And can not proue pearles before swine.

For if the Jewes dooe so esteme theyr mysteries and holy thynges, that they kepe them from the dogges, whiche is a lyghy cattel: Why che menne so regarde theyr precioule pearles, that they will not caste them to the hogges lyke madde menne: ye whiche haue in possession the holy thynges in dede, whiche do passe all precioule pearles, be they neuer so hyghe of pryce, be ware that ye caste not the ryches and treasure of the ghospell vnto suche as be vnworthye. For they be dogges, whiche beynge wholy geuen to prophane and worldly thynges, abhorre those thynges that sauoure of holynes. They be swyne, whyche beyng wholy drowned in fylthy pleasures, do deteste the pure and chaste doctrine of the ghospell. Rotten hartes and fylthye vometynges more pleasaunte vnto dogges, than all sawse and swete spices.

The swyne had rather haue myre, than precioule stones. Therfore whosoeuer doeth openly despise holsome doctrine, beeynge without all hope of anye good fruite: ye ought not to put into them the secretes of the heuenly doctrine, lest by occasion they maye be prouoked to be worse than euer they were before: and lest the same chaunce by them, whiche should happe yf a man should caste margarites to swyne, or holy thynges to dogges. For dogges wyll not onely vntreuerently vse the holy thyng, but also beyng prouoked, if they be cast at, will turn vpō you, and teare you with their teeth. And the swyne will treade with theyr feete the precioule stones like rubbell and rubbilshe. So the dogge is not the holyer for the holy thynge, but doth prophane and defyle the holy thyng: and the swyne is not the tryminer for the precioule stones, but doth defyle the pureness of them. Like wise men of desperate malice, do skorne the holy doctrine as a foliche thyng. When they knowe it, and do falsely reproue it as a wicked thynge: and dooe trouble and putte the to bulynes, whiche dooe teache it. Wherfore the wisdome of the ghospell must be communicated & deliuered vnto hym, that be desyrous of it, or at the leaste touch as be curable. All thinges must not forthwith be committed to all men, but as euery man weeth a profe of his towardnes and profiting: so certaine secretes must be opened vnto him.

The texte.

Aske and it shall be geuen you: seke and ye shall fynde: knocke and it shall be opened vnto you. For whosoeuer asketh, receiueth: and whosoeuer seketh, findeth: and to him that knocketh it shall be opened. Is there any man emong you, which if his sonne aske the breade, will geue him a stone? or if he aske a fyshe, will he offer him a serpente? If ye than beeyng cupll canne geue youre children good gyftes, howe muche more shall your father geue good thynges, if ye aske of him.

Aske and it shal be geuē you, &c.

These excellente iewelles lyke as ye ought not to communicate thē to all menne: they cum not from God the father to suche as be sluggishe & ydell. He geueth these thinges, but vnto suche as gredely craue them: he denieth not these thynges to them that seke them diligently: he restreigneth not from this treasure, them that knocke importunately. Like therfore of the father not gemes or golde, but these theſe true and inestimable riches of the mynde: aſke I ſaye, and ye ſhal haue your aſking. Seeke and ye ſhall finde, knocke and it ſhalbe opened vnto you.

Your father is riche & bountifull, he denieth none, he enuieth none his ryches, but he wyll haue theyr prpce and value knowen. But he dothe not knowe the prpce of theſe, whiche deſireth faynedly. Therfore whoſo dothe aſke as he ought, he receyueth: whoſo ſeketh gredely, he fyndeth: whoſo knocketh at the dooze inſtantly, to him it ſhall be opened. It is he that aſketh well, which aſketh holſome thinges, and whiche aſketh with a ſure truſt: he ſeketh well which ſeketh with contynuall deſyre: he knocketh well, whiche doth prouoke and moue goddes goodnes wyth good workes.

And in caſe ye receyue not forthwith that ye aſke, yet diſtruſte not the bountifulnes and liberalitie of your father. For he wil geue whan nede ſhal require, and aſmuche as ſhalbe nedeful, yf ye perſeuer and continue. For god is as ſone entreated of his children, as manne being a father is intreated of his children. For what father is there emong you ſo vnkynde, that yf his ſonne require a profitable thyng, as is bread, will he not geue him, that he requireth, but for bread wyll he geue him ſtones? Or if he aſke hym fyſhe for to eate, will he geue hym a serpent in ſtede of fiſhe? Truely he would denye it, yf his ſonne ſhoulde aſke hym a ſtone, o, ſerpente, or ſome other noyſome thyng. Ye therfore whiche be naturally geuen to yll, and alſo in other thynges yll for the moſte parte, yet in this behalfe, not by vertue but throughe the inſtigacion of nature, ye kepe this honeſt and naturall affection, that ye can geue profytable thynges vnto your children: howe muche more than will your heauenly father beyng naturally good, do the ſame? wyll not he geue vnto you his children, his good thynges, yf ye ſkyrte and call vpon, with feruent and contynuall deſyres, his bountefull goodnes?

If ye then being yll, ca̅ geue your children good gyftes, &c.

¶ Therefore whatſoeuer ye will that men ſhould do to you, do ye the lyke to them alſo: The texte. For this is the lawe and the prophetes.

And as touchyng the lyfe of manne, whiche is hurte or holpen with myteall gentylnes and iniuries of bothe ſydes, becauſe it were to long to gette pre-ceptes and leſſons of them ſeuerally, I wyll geue you a generall rule, whiche is naturally planted and grauen in all men. Euery man well aduiſed, wyll lith well to himſelfe: but the common ſorte of menne ſo loue themſelfes that they wyll prpoude for their owne commoditie, to other mennes hurte and hynderaunce. But ye muſte not do the lyke: but as ye would wyſhe others to be to-wardes you, euen ſuche be ye towardes others. Euery man that is in igno-raunce deſyreth to be taughte: euery man that dothe amiſſe, deſireth louingly and ſecretely to be monyſhed, rather than to be openly blamed: euery mā that is nedy, would gladly haue ayde and ſouccoure: no man would de be backebyted nor ſlaundered, nor hindred of his good name. Therfore of this common witte and vnderſtandyng, whiche is geuen to all men, let euery man take counſell of hymſelfe, how he ſhould dele hym ſelfe towardes his neyghboure. Let hym not do to another that whith he would not ſhould be doen to himſelfe: and that he deſyreth to be done to hymſelfe, let hym doe to another. This is the very briefe and ſum of all thinges, whiche are taught by the lawe and prophetes: The whiche yf a man for lacke of leyſure or for lacke of ſkylfulnes can not turne ouer and reade, yet nye euery man hath a rule at home in hym ſelfe, by the which he maye directe and ordre his actes and dedes, so that he delyte rather to folowe tryght reason, than lustes and desyres.

The texte. Enter in at the strayght gate: For wyde is the gate, and brode is the waye, that leadeth to destruction: And many there be which go in thereat. But strayght is the gate, and narrowe is the waye, which leadeth vnto lyfe, and fewe there be that fynde it.

If these thynges seme hard vnto them that loue thys worlde, yf ye see the moste parte of men folowe the contrary, yet let nothyng trouble your myndes. The better the thynges be, the harder is the waye to them. Consyder ye rather whether this waye dothe leade, than the easy entrye into it. Let it be, there be two gates: the one a narrowe gate, where no man can enter but by a straite and a narrowe waye, but this gate leadeth byandy to euerlastyng life: And another gate large and brode, where all men may enter by a brode and a playne waye, but it leadeth byandy to euerlastyng destruccion.

Enter ye therfore by the narrowe gate, and desyre rather to goe to euerlastyng lyfe with a fewe, than to euerlastyng perdicio with many. For the large waye restraineth no man with the lawes of godlynes: a fawneth vpon men wt those thynges whiche delyght the senses of the body and doe please the lustes of the mynde: and therfore it doth allure many vnto it, and within short tyme it sendeth them so intised, throughe the large gate into miseryes, that cānot be told, and delyuereth them being deceyued with false goodnes, vnto extreme and bery ylles. Howe narrowe is the gate, howe streyght is the waye, that leadeth to lyfe? For it sheweth furth nothyng that is pleasaunt to the flesshe: it is rought and displeasaunt to many, and furthwith it doth offer vnto them, thinges that be paynful to nature: as powertye, fastyng, watching, sufferyng of wronges, chastitie, sobernes. This gate receyueth not the that swell with glorye of this worlde, this gate receyueth not the, that be puffe vp with pryde, this gate receiueth not them that be bolle with excelle and ryot: this gate receiueth not them that drawe with them aboundaunce of worldly thynges. It receiueth none, but suche as be naked and vnburdened of all the delyres of this worlde, and as a man wolde say, theyr bodyes beyng put of, extenuated and fined into the spirite. Wherby it commeth to passe, that this gate is found but of a fewe, because it is not spyed but with cleare eyes, which do clearly see those thynges that be spirituall.

And fewe there be that fynde it.

The texte. Beware of false prophetes, which cum vnto you in sheyes clothynge: but inwardly they be rauening wolues. Ye shall knowe them by theyr frutes. Doe men gather grapes of thornes? or figges of thistles? so euery good tree beareth good frutes, but a rotten tree beareth yll frutes: a good tree can not beare yll frutes, neither can a rotten tree beare good frutes. Euery tree that beareth not good frutes, is hewen downe and cast into the fyre. Therefore by theyr frutes ye shall knowe them.

Beware of false prophetes.

But as touchyng suche men as doe dayly, with lust, excelle, pryde, auarice, & with suche other lyke vices, and laughing lyke mad menne, goe hedlynge into theyr owne destruccion, ye be in no perill: (for in folowynge of them it is rather madnes, than errour.) Ye muste rather beware of them which compasse with you haupnge a cloke of godlynes, where as they be enemyes of godlynes. They be alwayes talkyng of God the father, of the euangelycall doctryne, of the kyngdome of heauen, theyr apparell is course and symple, theyr cheekes be leane with fastyng, theyr body is worne away with leanesse, they praye long, they geue to the poore, they teache the people, and expounde the

the holy ſcriptures: and being diſguiſed with the cloke of theſe thynges they cum vnto you appareiled as though it were with ſheepe ſkinnes, whereas inwardly they be rauenyng wolues, and deuourers of the euangelycall flocke. It can not be harde to knowe the wolfe from the ſhepe, yf eche of them bitter his owne boyce, and yf eche of them be couered with his owne ſkynne. But what ſhal a man doe where as the wolfe counterfeytyng the ſhepe bothe with the ſhepes ſkynne, and the ſhepes boyce, creepeth into the ſhepe folde, not to becumme a ſhepe, but moze cruelly to rent and teare the ſhepe. The wolfe chaungeth his voice and profeſſeth the name of Chriſte, he profeſſeth the doctrine of the goſpell, but to the theintent he maye poiſon with his hereſye, them that be vnwares and negligent. He counterfeyteth godly workes, to thintent he may the rather abuſe the ſimplicitie of other to hys deſyres. Therfoze ye whome I haue choſen to be the kepers and feders of my flocke, muſte diligently take heede of theſe. Ye ſhall eaſely fynde out this counterfeyted tuggyng, yf ye loke narrowly vpon, not the tytle and veſture, but the verye deedes whiche doe diſcloſe the corrupte mynde. For albeit they teache well, yet they dooe not in dede the thynge that they teache. Euery tree hath hys peculyar and proper fruit, whiche by the taſte bothe declare the ſtocke. If ye obſerue and marke diligently theyr lyfe and manners, ye ſhall fynde that they ſtande in theyr owne concepte: they loke for theyr owne profyte, proude, reuengers, enuiouſe, backebiters, deſyryng of glozye, geuen to the belly, and alwayes moze diligente in theyr owne matters, thā in the matters of theyr flocke, or the gholpel. I haue ſhewed you which be the frutes of the euangelycal tree, that is to ſay, a minde farre from all pryde, full of gentylnes, a not deſyrous of bengeaunce, a minde deſpiſynge all pleaſures of this woꝛlde, a mynde deſpiſynge riches, and gredelye deſyrynge the godlynes of the ghoſpell, a mynde prompt and ready to dooe good to all menne, a mynde pure and cleane from all luſtes and deſyres, noz hauing no nother lye but to God onely, a minde refuſing no affliccion oz trouble, ſo that he maye pzomote and ſette forward the doctrine of the ghoſpell, a mynde lokyng after no rewarde in this woꝛld foz his well doynges, neither glozye, noz pleaſure, noz ryches, a mynde that wyllethe well euen vnto his yll wyllers and doeth good to them whiche doe him hurte. Whoſoeuer trulye in dede bryngeth foꝛth theſe frutes, he is the euangelicall tree. Therefoze they that the we themſelues to be prophetes, and boaſte theſelues of this tytle, they that ſeyne themſelues by religtouſe apparell to be ſhepe, where as in harte and affectiō they be wolues, they muſt be eſteemed and iudged of theſe frutes. Regarde not the boughes and the backe. Theſe oftentymes be common to the that growe in the fielde and them that growe at home, to the holſome and vnholſome: the fruite once taſted bothe declare the tuyce of the tree. And yf ye ſee in theſe, anatice, arroganey, enuy, deſyze of bengeaunce, diſſemblyng, and ſuch other, whiche are cleane contrary to the frutes of the euangelicall myndes: thynke not that any good fruite wyll ſpꝛyng of the ſame trees. Foz what man is ſo mad to gather grapes of thoznes, oz fygges of brambles: that is to ſaye, of roughe and wyld buſhes, moſte pleſaunte fruite? Lykewyſe it is emonge menne. Euery good tree, and bearyng gentyll tuyce in the roote of the mynde, bringeth furth good fruite. On the other ſyde, a very yll tree, what leaues and barke ſo euer it hath, yet it bryngeth furth yll frutes. And theſe can not be turned noz chaunged: ſeyng their nature is vtterly repugnaūt. Foz he that hath a cleane and a syncere mynde, muste nedes expresse in dedes, the syncerenes of his heart and affectiō: and againe, he that hath a faulty and an infected minde, can not expresse in deedes, those thinges whiche declare a very good man. Although by the inglynges and colour of holynes, sumtyme he deceyueth vnware men, truely he can not deceyue God: Therefore they that be colourable good, let them leaue of theyr coloure, and become good in dede.

Ye ſhall know them by their frutes.

A good tree can not beare yll frutes.

Therfore by their frutes ye shall knowe thē.

For emonge men, of an yll tree, maye be made a good. But yf he continue in his fowarde counterfeytyng let hym feare, lest he suffer the lyke of god, that will reuenge it, that the vnfruitful tree suffreth of the tylliman. And what dothe it suffer? It is cut down and caste in the fyer. So, wholsoeuer beyng in the kingdome of God bryngethe furthe no fruite, or suche fruite as is vncumlye for his profession, vnlesse he repent, he shall be caste into the euerlastynge fyer. Therfore by this token ye shall knowe them, that is to saye, of the fruites, which yf ye fynde in them to be euyl, ye shall remoue them from the cure of the flocke: and shall not receyue them into the kingdome of heauen, nor coūte them for Christians, but for enemyes: not to thintent to hurte them, but to beware leste they hurte the flocke, beyng myngled among them. For there is nothinge more daungerouse than vngodlynes, if it getteth faythe and authozitie, thoroughe the false coloure of holynes.

The texte. Not euery one that saythe vnto me, Lorde, lorde, shall enter into the kyngdome of heauen, but he that doeth the wyll of my father whiche is in heauen. Many wyll saye to me on that daye: Lorde, Lorde, haue we not prophecied in thy name? and haue we not cast out deuils in thy name? and doen many miracles in thy name? And then wil I confesse vnto them: I neuer knewe you, departe from me ye that worke iniquitie.

All they that professe me onely with woordes, shall not be counted worthie the kingdom of heauen: for it is not the eyele that maketh a Christian man, but the lyfe. And I will not furthwith knowledge them for my disciples, whiche saye vnto me religiously, Lord, Lord, when in dede they serue diuerse other lordes: that is to saye, Mammon and ryches, the belly and ambition. Whom therfore shall I thinke worthy the kingdom of heauen? Them that haue vtterly refused worldly delyces, and hartily do obey the will of the father which is in heauen, whose will I preach vnto you. For whatsoeuer I teache you, it cummeth from him. And truly my name shal nothing profite them which lacke my spirite and woorkes, specially in that daye whan rewardes shall be appointed accordyng vnto euery mannes deserte, not by mans iudgement, whiche oftentymes dothe fayle, but by the iudgement of god: and the cheye shalbe secluded from the goates: so that those thynges shal not profite them, whiche nowe seme amongest menne, a certaine godly thing, and passing the doinges of manne. For than when they shall see euerlastyng life prepared for them, whiche folowyng the doctryne of the ghospell haue declared themselfes to be my true disciples:

Many wyll say vnto me &c.

and agayne when they shall see euerlasting punishmente prepared for them that shall be remoued from the companie of the godlye, many beeyng lore afeerde shall come and desire nowe to be knowen of God, where as they haue counterfeited before menne the chiefe and moste excellent disciples of Christe, and preachers of the ghospell, and they shall saye vnto me: Lorde knowest thou not vs thy seruauntes? haue not we prophecied in thy name? haue not we chased awaye diuels in thy name? haue we not reised vppe dead menne in thy name? haue we not put awaye poysons and diseases in thy name? haue we not wrought other wonders in thy name? and by these dedes glorified thy

name: we haue declared vs to be thyne by so many argumentes and tokens, & nowe dorste thou not knowe vs? Than shall they heare this answere of me. Truely I neuer knew you, no not than when ye dyd these thinges. I heard you say, lorde, lorde, but I neuer perceiued in you ỹ harte of faithfull seruautes. I heare muche speakyng of my name, but I neuer felt my spirite in you: I heare of myracles whiche wer doen in my name, but I heare not of those speciall fruites, by the whiche the true disciple of Christ is knowen. Wherefore seyng that than, when ye did let furth your selues amongest mennе in my name, ye were not myne in dede, but vnder the colouure of my professyon ye serued the dyuell, departe nowe awaye from me, and goe vnto hym whose spirite ye haue receiued, and whose wyll ye dyd obey. What title or name soeuer they haue, yf they worcke vnrighteousnes, they shall not be partakers of my kyngdome.

Depart fro me ye that worcke iniquite.

Whosoeuer one therefore that heareth these wordes of me, and doeth the same, I wyll lyken hym vnto a wyse man, whiche buylt his house vpon a rocke: and a shower of rayne fell, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and beate vpon the house, and it was not ouerthrowen, because it was grounded vpō the rocke. And euerye one that heareth of me these wordes, and doth them not, shall be lykened vnto a folyshe man, whiche buylte his house vpon sande: and a shower of rayne fel, and the floudes came, and the windes blewe, and beate vpon the house, and it was ouerled downe, and the fall of it was great.

The texte.

But lyke as the fruyte of the tree can haue no good taste, vnlesse the roote haue good iuyce: So the buyldyng, be it neuer so gorgeouse, high, and galaunte outwardelye, shall not be sure, vnlesse it be stayed vpon a sure and sounde foundacion. He that hath my spirite, that is to saye, a sincere affection, regarding nought elles but the glorie of God, he is a tree of a good roote: So he that stayeth not vpon the vayne thynges of this worlde, but vpon the true good thynges of the mynde, and doeth continue constantly in the same: he verye politikely buildeth the buyldyng that neuer shall falle. Therefore whosoeuer heareth my woordes, & not heareth onely, but reposeth them in wardly in his harte, to thintente he maye expresse in his deedes, that, that he hath learned: I saye that he is lyke a manne both wyse and politike, who to thintente he maye buylde a sounde and sure buyldyng, fitte for all he deuiseth and loketh for a sounde and a sure foundacion, whereupon he maye sette his buyldyng to endure against all tempestes of wethers. For in a calme wether euery buyldyng standeth safely, but the winter proueth the soundnes of the buyldyng. Some tyme aboundaunce of rayne falleth downe and beateth vpon it: Sometyme the floddes increased with rayne, all to shake it with greate violence: Sometyme the hurlyng of the wyndes beateth against it, and breyng beaten and layed at vp so many wayes, it standeth styll and moueth not. Why so? Because it standeth vpon a sure foundacion.

Because it was grounded vpō the rocke.

The buylder dyd foresee all these thynges, and therfore he sette it vpon a sounde rocke, throughe whose ayde it neded nothynge to feare all those assaultes. Agayne whosoeuer heareth my woordes, and heareth them onelye, and doth not repose them in his hearte, nor expresse them in his dedes, is lyke vnto the vnprofitable buylder, whose not foreseynge the stormes and tempestes, settethe hys buyldynge vpon the sande, whyche is a foundacion euer fletyng and sayling, and nothyng truelye. Afterwardes falleth aboun-

daunce of rayne, the violence of ryuers runneth vpon it, the storme of windes runneth agaynste it, and the house is leused and plucked vp from the foundacion, and falleth downe with a great crasshe. Why so? Because the buyldynge was goodly and gaye to see to, but it stode vpon an vnprofitable foundacion. Therefore your principall chiefe care and consideracion must be of your foundacion: fasting, almesse, prayer, simple apparell, finally myracles, be lyke a gay building. But if the minde of hym that dothe them, loke after vaine praise of men, after lucre, or after pleasure, all shal fall when the fore storme of temptacion shall weth nere. But whose affeccion and desire is surely fastened in the doctrine and promyses of the ghospel, lokyng for the rewarde of his well doinges of God onely, he shall be able to stande agaynst all displeasures and iniuries, against the cruel persecutiõs of the wicked, against the crafty assaultes of heritikes: Fynally agaynst al the eygyns of Sathan, and against death it selfe, shall he be hable to stande styffely, without discouragement, vntill that day when that Perseueraunce, the conquerour of all euels, shall receyue her crowne.

The texte. ¶ And it came to passe, that whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the people were astonied at his doctryne. For he taught them as hauyng power, and not as the Scribes.

Whan Jesus had ended these sayinges, the multitude mused muche at this newe trade of doctrine. For they heard no suche thyng of the Scribes or Phariseis, whiche yf they added any thyng vnto Moyses lawe to bryng them selfe in estimacion with the people, they vsed to bryngе furthe certaine weriche constitucions, of washyng their handes before meate, of washyng the bodye yf any came home from market, of washinge of cuppes, of paying of tythes, that came of mintes and of rue. Jesus taughte no suche thyng, but where as he set furth by miracles what he could do in dedes, he declared himselfe to be the same in doctrine, for byddyng wyth authoritie, that whiche the lawe fauourably did suffer, and requiryng that whiche the lawe did not require. The lawe suffered diuorce for euery cause: Jesus forbade all diuorces vnlesse it were for aduoutry. The lawe forbade nothyng but to kill: Jesus required, that we shoulde not be angry with our brethren, and declared euidently that he was not onely the interpreter, but the lorde of the lawe also: not the minister, but the author. Finally a certaine lyuelines, of his perfecte doctrine, and a certaine naturall strength of truethe, touched and enspired the simple multitude whiche was desirouse to learne, and neuer had experience of the lyke in their Scribes and Phariseis.

For he taught the as hauyng power.

And not as the scribes.

¶ The. viii. Chapiter.

The texte. ¶ And whan he was cum downe from the mountayne, muche people folowed hym. And beholde, there came a lepre, and worshypped hym, saying: Lorde yf thou wilte, thou mayest make me cleane. And Jesus put furth his hande, and touched him, sayinge: I wyl, be thou cleane. And furthwith his lepraye, was cleansed. And Jesus sayethe vnto him: See thou tell no man but goe and shewe thy selfe to the priest, and offer the gifte, that Moyses commaunded to be offered for a wytnes vnto them.

Therfore

Herefore whan Jesus had spoken these weyghtye and highe thynges in the mounte, not to euerye man, but chefelye to hys disciples, and to suche as were able to folowe them with cherefulnes of the spirite: he dothe abase hymselfe agayne to the humylytie and lownes of the common sorte, whiche had many vnwieldy, weake, lame, and sycke, whom he thought to allure to the desire of heauenly thynges, chyefly to purpose all benefytes. And in healyng of them he dyd the same by significacion, whiche he did by his doctrine in healyng the diseases of the mynde.

Eyther of these thynges gaue credite and authoritie to other. We beleue hym the more willingly whom we loue, and loue is wonne by benefites. And this sayinge weyeth well with vs, whom we see and perceyue to be so mightye in dedes. Therefore when Jesus left the hill and came into the playne, diuerse companies of men drew vnto him on euery side, to thintent that many might beare witnes of the miracles that he shoulde do.

Wherfore a greate numbre being gathered together, beholde, there commeth furth a certayne man geuyng occasion of a miracle, and teachyng them withal, as by a figure, from whence and by what fayethe, they that wer diseased wyth the leprye of the soule, should seke remedy. For there came forth a certayne man hauyng his body infected with the leprye. This disease emong the Jewes was counted muche abhominable, and is thought to be suche, that no physicion can heale it. The iudgement of this disease, as of a sacrate thyng, was appoynted vnto the preistes, whiche searched out by meruaylouse and diuers obseruacions, whether the bodye of anye man wer infected wyth the verave leprye or not. It was not leful for them that wer iudged to haue this disease, to cum in the companye of men, neyther was it lefull to touche the body which was defyled with this disease. This man therfore iudged of the preistes, and beyng fowle with the very leprye, durst yet cum to Jesus, which is the purifier and clenser of all. The desyre of health toke away shamefastnes, the approued goodnes of Jesus towardes all men made him bolde. So many examples of other, which returned home beyng made whole, made him to trust well: Therfore when he fel downe before Jesus and worshipped hym, he sayed: Lorde yf thou wilte thou mayste clense me. What wouldest a proude pharise or one of Moyses preistes haue done in this case: he wouldest haue abhorred the vncleane and filthy man, and wouldest haue disdayned to haue talked wyth hym. But Jesus playing the parte of a good shepeherde, hauing delight in the mans fayth, whiche was toyned with so greate modesty and coldenes, whiche also durst not desire to be clensed, vnlesse it myght stand with the pleasure of hym, who knowethe what is meete for euerye man, (but yet he doubted not but that he was able yf he wouldest) Jesus (I saye) refused not the vncleane manne, but reched out his hande and touched hym. And here he dyd neglecte the lawe, as touching the letter. And spake suche wordes wherby he declared bothe the goodnes of his will, and the greatnes of his power. Because (sayd he) thou doest beleue that I can yf I wyll, I will: Be thou whole. And as soone as he had spoken, the skynne was chaunged, and the disease left hym, the people beeyng witnes of the same.

Lorde if thou wilt thou mayst make me cleane.

And Jesus put forthe his hãde &c.

After this, to thintente the myracle myghte the better be beleued, and also

also the priestes haue no occasion of reproue to reproue or misconstrue that he should take vpon him auctorytie to iudge of the leprye, and to pluckе vnto him the lucre and gaine which was wont to cum vnto them of suche as were clen-

But go & shew thy sed of leprye he sayeth vnto hym: See thou tel no manne that thou arte purged selfe to the of the leprye. For it is not thy parte to iudge of thy selfe, and I take not vpon me priestes. &c. the office of the priestes.

Therfore firste of all go vnto the priest and shewe thy selfe vnto him, and if he declare the to be cleane, whiche heretofore hath declared the to be leprose, then shalt thou offer the gifte whiche Moyses commaunded to be offered of them, who chaunced to be clensed of the leprye: leste afterward they lay vnto thy charge, and blame the which camest among the multitude: and me also which couldе not geue perfect health. For the gift whiche they receiue of thee as pure and cleane, shall reproue them yf hereafter for hatred of me, they begyn falsely to blame that that is done. For yf thou were not leprouse before, why dyd they remoue the from the congregation? If thou be not nowe cleane, why haue they receiued of thee thy gyft, as of hym that was pourged & clensed? Iesus would that the people should testify how muche prophyte the Leaper had by his faith, and howe lyghtly with a woorde he toke awaye all his disease, to thintente they myght geue eare vnto his doctrine with the same fayethe, whereby they myght be healed of the diseases of the mynde.

The texte. ¶ And whan Iesus was entred into Capernaum, there came vnto hym a Captayne and besought hym, saying: Lorde my seruaunte lyeth at home sicke of the palseye, and is sore vexed. And Iesus sayethe vnto hym: whan I come I will heale hym. And the captayn answered, and saied: lorde I am not worthy that thou shouldest cum into my house, but onely speake the woorde, and my seruaunt shalbe healed. For I also my selfe, am a man vnder the auctorytie of another, and haue soldiers vnder me, and I say vnto this man, go, and he goeth, and to another cum, and he commeth, and to my seruaunte do this, and he doth it. Whan Iesus hearde these woordes, he meruayled, and sayed to them that followed hym: Verely I say vnto you, I haue not found so great fayth in Israell. And I saye vnto you that many shall come from the East and weste, and shall sit with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob in the kyngdome of heauen. But the chyldren of the kyngdome shalbe caste out into the vtter darcknesse: there shalbe weeping and gnasshyng of teethe. And Iesus sayed vnto the Captayne: go thy waye, and as thou beleuest so be it vnto the. And his seruaunte was healed in the same houre.

Therfore after that he had taught the Iewes by thys facte and dede, that the waye vnto health was easie by the sincerenes of fayth: So forth with he teacheth in the captayne of an hundred meune, that the waye vnto health, was not stopped from the Gentiles, so that they haue fayth mete and worthy for the ghospell. For whan he was entred into Capernaum, whiche is a towne not farre from the poole of Genesareth in the bordets of zabulon and Neptalim, there came vnto hym a certayne captayne, the whiche kynde of men, the Iewes abhorred for two causes. First because they be vncircumcysed for the moste parte, and alienes from Moyses lawe: secondlye because Lorde my that kynd of lyfe is defamed commonly. But the good Iesus whiche came seruaunte lyeth at home sicke of the palseye, &c. to heale all men, turneth not hym awaye neyther. The captayne maketh a requeste vnto hym, saying: Lorde I haue a seruaunt at home, whom I loue intierly, for that he is faythfull and profitable in seruice: He nowe wholy vnprofitable, lyeth vpon his bedde, diseased with the palseye: and he is not onely onely vnprofitable vnto me, but also he is sore vexed with the rage of his disease, being now at deathes dore. And this kynde of diseasse, lyke as it is daungerouse and greuous: so is it not lyghtlye cured by the arte of Phisicians. And is sore vexed, &c.

Jesus delightynge in the fayth of the man (whiche doubted not but that with a worde he was hable to heale his seruaunte beyng absent) to thintente he might declare vnto all menne, the fayth and truste of the man toward wyth greate humilitie of harte, answered: I wyll come, and I wyll heale hym.

Whereunto (quod the Capitayne) Lorde, I am no Jewe, I am a captayne to be abhorred of the Jewes, for twoe causes, and therefore muche vnworthye, that thou shouldeste enter into my house and be defyled wyth my companye. There is no nede of thy bodelye presence: Onelye saye the worde, and (suche is thy power and myght) furthwith my seruaunte shall be healed. Thou haste aungels and messengers to whome thou mayeste commit suche busines. I knowe by my selfe, I haue a ruler to whome I am subiecte. I am obediente to his commaundementes, neyther is it nedefull for him to do all thynges. It is sufficiente for hym to committe his matters wyth authoritie. Agayne I haue souldiers vnder my rule, by whome I dooe those thynges whyche be not meete for me. Onelye I geue my commaundemente, and they obey the same: I commaund one to goe some whither, and he goeth. I commaund another to cum, and he cummeth. Agayne vnto myne owne priuate seruaunte I saye, do this or do that, and he spedely doeth what he is commaunded. If my seruauntes obeye me beeyng a sinner and an affecte: howe muche more ought we to be obediente vnto youre commaundementes? Jesus hearynge these thynges merueyled, not for that he was ignorante of the mannes fayth, but because he would cause all men to merueyle at it, and turnynge vnto the Jewes whiche folowed hym, and as it were castyng theym in the teeth with their vnbeleefe, sayed: This I assure you, hitherto haue I not founde so greate fayth in my people of Israell, as I haue founde in this straunger: whyche neyther hitherwethe the Prophetes, neyther hath receyued my doctryne, nor hath seen my miracles.

Ye stande in your owne conceyte, because ye be the children of the patriarches, whome god loueth, because ye are the peculiare people of god to whome this healthe and saluacion is promysed. But this I assure you: the tyme shalbe, that many shall come on euery syde from the vttermoste partes of the worlde, whom ye do lothe and abhorre as straungers and alyens, whiche shall enter in by fayth, and sytte in the kyngdome of heauen wyth Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: and your fathers shall acknowledge them for theyr euangelicall fayther, as theyr lefull children, and shall take them to theyr table to be partakers of the euerlastynge felicitie. Contrarye wyse the children of the kyngdome, whiche touchynge the fleshly kynrede, cummeth of the stocke of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for theyr vnbeleefe, shall not onelye not be receyued to that goodlye and happye feaste, but they shall be thrust out into the vtmoste darkenes, because they wolde not see before, the lighte that was offered them. There shall they be punished for theyr vnbeleefe, wepyng and gnashyng wyth teeth: hauyng intelligence nowe so late from what greate felicitie they be fallen by theyr malyce: and enuye shall make theyr sorowe the more, what tyme they shall se straungers & alyens to be receyued to the felicitie and honoure, whyche was promysed vnto them. There shall be wepyng & gnashynge of teeth.

When Jesus had spoken these thynges vnto the Jewes, to the intente they shoulde geue the more credite vnto his saying through the miracle, he turnyng vnto the captayne, sayeth: Go thy waye, and as thou haste beleued, so be it done vnto the. Cleerelye declaryng that helth is not geuen, neyther to the stocke and kinred, neyther to the other merites, but to fayth onely whiche he requited, and founde lacke of, in moste parte of the Jewes. And as he sayed, so the thyng folowed. For it was tried that the selfe same time the Capitaynes seruaunte was sodenlye delyuered from his disease, that no manne shoulde suspecte that it was done by chaunce, or by the helpe of Phisicians. For as no man is sodenly delyuered from the leprye after the course of nature: so the palsey forsaketh no man sodenly.

The texte. ¶ And when Jesus was cum into Peters house, he sawe his wyues mother lyenge in bed, and sycke of a feuer. And he touched her hande, and the feuer lefte her: and she arose and ministred vnto them. When the euen drewe nere, they brought him many that were possessed with diuels. And he caste out the spirites with a worde, and healed all that were sicke, that that might be fulfilled, whiche was spoken by Esai the prophete, when he sayeth: he toke on him our infirmities, and bare our sycknes.

And he touched her handes the feuer lefte her,

When he had shewed furth these and certayne other myracles, he withdrewe himselfe for a tyme from the multitude, and wente into a house that was common to Symon Peter and Andrewe his brother. There folowed on James and John. There he knewe that Peters mother in lawe had de a greate a feuer, that she kepte her bed: and he beyng delyred to heale her prayed not but toke her by the handes and lyfte her vp, and forthwith her whole feuer wente awaye, lyuelines and cherefulnes returned, in somuche as she ministred and serued them of meate: so clerelye was she delyuered from all grudgyng of the Ague. Truely no parte of the feuer remained, where as they whiche be healed by the arte of phisicians bee troubled longe tyme after they disease with feblenes and lothfulnes. Nowe when night drewe on, a greate multitude cummethe thycke and swarmethe at the doores: lokyng that after his meate, he wouldе retourne agayne vnto hys well doynge. As he came furthe, they offered vnto hym a meruayllouse number that were vexed wyth diuerse diseases, and also demoniakes whyche were possessed wyth deuyles, he castynge oute the spirites, and puttinge awaye the diseases, healed them all: wherein also he did agreablye vnto his name. There was none so fowle and so horrible kynde of diseases, whyche Jesus wouldе lothe and turne away from. There was none so vehemente or incurable, whyche furthewyth at his commaundemente dyd not forsake the man.

And healed all that were sicke,

With a worde he healed all, freely he healed all, doyng nowe the selfe same thyng in takyng away indifferently the diseases of the bodye, whiche he went aboute to doe in takynge awaye synnes, whiche be the more fyerce diseases of the myndes. Truely for this he came into the worlde: and this was it, that Esay prophecied of him many yeres passe: he toke our infirmities wyllyngly vpon himselfe, and he dyd beare our diseases.

The texte. ¶ When Jesus sawe muche people about him, he commaunded them to go vnto the other syde of the water. And a certayne Scribe came, and sayed vnto him: Master I will folowe the whithersoeuer thou goeste. And Jesus sayeth vnto him: the foxes haue holes, and the byrdes of the ayer haue nestes: but the sonne of man hath not where to reste his heade.

dead. And another of the number of his disciples sayed vnto him: Master, suffre me first to go and bury my father. But Jesus sayed vnto hym. Folowe me, and lette the dead bury their dead.

And when Jesus sawe that the multitude wounde not departe, thoughe he had healed all the sycke and diseased, and thoughe nyght were at hande, for nowe the sunne was gone to glade, but that they came thicke about hym on euery syde moze and moze: he commaunded his disciples to prepare him a ship to goe ouer the water, that by that meanes he myght bee delyuered from the multitude. This once heard, certayne of them departed home. But a certayne importunate Scribe folowed Jesus vnto the water syde, delyzing to bee receyued into the numbze of his disciples: whom he had seen so magnified of the people for his power in the wyng of miracles: not to thintent he would folowe his doctrine and lyfe, but that he might get him renoume and lucre of his miracles. He therefore cumming vnto Jesus, sayde: Master I will folowe the whither soeuer thou goest. It was a wonder mete for him that should haue been a disciple, yf the wonder and the harte had agreed. He put forth himselfe of his owne accorde, and offered hymselfe vnto all thynges, nor made no pretense of desyng. But Jesus neyther repelled the mannes importunitie, neyther layed vnto his charge his couetupte mynde, but secretely monyshed hym that he was vnmete disciple for hym. nor himselfe lyke wyse no mete mayster: for whosoeuer loketh after the commodities of this worlde, ioyneth himselfe vnto hym but folyshly, whiche neyther had nor oughte for, neyther riches, nor glory, nor kyngdome in this worlde: but hadde excesse extreme pouertie, ignominy and affection: in so muche as he had not those thynges whyche the byrdes and beastes lacketh not. The foxes (ye se) although they haue no houses, yet haue they holowe dennes to hyde them in. The byrdes flyng and wauozlog in the ayer, in the tyde of houses haue nestes to rest them in. But the sonne of man so is destitute of all succours of this worlde, that he hath no place to laye his head in. If any manne desyre suche a Mayster, yf he wyll, let him folowe me: but with harte and affectio, and not onely with the steppes of the feete. So the Scribe ynowyng his owne conscience, dyd forbeare to folowe hym.

The foxes haue holes

But the sonne of man hath not where to rest his head.

Ageyne one of them whiche began to be in the noumbze of his disciples, moued by crayltie and weakenes, when he heard of the extreme pouertie of Christe, flyng an occasion by sum coloure to slippe awaye from the disciples of Jesus: Lozde (ye he) before I folowe the wholly, whither soeuer thou goest, suffer me first to retourne home and burye my father. The cause to the apperance seemed godly, but Jesus willing to reache that all thinges should be set a part in the matter of eternal lyfe and healthe, and that herein all tarying and tingerying is daungerous: suffered not the yonge man beyng of a good mynde, but perfect and weake, to be entangled with bulynes of testamentes of the dead, and bee the pzeteuce of godlynes, and vnder pe pzouideth for the vile inheritaunce of the worlde, to fall from the inheritaunce of heauen. Nay (ye he) thou shalte gayne nothing hereto doe burye thy dead father, whiche haste pzofest thy selfe to the heauenly lyfe, there will be ynow to burye thy father. The texte. And whan he entred into a shippe, his disciples folowed him. And beholde there arose a great tempest in the sea, in so muche that the ship was couered with wawes, and he was a slepe, and his disciples came vnto him, and waked him, saying: Lorde saue vs, we perishe: and he sayde vnto them: why are ye fearefull, ye of litle fayth? Than he arose, and rebuked the wyndes, and the sea, and there folowed a great cauime. And the men merueyled, saying: What maner of man is this, that bothe wyndes and sea obey hym?

Therefore when Jesus had sent awaye the multitude, and was entred into the ship, his disciples waytyng vpon him, as he rowed, sodainly there rose a tempeste, and the water was so moued, that the waues ouerwhelmed the ship. Jesus in the meane season slept vpon a pillowe, signifiyng as it were by a figure, what perill there is in thynges here in the worlde, as often as they slepe beyng delighted with comodities and pleasures of this worlde, whiche haue taken vpon them to be in stede of Christ. But in these tempestes & troubles the disciples do shewe where we shoulde seke for succour. For they beyng amased to feare, plucke at Christe, and wake him out of his slepe. Lorde (q they) saue vs, we be lost. For yet they beleued he was but only man, and that they coulde not be safe, vnlesse that he were awake. Therefore Jesus in vndyng to make them bolde and without feare, and conquerours against al assaultes of the most sore and vehement troubles, rebukyng their great feare: why feare ye (q he) ye men of litle fayth. Ye whiche haue seen so many miracles, & haue hearde my doctrine, ought to be put in feare with nothyng, as though the helpe of God would fayle you in any place, if so bee that fayth and trust neuer fayle you, whiche as yet I se not in you so muche as ought to bee. After that Jesus had thus monished his disciples, he rose, and to thintent to shewe hym selfe the Lorde of all the elementes, he rebuked the wyndes, and the sea, and furthwith the tempest ceased, and there folowed a meruelous cauime, because it myght the more appere, that it was born, not by the strength of manne, but by the power of God. For there is nothyng more disobedient or vnruly, than the sea once troubled, and yet at the Lordes commaundement, it was sodainly turned into a great cauime. Further the disciples and other whiche were in the shippe, muche maruyng at so meruelous a matter, sayde: what might ye man is this? for vtterly he semeth to be more than man, for not onely diseases and deuils, but also windes and the sea obey his commaundementes. And by this exaumple, Jesus our very good Lorde hath taughte vs, that as often as the stormes of temptations and persecutions rage against vs, that we shoulde seke for helpe no where where but of hym. Euery tumult and trouble shalbe made cauime and quiete, if that he awake in vs.

Lorde saue vs

The texte. And when he was come to the other side of the water, into the countrey of the Gergesites, there met him two possessed with deuils, comming out of the graues, and they were out of measure fierce, so that no man might go by that way. And beholde they cried, saying: O Jesu the sonne of God, what haue we to do? Why art thou come hyther to tormente vs before our time? And there was a good way of from them an hearde of many swyne feeding. And the deuils besought him, saying: if thou cast vs out, suffer vs to go into the heard of swyne. And he sayde to them: go your wayes, and they going out went into the heard of swyne. And the whole heard of swyne, was caried heddyng into the see and perished in the waters. Than they that kept the flock, and wente their wayes into the cite, and tolde all thynges, and what had happened vnto the demoniackes. And beholde the whole cite citie came furth to meete Jesus. And whan they sawe hym, they besought him to departe oute of their coastes.

Therfore when Jesus had passed ouer the water, he came into the countrey of the Gergesites, and beholde there was offered a matter and an occasion of a greater wonder. There met him two men, which of long time had been possessed with the wurst kynde of deuilles, which eyther wandered in the wildernesse, or els hid themselues in dead mennes graues, whiche were wont to be made and set vp by the highe waye. Their rage was so great, that no cheynes could holde them, but breakyng all their bondes ranne vpon the waye goers, so that no man could safely passe that waye. No man durste bring them into Jesus, as I haue tolde you how they did with diuers other, but the secret might of Jesus dryue them against their wylles. The wicked spirites wer sore hered, and could not abide the diuine power, in so muche that beyng gilty in themselues, they felte a certayne newe and a secrete tormente, yea before that Jesus spake vnto them, they feared lest the daye were nowe at hande in the whiche they should be sent into the dungeon of hel, there to be punished eternally, and not to be suffered hereafter to molest and trouble men. Therfore torment and feare forced them against their willes, to speake and to beare witnes of the diuine power in Christ. They cryed out therfore by the mouthes of the miserable men. Jesu the some of God (q they) what hast thou to do with vs? Arte thou come hither to torment vs before our tyme? we know what misery and wretchednes abydeth for vs accordyng to our merites, but suffer vs for a tyme. That daye shall come to vs to soone. We desyre delaye and not to be deliuered. Not farre frō the place where these thynges were done, there was an heard of hogges feding, than the deuils felyng themselues to be sore vexed by the power of God, lest they shoulde departe without any hurte doing (so great was their malice) they made this petition vnto Jesus: If in no case thou wilt suffer vs to dwell and abyde in this house, suffer vs at the lest, that we maye departe hence and enter into the hogges, a beast bothe filthye and abhomynable.

O Jesu the sone of god what haue we to doo with thee?

As soone as Jesus had geuen them this libertie, which thought it sufficient to prouide for the helth and saluacion of man, the multitude of diuels went furthwith into the heard of hogges. And behold furthwith the whole heard, driuen into a fury, ranne downe hedlong from the hill into the water, and there perished in the water. This suffered Jesus both to shewe the notable malice of the deuils, and to geue occasion that this myracle mighte be hated abrode. For the swyneherdes seyng this horrible sight, ranne away for feare, and went into the citie of Gadera, and tolde the citezens what they had seen, and what had happened to the Demoniakes, now commonly knowen, to whom it chaunced to be healed, and what had happened to the heard of hogges. The whole citie of ỹ Gaderenes being amased at this tidinges, went forth to meete Jesus, fearing lest he should come to them. They saw the hogges kylled. They saw the two men that were naked, now apparelled, they sawe them healed of their frenesy and quiet out of their rage, into much that they sat at Jesus feete knowlegyng hym to be the autor and cause of their helth. But because the Gaderenes were grosse and euill, they feared more the mighte of Jesus, than they loued his goodnes, and they regarded more the losse of their swyne, than the healthy of men.

They went vnto Jesus and desyred him to depart from theyr coastes: who if they had throughly knowen him, they would haue desyred him instantly that he would haue vouched safe to come into the coastes of theyr countrey, to do the same thyng in theyr hartes, which he did in the two Demoniakes. For the hogges declare what was theyr lyfe, the which ỹ deuilles desyred to possesse in the stede of men. Therfore Jesus taughte them nothyng, content onely to put them in feare: notwithstandyng he hath taught vs by this exaumple, that there is no pestilence, nor poyson of the mynde so sore, that we should despayre of health, yf we chaunce to come to Jesus. For there be certayne desyres so vnbrydeled, so behement, and so wilde, that they driue and force hym that hath them, vnto witchecraft, manslaughter, to slaughter of his dearest frendes, and to other wicked dedes not to be named, and sumtyme they dryue hym vnto suche madnes, that he killeth hymselfe. No meanes of man can heale and helpe these thynges, onelye Jesus can geue healthe if he wyll vouchesafe to come vnto them. There is no despayre, he wyll vouchesafe yf they agayne wyll come to hym.

The.ix. Chapiter.

The texte. And entering into a shippe he passed ouer, and came into his owne citie. And beholde they broughte to hym a man sicke of the palsey, lying in a bed. And whan Jesus sawe the fayethe of them, he sayd vnto the sicke of the palsey: sonne be of good chere, thy synnes be forgeuen thee. And beholde certayne of the scribes sayde within themselues: This man blasphemeth, and whan Jesus sawe their thought he sayde: wherfore thynke ye euyll in your hartes. For whether is it easyer to saye: thy synnes be forgeuen the, or to saye, aryse and walke? But that ye maye knowe that the sonne of man hath power to forgeue sinnes in yearth: than sayeth he to the sicke of the palsey: arise, take vp thy bed and go home: and he arose and went home. But the people that sawe it, maruyled and glorified God, who had geuen suche power vnto men.

Jesus therfore not minding to geue that that is holye vnto dogges, nor to cast precious stones vnto swine, entred into the shyp, and went ouer the water agayne, returnyng into his citie called Capernaũ, for there he had a house at that tyme. And when he was entred into the house, many gathered about hym, emong whom wer also doctours of the lawe, that came from Galile, Jewry, and Hierusalem, and as he sat, (the Scribes and the doctours sitting by him) he taught them. And when there came about hym so great a number of men, that the house was nowe to litle, nor the entrye was not able to receyue so greate a multitude, certayne there were whiche broughte vnto hym a certayne man greued and vexed with so behement a palsey, that he was carried of foure men bed and all, whiche was rather a karkas of a man, then a man. Who when they knewe that Jesus was within, and that they couldenot entre for the multitude, they clymed vp vpon the house top, and remouyng the tiles of the house, let down by ropes through a hole the bed with the sicke man, before the feete of Jesus. Jesus not offended, nor greued with this importunitie of the seruauntes, but rather allowing the feruentie of their faith, and albeit the faithe of the sicke man ought to be no lesse, which eyther commaunded that he should be let down, or els willyngly suffred it: turning vnto the manne bedred, to thintent thinke that he might cõmẽde his fayth very muche to thẽ that stode about: be of good courage my sonne (q he) thy synnes be forgeuen the: first deliuering that parte of the man from disease, frõ whence the disease of the body came: and yet merueilouse gently he calleth hym sonne, beyng a man wretched and miserable both in body and soule, priuely casting the phariseis and Scribes in the teeth with theyr pryde and arrogancie. The multitude keping silence and marueling, certayne of the Scribes whiche remembred that God sayth in the holy scripture: It is I that put awaye the sinnes of men, wherasin suche a great resort of the fauourers of Jesus they durst not openlye murmur agaynst hym, they spake secretely with themselues: this is a blasphemer of God, whiche beyng but man, taketh vpon him the power of God. But Jesus whiche had somewhat declared his godly power vnto the phariseis in forgeuing of sinnes, declareth the same also by a speciall signe, openyng and shewyng that it is not hyd from him, what euery man doth thinke. This man blaspheameth.

Therfore makyng answere vnto those thynges, whiche they spake with themselues in their secret thought, sayeth: Why bg ye enuy at well doynges thinking ill in your hartes? Suppose ye because the disease of the minde is not seen with bodely yes, lyke as the healthy also, that I take vpon me vntruly, and promise vnto other that I cannot performe? But whether thinke ye more easy to saye to hym that is in sinne, as I sayed euen now, thy sinnes be forgeuen thee: or els to saye vnto the man diseased with the palsey, whom ye see wholy bound with diseases, aryse and walke? Therfore to thintent that by the cease of thinges that ye see, ye may also beleue the thinges true that ye see not, and that bothe are indifferently easye to the sonne of manne, with a worde to take awaye the disease, and to pardon the sinnes, I wyll geue you a signe and a token manifeste and open to euery mannes sense & vnderstanding. And in case ye shall see these wordes whiche I shall speake nowe not to be vayne, but to haue theyr present efficacie and strength, doubt not but that the sonne of man hath power in yearth to forgeue sinnes, and that not by sacrifices, or by holocaustes, but by simple and plaine woorde. And therewith turnyng to the diseased of the palsey, sayed: Aryse, take vp thy couche and departe into thy house, that they whiche haue knowen the sicke, and despayred of thy health, maye see and perceyue that thou art sodenly made whole and strong, insomuche that thou art not onely able to go vpon thy feete, whiche a litle before wast borne of .iiii. portes, but also, the course of thynges now chaunged, thou art able to beare the bed, which hitherto hath borne thee. And furthwith as he spake, the thyng came to passe, the diseased of the palsey ryseth vp, and laying the bed vpon his shoulders, departeth into his house after an other maner of fashyon and pompe, than he was caryed a litle before. When the multitude sawe this euident and manifest myracle, and playnly perceyued that it was a thyng not of the power of man, but of God, they glorifyed God whiche gaue suche power vnto men in yearth, saying that they neuer sawe suche a thyng doen of them, whiche are counted the chiefe and the moste excellent men emong the Jewes. But the Scribes were so put to silence, that they were the more styred and exasperate with enuye, because they sought more theyr owne glorye then the glorye of God: by the whiche increasyng and shynyng furth dayly through Jesus, they sawe themselues to bee diminished and darkened. For like as Arise take vp thy bed & go home.

the sunne darkeneth the candle: so the glory of God darkeneth, and causeth to vanishe awaye the vayne glory of men. But the envy of these men profyted to none other ende, but throughe resistaunce, to make the glory of Christ more manifest and notable. For god can vse the malice of men, vnto his glory and renoume. Therfore Jesus to geue place to the envy of the Scribes, departed thence, and returned vnto the meere and poole, where he taughte the multitude gathering about on euery syde.

The texte.

¶ And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he sawe a man named Matthewe, sitting at the receypte of custome, and he sayeth vnto him: Folowe me. And he arose and folowed him. And it came to passe as Jesus sate at meate in his house, behold many Publicanes also, & sinners that came, sate down with Jesus and his disciples. And when the Pharisees sawe it, they sayd vnto his disciples: Why eateth your Master with publicanes and sinners? But when Jesus heard that, he sayed vnto them: They that be strong, nede not the physition, but they that are sicke. Go ye rather and learne what that meaneth: I wyll haue mercie, and not sacrifice. For I am not come to call the righteous, but sinners to repentaunce.

Further as he passed by the custome house, he espyed sitting there a certayne Publicane called Matthewe, whiche also was named Leuy the sone of Alpheus. And this kynde of men because of their filthy gayne and great extorcion, be defamed and slaundered many wayes, especiallye emong the Jewes. But Jesus whithe heretofore called vnto him Simon & Andrewe, John and James, from an homely & a meane kinde of gayne, but yet honest and lawfull, now to declare openly that he despiseth vtterlye no kynde of men, so that they repent and turne them to the better: called vnto him Matthewe, and commaunded him to folowe. He without any tarrying, leauyng his accomptes vnperfecte, leauyng his lucre and gayne, beganne to folowe Jesus: and sodenly became of a Publicane, a disciple. For the voyce of Jesus, had a certayne wonderfull efficacie and strength, and a certayne secrete power & maiestie shining in his countenaunce, whereby whom he would, he allured & drewe vnto him, euen lyke as the stone called Magnes, draweth yron.

And it came to passe.

After that, Matthewe desyred Jesus, that he would vouchesafe to feast in his house. Which thyng Jesus did without any grefe, to teache his disciples that they shoulde not forsake the cumpanye of wicked men, if there be any hope that they will be the better by their cumpany. Matthewe of suche thynges as he had than, made a bountifull and a great feast, vnto the whiche he brought many of his sorte of men, both Publicanes and sinners,

Beholde manye Publicanes &c

whom by his example and communicacion, he allured vnto admiration, and loue of Jesus. Therfore whē the Pharisees sawe Jesus and his disciples sitting at meat with them, seking for matter on euery syde of blame and reproffe, they dare not speake vnto him lest they might heare that whiche they would not, but indeuoure to withdrawe his disciples from him. Why (say they) doth your maister (whome ye folowe as one notably holye) feast with Publicanes and sinners, whome we forbeare as filthye and abhominable? But lyke do soone flocke with the like: and commonly we become suche as they be, with whome we lyue. When that Jesus heard this communicatiō, he taketh vpon hym to defende his disciples, beyng yet but weake: teaching that the preachers of the gospel be not defiled with the cumpany of sinners, with whom they cumpany for no nother intent, but to allure them to goodnes. But the Pharisees do shunne and flee from the Publicanes, whiche cōmonly be counted sinners, not because they would not be defiled with their sinfulnes, but to thintent that they themselues beyng worse than the Publicanes, may be counted holy among men: but they that be indued with the holines of the ghospell, do not desire the cumpany of sinners, to the entent that they would take any lucre or hauntage from them, but to enrich them with godlines, and they enter into their houses for no nother purpose, than the good physitions enter into the houses of sicke men. For it becometh a faithfull physition, to bee more often in no place, than among them which haue nede of the helpe of physitions. Therfore he turnyng vnto the Phariseis, whiche thought themselues iuste men, whereas in dede they were infected with muche worse vice, sayeth vnto them: I cumpanye with the Publicanes and sinners, because I am the physicion of the soules, & thyther for the helth of men. To what purpose is it to cumpany with the iust, as ye suppose your selues to be, sith they nede no physicion? They nede a physicion that be ill at ease, and the physicion is profitable vnto thē, which know wlage their disease, and be willing to be healed. Therfore to lothe and despise thē, it is no holines but pride: and to succoure them, it is a sacrifice muche more acceptable to god, then any kind of sacrifice whiche is offered in the temple. Ye which know the scriptures, ought not to be ignorant in this, where god speaketh thus: I wyll mercye rather than sacrifice. If agayn in Esai, he refuseth your offeringes, but the worke of mercy, he neuer refuseth. If ye haue not yet marked this thing, go and learne what this worde of god meaneth, and than if ye thinke good, reproue my doyng, which is not contrary to your lawe, but agreable to the wil of god. And why should I refuse the cumpany of sinners, whiche came purposely to stirre and prouoke suche maner of men to repentaunce of their former life? Many thinke themselues iust: if I withdrawe my self from them, they ought not to be greued, for they haue no nede of my helpe. And it were a vayn thing, and but a rebuke to cal them to repentance, whiche haue nothyng to repēt. With this talking Iesus touched and in maner skorned the arrogant pride of the Phariseis, whiche thought themselues to be iust, and were not.

Go ye rather & learn what that meaneth.

Than came the disciples of Iohn vnto him saying: why doo we and the Phariseis fast often, but thy disciples faste not? And Iesus sayed vnto them: Can the bridegromes chyldren mourne as long as the bridegrome is with them? but the dayes will cum, when the bridegrome shalbe taken from them, and then shal they faste. No man putteth a piece of newe clothe in an olde garmente. For than taketh he away a piece from the garment, and the rent is made worse. Neyther do men put newe wyne into olde bottels, for then the bottels breake, and the wyne runneth out, and the bottels perishe. But they put newe wyne into newe bottels, and both are saued together.

After these thynges, certain disciples of Iohn, which by the reaso of a certain carnall affection, dyd enuye Iesus, magnifyng Iohn their maister, as one more excellent than Iesus, ioynyng them selues with the Phariseis, go vnto Iesus, and feare not falsely to blame him to his face, because he vsed his disciples ouer delicately, and brought them not vp so hardly as Iohn did his, whiche semed to promise a more hard and straite disciplyne. The Phariseis sought for a fame & an opinyon of holynesse among the people by two waies chiefly; that is by fasting and praier. Wherfore they demaund of Iesus, why do we the disciples of Iohn and the Phariseis fast so often, & pray after the ordinance of our auncetors, whiche haue taught that prayer should be commended and set forthe by fastyng, and thy disciples vse not like faste. Vnto this manifest and false reproue, because it touched hym, & not his dyf-

ciples, Jesus answered very gently, so that he neither reproued the ordinaunce of John, neither plainly condemned the fastynges of other men. But only shewed that the gentlenes, which he vsed towardes his disciples, was not of negligence, but of policie, whereby he brought them by lytle and litle to greater thinges, euen as when a wyse and skylful teacher of youth doeth not furthwith feare the tender age with harde thynges, but with inticementes allureth it to thynges of difficultie, and taketh occasion to answere, by reason of the witnes that John bare. For he testifiyng of Jesus before the that thought that John was Christ: he that hath a spouse (for he) is a spouse, and his frende standeth by and reioyseth muche because he heareth the voice of the spouse, meanyng Jesus to bee the spouse whom the prophecye in the psalme did promise should com lyke a bridegrome out of his chaumbre: and he hymselfe nothing els but the frend of the spouse. Jesus therfore putting them in remembraunce of the saiyng of John, saieth: Can the childrē whiche be in the chambre of the new spouse, whereas al thinges ought to be toyful be troubled and greued with the Jewish and lowryng fast, chiefly seing the spouse is present? Muy them not for this ioye whiche wyl not long indure. Suffer them to be led with this tēderues gentely and swetely vnto thinges of more perfectiō. Now they haue their spouse, and they be holy set on him, they haue no leyster now to faste: and they be so tendre, that they cannot awaye with it. In the meane season they shall growe and were, and the tyme shall com, when their spouse shalbe taken from them, than they beyng stronger, shal not onely fast of their owne accord, but also they shalbe able to suffer sharper thowzes. The Jewes put the chiefest point of their religiō in often fastinges, and log praiers: These thinges as they be not to be reproued, yf they be not doen for vayneglory but for godlines: so the doctrine of ỹ gospel hath an ye and regarde vnto stroger thinges, & matter of more weight, vnto the whiche thynges I frame and fashion my scholers by lytle and litle. Therfore my manner of teachyng agreeth not with John. It is newe that I teach, and my doctrine is new, and a new maner of teaching is most semely for a newe kynde of doctrine. It behoueth not a scholemayster to bee ouer hasty: the thing shal declare it self in time, whose scholers be better brought vp and taught. Old thynges must not be mengled with newe. For no manne sowerth a patche of new and rawe cloth in an old garment. For by this way, the hole of the olde garmente is not onelye not mended, but also the hole is made greater and more ill fauored, because the newe cloth agreeth not with the olde. And they that be wyse and polytike meane, put not newe wyne into olde vesselles. For than a double inconuenience foloweth, whilest both the wyne runneth out, and the vessels be broken and vtterly lost. But rather put newe wyne into newe vesselles, whiche maye beare the strength of the wyne, nor start a sider with the boiling and working of the wyne. So both the vesselles be saued, and also the wine. I wil my disciples to be al newe, and so I fashion them for me by lyttell and lyttell, that in tyme to cum they maye bee strong and stiffe to beare the myghte of the doctrine euangelycall. John durst put no nother than olde wyne in olde vesselles, as fastyng & such other, which be far frō those thinges that men of the gospel must perfourm. I doe not commit the swete wyne of my doctrine but vnto newe vesselles.

Neither do men put newe wyne into olde bottelles.

While he thus spake vnto them, beholde there came a certayne ruler, and worshypped him him, saiyng: my doughter is euen now deceassed, but cum, and laye thy hande vpon her, and she shall liue: and Jesus arose and folowed hym, and his disciples also. And behold a woman diseased with an issue of bloud twelue yeres, came behynde hym, and touched the hem of his garment. For the said within her self, if I may touche but his vesture onely, I shalbe whole. But Jesus turned him, and whan he sawe her, said: doughter be of good cōfort, thy faith hath made the safe: And the woman was made whole euen the same tyme. And whan Jesus came into the rulers house, and sawe the minstrels and the people makyng a noyse, he said vnto them: get ye hence, for the mayde is not deade, but sleapeth: and they laughed him to skorne. But whan the people were put forth, he went in and toke her by the hande, and the damosell arose. And this rumor went abrode into all the lande.

Jesus speaking these thinges, there came vnto him a certain warde of the Synagoge called Jairus, & falling hūbly vpō his knees worthipped hym, and with vehement praier & beseching, said: my only daughter twelue yere of age, was at the poynt of death, whan I came frō home, and I am afeard leste that she be now deade. Cum I pray you, and lay your hande vpon her, that she may recouer and liue. Jesus (as he was ready to do good to al men whiche asked with plaine trust and confidence, whether they were poze or rich, Jewes or strāgers) forthwith arose vp & folowed Jairus, whiche made haste home if perhappes he myght fynde his daughter yet alyue. The disciples & the thicke multitude folowed Jesus. And behold as he was goyng, there befell an occasion of an other miracle. There was amōg the great multytude, of people a certayne woman, whiche had been diseased with the bluddy flixe for the space of twelue yeres, and had spent her whole substāce vpon phisicions, and yet founde she none that coulde heale her disease. Therfore was she in double miserie, for that pouertie was ioyned with her sickenesse. This woman when she had conceyued in her hart a great truste and cōfidēce in Jesus, because of the filthines of her disease, she durst not speake vnto Jesu before so many witnesses. Therfore as though she would steal a benefite secretely, she came pryuely behynd his backe, and touched the hem of his garment. For thus she perswaded her self: if I touche but the vttermost part of his garmente I shall be whole, and by and by his garment once touched the flyre stayed, & the woman perceiued that the helth of her body was restored. But Jesus willyng suche a notable exaumple of fayth not to bee hid, and teachyng withall that the glory of God ought not to be conceled: to thentent he would haue the benefite to be confessed, he turneth vnto the multitude saying, who touched me? Whan all denied it: Peter sum body touched me (quod he:) For I feele a power goyng out from me. Here Peter and the other disciples, not knowyng what Jesus mente, saye: Lord thou seest the thicke multitude thrusting the on euery side, & doest thou aske who touched the, sith so many touche the? But whan Jesus, as ignozant who had touched him, loked about hym as seking for the priuie toucher, the woma being onely pryuy of the thing, perceiuing that she could not be hid frō Jesus, al shamefastnes set apart, fearing and trembling, fell downe at Jesus feete, and confessed al the matter as it was, & what disease she had, & how many yeres she had been sicke, and how she had spent al her substance in vain vpon phisicios and how that she perswaded her selfe, that by the onely touching of the skirt of his garment, she myght be healed, and howe by and by after the touchyng she felt perfit health of her body. It was the wil of Christ that these thiges should be declared before the multitude, not to put the womā to shame, neither to purchase himself prayse of men: but by this example to teach all mē, what sure confidence and trustis hable to do, and by the example of the woman to establishe the faith of the warden of the Synagogue, which he perceyued sumwhat waueryng, and withall to reproue the Phariseis for their vnbeliefe. Therfore Jesus, lest he should seme to be angry, and to take away his benefite againe, comforted the woman trembling for feare, and said: my doughter be of good comfort. Thy faith hath obtained thee health. Depart in peace with a quiet and a careles mynde. My wil is that this benefite shal continue with the, though thou hast stollen it from me.

Thy faithe hath saued the.

As Jesus was speaking these thynges, certayne came from the wardens of the Synagoges house, and tolde him that his doughter was dead, J that there was no cause why to trouble Jesus. For they toke Jesus to be nothing els, but sum notable phisicion, whiche was hable by his facultie to restore health to them that were alyue, but not to restore the dead to lyfe. And therfore they thoughte it but bayne to call a phisicion, ber he neuer so exceilente, to a dead mā. Jesus perceiuyng that the father of the maide was muche amased with this tidinges, comforted him, saying: Feare not, only haue faith and trust that the maide shalbe whole, and she shall be whole. It is inthee, that thy doughter may be whole. And now whan they wer cum to the warden of the Synagoges house, Jesus suffered not the multitude to enter in, nor the other disciples, beside Peter, James, and Johan, and the father and mother of the mayden. But al her kinsemen and frendes did wepe, and after the countrey maner, they beate their bodies, bewailing her, and cryyng out, and such other thinges as men be wonte to do very foulishely in the funerals of riche men and greate men. Jesus bad them cease from their wailing, for the mayden was not deade, but a slepe. Meanyng thereby that the mayden was dead, to them whiche coulde not rayse her, but vnto him she slept only, to whō it was more easy to raise her from death, than to other to rayse her from slepe. Whan the familiars and frendes of the warden perceyued not these thinges, they laughed Jesus to skorne, because they knew certainly that she was dead, seing her whā she died: Therfore after that he had thrust forth from the funerals the mourning multitude, he taking the father and the mother of the maiden, entred into the parler, where as the corps of the mayden dyd lye. And Jesus takyng the virgin by the hande, said: Maide aryse. And furthwith whan at the word the mayden rose, she walked also, that the fayth of the miracle might be the more certain. For he did not onely restore lyfe to dainly, but also strength and cheerefulnes. And whē the parentes of the maiden were greatly amased, he gaue thē in commaūdement, and desyred them instantly to tell no body what was doen: both that he myght auoid the suspicion of vayne glory, (for this chiefly ought to be doen with the heades of the Synagoge, which did al thinges possible to obtaine the praise of men:) and also that they myght shew furth with greater faith, and credite ye thyng that was doen, if they commaunded to kepe silence, yet would nedes tel the thinges that they had seen doen, to the Phariseis and to the Prelates of the Synagoge. For he knewe the disposition of man, which he minded to vse to the profite of others. And whan he departed, he badde them gene the maide meate, being the part of a phisicio, making as though it had been no myracle, whiche thyng established the fayth of the miracle the more.

For the maide is not deade, but slepeth.

And whan Jesus departed thence, two blynde men folowed him cryyng, and saying: O thou then sonne of Dauid haue mercy on vs. And whan he was cum into the house, the blynde came to hym, and Jesus sayeth vnto thi beleue ye that I am able to do this? They said vnto hym: Lord, we beleue. Then touched he their yes, saying: accordyng to your faithe, be it vnto you. And their yes were opened. And Jesus charged them, saying: see that no manne knowe of it. But they when they were departed, spred abrode his name in al that lande.

Now whan Jesus left the house of the warden of the Synagoge and returned to his owne house: two blinde men folowed hym, whiche had heard the fame of his miracles, and therof conceyued an hope to obtain health, especially hearing of his goodnes towardes al men, wer they neuer so meane. But when they couldе neither see Jesus, nor cum vnto him, yet with a loud crie for loue of health, and for feruentnes of faith, farre of they crie vpō Jesus, with gentle praier, saying: O sōne of Dauid haue mercie vpon vs. Jesus in the way answered them nothing, differring his benefite, that the miracle might be the more manifest: endeuouring alway to allure ꝑ Jewes to faith, and by the very thynges many wayes to reproue ꝑ Pharisеis vnbeleefe. The captain had faith & trust, the woman had faith and trust, they that caried the man sicke of the palsey, did beleue and trust, the Jewes and Phariseys dyd distrust, and wer also full of malice & enuy. But whā Jesus was cum home, the blynde men were receiued into his house, who with stiffe hope folowed hym. Than Jesus geuyng example vnto others, firste demaunded them of their faith: Beleue ye (q he) that I am able to perfourme your requestes? And they without any delay, sayde: Lord we beleue. Than Jesus touching their yes with his hande, sayed: As ye beleue so be it to you, not chalēging to hym self the restoryng of the sight, but imputyng it to their faith & trust, declaryng that chiefely vnbeleefe made vs vnmeete for the bountyfulneſſe of God, whiche is priest and reapye for all men. Assone as Jesus had spoken, the yes of the blynd wer open, so that they saw clerely. Here Jesus willing to warne vs couertly, that although glory of it self folowеth the good dede yet we muste flee it rather then desire it: he charged the blynde menne verye earnestly, that no man should know this dede. But the ioying of their newe felicitie, spred the fame of Jesus the more through out the whole countrey: emong all them that knewe of their olde blindnes.

Beleue ye that I am able to do this?

As they went oute, behold there brought to hym a dumme man possessed of a deuill, and whan the deuill was cast oute, the dumme spake: and the people maruelled, saying: It was neuer so seene in Jsrael. But the Phariseis said: He casteth out deuils through the prince of deuils. And Jesus went about all cities and townes teaching in their Synagogues, & preachyng the glad tidynges of the kyngdome, and healyng euery sickenes & euery disease among the people.

The texte.

He casteth oute deuels through the prince of deuils.

Whan the blynde were departed, there was an other miserable manne offered vnto hym, who was vexed with a deuill, whiche toke away the vse of his tonge, that the man neither was wel in his wit to wishe for helth, nor had no tonge to aske for it. He therfore because he had neede of an other mannes fayth, was offered vnto Jesus. Whiche without any tarryng cast out the deuil, and furthwith the dumme spake. The multitude maruelling at so great spedines of miracles, ready in all kynde of diseases, beyng neuer so incurable, sayed among them selues. There was neuer manne emong the Jsraelites, that wrought so many miracles so ratily. Cōtrariwise ꝑ Pharisеis blynded dayly with malyce more and more, where as the thynges that were doen in the sight of all menne could not be denyed, yet to the entente they myght withdrawe from hym the mindes of the people that had hym in veneracion, they falsely slaūder him, that he casteth out deuils not by the power of god, but by the myght of Belzebub the prince of deuils. Thā which vntrue slaūder, what could be a more mad thing? As who should say one deuill driueth out an other, or as who should say, Belzebub the enemy of mankynd, gaue lyfe to the dead, health to the sicke, sight to the blynde, speche to the dum. These tilles cum from them oftentimes, which Jesus of his goodnes hauing cōpassion vpon mē toke away, with suche corporall benefites, as might celebly be perceiued, preparing them for the capacitie of spirituall benefites. But most meke Jesus was not offēded wt suche malicious reproch, but deuised more for the health of all men, because he sawe the Phariseis, (to whome it apperteyned to see for the healthe of the people) so lytell to helpe and succour, that also they enuyed the commodities of others. Jesus therfore as a good shepeherde walked thorough al cities and stretes, laboring to heale both the soules and bodies of all men, teachyng in their cōgregacions, and preachyng the kingdome of heauen into the whiche none bee receyued, but suche as be voyd of all diseases of the soule) and healing also al kyndes of diseases and sickenesses.

The texte. But when he sawe the people, he was moued with compassion on them, because they were destitute and scattered abrode as shepe hauyng no shepeherd. Then saieth he vnto his disciples: the haruest is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therfore the lorde of the haruest, that he wyll send labourers into his haruest.

Further whan Jesus sawe the multitude swarming on euery syde, and euery day more thicke, and now gredy of health and sincere doctrine, and cōsidered withall, that the Priestes, Phariseis, and Scribes, vpon whō the people hitherto did hang, to do any thing rather then to preserue the people, and that they were whole gruen not to the glory of God, but to their owne glory, to their owne lucre, to theyr own bely, and to their own pleasures, in whō if there wer any religiō it was but coloured and counterfaited, so that it was very noysome vnto true religion: and considered also that the people was but rude and grosse, and yet in the way of amendment, for they lokyng to be healed in their bodies, folowed with a simple and plaine faithe, & glorified god: and although yet they vnderstode not the doctrine of the gospel, yet they did not reiect the same. Contrariwise whan he cōsidered the Phariseis and the Scribes, where as they had the Prophetes and the law, yet to be blinded with worldly desires, and also to resist the doctrine of ỹ gospel:

He was moued with cōpassion on them. the good shepeherde was moued with pitie and compassion, because he saw them lyke vnto wanderyng shepe, scattered a sunder and destitute of a shepherd, and running vnaduisedly hither and thither. Jesus therfore cōsideryng that in the Phariseis, whiche played the wolues rather than the shepherds, the flocke had no hope, & that the people thzough miracles was nowe sumwhat prepared to receiue the doctrine of the gospell, he sayd vnto his disciples, whom he had now well gathered together: I see a great haruest, but

The haruest is plenteous but the labourers are few. very few labourers. The fame of ỹ gospel is spred abrode euerywhere. The feruencie of many is stirred vp, whiche seme ripe and redy to heare the wisedome of the gospel. But where be they that wil take vpon them to preache & teache? where be they that will teache purely and sincerely, neyther seking after glory of man nor after gayne and lucre, but teachyng so sincerely as ye see me teache?

Truely

Truly suche a company of men must not be neglected, beyng kindeled with the desire of the heauenly doctrine. What is than to be done, but to desyre and require the lord of the haruest, to thruste into his harueste the ydle and vnwilling labourers. For the occasiō is now, and lingeryng is daungerous. I know we that it is more pleasaunt for you to bewity me, but the tyme is at hand, that ye must shewe some proofe of your selues, and that ye must begin to shew forth for the saluacion of other, that whiche ye haue receiued of me.

The. x. Chapter.

¶ And when his twelue disciples were called vnto hym, he gaue them power against vncleane spirites, and to caste them oute, and to heale all mager of sicknesse, and all manner of disease. The names of the twelue Apostles are these. The first Simon, whiche is called Peter, and Andrewe his brother. James the sonne of Zebedee, and John his brother, Philip and Bartholomew, and Thomas and Matthew, which had ben a publicane. James the sonne of Alphe, and Lebbeus, whose syrname was Taddeus. Simon of Canaan, and Judas Ischarioth, which also betrayed him. The texte.

THerfore Jesus going vp vpon the hill, commaunded his disciples which specially folowed hym, to cum vnto him. Of these he ordeyned twelue to be chiefe, vnto whom as to the better learned and more stōg, he committeth with authorite, the office of teachyng, that according to thensample that they sawe in theyr maister, they should teach the people, eche in sondry places. And leste the doctrine of fishers, bylearned and abiecte men, should foorthwith be dispised, he gaue them also power against all vncleane spirites, to cast them out with the worde, and to heale all kyndes of diseases, and all faultes of the bodye, that whatsoeuer Christ did before them in the fathers name and his owne, that they should do in the name of Jesus Christ, in whose roume they were. For so Jesus entred, that through healing of greuous and incurable diseases, (whiche benefite semeth vnto men most godly) he myght allure the rude and the simple to the thynges of the soule. But leste any manne should take false Apostles for the true, these be the names of the twelue whom Christ himselfe dyd ordein. First Simon the sonne of John, whiche also was called Peter, and his brother Jndrewe: For these were the fyrste that Christ called. Secōdly James the sonne of Zebedei with John his brother: Thirdly Philip and Bartilmew. Fourthly Thomas whose syrname was Didimus, and Matthew the Publicane. Fifthlye James the sonne of Alphe, with Judas the sonne of James, whiche also was called Lebbeus or Thaddeus. Sixtly Simon the Cananite, whiche was also called zeloytes, and Judas Iscarioth, whiche afterward betraied his maister. By such maner ambassadoures beyng poore men, rude, abiect, fishers, sinners and men not knowen, and of no reputacion, Christ went about to fourme and renue the whole worlde vnto the wisedome of the gospell: leste in this prayse the worlde myghte attribute any thyng vnto it selfe, yf he had begonne this heauenlye pourpose by meane of learnyng, of power, of tryches, or of nobilitie. De gaue them power against vncleane spyrites.

¶ Jesus sente forth these twelue in numbre, whom he commaunded, saying: Goe not into the waye of the Gentyles, and into the citie of the Samaritanes, enter ye not; but go rather to the The texte.

to the lost shepe of the house of Israell. Go and preache, saying: the kingdome of heauen is at hande. Heale the sicke, cleanse the lepers, caste the deade, caste out deuils. Freely ye haue receiued, geue freely: Possesse nor golde, nor syluer, nor brasse in youre purses, nor yet scrippe towardes youre iourney, neyther two coates, neyther shoes, nor yet a rodde: For the workeman is worthy of his meate.

Now it is worthy the hearyng, to heare what he commaunded them, and how he furnished these ambassadours in theyr iourney. And firste of all he appointeth them the coastes and limittes of preachyng, & forbiddeth the to go out of Jewry, and forbiddeth them to go eyther to the people that were next, or vnto the cities of the Samaritanes, whom the Jewes did abhorre, not that Jesus did count any kynd of men to be abhorred, but leste he should seme to be offended with the iniuries of the Phariseis, and for reueging of him selfe, to send his disciples vnto straungers: or leste he might geue occasion vnto the Jewes, to excuse themselfes, and saye that they wer despised, and that the Gentiles and Samaritanes were preferred before the. Againe because he knew that the Jewes chiefly would rebell against the gospel, he would leaue them no maner of excuse, but that it should appeare vnto al me that they were put from the kingdome of god, by their owne frowardnesse, and that the Gentiles were receyued by their own plain and simple faythe. Therfore (as he) forbeare them for a tyme, and go rather to the lost shepe of the nation of Israel, that they may repent to be saued. For they be not all of the Phariseis malice, there be shepe emong them, erryng by simplicitie and ignorance, whiche being monished and taught will sone repent, & heare the voyce of the good shepeheard. And ye shall beginne your preachyng thus, lyke as ye saw me do. For it is not mete nor expedient forthwith to disclose the secret misteries vnto the rude people: they muste be made in a readines before, that they may be able to receiue the heauenly doctrine. First of al therfore preache nothyng els, but that the kingdome of heauen is at hande, that they retournyng from their olde life, may prepare themselues to a new lyfe. For the first degree of righteousnes, is to abstayne from sinne. And the first degree to healthy, is to knowledge the disease. Furthermore lest the teachers being men of no reputacion, and teaching newe thinges, should not be beleued, make them beleue your doctrine by miracles, lyke as ye saw me do. Heale the sicke, rayse the dead, cleanse the lepros, caste out deuils. These thinges though they be very great, yet ye shall haue them of me, & they shall get you fauour and authoritie with all men. For first the weake muste be allured. Take you hede onely that ye do not abuse these thynges eyther to payne glorye, or to lucre. Lyke as ye haue freely receyued of me, so freely geue. Defyle not the euangelical function, no not with the least suspicion of glory or lucre. Thus men shall esteme you greate in dede, yf they shall see you of so great might and power, and yet not to be haut nor pronde, nor desirous of lucre, but stoutly to dispise those thynges, for the which the comon sort of men, do & suffre all that they may. I will haue you light and ready to do this message, and to be laded with no burdens, to be encombred with no carefulnesse, that ye may wholye apply the office committed vnto you. Ye teache heauenly thynges, let not your care vpon worldly thynges, ye haue preparation mete for your preaching, which teacheth no meane thing. Somtyme for when you take your iourney burdeyn not your purses with golde nor syluer. No carrye not so much as a dagge about with you to put your victuales bitayles in, neyther .ii. coates, noz shooes noz staffe. He is wel armed which is gyrded with the swearde of the worde of the gospell. Noz ye shall not mede to be carefull, how ye beyng naked shall come by necessaryes. Onely be carefull in your office committed vnto you, and all these shalbe geuen you from your heauenly father. It is his matter that ye haue in handē. He wyll not suffer his workemen to be defrauded of theyr hyer. Foz them that lyue from daye to daye, and accozding to nature, necessaries be soone prepared. And there wyll be ynowe whiche of themselues wyll geue to you, doyng and teachyng suche thynges. So shall it come to passe, that neyther ye shall be troubled with suche cares whiche maye diminishe youre auctozitie, and make you to be suspected, noz they whome ye teache, shall be vnkynde towarde you, of whome they receyue farre greater thynges.

But go rather to the lost shepe of the house of Israel,

For the worke manship etc.

¶ But to whatsoeuer citie oz towne ye shall come, enquire who is worthy in it, and there abyde tyll ye go thence. And whan ye come into the house, salute the same: and if the house be worthy, let your peace come vpon it: but if it be not worthy let your peace returne to you again. And whosoeuer shall not receyue you, nor wil heare your preachyng, whan ye departe oute of that house oz citie, shake of the dust of your feet. Verely I saye vnto you: It shall be easyer for the lande of Sodoma and Gomorycha in the daye of iudgement, than for that citie.

The texte.

And ye shall be grieuouse to no man with begging, noz no man shall caste you in the teeth with his benefit, because he hath made a chaunge foz better thinges rather than geuen any thing. Foz it shall not be nedefull foz you to tourne into common innes, but into what citie oz strete you entre into, kiepe enquyre yf there be any honest man there, desyrouse of the heauenlye kyngdome, and wery of the worlde, whiche with godlye desyres lyngheth nowe and than after Messias that was promysed, whiche theweth a greate hope of greater increase, by simplicitie and innocencie of lyfe, by liberalitie towarde the poore. Foz suche one will be a very mete hoste foz you, and again ye shall be meete gestes foz him. Whan ye haue founde suche an one, turne into his house, and chaunge not your inne, but yll youre dutines aboute the gospell, causeth you to remoue into another citie. Foz it shall not be nedeful neyther comely foz you, oftentimes to chaunge your host, as light persons, oz persons desyrouse of more deynty fare. Euery house, euery fare, oughte to suffyse foz men of the gospell. Be ye curteous & gentill of manners, that ye appere neither proude, noz flatterers. Whan ye enter into the house, speake fyrste and saye: Peace be in this house. Youre prayer shall not bee in vayne. Foz yf the house be worthy this prayer, by and by without delaye it wyll receyue it: but yf it refuse it, your salutacion shall not be loste. Foz that whiche they despise shall returne vnto you. And truely I wouldē not haue you dowyng, and beckīng, oz flatteryng any man foz your necessities, that yf any house thinke muche to receyue you, oz yf any citie thinke muche to haue you as geastes, and wyll not of theyr owne accozde receyue the saluacion of the ghospell offred vnto them, I will that ye shall leaue the house whiche ye saluted, and leaue the citie whereunto ye entred, and go into the stretes and shake of the dust from your feete, declaryng openly that ye hunt foz none of theyr worldly commodities, who caste of the ghospell of God, lasomuche that ye shall not be caste in the teeth with the vile dulle that sticketh vpon your feete. Here haue in remembraunce, that an holy thyng must not be geuen to dogges, noz precious margarites caste vnto hogges.

Onely see that ye laye this to the vnkynde, wyll they, nyll they, that the kyngdome

kyngdom of god is at hande to the greate commoditie of them that receiue it, and to the great hurte of them that refuse it. Iuyse them whiche receyue the worde of the gospell. Woo be to that citie, wherein none thalbe founde, that doeth repent him of his yll lyfe, and delyzeth not to be amended. This I assure you, that the countrey of Sodom and Gozmoze shal be moze gently handled in the daye of iudgement, than that citie, though it be a citie of Israel. The moze that the clemency of god is to prouoke them to penaunce, by so many myracles, and so many benefites, the moze grieuously shall they be punished, yf they reiect it.

The texte. Beholde I sende you furth as sheepe among wolues, be ye therfore wyse as serpentes, and innocent as doues. But beware of those men, for they shall delyuer you vp to the counsels, and shall scourge you in their Synagoges. And ye shall be brought to the head rulers & kynges for my sake, in witnes to them and to the Gentyles. But when they deliuer you vp, take you no thought how or what ye shall speake, for it shall be geuen you euen in that same houre what ye shall speake. For it is not ye that speake, but the spirite of your father which speaketh in you. The brother shall delyuer the brother to death: and the father the same, and the children shall aryse against their fathers and mothers, and shall put them to death: and ye shalbe hated of all men for my names sake: But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

But leue ye the punishment of them to god, be ye meke and patient against all iniuries, and so endeuour to profite all good men, that when ye be prouoked of yll men, ye requite not iniuries. It is sufficient for you to bee garnished with those thinges, wherewith ye maye do good to all men. Against the iniuries of men I will haue you vtterly without weapon, and to ouercome with none other defence but with sufferaunce. Otherwise I coulde make you terrible and to be feared, but it is not expedient for the gospell.

Beholde I sende you furth. For violence doeth not extinguishe violence, nor iniury iniury, nor pryde pryde, but rather comlines, gentilnes, and quietnes. I know that the phariseis, and men that be stoute with the succoure of this world, will go about to do you sore displeasures. But against all these there is none other bucheler, but patience. For there is no cause to feare, ye be sent lyke sheepe without weapon, simple, innocent, in the middes of wolues, but ye be sent of me. I would not that ye beyng prouoked by their naughtines, shoulde be turned into wolues, but to go about this by all meanes, that the wolues asswaged by your gentylnes, maye be turned into sheepe. It is no great matter to reuenge yll men, but to turne their hertes to good, is a beray great & an harde matter. Therfore ye must couple two certayne thinges together, the policy of the serpente, and the simplicitie of the doue. The simplicitie of the doue shall cause you to desire to do good to al men, and to hurt no man, no though ye be prouoked. The policy of the serpente, shall cause you to geue none occasion, wherby your doctrine might be reproued. This is the chiefe point of your ambassade, that the gospell maye entre into all mennes hartes.

but beware of those men. Therfore ye must do vtterly nothyng, which by any probable colour might withdrawe any mans harte from the doctrine of the gospell. Your doctrine shall make great stirres and tumultes in the worlde, the moze therfore ye must beware, leste any bukynesse aryse through your defaulte. Whiche can not be, yf ye communicate your benefites freely vnto all men, and kepe patience also towardes the yll men, and delyze to do them good.

warelye, and nowe prepare your mynde agaynst all kyndes of yll, that nothyng may trouble you, whan it shall happen. For the tyme shall come that they will plucke you as ill doers into theyr counsels and conuentycles, and beate you with whippes like ungracious men, and subuerters of publique weale, ye shall be brought before rulers and kinges, not for your desertes, but for my sake, a though I may let them, yet wil I suffer all these thynges to be doen, that it maye be witnessed and open to all men, that they perysshe through theyr owne default, which beyng moued and prouoked by so many myracles, by so many benefites, by so ready doctrine, by poure simpleyes & gentilnes, so spitefully reiect saluacion offered vnto them. Therfore whan so fewe shal be brought further to so many, so weake & vnarmed to so mighty, so vnlettered to so learned, be not carefull how we ye shall pleade your cause, though ye be rude, and not skilfull of iudgementes, of lawes, and of the lawe place. Also I would not ye should run to suche ayde and succour, by the whiche the common sorte of men be wont to haue the higher hand in iudgementes. They take vnto them a cunning and a well tonged aduocate, they flatter the iudges, they fall downe humblye vpon theyr knees, they get fauour with money. Medle ye with none of these. Do ye this onely, go forth whan ye be called, aunswere whan ye be commaunded, that they haue no iust cause of stomacy and stubbernes against you: but aunswere playnly and boldly, not with a deuised and a prepared oracion, but with suche one as hath boldnes ioyned with wisedome and mildnes. Like as vitayle shall be ready for you in euery place: so speche shalbe geuen vnto you, vpō which carefully to muse, appertayneth not to hym that dependeth wholly vpon the helpe of god. Yea speche shalbe geuen vnto them in season whiche muse nothyng vpon it, not garnished nor gaye, but wyse and effectuall, and meete for the gospel. It is not mannes matters that ye haue in hand, but goddes, wherof ye be not authours, but instrumentes. For it is not ye that shall speake there, but the spirite of your father speaketh by your mouthes. Trusting therfore vpon his helpe, ye must be moued by no stormes of aduersitie. For the worlde will aryse against my doctrine with suche tumulte and busines, that the brother forgetting his brotherly loue, will bryng his brother to death: ỹ the father forgetting his naturall loue, wyl putte his sonne in daungier of death: that the sonne all honoure and dutie set aparte, will ryse against the father, and mother, and put them to death, of whome he had the beginning of his lyfe. Briefly ye shall be hated of all men, for the hatred they beare to my name. For this worlde beyng so corrupte on euerye side with ambicion, pryde, auarice, lechery and other worldly delyces, wyl not beare the heauenly doctrine contrarie to his appetite and delyte. And it shall be a greater offence to be a Christian man, than to be a murtherer or a sorcerer. These hurly burlyes the deuill shall rayse agaynste the gospel, but distrust not, godly wyldome shall ouercome the wyles of the deuil, and the malice of man: do ye the busines comitted vnto you with a bolde and cheerefull courage. For whoso among these ylles doeth persteuer and continue vnto the ende, he shall be saued. For ye must not beyng discouraged with feare, leaue of the busines of the gospell.

For it shall be geuē you &c.

But he that endureth to the ende shall be saued.

¶ But whan they persecute you in this citie flye into another. For verelye I saye vnto you: ye shall not go through all the cities of Israel, vntyll the sonne of man be come. The disciple is not aboue his teacher, nor the seruaunt aboue his master: It is ynough for the disciple ciple to be as his teacher, and the seruaunt to be as his mayster: If they haue called the good man of the house Belzebub, how much more his householde seruauntes? Feare them not therefore. For there is nothyng kept close, that shall not be opened, and nothyng hid that shal not be knowen. What I tell you in darkenes, that speake ye in light. And what ye heare in the eare, that preache ye on the house toppes.

There is no peryll vnles a stomacke meete and worthy for the ghospell fayle you. But lyke as ye ought not to prouoke the crueltie of yll menne, nor to stirre vp persecution, nor resist it with might and power, so whilest the preachyng of the gospell is but newe and young, I graunt you libertie to auoyde daunger and peryll by flying and running awaye, not onelye that ye maye be in saferie youre selfe, but also that by this occasion the fame of the ghospell maye be spred the further abrode. Therfore yf they persecute you in one citie, geue place to their madnes and flee into another, so that in no wise at a litle iniurie of persecucion, ye cease from your labour in the ghospell. This onely is to be doen now, that the fame of the ghospell maye be spred throughout all Palestine. And in this the persecutor shall do you good, because he shall not suffre you to tarry long in one place. The tyme shall come whan ye shall not auoyde persecution with flight. Nowe the tyme is shorte, and haste muste be made. For the kyndome of god is at hande. This I assure you, before that ye haue goen ouer all the cities of Iewry, the fame of man woill shewe himselfe, and will helpe you beyng in daunger. In example shal be shewed you in hym how great aduersities the preacherz of the ghospell muste suffre. The whiche all ought to seme vnto you the more tollerable for this, that ye se that I haue suffred al maner of reprofes and afflictions. The scholer is not better than his maister, nor the seruaunt better than his lorde. This suffiseth to the scholer yf he be equall with his mayster: This ought to suffice the seruaunte, yf he be equall with his lorde. If they haue so dishonestly checked me the father of the house, insomuche that in moste vile reproche they called me Belzebub, and named the fame of God by the name of an vncleane deuill: what mervaile is it, if they be bolde vpon the seruauntes of the house? I knowe that infamy semeth a great ill, and almoste more greuous than death: but it is a prayse and no infamye, whiche cummeth of wicked men for the gospell sake. They will saye that ye be witches, yll doers, and sedicious, but this ignominy and shame afterwarde shalbe turned into glory. Your sincerite and innocencie at length shall appere vnto the worlde, whiche sincerite all men shall prayse, curling them whiche haue dishonested you with false reproze. Prayse long suppressed, breaketh out commonly with greater light. There is nothyng couered but time will vncouer it, and nothing is hid, but it once will come to light. Endeuoure this onely, that ye do thynges worthy prayse, and not seke after prayse. There is nothyng therfore, why ye should be troubled with feare of infamy, and not freely preache the gospel of the kyngdome. It hath no dishoneste thyng, nor nothyng to be kept close. Yea yf ye heare any thyng of me in darkenes, preache ye it in the cleare light. And if I haue tolde any thing secretely, preache it openly. Our doctrine is without any colouring. It desireth to come furth before all men, and it is afrayde to be kn wen of no man

The texte,

¶ And feare ye not them that kyll the bodye, but are not able to kyll the soule. But feare rather hym whiche is able to destroye both soule and body in hell. Are not two litle sparowes solde for a minute? one of them shall not fall to the grounde without youre father. Yea

and

and all the heares of your head be nūbred: Feare ye not therfore: ye be of more value than many sparowes. Euery one therfore that shal confesse me before men, him will I confesse also before my father which is in heauen. But whosoeuer denieth me before men, him will I also deny before my father whiche is in heauen.

But there shall be some perchaunce, whiche will lytle passe vpon hi famye, and other ylles, but who can despise and set lytle by death? It were mete you should feare them, yf they could kyll the whole man: but ye they not knowe that the body is the vilest parte of man, and that the soule which is the chiefe parte of man cannot be hurte of them, be they neuer so sauage and cruell. Ye (I say) nede not to feare them. They should hurte you more yf they dydnot slay you folowyng theyr myndes, than yf they kill you not regardyng them. I wyll shewe you who is more to be feared. Feare him, who like as he made ꝑ whole man, so he is able to condemne him to euerlastyng death, and to deliuer hym into hell fyre.

Yet the body whiche the tiranne doeth kyll for a tyme, doth not vtterly perysshe. For the selfe same at the resurrection shall be restored in far better wise. Hitherto therfore surely the body is in daunger, yf in case ye be killed constantly obeying my commaundementes. But yf ye obey theyr commaundementes, and leaue the business of the ghospell, nowe not onely the body doth perysshe, whiche yf no man kill it, yet by the comuon lawe of nature it must nedes dye, but also the soule shall be deliuered to euerlastyng fier. And what matter is it, whether the persecutor, or disease, or any other chaunce take awaye the lyfe? Truely more glorious it is to die for the ghospell sake, whiche death though it be violent and sore, yet it shall not come before the daye, whan dener it cummeth it shall not come without the prouidēce of God. And by this it cummeth to passe, that yf ye endeuour to auoyde it, ye cannot. God will not suffer you to be slayne but when it shall be very expedient for you to die. Wherfore put out of your mynde all this feare. God also will prouide for this, to whome it were not hard to geue you immortalitie, but that it is a greater thyng to despise death, than to escape it. What is of lesse value than sparrowes? of the whiche two be bought for a farthing, a very lytle coyne? And the number of sparrowes is great in euery place, and yet not so much as one of them is loste in the yearth, but by the wyll and sufferaunce of your father. Doe ye feare than lest he will suffre you, whom emong all he hath chosen to this business, to perishe before your tyme, whom he doeth not neglecte, considering that he kepeth the nūbre of all the heares of your head? Seyng that ye be of more estimacion to the father than innumerable sparrowes, there is no cause why ye should feare, lest men be able to do any thyng against you, other wyse than shall be thought vto hym, who hath continuall care ouer you. Wherfore leaue the care of your lyfe and death vnto hym, and be not ye driuen from the open profession of my name, be it neuer so hated of the worlde, by any feare of displeasures that men can doe vnto men. For whosoeuer lytle regarding the rebukes of men, doe professe me in this lyfe to bee his Lorde and maister, hym will I acknowlege to bee my seruaunt and disciple, before my heauenly father. Contrary wyse whosoeuer will be ashamed of me before men and deny me, hym will I deny before my father whiche is in heauen. And this is no dayntie ouse and delicate profession, for he doeth not professe me vnles he doeth declare by his lyfe that he doth beleue my sayinges.

And he hath denied me whiche so lyueth that he setteth by any thyng more than by me. What winning therfore can it bee, yf a manne lese that noble and euerlastyng prayse with the father and his angels, for feare of a false slaunder heere, which neither lasteth long, nor is no slaunder in dede but with ignoraunt and folyshe menne, and before God bery true glory. It is a great grayne lyke to passe vpon these thynges, and to make haste to the euerlastyng rewarde: whiche shall be geuen in due tyme to them that haue deserued it: in the meane season a good conscience is a great piece of the rewarde.

The text. Thynke not that I am come to sende peace into the yearth. I came not to sende peace but a swearde, for I am come to set a man at variaunce with his father, and the doughter with her mother, & the doughter in lawe with the mother in lawe. And a mans foes shall be they that are of his householde. He that loueth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me, and he that loueth sonne or doughter more than me, is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his crosse and followeth me, is not worthy of me. He that findeth his lyfe, shall loose it, and he that looseth his lyfe for my sake, shall fynde it.

The profession of the ghospell is no weriche nor lyght thyng. Truely the rewardes be great, but yt must come vnto them with vehement and continuall desyres of the mynde: they chaunce not vnto yll mennes and lingerers: they must be obteyned by strength and violence. Thinke ye that I am cumme to sowe peace in the yearth emong men? It is farre other wyse. Nay I am not come to sowe peace and concorde, but swearde and warre, and that inwarde and domesticall warre, and not ciuile warre onely.

For where as the doctryne of the ghospell shall be hated of the moste parte, and sith it requireth so feruente a desyre towarde it, that all the affections of men be they neuer so great and vnruly, must geue place: it cannot be but great stryfe and dissencion must aryse emong the that be most nere & frendely: whyles they that dote vpon the worlde wyll rage rather agaynst theyr hereft beloued, than forsake theyr vices, wherevnto they be accustomed: and whoso is once touched with the great feruencye of the euangelicall charitie, he wyll not suffre hymselfe by no maner of affections to be pluckt awaye from the thyng, whiche he hath begoonne to embrace and make muche of. But happy is that stryfe and dissencion whiche doeth auaunce sygere and good thynges, and cutteth awaye rotten thynges: happy is that swearde whiche pareth awaye from the soule all noysome lustes and desyres. Lette this tumulte and hurlyburly be layed vnto me, and not to you, whiche haue geuen a medicine & troubled all the body: but so, that they that stryue against theyr beloued, that is to saye theyr nereste kinsfolkes, for the hatred of my name, ought to imputte it to themselues and not to me. For they myght folowe them whome they persecute. I offer helth and saluation to all men, whyche yf all men do embrace, there shall be no stryfe nor dissencion. Truely the ghospell of it selfe is a thyng of peace, and of quietnes, but sedicion is raysed by the faulte of others: Lyke as the medicine is a holsome thyng of it selfe, but in the body it maketh tumbling and trouble, whiles it prouideth that all the membres may be in
For I am come. 35. quiet. But it is expediente that the noysome thynges be pared away, that true and holy concorde may be established the more emong the pure & cleane. This swearde therfore I bring into the earth to breake concorde betwixt the sonne and the father, to deuide the sure and streight bande of nature betweene the doughter doughter and the mother, to discouer the loue and concorde betwene the mother and daughter in lawe. There is no knot of nature or amitie so sure, which this swerde is not able to breake. Whom domesticall acquaintaunce hath made louers and very nere frendes, them the swerde of the gospell shall set in sundre. But so ferre and no ferther shall this battayle extende, and so farre shall this warre go, that they whiche be of our syde shall onely despise their enemies, but not hurte them, and alsmuche as in them lyeth, saue them also yf they can. And thus farre shall this despising goe, not to disdayne them and abhorre them, but so berly to make them an aunswere, and not to obey their wicked commaundementes. ye must take hede by all meanes that the common state of the publique weale be not troubled by you. Be not slacke in the duty which by the law of nature the sonne oweth to the father, the daughter to the mother the brother to the brother, the husbande to the wyfe, the cosen to the cosen, the frende to the frende, and the familiar to his familiar, and acquaintaunce. For I do not abrogate and put awaye the lawe of nature, but make it perfecte. Ye must be obedient in all thynges vnto the publique magistrates and ministers, vnlesse they prescribe and commaunde wicked thinges. They call you to the lawe, ye must go: they require an accompte, ye must make it: but yf they commaunde you to do honour and sacrifice to ymages and pictures, yf they commaunde you to ceasse from preachyng of my name, ye ought not to obey them. And yet they must not be stirred with checkes & railinges, but they must be aunswered to berly: why? it is more mete to obey God the prynce ouer all, than the power of man. For it is reason that the commaundementes of God should be preferred before the comaundementes of men. And yf they prescribe vniust thinges which yet do not make menne wicked yf they obey them, they must be suffered, lest they beyng stirred they fall into a rage. As for an exaumple, if they take away vniustly thy garment or money: if they cast thee into prysone: if they scourge thee with whippes. For these thynges do not take awaye godlines, but rather by occasion increase & set furth the vertue of the gospell. Lykewyse the ductie of the naturall loue must be performed to the parent yf he haue nede, though he be an heathen, and alienate from the ghospell. But yf the authorite of the parent withdrawe from the ghospell, the heauenly father ought more to be obeyed, than the yerthly father. And yet the father must not be churlishly despised, but gently & reuerently monished, not to repugne against God. In lyke maner also we must do with other, vnto whom we owe the dutie of humanitie, either of nature or els of curtesy. Some will say, it is hard to master suche affections, which nature hath inwardly graffed in vs. But suche stronge and manly menne, the profession of the ghospel doth require, and such as wyll be moued from the heauenly bulynes by none affections. Ye shall see me go this wayes: he must nedes folowe in the same which will be taken in the number of my disciples. The sonne that loueth the father or the mother more than me, is not mete for me. Agayne the father which loueth the sonne or the doughter more than me is not mete for me. And he loueth him more than me, yf in doyng hym pleasures, he neglecteth my commaundementes. It is wicked ing God. And lest it should seme to be muche to set more by the wyll of God than all mennes affections, whereas nothing is more deare to man than life, except he despise this also for the ghospell sake, and be alwaies in a redines to dayly, he is no mete disciple to haue me to his maister. For lyke as the disordered loue of the parent or childe, is hatred rather than loue, sith it is noysome vnto both: so the disordered care to preserue the lyfe, is a verye destruction of the life. He hath preserued his life, that loste it well, he hath loste it, which hath whereas he semeth to men to haue wonne his life, he hath loste his life in dede.

Agayne he that constauntly stickyng vnto the ghospell putteth furth hymselfe boldely to all daungers & deathes, he semeth vnto men to loose his lyfe, where in dede he winneth his lyfe. The lyfe doth not perishe when it is taken awaye for professyng of the ghospell, but is preserued euerlastyngly: It doth perishe in dede, if it bargayne to haue a short tarrying in the bodye with vngodlines:
and yet it liueth not than in the body, whiche liueth in the hatred of God.

phetes reward. And he that receiueth a iust ma in the name of a iust ma, shall receiue a iust mans reward. And whosoeuer shall geue to one of these litle ones to drinke, a cup of cold water, only in the name of a disciple, verely I say vnto you, he shall not loose his reward.

Neyther is there any daunger leste if it chaunce you to be forsaken of your parentes, kynnesfolkes, aliaunce, and frendes, that there shoulde ber none to geue you houserowme and vittayle. The gyftes wherewith I doe adorne you, and your innocencye, shall purchase you euery where, houses, parentes, chyldren, kinnesfolkes, and frendes. For ye shall haue so many chyldren, as ye shall haue disciples. Lyke as there shall be euer some which will despise you and persecute you: so there shalbe euer some which will comforte you with an entiere and pure affeccion. And as, albeit ye reuenge them not, but wisshe them well, God in time to come will greuously punishe them, because he taketh him selfe to be despised when ye be despised: so to the others he will rendre a great reward for your sake, albeit ye requyte them not. For God willeth not that it shoulde be imputed to you, but vnto hymselfe, yf any Gentiles hathe been bestowed vpon you for the gospels sake. For whosoeuer receiueth you, receyueth me, in whose name ye be am balladours: and he that receyueth me, receyueth my father, from whom I am sent, and whose matter I haue in hāde.

He therfore like as he is riche and liberall, so will he rendre a very great reward for euery litle benefite whiche is bestowed vpon you, that menne shall not loose theyr benefite vpon you, but haue a great auantage therby: for muche more ought he to rendre thankes whiche gaue the benefite, than he that recey-ued it. For truely it is a great gayne to exchaunge a corporall benefite indu-ryng but a whyle, for spirituall and euerlastyng ryches. Whoso receyueth the Prophete or the preacher for no nother cōsideracion but that he is a Pro-phete or a preacher, and that he beyng sent from me preacheth the will & promyses of God, he shall receyue the rewarde of a Prophete, and become a Pro-phete himselfe. And whoso receyueth the iust man not because he is his kinnes-man, or for any other worldely affeccion, but for this cause onely that he is a iust and a good man, liuing after the rule of the ghospell, he shall receyue the rewarde of the iust, & become a iust man himselfe. Hath not he made an happy chaunge, whiche hath vsed hospitalitie, and wonne innocencye: Pouertie can withdrawe no manne from this geyne. For here the good wyll of the geuer is counted the gyfte, and not the value of the gyfte. In somuche that whoso geueth but a cup of colde water, I saye not vnto me, but vnto any of the leaste of these, onely because he is my disciple, I saye vnto you, certenly he shall not leese his rewarde: for he also shall become my disciple. And who is so poore and barr whiche is not hable to geue a cuppe of colde water to the thirstye. And as it skilleth not howe great the thyng is that is geuen, but with what affection and in whose name it is geuen: so it skilleth not howe great he be, vpon whom this gentilnes is bestowed: this is sufficient that he is my disciple, that I may excepte and take it for a great benefite.

¶ The. xi. Chapiter.

¶ And it came to passe that whan Jesus had made an ende of commaunding his twelue disciples, he departed thence to teache and preache in theyr cities. The terte.

After that Jesus had instructed & furnyshed his disciples with these commaundementes, and commissions to preache the gospell, he lefte them: that they beeyng aparte from theyr maister, myght make a triall of themselues, and proue what they could doe: and went from the hill, that he for his part might preache the ghospell in the cities of the Jewes.

Whan John beyng in prysen heard the workes of Christe, he sent two of his disciples, and saied vnto him: Art thou he that shall come, or do we loke for an other? Jesus answered and sayed vnto them: go and shewe John agayne what ye haue heard and sene. The blind receyue theyr sight, the lame walke, the lepyose are clensed, the deafe heare, the dead are raysed vp, and the poore receyue the glad tydinges of the ghospell. And happy is he that is not offended by me. The terte.

And at what tyme the fame of Jesus, by the reason of his miracles which he wrought in many places, and by the reason of his wonderfull doctrine, did increase dayly more and more throughout all Jewry, and in the countreyes nere vnto Jordane, where John before had preached and baptised Jesus: the disciples of John somewhat nowe enuying the glory of Jesus, of whom as yet they had no great opinion, whereas of John they thought that he was somewhat more than manne: they tolde vnto John beeyng in prysen, what good successe and fortune came of all thinges which were doen by him, whom a lytle before he had baptised in Jordane, and with whom he dyd beare witnesse vnto the people.

Further John a man of perfecte holynes, reioysing that it nowe came to passe whiche he spake before, that the name and opinion of hymselfe, whiche was greater than it was in dede, did decrease and diminishe, and the fame and opinion of Jesus did dayly increase and spreade abrode, perceyuing also the enuious affectios of his disciples, to the intent that he might heale theyr weakenes and abandone them from hym and deliuer them to Jesus: he chose out two of them & sent them to Jesus, to say vnto him in his name these wordes: Arte thou that Messias, whiche was sayed should come, or arte thou not he whom I spake of before, and do we yet loke for an other? Thus dyd John, not that he was in doubt, but to confirme and establyche the myndes of hys disciples, and throughly to abolyche and put away the ouer great suspicion that they had of hymselfe, supposing him to be Christe. For yf he should haue denied that he was Christe and should haue repeted that whiche he had often spoken before that Jesus is Messias, his disciples would haue imputed it vnto humilitie: and the more he should haue humbled hymselfe, the greatter opinion would they haue had of hym. But he knewe that Jesus hymselfe could best heale and cure this theyr weakenes. They go vnto Jesus and tell hym what John commaunded them. Jesus knowyng that the testimonye whiche is gathered of dedes, is more certayne than that whiche spryngeth of wordes, chiefly yf a man testifieth with himselfe, made none aunswere at the first, but euen before theyr face working many wonders, both newe, & which haue not been heard of, healyng the sicke, chasing away the vncleane spirites, restorying the lame, geuing sight to the blinde, sayeth vnto them: Ie nedeth not for me to shewe what I am. Onely goe and shewe vnto John what ye haue seen with your iyes, and what ye haue heard with your eares. The blynde receyueth syght, the lame walketh, the lepers bee clensed, the drake heareth, the deuilles whiche be troubled with deuils, be deliuered, the dead ryse againe: Finally according to the prophecy of Esay, the poore and humble doth embrace the ioyfull tidinges of euerlastyng lyfe, whiche the stoute and arrogant do despise. These workes do declare sufficiently what I am. And blessed is he, vnto whose mynde suche great successe of the ghospell geueth not occasion of yll. Jesus spake this also, notyng modestly the enuy of John hys disciples, but in suche wyse that they should not be putted to shame before the multitude, but should knowe theyr faute secretely with themselues: temperyng his answere by all meanes, both that he myght auoyde suspicion of arrogancy, and that the disciples myght beleue hym the better, and also that he myght rather heale theyr affection, than openly to reproue them.

So yᵗ we John as ye haue hearde and seen.

The texte.

And as they departed, Jesus began to speake vnto the people concerning John. What went ye out into the wildernes to see a reede that is shaken with the winde? go to, what went ye out to see a man clothed in soft rayment? beholde they that weare soft clothyng, are in kinges houses. But what went ye out to see a prophete? verely I say vnto you, and more than a prophete. For this is he of whom it is written: Beholde I sende my messenger before thy face, who shall prepare thy waye before thee. Verely I say vnto you: among them that be borne of women arose not a greater than John the baptist. Yet he that is lesse in the kingdom of heauen, is greater than he. From the dayes of John Baptist vntil this day, the kingdom of heauen suffereth violence, and the violent plucke it vnto them. For all the Prophetes, and the lawe it selfe prophecied vnto John. And yf ye will receyue it, this is Helias, whiche was for to come. He that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

Then when they were departed, Jesus turnyng vnto the multitude, lest they should surmyse any thyng of John otherwyse than were conuenyent, supposyng that he demaunded these thynges as though he had been in doubt himselfe, and not rather to heale the weakenes of his disciples: he began to setforth the prayses of John very largely, but yet in suche wyse that he would not geue hym the prayse of Messias, but the nexte prayse onely,

and yet he wouldethat John his testimony concernyng hym, shoulde be of weyght. For it is expedient that the people shoulde haue a very good opinion of John, whiche had testified so notably of Jesus, that he was the sonne of God, that he was the lambe whiche shoulde take awaye the synnes of the worlde, that it was he that shoulde baptise in fier and spirite. For neither hanitie nor lying coulde be suspected in suche a manne, as though he had falsely so praysed Christe before: nor waueryng or inconstancye, as though beeyng chaunged afterwarde he shoulde haue begonne to doubte of Christe. Lettero man (of be) suspecte John of inconstancie.

For yf ye thynke hym suche a one that he wyll chaunge his minde after the manner of mutable men, and doubte of that thyng whiche he before affirmed, for what cause dyd ye lately floche together in Jildernes to gase and lobe one? To see a reede shaken with the windes? For suche maner of manne should he be, yf he would now swarue and dissente from hymselfe, and should become much vnlike vnto himselfe. But the continuall hardnes of his whole lyfe, doth lightly deliuer him from this suspicion. What? Laye, ranne ye together in to wildernes for to see? A manne gayly appareled with silkes? This was a sight nothyng mete for wildernes. For they that be clothed with fine lynnen and silkes, be in kynges palaces, vnto whom doth agree excesse and riot, and delicate liuyng. And emong them inconstancye and flattery hath place. He that liueth with locustes and wylde honye, he that is clothed with Camels heare, he that is gyrded with a letheren gyrdle, is not thus suspected nor misdemed: And the familiaritie of the kynges courte coulde not alter his ordre. The pryson doeth declare and shewe that he coulde not flatter. But it must nedes be some great spectacle and sight whiche drewe you so thicke into the deserte. Therfore what came ye to beholde? Any Prophete? for they be commonly wonte to leade theyr lyues in deserte.

What is it ye out into wyldernes to see, &c.

Beholde they that weare softe clothyng, &c

Here truly ye be not frustrate of your hope: For ye haue not seen onely a Prophete, but a more excellent thing than a Prophete. For it is he of whom Malachias once prophecied, that he should come before Messias as beeyng nowe at hande, that he should not onely by his oracle and true saying, promise him to come long after, but also poynte hym with his finger to be at hande. Thus is the prophecie: Lo sayeth he, I sende my Jungell before thy face to prepare thy waye for thy cummyng at hande. This I assure you, so great is the excellencie of John, that none is greater than he, emong them all, that hath been borne of a woman: For he whiche is at this present esteemed lesse of many in preaching of the gholpell, onely is greater than he: for he promised not with doubtfull prophecies, that Messias once shoulde come, but he shewed him, & appoynted him nowe cumming, and preached that the kyngdome of heauen was nowe at hande. Hitherto the heauenly doctryne was looked for, whiche the figures of the Patryarkes, whiche alsb the oracles of the Prophetes, had darkely promised. Nowe John so excited and stirred the hartes of many to the desire of euangelicall doctryne, that from the begynnyng of his preachyng vnto this daye, they breake in vnto it through the violence of faythe, both sinners and heathen people, and wyll we, nill we, they plucke it, and rauishe it violently. They wyll no longer be excluded, they wyll no longer be detayned in shadowes & darke riddles of the olde lawe, perceiuing that the light of the euangelicall trueth is at hand, and that the thyng is nowe present,

I see: who is more to you, &c.

From the dates of, &c

I iiii. whiche

whiche was shewed and signified in the former bokes, perceyuyng also that none other prophecie ought to be loked for, touchyng Messias that shoulde come. For all fygures, by the whiche the lawe poynted Messias to come, and all prophecies of the Prophetes, which promysed that Messias should come, as soone as Jhon came, left of to promyse the thyng to come. For it is folishenes to loke for the thing that is present, as though it were to come.

For all the Prophetes &c.

There is no more to do, but fermently and gredely to teache, and take that which agreably to the true sayinges of the Prophetes is nowe presently offered. And to the intente that ye maye playnly se that hereafter there is none other Prophete which shall shewe you of Messias to come, this is that John, whome Malachias vnder Helias name (whome he folowed in austeritie and hardenes of lyuyng, and apparell, whome he folowed also in franke reprouing of kinges) prophecied before should come before that Christe did come. Wherfore yf ye receyue tyym, beleue ye that Messias so long loked for, is nowe at hande: ye haue seen his lyfe, ye haue herde his testimony, ye heare also what I will saye vnto you. Yf any haue eares to receyue the trueth, let hym heare: yf any wyll stop his eares, let hym thanke hymselfe of his owne hindryng. There is nothyng omitted of vs that may moue the harres of all menne.

The texte. ¶ But whereunto shall I lyken this generacion? It is lyke vnto children whiche sitte in the market places, and call vnto theyr felowes, and saye: We haue pyped vnto you, and ye haue not daunsed, we haue mourned vnto you, & ye haue not folowed. For John came neyther eating nor drinkyng, and they saye he hath a deuyll. The sonne of manne came eatyng and drynkyng, and they saye: beholde the glutton, and the wyne, bibber & frende to the publicanes, and to the synners. And wysedome is iustified of her children.

And yet I see many so obstinatly vnbeleuyng, that neyther afrayed by the austeritie of John, nor allured by my curtesye and well doyng, wyll receyue the thyng whiche they haue loked for nowe so long tyme, by the promyse of the Prophetes. What maner of generacion shall I call this? Or by what comparison may I set it furth? It is lyke vnto children sytting in the market place, whiche with a common song crye thus to theyr felowes a farre of: we haue song you pleasaunt thinges vpon our pypes, and ye haue not daunced: we haue song you sorowfull thinges, and ye haue not wayled. We haue proued & assayed one thing, but diuers waies. Neither waie hath been profitable vnto the vnbeleuers, lower and vntractable. John minding to stryre vp this nacion vnto penaunce, (as it were with a sorowfull song) came furth with great austeritie & hardnes of lyfe, fasting, abstayning from all delicate meates, forbearyng wyne, and drynkyng water. And some lette not to saye that he is possessed with the deuill, so farre they be from folowyng of him. The sonne of man came furth minding to stryre vp this nacion to the loue of the heauenly doctryne, as it were with a more merye song of the pypes: and that he myght allure them the more with his gentilnes, he hideth not himselfe in deserte places, nor weareth no notable rough garment, nor vseth no notable lower meates, but framing hymselfe to all men, and despysing the cumpanye of no man, eateth all maner of meates, and drinketh whatsoeuer is set before hym: and degayne they picke quarels, falsely to reproue hym, saying: Beholde the great eater, the wyne bibber, the frende of the publicanes and synners. They that be not moued with austeritie and roughnes, be wont to be wonne by fayre spra-bing and gentilnes. But this nacion by euery occasion is made wurse, & turneth euery remedy and medicine into a matter of greater disease and sickenes. But by the moe wayes they be prouoked to health and saluacion, the more euident it shall be to all men, that they perishe through theyr owne malice: and the wyledome of God, by whose councell all these thynges be born, shall haue the prayse of righteousnesse emong her children, when they shall see them that apperid great menne and iust menne before the world, to be repelled from the kyngdome of heauen for theyr vnbeleife: contrarywyse when they shall see sinners, publycans, harlottes, heathen people, humble and abiect, to be receiued into euerlastyng saluacion for the ordines of theyr fayth.

The texte.

Than began he to vpbrayde the cities, in whiche moost of his miracles were done: because they repented not of their sinnes. Woe vnto thee Chorazin. Woe vnto thee Bethsaida. For yf the miracles whiche were shewed to you had been done in the citie of Tyre or Sydon, they had repented of theyr synnes long agone in sacke clothe and asshes. But I say vnto you: it shalbe better with Tyre and Sydon in the daye of iudgement, than with you. And thou Capernaum whiche art lift vp vnto heauen, shalt be brought downe to hell. For yf the miracles whiche haue been done in thee, had been shewed in Sodome, they had remayned vnto this daye. But I saye vnto you, that it shall better with Sodome in the daye of iudgement, than with thee.

Woe be to the Chorazim.

Woe be to thee Bethsaida.

Here Iesus musyng in maner at the inuincible malyce of certayne people, for the feare and ensample of others, began to rebuke the cities, whiche where as he had shewed many miracles, and healed men, & taught so many thynges: yet they were not stirred to repentaunce of theyr former lyfe, saying: Woe be to the Chorazin: woe be to the Bethsaida: for yf the wonders which haue been shewed in you, had been seen in Tyre & Sydon, whiche cities ye abhorre as heathen and wycked, long ago they beeyng contryte would haue done penaunce in heere clothes and asshes. And in the meane time ye stand in your owne conceyte, because ye be of the stocke of Israel, because ye sacrifyce not vnto Idolles, because ye be not geuen to riot and excesse so openly and loocely, because ye hate the lawe and the prophetes: but vnlesse ye repente you, all these thynges shall turne into the heape of your damnacion. For this I assure you, in the daye of goddes iudgement when euery man shalbe iudged of God, not after opinion and heeresaye, but accordyng to his desert: Tyrus and Sydon shall be more gently handled than you. They shalbe the more easily punyshed, because they were not stirred to repentaunce as ye be. And thou, o Capernaum, which nowe standyng in thyne owne conceyte, art in courage as high as heauen: shalt than be plucked downe to hell. Thou enioyest with thy selfe as though thou were rychteous and doest abhorre the dwellers of Sodome whiche in tyme paste were horiblye punished for theyr synnes: but in the daye of iudgement theyr damnacion shal be more easy than thine. For if those miracles had been wrought in Sodome whiche haue been shewed in thee, they would haue satisfied by penaunce, God that was offended with them, and theyr cities had stande vnto this daye.

But I saye vnto you.

At that tyme Iesus answered, and sayed: I thanke the o father, o Lorde of heauen and yearth, because thou hast hyd these thynges from the wise and prudent, and hast shewed them vnto babes. Euen so father (for it was thy good will) all thynges are deliuered vnto me of my father. And no man knoweth the sonne, but the father: nor no man knoweth the father, but the sonne, and to whom soeuer the sonne will reueale hym.

The texte.

J.v. And

And when the disciples were returned vnto Jesus from their preachyng, and told him cherfully that the matter came well to passe, he teachyng vs that whatsoeuer we do prayse worthy ought to be ascribed vnto God, lifting hys eyes vp to heauen, saide: I thanke thee, o father, which art Lord of heauen and yerth, and by whose wysedome all thynges be gouerned, because thou haste hyd this heauenly philosophie from them that be high mynded and puffed vp with pryde, through an opinion of their worldely wysedome and policie: and haste opened it to the litle ones, & to the meke, and to fooles after the worldes iudgemente. Truly so it is father, for so it is thought best vnto thy gentilnes: to teache that thou acc not pleased with the stout, and such as trust vnto their owne iustice and wisedome: and that they be great with the, for the simplicitie of fayth, whom the worlde taketh for fooles and abiectes. So it pleased thy godly wysedome, to condemne the wisedome of man, and to drawe vnto thee good meme by the humilitie of the doctryne euangelicall. And by and by turnyng to them that stoode about him, sayed: My father is the author and the cause of all these good thynges, who hath deliuered all vnto me. To knowe hym and me, is the very true felicitie. And he doeth not bowe himselfe but to quiet and meke myndes. This is a certayne secrete Philosophie and not knowen vnto the worlde. No manne knoweth the sonne but the father: no manne knoweth the father but the sonne, and to whom the sonne will manifest hym: and he doth not manifest him to the proude and high minded. The doctryne auayleth nothyng, the miracles auayleth nothyng, without the secrete inspiracion. But none be worthy of this, but they whiche distrusting their owne helpes commit themselfe wholy to the goodnes of God. They that thynke themselues wyse, be not worthy for this wysedome. They that thynke themselfes ryche, be not receyued to these ryches. They that thynke themselfes noble and myghtie, be not receyued to these priuities. They that thynke themselfes iuste, be not mete to receyue the iustice of God.

Vtterly (as ther so it was.)c.

The texte. Come vnto me all ye that labour, and are laden, and I will ease you. Take my yoke vpon you, and learne of me. For I am meke and lowely in hearte, and ye shall finde rest vnto your soules. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is lyght.

Here Jesus considerynge in his mynde the great miserye and calamitie of mankynde, some to be oppressed with powertie, agaune some more greuously to be tormēted with care for riches, some to be greued with diseases, some with olde age, some to be vexed with loue, and some more greuously troubled with hatred, many to wander and waure in sundry mazes of false opinions, many to be afflicted and greued inwardly with the conscience of their synnes, and that there was none, whiche played the parte of a faythfull and effectuall pastour, whereas there were innumerable whiche take vpon them to be priestes in countenaunce and hawtie behauioure, whiche magnified themselfes by the name of maister & Rabby, and whiche dyd exacte their tithes: moued with pitie and compassion doeth inuite and call vnto hym all men, promisyng of his owne accorde vnto all meme, comforte and remedy, so that with a syngle and syncere harte, they cumme vnto hym, and shakyng of the moste miserable and moste greuous yoke of the worlde, take vpon them the yoke of the doctryne euangelicall.

Cumm:

Cumme vnto me (sayeth he) as many of you as bee grened with afflictions, carcs, or with conscience of your synnes, and as many as be oppressed with the burden of aduersitie, I will refreshe you, I will geue you solace and comforte agaynste all kyndes of displeasures. Neyther ryches, nor honours, nor pleasures of this worlde, bryngeth the true tranquillitie & quietnes of mynde: nor the wysedome of this worlde, nor the religion of the Pharisees deliuereth from grenouse carefulnes. The worlde hath his yoke, at the firste appearance pleasaunte, but in dede grenouse and sharpe. Firste of all shake it of, and runne vnto me gladly, and bowe your neckes therefully vnder my yoke. Learne of me what thyng onely and truly doeth pacifye and ease the mynde, and of what countayne this whole tumulte and trouble of menne doeth spryng. Truly this is the hawte and fyerce mynde trusting to it selfe, and trustyng lytle to God. Out of this spryngeth Ambition, desyre of money, lust to reuenge, debate, enuy, warre, sedicion, wickednes agaynste God: than the which thynges what canne be more tumultuous or troublesome? So that yf ye will be once deliuered from all illes, take a maye the fountayne of these euyls, receyue my doctryne, and folowe my lyfe. Learne of me howe that I am meke and of no hawte herte. I haue declared by miracles what I canne doe, and yet I desyre neyther ryches, nor honour, and I am amicouse and gredy vtterly vpon nothyng whiche semeth to the worlde great and goodly. I disdayne none be he neuer so vile or sinfull. I geue not taunte for taunte: I curse not them that wythe me yll: I stryke not hym agayne, that stryketh me: I depende wholy of the commaundementes of my father. He wyll punishe the yll doers: he wyll rewarde the good dedes: to hym I render the whole glorye: to hym I committe all my care. I obey simply and playnly in all thynges his will: and as muche as in me is, I study to do for all men, and to hurte no manne. yf ye learne onely this of me, ye shall fele and perceyue these miserable tumultes and troubles to be assuaged, wher with nowe ye be tossed and turmoyled without any ende, and ye shall gette rest and quietnes to your myndes: whiche shall folowe you and be with you in the mid tempestes of aduersities which trouble you on euery syde. I meke and a colde mynde is the fountayne of all mannes tranquillitie and quietnes. Onely hauyng confidence bowe downe your neckes. There is no cause why ye should feare my yoke. It semeth harde and heuy vnto the vnbeleuers, but vnto them which with all theyr harte trust vnto the goodnes of God, whiche haue receyued the fyer of the euangelicall charitie, my yoke is softe and easye, and my burden is lyght. For the certen and sure hope of rewardes, maketh the yoke pleasaūt: and the ineffable loue towardes God, maketh the burden light. For what is not swete and pleasaunte to him that hath a loue to it? yf the mynde haue a good conscience and be boyde of all care, yf it haue a certayne trust of the rewardes of euerlastyng lyfe, what shall spryng or ryse whiche canne trouble or moue suche a mynde?

And I will ease you.

For I am meke & low ly of herte.

The.xii. Chapter.

The texte.

At that tyme, Jesus went on the Sabboth dayes through the corne, and his disciples were an hungred, and began to pluche the eares of the corne, and to eate. But when the Pharisees sawe it, they sayed vnto hym: beholde thy disciples do that whiche is not lawfull to do vpō the Sabboth day. But he sayd vnto them: haue ye not red what Dauid did when he was an hungred, and they that were with hym? howe he cutred into the house of God, and dyd eate the shewe breadbes, which were not lawfull for him to eate, neither for them whiche were with him, but onely for the priestes? Or haue ye not red in the lawe howe that on the Sabboth dayes the priestes in the temple breake the Sabboth, and are blamelesse? But I saye vnto you: that in this place is one greater than the temple. Wherefore if ye wist what this meaneth, I will mercye, and not sacrifice: ye would not have condemned innocentes. For the sonne of man is Lorde also of the Sabboth daye.

AND vpon a certayne daye as Jesus went by the corne, and his disciples stirred with hunger and going before hym, plucked the eares of the corne, and rubbyng them with theyr handes, eate the corne: the Pharisees takyng occasion on euery syde falsely to blame them, sayed vnto him: Seest thou not what thy disciples do breaking the Sabboth daye? Why than doest thou not forbid them sith they do vpon the Sabboth daye, that whiche is not lawfull? Here Jesus so defended his disciples, that they coulde not blame hym, as the auctheur of breakyng of the Sabboth day, & teacheth them withall, that suche maner ordinaunces ought to cease as often as necessitie or some notable profite chaunceth. For the Sabboth daye, fastinges, and suche lyke constitucions were not ordeyned for mans hurte and vndoyng, but for his preseruation and health. Therfore he doth obiect against the Pharisees beyng skilfull in the lawe, an exaumple out of the lawe, and that of a man not of the common sorte, but of him whom they counted chiefly to be an honest man and blameless. Why (sayth he) doe ye falsely blame my disciples for that they asswage theyr hunger with a smale thing, and easie to be gotten? Haue ye not red how that holy Dauid cōstrained by necessitie, enterprised a greater thyng. Who fleyng from Saule, when he came to the citie of Nobe, dyd eate the loaues, whiche they called the loaues set furth to be shewed, and not only he, but also his folowers and seruauntes? It is vnlawfull for any man saueing only priestes and Leuites, to eate of these loaues: but when he was in daunger for hunger, neyther the priestes feared to shewe hym these loues, nor Dauid feared not to touche and eate them, as though they had been prophane and not holy. Yf ye alowe the doyng of the priest Albimaleech: if ye disalow not the doyng of the Prophete Dauid: why do ye reproue my disciples for a thing muche lesse to be regarded? For what a smale worke is this to pluck vp the eares of corne being at hand, & to eate the corne rubbed out with your hādes? Besides this the lawe it selfe cōmaundeth the Sabboth to be broken. For the priestes in the temple killing ỹ beastes on the Sabboth day, & exercising the bucherly office, gathering together a pile of wood and setting it a fier, plucking of the skinne, cuttyng them in pieces, and sethyng them, breake not they the Sabboth day? the lawe sufferyth no worke

to be doen, and yet the sacrate prieſtes doe exercise & vse these fowle workes in any holy place vpon the sabboth day. Ye knowe that these thinges be doen, and ye doe allowe them for this, because they make for the vse of the temple. If the authoritie of the temple be so great, that the worke which is beſtowed vpon it, doeth not breake the Sabboth daye, this I saye vnto you: Heare is one of greater authoritie than the temple. They that doe seruice vnto hym, ought more to be excused from the blame of breakyng of the Sabboth daye. If they breake not the Sabboth day which labour in the sacrifices of Moyses: muche more ought they to bee excused that serue and wayte vpon the ghospell, whiche is a sacrifice moste acceptable to God. He that did ordayne the Sabboth daye may also take awaye the Sabboth: and he that ordeyned the Sabboth daye, dyd ordayne it for mans sake, and contrarywiſe he made not man because of the Sabboth daye. It is mete therfore that the kepyng of the Sabboth daye geue place to the profite and commoditie of man, and not man to perishe because of the Sabboth daye. If sacrifice be made so muche of, that whoso attendeth vpon it, may blameleſſe breake the Sabboth daye, why holde ye not hym excused, whiche by a neceſſarie benefyte helpeth his neyghbour vpon the Sabboth daye? For God confeſſeth that he esteemeth more this kinde of sacrifice, than yf a man offer vp to him a beaſt. For he sayeth by his Prophete Oſee. I deſyre mercye and not sacrifice: And the knowledge of God, more than brente sacrifice. Ye take vpon you to be learned in the lawe, and yet this is wrytten in the lawe, whiche yf ye truely vnderſtoode, ye would neuer haue blamed them that be blameleſſe, for a lyght matter, a noysome to no manne. For there be certayne ordinaunces, not that they be good of yll of themſelfes, but that by some meanes they be profitable to wardes godlines, and do rather ſignifie, than bring or geue holines: as be kindes of meate, the colour or fashion of garmentes, or the ſtuffe that they muſte be made of, fasting, and holy dayes. These thinges we muſt not ſo ſuperſticiouſly obſerue and kepe, that for them we omitte and let paſſe thinges that be of themſelues and euer good, or doe those thynges whiche be of themſelues and euer yll.

But I saye vnto you, &c.

Wherfore ye wille what this meaneth, &c.

Idoutrye, homicide, backbytyng and enuye, bee euer yll and wicked: And yet they that bee of the phariſaicall religion, doe leſſe abhorre from these thynges, than from the breakyng of the Sabboth daye. To helpe thy nedye neghbour is euer godlye and holy, and yet the Phariſeis vnder the colour of kepyng of the Sabboth daye, ſuffre theyr neyghbour to be greued and vexed.

But he departed thence, and went into their Synagogue. And beholde there was a man hauyng a withered hand. And they aſked him, saying: Is it lawfull to heale vpon the Sabboth dayes? That they myght accuſe him. And he sayed vnto them: who emong you shall haue a wepe, and it it fall into a pit on the Sabboth daies, will he not take it and lift it out? Than howe muche better is a man than a wepe? Wherfore it is lefull to do a good dede on the Sabboth dayes. Than sayeth he to the man: Stretch furth thy hande. And he stretched it furth. And it was reſtored vnto healthy lyke as the other.

This daungerous ſuperſtition, Jeſus Chriſte studied clerely to plucke out of the myndes of his diſciples. Therfore to the intent he myght beate the ſame into the myndes of all men by a more manifeſt example, departing from this place, he returned into their Synagogue, myndyng to take them to witneſſe, whom he knewe to be chiefly infected with this diſeaſe. And behold, furthwith

there

And beholde there was a manne hauyng a withered hand

there was geuen hym occasion of a miracle. For there was one in the multitude whiche had a lame and a withered ryght hande. Nowe the Pharisees lokyng after an honest quarell to accuse Jesus, marked him whether he would heale the man vpon the sabboth day, which a litle before defended thapostles where as they were blamed for breakyng of the sabboth daye. But Jesus myndyng to declare vnto all men that their accusemente came not of religion but of enuy, commaunded the man with the lame hande to come furth before them, that the faulte myght appere vnto them all, to the intent they myght be moued with pitie toward the miserable man, whiche had that member dead and vnprofitable, that is moste necessary for a poore manne. But before he healed the man not ignorauntе what the Pharisees thought, he demaunded of them this question. Is it lefull to heale a manne on the sabboth daye? And whether is it more tollerable emong you to doe good to a man or to do yll, to saue a manne or to destroy hym? For he destroyeth hym, who whan he maye saue hym, doth not saue hym. But they all helde their peace leste the people should thynke them cruell, yf they should saye, it were not lawfull to helpe and succour a miserable manne on the sabboth daye, or leste they should lese their occasion to blame Jesus, yf they had answered it had been lawfull.

And they asked hym. &c.

Who emong you shall haue a shepe.

They therfore saying nothyng, Jesus himselfe byndyng furth an example louseth the knot of the question. Whiche emong you (q he) shall be founde so religious and deuoute a keper of the sabboth day, that yf it chaunce one of his shepe to bein daunger, by fallyng into the dyke on the sabboth daye, wyll he not put to his hande furthwith to pluckе her out? If auarice can do so muche with you, that ye had rather breake the sabboth daye, than to diminysshe your substaunce by one shepe: howe muche more ought charitie to preuayle, and obtayne of you, to helpe your neyghbour on the sabboth day, whiche is farre better than a shepe? It is manifest therfore (I reporte me to you) to be lawfull to helpe your neyghbour with a good turne vpon the sabboth daye.

Whan Jesus perceyued he to the manne.

But whan Jesus perceyued that their enuy would not be mitigated neyther by these wordes, nor by the syght of the miserable man, and that they would not be moued by so euident and playne reason, casting his eyes about, taking it greuously, and beyng sory for suche great blindnes of their hearts, he turned vnto hym that had the drye and withered hande, and sayed: Put furth thyne hande: and at that woorde he put furth his hande as plyaunt and nimble, as the other was.

The texte.

When the Pharisees went out, and helde a counsayle agaynst hym, howe they myght destroye him. But Jesus whan he knewe it, departed thence, and muche people folowed hym, and he healed them all, and charged them that they shulde not vtter hym: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esay the prophete, whan he sayeth. Behold my seruaunt whome I haue chosen: my beloued in whome my soule hath muche delyght. I will put my spirite in him, and he shall shewe iudgement vnto the Gentyles. He shall not stryue nor crye, nor ther shall any man heare his voyce in the stretes. He shall not breake the broosed reede, and he shall not quenche the smokyng flaxe, tyll he sende furth iudgement vnto victory, and the Gentyles shall trust in his name.

The Pharisees driuen into a rage by this so notable an acte, when they perceyued that they had loste an occasion to accuse Jesus, departyng out of the Synagoge, & leauyng the multitude whom they perceyued to beare a good myndе vnto Jesus, consulted secretly with the Herodians, whiche also had to do with John his disciples, which enuyed ꝑ glory of Jesus, by what meanes they myght rydde Jesus out of the waye. They had nowe a will toward murder, and nothyng lacked but a mete occasion. But Jesus not ignozaunte what they intended, withdrewe himselfe from that place, leste he myght seme to haue geuen some occasion of extreme delyng to the rageyng and furyous men. He myght haue spytefully represte them, he myght haue ouerwhrimed them with miracles, he might haue destroyed the also, but myndyng to shewe the euangelicall mekenes, he gaue place to theyr rage & fury, ꝑ perhaps they would relent and repent: and thus farre he gaue place vnto them, that neuertheles in other places he distributed his heauelydoctrine vnto the multitude, which folowed him thicke and threfold, and as many sicke men, oz otherwise mysceable, as were brought vnto hym, he healed them. Foz his tyme was not yet come the gholpell was not yet sufficiently spred abzode. Wherfore he gaue place to them, not to prouyde foz hymselfe, but to take from them the occasion of a wicked dede, & to teache withall, that the wyldome of the gholpell ought not to be defended against the disobedient with threatnynges, wyth checkes oz contencions, but with mildenes & mekenes. Therfore he cõmaunded the multitude ꝑ folowed hym, that they should not disclose hym, leste the rumour spredyng abzode, the Phariseis myght bee stirred more and more. Neyther was this thyng dorn by chaunce, but it was prophecied nowe long before by the Prophete Esay that it should so come to passe: In ꝑ wrytinges of the whiche Prophete the father doeth declare & set furth the victorye of his sonne obteyned thozowe mekenes, and the saluacion of the gholpell translated to the Gentyles, foz the pertinacye and dubbernesse of the Jewes, sufficiently knowen to all men. Behold (sayeth he) my sonne whom I haue chosen before other: behold my dere beloued, in whom my soule is delited. I will geue vnto hym my meke and gentle spirite, by whinspiracion wherof, he shall shewe iudgement, not onely to the people of Israel, but also to all nacions. He shall not doe this tumultuously oz violently. Foz he shall not chyde noz shall not crye out against them that be contencious. No man shall heare his voyce in the streetes, as they be wonte that warre with the tong. He shall geue place to the inuincible malice, but he shall endeuour to bryng all vnto saluacion. He shall geue none occasion to the ꝑfect of theyr incurable destruction, but he shall tame all, ꝑ by any meanes they can turne themselues vnto the better. He will not despise the weake, he will not despyse the feble, in whome there shall remayne any good hope: he will cherysshe them, rather than oppresse them. He will not breake the brosed reede, and he will not quenche out the smokyng flare, vntyll the trueth of it selfe, by the processe of time, haue the hyghet hand and vntyll the madnesse of the wicked thzough theyr owne default breake out so farre, that all men maye perceyue, that they be worthely repelled and cast awaye. Than the Gentyles shall embrace his doctryne, whiche the Jewes despised, and put theyr trust in hym, whom the Jewes refused to trust.

And the people folowed hym he healed them all.

And charged the. ꝛc.

That it myght bee fulfilled which was spoken by Esay. ꝛc.

¶ Than was brought vnto hym, a blynde and dumme man, vexed with a deuyll: and he healed hym, in so muche that the blynde and dumme, both spake and sawe. And all the people were amased, & sayed: Is not this that sonne of Dauid? But wha the Phariseis heard it, they sayed: This felowe dryueth not out deuils but by the help of Belzebub the prynce of deuils. But whan Jesus knew their thoughtes, he sayed vnto thē: Euery kyngdom deuided against it selfe shalbe brought to naught. And euery citie oz house deuided against it selfe selfe shall not stand. And if Sathan cast out Sathã, he is deuided against himselfe. How than shall his kingdom endure? And if I cast out deuils by the help of Belsebub, by whose help do your children cast them out? Therfore they shall be your iudges. But yf I cast out deuils by the spirite of God, than is the kingdom of God come vnto you. Or els how can one enter into a strong mans house and spoyle his iewels except he first binde the strong man, and than spoyle his house?

This followeth out deuils, &c.

It chaunced in the meane tyme that emong many whome he healed, they offered vnto Jesus one that was possessed with a deuyll, whiche had taken from the wretched man both his eyes and his toung. Jesus commaunded the deuill to departe: he departed, and forthwith the moste miserable maume was wholy restored in such wyse that both he sawe and spake. The multitude was amased at that so great a matter, and nowe suspecting hym to bee Messias, they spake among themselues. Is this that sonne of Dauid, whom the Prophetes dyd prompse? But when the Pharisees heard this voyce of the people, they set not vpon Jesus hymselfe, of whom alwayes they had the worse, but they endeuour to withdraw the hartes of the multitude from the honouring and veneration of him. They cannot be (say they) that this is that sonne of Dauid as ye suppose. For he shall come downe by and mayntayned by the power of God. He casteth not out deuils by the helpe of God, sith he is wicked and a breaker of the Sabboth daye, a glotton, and a drunkard, and a companion of the Publicanes, but by the helpe of Belzebub the prynce of deuils. Now Jesus although he heard not their voyce, yet knowing both what they thought, and what they spake to others, turnyng vnto the Pharisees, so ordereth his answer, that by manifest reason he reproueth them; madde rayling and ire bube, and yet he rayleth not on them agayne, but rather pricketh them louingly to embrace their health and saluacion. Euery kyngdome (say he) deuided with inwarde deuision and discorde, muste nedes come to naught. And euery house stryuyng with it selfe, with inwarde disagreing must nedes fall.

But when Jesus knew their thoughtes &c.

And yf I cast out deuils, &c.

And yf Sathan driueth out Sathan, and yf one deuyll driueth out an other, howe shall his kyngdome endure? And howe is it lykely and greable, all deuilles beyng enemyes of menne, destryng nothyng but the hurte and destruction of them, whose healthy miserably they doe enuy, that nowe they fauour so greatly their health, that for this cause one deuyll stryueth figh with an other? Nowe yf I cast out deuils by the power and helpe of Belzebub, thefe me disciples your children, whom ye knowe, by whose helpe cast they out deuils? for they also cast out deuils, and yet ye reproue not them, but only me ye falsely blame: and yet they haue might of me to cast them out. Therfore it cannot be that they should chase awaye deuils in the power of God, and I in the might of Belzebub, sith they doe it in my name. And therfore men vnlettered and vnlearned be able to doe so great thynges, because they beleue simply that by the power of God I chase awaye deuils. Therfore they? godly belefe shall condeme your vnbelefe, because you desyre rather wilfully to reproue, whereas ye might be godly folowers. And if the thyng it selfe declare that I doe cast out deuils not by the helpe of ? deuill, but by the might of God, ye ought not to doubte any more, but that the sone of Dauid is come, and the kyngdom of God. Sith ye see that the strength of the aduerlatyes doeth banysche awaye, whan they whiche professe the ghospell call vpon my name. Therfore lyke as there is a concorde and agrement emong the deuils themselues to destroye all men: so I whiche am

Therfore they shalbe your iudges.

am cum to saue all men, haue no concorde nor agrement with them, but deadly dissention and disagremente. Hitherto Beelzebub hath exercised hys tyrannye vpon sinfull men geuen vnto hym for hys desyres: I take awaye the synnes of men doe confounde and destroy Beelzebub the Prynce wyth hys whole garde, and I doe restore vnto god through innocencye, whom he did possesse throughe vnryghteousnes. The thyng is done by force, not by any agrementе betwene me and the deuills. They feele, and confesse that there is a present power wherunto they be forced to geue place. Or els howe maye it be that any man myght enter into the towre of a myghty man, and take away his stuffe, vnlesse fyrst he ouer-cum the myghty man, and lay him in bandes? Than he once kept vnder which was hable to resyste, he wyl spoyle the whole house, and as it were carye awaye hys pray. The worlde is the house of Beelzebub. In thys he claimed to hym a certeyne kyngdome, because the whole worlde was geuen to ambicion, excesse, lychy lustes, auarice, anger, enuy, and other noysom desyres, by the whiche he is made myghty. I as a man of more power and valiantnes, haue entred into his kyngdome, and ouercumming him haue wunne againe to the true prince, that whiche he vniustly did possesse. Therfore there is no agrement betwene vs: the pryces be diuers, the kingdomes be diuerse, by no bande or leage to be reconciled and made at one.

He that is not with me, is against me: and he that gathereth not with me, scattereth abrode. The terte.
Wherfore I saye vnto you, all maner of synne and blasphemy shalbe forgeuen men, but the blasphemye against the spirite, shall not be forgeuen men. And whosoeuer speaketh a word against the sonne of man, it shalbe forgeuen him, But whosoeuer speaketh against the holy goste, it shal not be forgeuen hym, neyther in thys worlde, nor in the worlde to cumme.
Either make the tree good, and hys fruite good, or els make the tree euyll, and hys fruite euyll. For the tree is knowen by hys fruite. O generacion of vypers, howe canne ye speake good thinges, whā ye your selues are euyll: for out of the aboūdaunce of the hart, the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the good treasure of the harte, bringeth furth good thynges.
And an euill man out of the ill treasure bringeth furth euil thynges. But I saye vnto you, that of euery vayne worde that men shall haue spoken, they shall geue account in the day of iudgement. For of thy woordes thou shalte be iustyfyed, and of thy woordes thou shelt bee condemned.

He that wyl be grafte in the kyngdome of god, muste withdrawe hymselfe from the kyngdome of Beelzebub, and muste fight agaynst hym in my tentes.
No man can be at peace wyth God, vnlesse he be at war with the deuyll. I take goddes parte, and not Beelzebubs. Therfore whoso is not in my tentes, is my enemye, and aduersarye. And whoso healpeth not me in gatherynge together, is agaynst me in scatteryng abrode. See that ye ioyne youre selfe to the better parte. It is better to obteyne health in the kyngdome of God, than euerlasting deathe in the kyngdome of the deuill. Ceasse from seruyng of synne, and the deuil shall haue no power ouer you. God wyll receiue them to hys kyngdome that run from hym, and wyll not impute the synnes of the former lyfe, bee they neuer so outragiouse, vnto such as be penitent. Thys onely is to bee obserued, that no manne blynded with enuye, and peruerted wyth malice, withstande the glorye of god agaynste hys owne conscience: and where as he seeth with hys eyes the diuyne power by manifeste synges and wonders, to be opened to the worlde, that he attribute it not to the spirite of Beelzebub. Wherfore thys
I assure you, whatsoeuer is done by woorde or dede, shall bee remitted vnto men, so that they repente them. God doeth easyly forgeue that whiche by anye meanes is venyall and pardonable by the reason of frayltye of mannes nature.

But yf any man speake blasphemye against the spirite of God, whose manifest power he seeth of hys playne woorkes, he shall scarcely fynde pardonne and forgeuenes. And whoso speaketh blasphemy agaynst the sonne of man, whom he despyseth for the weaknesse of hys flesche, he shall bee pardoned, because errour and ignorauance mirte wyth hys doopng, dothe exclude peruerse and set malice. But whoso speaketh blasphemy agaynst the holye ghost, shall vneth obteyne pardonne and forgeuenes eyther in this worlde, or in the worlde to come. This thyng spake Jesus to thyntente he wouldе feare the Phariseis from theyr obstinate frowardnes, because whan they sawe and perceyued that those thynges whiche he dydde, coulde not bee doene but by the spirite and the myght of God, yet they moued with enuy reuiled the glory of god, and ascrybed his miracles vnto Beelzebub, whose spirite they saide wroughte in Christe.

Eyther make the tree blame the tree, eyther ye cannot but allowe and commende the fruite / The good & hys fruite good ys.

Whan after common reason (saieth he) the tree is knowen of the fruite, why do they miracles whyche I woorke, ease and releue the miseries of menne: they hurt no man, they be not done for vayne ostentacion and glory, or for gaine and lucre, but to do good and to healpe. No man can deny but thys is good, freely to doe for them that be in affliction. Why therfore saye ye that that which is good of it selfe, cummeth from Beelzebub, who by your owne iudgement is al naughte? If ye will hyde the blindenesse of your myndes, ye muste speake thynges that may stande together, nowe the thynges whiche ye speake, agree not together after the common iudgemente of menne. Therfore eyther make the tree good and his fruite good, or els make the tree ill and his fruite ill. Either graūt that I am moued wyth a good spirite, whereas ye graunte that my woorkes bee good, or els saye that my woorkes be ill, that your saiyng may appere probable, where ye saye that I haue the spirite of wicked Beelzebub. And yf my doynges be suche that ye muste nedes cōfesse that they be good, ascrybe not good thinges to an ill authour. Ye kinred of vipers, yll men spryngyng of yll parentes, conjecture and iudge ye by your selues: Do ye not speake euen as ye be, and doos not your woorkes declare what spirite ye haue? Ye enuy the glorye of god, and falsely blame his spirite. From whence cummeth so pestilente frupte, but of an euill tree? For as it can not bee that a wylde tree shoulde bryng furth gentil fruite, and that a tree of poysoned iuyce shoulde bryng furth holsom appulles: euen so how can ye speake well syth ye be yll? For as the fruite taketh hys taste and verdoure of the iuyce of the roote: so communycacion ryseth of that whiche is hyd in the harte, lyke as a good manne bryngeth furthe good thynges oute of the good treasure of his harte: so the yll man bryngeth furthe yll thynges out of the euyll treasure of hys harte. Whose harte is replenished with godlines and charitie, they speake woordes whiche sauour of that that is in the harte. Whose harte is replenished wyth enuy, pryde, and auarice, they vse suche communycacion, whyche by the mouthe doeth bitter the affeccion of the harte. Menne shall be esteemed before god not onely of theyr dedes, but also of theyr woordes. An ill thought is pestiferouse and noysome onely vnto the thynker, but yl talking doeth powre out the poyson of the harte emongest many. The tonge therfore muste bee refrayned, not onely from outragiouse blasphemies, from skolding, chyding, and backbityng, and vncleanly communicacion, but vtterly from all thinges wherof cummeth none honeste profite or commoditie. Yea I saye vnto you, that man shall render a count in the day of iudgement not onely for filthy talkyng, talkyng, but also for euery vayne, idle, and vnprofitable worde, that they shall speake. For theyr wordes also, shalbe taken and accounted for dedes. Of thy wordes eyther thou shalte be iudged good, yf good wordes issue out of a good harte, or thou shalte be condemned as vniuste, yf yll wordes issue out of an yll harte. And here vnderstande ye the perfecte instyce of the kyngdome of heauen, far passyng the iustice of Moyses lawe. For that lawe punysheth onely the manifest blasphemye agaynste god: here shall be punyshed also anye reuylyng or taunte agaynste thy neyghbour, and not only the noysome and perilouse sayeing, but also the idle and vaine worde. For that whiche is vnprofitable on the tree, is the burden of the tree and not the frute: and therfore it is noysome, because it occupieth the time and the eares of the heater, without any fruite or profite, whereas the tounge is geuen for this intent, that therwith we should profite our selues and our neyghboure, and that with this member we should celebrate and magnifye the glory of God.

Than certayne of the Scribes and Phariseis asked hym saying: maister we will see a sygne of the: but he aunswered and sayde vnto them: The euyll and aduoutrous generacion seketh a sygne, and there shall no sygne be geuen to them, but the signe of the prophete Jonas. For as Jonas was three dayes and three nyghtes in the whales belly: so shall the sonne of man be three dayes and three nyghtes in the harte of the yearth. The men of Ninyue shall arysem the iudgement with this nacion, and condemne it, because they amended at the preachyng of Jonas: Beholde here is one greatter than Jonas. The quene of the south shall ryse in the iudgement with this generacion, and shal condemne it. For she came from the vtmoste partes of the worlde, to heare the wisedome of Salomon. And beholde in thys place is one greater than Salomon. The texte.

Certayne of the scribes and phariseys whan they had hearde these thinges, dissemblyng the rage of theyr myndes, go vnto Jesus with moze gentyl wooz-des, as though they wouldе nowe beleue him, yf for theyr sake he wouldе shewe sum miracle wozthye and meete for them and also for hym, who chalenged to hym the spirite of god, and had alwayes in his mouthe the heauenlye father. Maister (q they) we whiche bee not of the common sorte, but learned men, desyze of you to see sum notable sygne from heauen, whiche maye declare that ye be derely beloued of god, and that ye doe that thyng whiche ye do by his power and myght. But Jesus knowyng theyr subtill thoughte and obstinate malice, whiche required a sygne for none other intent, but to take a newe occasion thereby falsely to accuse hym, chiefly sithe it is moze ealse to pycke a quarell at thole thynges whiche bee shewed from heauen, than at those thynges whiche appeare before the eyes, bee heardе with eares, and touched with handes: not beatyng so greate frowardnes, but in maner turning from them, and taking it angrely (as it were) with hymselfe, made answere, saiyng: O naughtye and counterfeit nacion, whiche doethe glorye that they haue god to theyr father, whiche doeth crake of her progenitoure Abraham, where as it foloweth rather them whiche forsakynge God, wurshypped the golden calfe: whyche stryed sedicion agaynste Moyses: whyche murmured in the deserte: whyche kylled the Prophetes: whereas it declareth that it hathe Beelzebub to her father, with whose spirite beyng replenyshed, it doeth rebell agaynste the spirite of God. The euyll and aduoutrous ge-neracion, &c.

But it shall haue no sygne geuen from heauen, whiche it maye calumniate and reproue, and whiche it is vnworthye to haue, for as muche as it is wholly ſette and geuen to the pearthe , but once there ſhalbe a ſygne geuen to it out of the pearth whereby it maye be ouercum and vtterly peryſhe, yf it will not conuerte. This nacion meruayled at the miracle of the Prophete Jonas, whyche ſwallowed vp of a beaſte in the ſea, was reſtored againe alyue after thre dayes. Thys ſhalbe a ſufficient ſygne for them, yf they maye ſee hym reyſue again vp by the deuine power, whome by theyr malice they haue ſlayne . Thys myracle ſhortly ſhalbe ſhewed vnto them, whiche they will falſly ſlaunder.

For as Jonas was thre dayes &c.

For lyke as Jonas willyngly deliuered hymſelfe to deathe, and was receyued of the beaſt of the ſea, and was in her belly three dayes, and three nyghtes, and beyng paſte hope of all meane, byandby throughe the healpe of God was reſtored alyue: ſo ſhe ſonne of manne ſhall bee deade in the harte of the pearthe three dayes and three nyghtes . By thys ſygure and darke exaumple, Jeſus ſygnifieth hys deathe and burriall, and furthwith hys ryſyng from death. And he added . As Jonas was to the Ninyuites, ſo am I to you . He tolde them that the vengeaunce of god , and the deſtruction of theyr citye was at hande, vnleſſe they would repent: I declare the ſame vnto you all. But the Ninyuites whome ye deſpyſe as heathen and idolaters in compariſon of you, ſhall ryſe in the iudgemente of God, and ſhall declare you worthelye to be damned in compariſon of them. For they although they were ſynfull, yet beyng a feardе at the threatenynges of the Prophete, humbled themſelues vnto penaunce . And beholde ; here is one greatter than Jonas, whyche preacheth to you in vayne.

The men of Ninyue ſhal ryſe, &c.

The Ninyuites were people farre from the wurſhyppynge of God. Jonas vnknowen, and ſymple, and meke came vnto them . No man commended hym, or tolde before of hys cummyng, he ſhewed no miracles, he allured vnto hym no bodye with benefite, he promyſed no great thyng. Onely he threatned vndoyng and deſtruction, and he preached no lenger than three dayes. I being promyſed by thoracles of the Prophetes, ſo often commended by the teſtimonye of John, by the teſtimonie of the father , beyng your countreman, beyng cummen alſo of the ſame parentes of whome ye glorye and crake: haue taught you nowe ſo long tyme, teſtifyng by ſo manye miracles, that my doctryne is not vayne: haue holpe ſo manye wyth my free benefites, and doe not thunder ſore threatenynges, but of myne owne accorde promyſe forgeuenes of all ſynnes: I offer euerlaſtyng felicitie of the heauenly kyngdome: yet it is ſayed that I haue the ſpirite of Beelzebub: I am layed at with deadlye deceptes, ſo farre ye bee from repentaunce and bowyng to true penaunce.

The quene of the ſouth ſhal ryſe, &c.

Furthermore, the quene of Saba ſhall ryſe in the iudgement, to the reprochе and condemnacion of this generacion, because that ſhe by the reaſon of tidynges brought far of, leuing her kingdome and her countreye, toke a longe iourneye vnto Salomon, not moued by any feare, but only for the deſyre of wiſedome. And ſhe did not only cum to Salomon, but alſo ſhe brought with her great gyftes . And beholde, there is one in thys place greater than Salomon. For what lyke thyng dyd Salomon to the tyrannes whiche ye ſee me do: or what lyke thyng taught Salomon: And yet ye put me to al kynde of rebukes, whyche of myne owne accorde byeng vnto you the doctryne of the goſpell, whereby ye maye be ſaued: furthermore alſo, ye go about to do me more grieuouſe diſpleaſures whych am beneficiall vnto you. But the greatter the wonders and benifites be whereby ye bee prouoked vnto penaunce: the greuouſer ſhall your punyſhemente bee, vnleſſe ye repent in tyme.

¶ When the vncleane ſpirytte is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places ſeking reſt, and findeth none. Than he ſaieth: I wyl returne into my houſe, from whence I came. And when he is cum, he fyndeth it empty, and ſwept and garnyſhed. Than he goeth and taketh vnto hym ſeuen other ſpirittes worſe than hymſelfe, and ſo enkereth in, and dwelleth there. And the ende of that man is worſe than the begynnyng. So ſhall it bee alſo vnto this frowa: de generacion: The texte.

Further what thyng ſhoulde chaunce vnto them. and into what blyndneſſe the people of Iſraell ſhoulde cum, and howe miſerably it ſhould be handled of the prynces of Rome, and how it ſhould be baniſhed throughout the worlde, reiected and deſpiſed of all nacions. Jeſus had rather to ſignifie by a certayne darcke exaumple, than to declare it manifeſtlye. And he taketh a ſymilitude of a man whyche was poſſeſſed of a deuyll, who whereas he was once deliuered and reſtored to hys ryght mynde, afterwardes by his fwne defaulte receyuyng the deuill agayne, was moze grieuouſly vexed, than he was before. When an vncleane ſpirite (ſayth he) goeth out from a man, beyng banyſhed from his olde hoſpitall, he walketh in dry and baren places, ſeking reſt and fyndeth none. Than ſayeth he wyth hymſelfe. I will returne into the houſe from whence I came, where when he cummeth, he fyndethe it decked and cleanſed, but withoute anye geaſt. Than he ſeyng that there is a place and not occupied of anye other, not beyng contente to returne thyther hymſelfe alone, he taketh vnto hym ſeuen other ſpirittes worſe than hymſelfe, whych entryng into the houſe together, make theyr dwellyng there. And it cummeth to paſſe, that the man is moze greuouſly vexed than he was before. So ſhall it happen to this vngracious nacion. By thys ſimilitude Jeſus noted the obſtinate and wylfull malice of the people of Iſraell, falling backe oftentimes to theyr olde maners. In tymes paſte they ſerued and kolowed the deuiliſh vices and deſpites. It was ſumwhat deliuered by the lawe and the Prophetes, but returned often agayne to her own manner and diſpoſicion. It retourned to Idolles, it did ſacrifice in the woodes, it kylled the Prophetes. It was redreſſed and amended through afflictions by Pharao in Egypte, by Nabuchodonoſer in Babilon, and by diuerſe other calamities and miſeries. Finally prouoked of the ſonne of god ſo many waies, hathe not onely renewed, but alſo farre exceded al the wickednelle of her forefathers, not only araiyng the harmeleſſe and the well doer wyth al kynde of ſpitefulnes, but alſo dryuyng him vnto the croſſe and paſſion with falſe accuſementes. Wherefor a certayne monſtruous blyndneſs, and ſeuen tymes moze miſerable than the blindnes of theyr fathers, hath poſſeſſed theyr hartes, and therfore they ſhall be moze cruelly handled and deſtroyed than they haue been hytherto.

¶ And when he yet talked to the people, beholde hys mother and brethren ſtoode withoute deſyryng to ſpeake wyth him. And one ſaied vnto him. Behold thy mother and thy brethrē ſtande without deſyryng to ſpeake with the. But he anſwered and ſaied vnto him that had tolde him. Who is my mother, or who be my brethren? and he put furth hys hand towarde hys diſciples, ſaying: Beholde my mother and my brethren. For whoſo doeth the wyll of my father whyche is in heauen, the ſame is my brother, and ſiſter, and mother. The texte.

As Jeſus ſpake theſe thynges to the people, there came the mother of Jeſus, wyth certayne of hys coſens whyche deſyred to ſpeake wyth hym. But when they coulde not cumme vnto hym for the multitude beyng ſo thycke, and ſtandyng aboute the dooꝛes of the houſe, a voyce paſſyng ouer from one to another, a certayne man interrupted the communication of Jesus, and tolde hym that hys mother and hys brethren were at the dooze whiche desyred to speake with hym. But Jesus offended wyth this importunitie and troublesumnes and wyllyng also to teache that such affections should be passed litle vpon, as often as the matter of the gospel is in hande, and that the kinred of the myndes ought moze to be regarded than the kynred of the bodies, whyche is gotten by vertue and not by the nerenes of bloud, the whych also is moze large than the other, he aunswereth him whych interrupted him. Who is my mother and who are my brethren? I being occupied about the heauenly bulines knowledge no mother nor brethren, ioyned by carnall affinitie: wherof sum bee far of perchaunce in hartes. And holdyng out his hand towardes his disciples, which syttyng nere receyued gredely in silence his wholsome doctryne, if ye wil know (sayth he) my very true kinsfolkes which be moste dere vnto me, these be my mother my sisters, and my brethren. Here is no differeuce of kinde or age, no respecte of kinred. Whosoeuer doth obey the wyl of my father whyche is in heauen, he is my mother, he is my sister, he is my brother. Jelleme hyghely the spiritual and not the bodily affinitie. This affinitie euery man may come by. Euery mã like as he is moste obedient vnto my fathers wyl, so he is moste nere and moste dere vnto me.

The .xiii. Chapter.

The texte. The same day Jesus went out of the house, and sate by the sea syde, and much people were gathered vnto hym, insomuche that he went and sate in a shyp, and the people stood on the shoore, and he spake many thynges to them by similitudes, saying: Behold the sowyer went forth to sowe, and as he sowed, some sedes fell by the way syde, and the soules came and deuoured them vp. And some fell vpon stony places where they had not much yearthe, and anon they sprong vp, because they had no depenes of yearth. And when the sunne was vp, they caught heate, and because they had no roote, they withered away. Agayne some fell emong the thornes and the thornes sprong vp and choked them. But some fell into good ground and brought forth fruite, some an hundred folde, some sixty folde, some thirty folde: Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let hym heare.

And he spake to the many thynges in similitudes,

AT the same tyme whan Jesus sawe that the place was not able to receiue suche a multitude, he went oute of the house to the water syde. And whan he came thyther, he satte vpon the banke, teachyng the people whiche gaped after his doctryne insatiablye. Further when he sawe the multitude so great and thicke, that they thruste hym, and prelled hym: and to thintente he myght bee at moze libertye from the people, he entred into a shyp, and spake out of that as out of a pulpit, to the people standyng vpon the banke. For so he myght be both better seene and better heard of manye, because the sande of the banke and the bzincke of the banckes made as though it were a rounde auditozy.

And because in that multitude euery man had not one mynde, he shewed and sette further manye thynges vnto them by darke similitudes, eyther because thys maner of speakyng is familiar and commonlye vsed of the prophetes, or because it is moste meete and conuenient for to teache and to moue the myndes of the people, because that comparison taken of thynges that bee well knowen and perceyued also of them that be vnlearned, by and by toucheth and moueth euerye one: or because by this feate and pleasaunte manner of speakyng, thynges that bee spoken bothe creepeth into mennes myndes moze pleasauntlye and lye, and sticketh more surely: or els because that thys manner of monicion slauderyng no manne, but secretly by similitude touchyng euery mannes conscience, is wont commonly lesse to offende. And yssue of all he setteth further a parable, signifyeng that many on euery syde come runnyng to the preachyng of the gospell, and yet fruite sprygeth not in them all: whiche chaunceth not by the faulte of the teacher, but by the faulte of the hearers. Nor lyke fruite sprygeth not in all the hearers, but accordyng as euery manne bryngeth a mynde voyde from worldlye cares and desyres: so is the fruite of the worde that is heard of hym greatest. Therfore exhortyng to geue audience, he putteth furth thys parable, saiyng: The sowyer went furth to sowe his sede, and as he caried his seede abroade certayne corues fell by the waye syde, and because they were bare and barenes red, the birdes came flyeng and eate them up. Agayne other summe fell in the rough and stony places, which when they were not depely couered with yearthe, because of stones that letted them, nor couloe not take roote depely enoughe, they sprang up shortelye and before they tyme. throughe the warmnes of the sunne, because there was not muche yearthe to kepe them couered vnto they tyme, nor no deepe roote to minister humoure and mosture. Agayne other sum fell into the thorny grounde, and by the reason of increase of thornes, they were kepte downe and choked, and couide not tyse nor sprynge up at they libertye. Further other sum fell vpon a good and a fruitful grounde, and springyng up luckely brought furth fruite, yet not al alyke but accordyng to the goodnesse of the grounde: sum an hundred folde, sum three score folde, some thyrtye folde as muche: so that of one sede sprang an eare that bare an hundred cornes: of another that bare three score, of another that bare thyrtye. Jesus speakyng these thynges did not as than explicate and declare the darke riddel and similitude, but leaueth it to euery manne to coniecture and thinke vpon in hys mynde. Onely he made an exhortacion that thei that had meete eares shoulde heare the parable diligently.

And the disciples came and saide vnto him: Why speakest thou to them by parables? he answered and saide vnto them. It is geuen vnto you to knowe the misteries of the kyngdome of heauen, but vnto them it is not geuen. For whosoeuer hath, to him shalbe geuen, and he shalbe made more aboundaunt. But whosoeuer hathe not, from hym shalbe taken, that also whiche he hath. The xiii. verse

But another tyme when the disciples hadde Jesus alone, they wente vnto him and asked hym why he spake vnto the people by darke and obscure similitudes. Vnto whome Jesus answered on thys wyse: because as yet they yelde not themselues mete to haue the truethe opened vnto them, by the whiche certayne of them emonge the multitude bee not onely not the better, but also bee pricked and stirred to be the worse. Wherfore I utter vnto them lyke manner of preachyng as they bryng hartes to heare. They wil not understand thynges that be moste manifeste. I doe inuolue and wrappe my language with darkenes, that by suche meanes I maye prouoke them to the desyre of learnyng and searchyng. But ye whiche receyue symplye and desirously the thyng that is geuen, ye are worthye to bee partakers of the more secrete thynges concernyng the wisedome of the gospell. For vnto hym that hath, it shall bee geuen, that he maye haue aboundantlye, but vnto hym that hath nothyng, nothyng shall bee added, insomuche that he shall bee also spoyled of that whyche he semed for to haue. In other thynges it is a cruell thyng to spoyle hym that is nedy: Here because pouerty cummeth throughe the defaulte of the nedy, it is mete and ryghte to take from the vnkinde manne. We bring and offer freely certaine principles of heauenly Philoiophy, and that accordyng to the capacitie and simplicitie of the myndes, as castyng certaine seedes, whyche whoso receyueth desirously, truly he prouoketh vs to commit mo thynges vnto hym. Contrarywise, whoso despiseth and reiecteth that whiche is geuen freely, and turneth it to occasion of more yll, is he not worthy to be spoyled of that whiche he had vnworthely.

Therfore speake I to them by similitudes, because they seyng, se not, and thei hearing, heare not: and vnderstande not, And ✠ prophecie of Esay is fulfilled in them, whyche sayeth: Ye
The texte. shal heare wyth your eares, and shal not vnderstande: and seyng ye shal se, & shall not se. For the harte of this people is waxed grosse, and they: eares be dul of hearyng, and their eyes shut they: lest at any tyme they should se with they: eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstand with they: harte, and be conuerted, and I heale them.

For thys cause I speake to them in darke parables because they will heare the manifest veritie neyther with no profite, or els to they: owne hurt. For it cumeth to passe throughe their frowardnes, that where as thei haue eyes and se manifest tokens, yet beyng blynded with enuye, they see not that whyche they see. And where as they haue eares and heare the trueth that cannot be confuted, yet thei heare not that that they heare, nor vnderstande not ✠ which they heare although they vnderstande. Truely the saiyng of Esaie is fulfylled in these men: Ye shal heare wyth your eares and not vnderstande, and ye shall see with your eyes, & yet not se. For the harte of thys people is hardened, and they be dul of hearyng, and they haue closed they: eyes, lest they myght se with they: eyes, and heare with their eares, and vnderstande with they: harte, and at laste tourne vnto me, and I make them whole. Truely these men therfore be infortunate, but not to be pitied though they be very miserable, whyche wittingly and willingly re seeke they: owne destruccion, and reiect their owne helth.

But blessed be your eyes, for they see, and your eares, for they heare. For verely I say vnto
The texte. you, that many Prophetes, & righteouse men desyred to se those thynges whyche ye se, and they haue not seen: and to heare those thynges which ye heare, and they haue not heard.

Contrarywise youre eyes are blessed, because they see the thinges that we doe: your eares are blessed, because they heare the thinges ✠ we speake: Your hartes are blessed, because they vnderstande the wil of my father. This is no meane nor common felicitie, truely many prophetes and many iust and holy men, haue desyred to see ✠ thinges which ye se, and happened not to see them: and to heare the thynges which ye heare, and they had not the gifte to heare them. And they truly as in a dreame, gessed at the thyng that should cum, which ye se before you, and also heare.

Heare ye therfore the similytude of the sowier. When one heareth the woorde of the kyng-
The texte. dom, and vnderstandeth it not, than cummeth that cupi one and taketh away that whiche was sowen in his harte: this is he which was sowen by the wayes syde. But he that receiued the seede where: it was cast in stony places, the same is he that heareth the woorde, and anon with ioye receiueth it, yet hath he no roote in hymself, but dureth for a season: for when tribulacion or persecution happeneth because of the woorde, by and by he falleth. He also that receyueth seede into thornes, is he that heareth the woorde, and the care of this worlde, and deceitfulnes of riches choke vp the woorde, and so is he made vnfruitful. But he that receiueth seede vnto ✠ good ground, is he that heareth the woorde and vnderstandeth it, which also beareth fruite, and bringeth forth sum an hundreth folde, sum sixty folde, sum thirty folde.

Therfore because your simplicitie and desyre of knowledge, deserueth thys, harke ye what the parable doth meane, which I put furth of the sowier sowing his seede. There be thre sortes of men, in whom the seede of the woord of the gospel either eyther bringeth furth no fruite, or els bringeth not to perfection, the fruit that is sprong by. And the fyrste is moste baren of all. These be they whiche highely and negligently heare the wordes of the heauenlye doctryne, and suffer them not to entre into theyr myndes, nor fasten them in their remembraunce, to thintente they maye be rooted there: but theyr myndes beyng compassed and fenced with no desyre nor care, beyng armed with no purposes agaynst the assaultes of vaine thoughtes, at euery sprghte occasion they suffer that that is sowen, to be spurned at and troden downe. That perceiuing the yll and naughtye one, whiche lieth in waite and enuieth good begynnynges, byandby sendeth into the mynde, certayne sleyng and wauering cares, whiche maye destroye the seede before that it sprynge vp in grasse, or haue any roote, that they be no better than yf they had not hearde at all. These be signified by the seede that fell by the hye waye where go bothe menne and beastes, that is to saye, all maner of cares, affections of honored and of affinitie, care for common offices, loue, hatred, suspition, and suche other. These thinges chase awaye the woorde of the gospell out of the mynde, wherere before it bee receyued. Agayne there is an other, whiche receyueth (as it were seede) the woorde of the gospel with hys eares, and gredily putteth it into hys harte, recordyng and deuising wyth hymselfe to frame hys life after the rewle therof: but because he pryuateth it not vttirlye in the inwardes of hys mynde, but after the fashion of men, he doth that he doth lightly with a certayne affection for a tyme, he nourysheth the seede that he hathe taken, vntil it be growen vp to a grasse, and sheweth a certayne hope of euangelicall godlines, abstenyng from greate sinnes, and flourishyng with meane vertues. But if any stourme of persecucion begyn to ryse, and pf for the gospell sake banishment be offered, or prison, punishement, deathe, & such other whiche require a stedfast strength of the mynde, than, as at the vehemente heate of the sunne, they wyther awaye, and vtterly faynte and decaye. A figure of this was the stonie ground, whiche receyued the sede, and brought it foorth vnto grasse, but it was not able to succour and defend it with humour agaynst the heate of the sunne, for thoughe the stones it can haue no depe nor lure roote. Agayne there is an other whiche gredely heareth the woorde of the gospell, and setteth it depe ynoughe in hys mynde, and keepeth it long, but his mynde beyng intangled and choked with troublous cares of this worlde, and especiall of ryches, as it were with certayne thicke thornes, he can not freely folowe that he loueth. Because he wyl not suffer these thornes, whiche cleaue together and be intägled one with another emong themselues, to be cut away, the fruite of the seede that is sowen dothe vtterly perishe. This was signified by the similitude of the sede whiche was receiued in the grounde full of thornes and briers. Further the seede that was receiued in the good ground, signifieth them whiche bothe heare the woorde of the gospell and recorde it wyth themselues, and fasten it surelye in theyr remembraunce, and so doe powre it into thaffections of theyr mynde, that they will not swarue from it to doe therefore, who also do rydde and delyuer themselues from affections and filthye cares of ryches, whiche suffer not the mynde to be free and at liberty, but gene themselues wholy to the heauenlye inspiracion. The seede of the doctryne of the gospell is not vnprofitable to suche myndes. But lyke as one kynde of wheate bringeth not furthe lyke fruit in all groundes, but it springeth with lesse or more increase accordinge to the goodnes of the grounde: So after the godly delyre and capacite of them that heare the worde, the fruite of godlines cummeth forthe moze aboundaunlye. By thys parable Jesus taught vs, with what studye and diligence the heauenlye doctryne ought to be receyued, yf we delyre that fruit should spring out of it. These thynges Jesus dyd interprete and declare vnto hys disciples apart.

The texte. Another similitude put he forth vnto them, saying: The kyngdom of heauen is likened vnto a manne, whyche sowed good sede in hys field. But whyle men slept, hys enemye came and sowed tares emong the wheate, and went hys way. But when the blade was sprong vp and had brought forth fruit, than appeared the tares also. And the seruauntes of the housholder came and sayed vnto hym: Syr did not thou sowe good sede in thy field? From whence than hath it tares? he said vnto them: The enemouse man hath done thys. The seruauntes sayed vnto hym: Wilt thou than that we go and weede them vp? but he said, nay, lest whyle ye gather vp the tares, ye plucke vp also the wheat with them. Let both grow together vntil the haruest, and in tyme of haruest, I wyl saye vnto the reapers: gather ye first the tares, and bind them together in sheues to be burnt: but gather the wheat into my barne.

But let vs retourne vnto the order of our former communication. The lorde Jesus proposed vnto them another parable, to shewe them also that there was another poyson and mischefe to be taken hede of. For a man will laye vp pure and fine corne in hys barne. For the other ylles do onely hurt ỹ sede lately sowen, or springyng into grasse. This doeth corrupte the corne now springyng vp and well growen. Thys poyson is, when Sathan, whiche coulde not choke and destroy the sede of the euangelicall doctrine with tyrany, wauerynge, and ydle thoughtes, nor with troublesome persecutions, nor with carefulnes of riches, honours and lyke thinges, wherewith mannes lyfe is entangled, goeth about to infecte it by false Apostles and wicked Bysshopes and Heretikes, whiche wresteth and wyndeth by subtyl interpretation, the heauenlye doctryne after theyr lustes and delyres, and myngle true thynges with false. and sincere and pure thynges with vicious and fawty. The parable is after this sorte. The kingdome of heauen (ỹ he) is like vnto an housbandman, which being a good husband, sowed good sede in hys field. But hys seruauntes being aslepe, there came priuely a certayne aduersarye, whiche bare the husbande manne no good wyl, and because he could not in the night take away the sede which was now layed safely in the ground: he vseth craft and deceyte to hurt it. He scatereth and mengeleth with the wheate that was sowen, the vnprofitable sede of cockelles, and thys doen he wente awaye. Yet for no man perceyued thys deceite. But whan the sede was nowe sprong vp into grasse, and the stalkes were laden and burdened with eares, than at lengthe the cockels growyng vp together, (their vnlykenes vttering or shewyng them,) began to appere. Than the seruauntes meruelyng howe this shoulde come to passe, go vnto the husbande man. Maister (ỹ they) dyddeste not thou sowe good sede in the fielde, howe is it than that cokelles be mengled with them? But the maister suspectyng who was authour of the shreude turne, sayeth: Myne aduersary dydde thys whyche beareth me so cruel wyll, that he hathe a plasure to hurte me, thoughe he haue no profite hymselfe therby. Than spake the seruauntes: wyl ye than that we go and gather the cockelles and cleanse the corne? The maister sayeth: In no case, leste peraduenture as ye plucke vp the cockelles vnaduisedly, ye plucke vp also therwith the wheate that groweth nere by. Suffer the wheate to growe together with the cockelles vnto haruest tyme. Than wyll I committe thys matter to the haruest folkes, that before they mowe and cut downe, they shall fyrste gather the cockelles and bynde them together a parte in bundels for to feede the fyer, and afterwarde laye vp and couche the cleane wheat in my barne.

Another

Another parable put he furth vnto them saiyng: The kyngdome of heauen is lyke to a graine of mustarde seade, whiche a man toke and sowed in hys fielde, whiche is the leaste of al seades. But whan it is growen, it is the greatest emonge herbes, and is a tree, so þ the birdes of the aper cum and make their nestes in the braunches therof. The texte

Agayne Jesus mindyng to shewe by a similitude howe that the philoso-phy of the gospell fyrste in appearaunce abiecte and homely through the ignomi-ny, and slaunder of the crosse, being as it were planted by a fewe vnlearned men should by litle and litle through the strength of the treuth, growe to such myghte and power, that it should go ouer all the worlde, and should embrace al kynde of men, proposed this tredell and similitude. The kyngdome of heauen (ye he) is lyke vnto a mustarde seede, whiche a certayne man toke and sowed in hys field, which of it selfe is leaste among al pulse. But whan it is growne vp, it is greater than al kyndes of herbes and riseth vp as bigge as a tree, insomuche that the birdes make their nestes in the bowes therof.

Another similitude spake he vnto them: The kingdom of heauen is like vnto leauen, which a woman taketh, and hideth in three peches of meale til al be leauened. All these thynges spake Jesus vnto the people by similitudes, and without a parable spake he nothing vnto them: that it myght be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophete, that sayeth: I will open my mouth in parables, I will speake furth thynges hidden frō the begynning of the worlde. The texte

Agayne Jesus dyd inculcate and beate in the selfe same thyng, doyng them to vnderstande by what meanes the strength and myght of the doctryne of the gospell secretly creppyng in, and dispersed and set abrode by a fewe apostles, should alter and transforme al the worlde into her nature: and whan it shall seme most to be consumed and extinct, than chiefly it shall set forth and shewe strength. The kyngdome of heauen (ye he) is lyke vnto leauen, which beyng but a litle quantitie, the woman put in three measures of meale, and there lefte it vntil the litle piece of leauen had changed by litle and litle the whole quantitie of the meale, & turned it into her owne nature. All these thynges Jesus declared vnto the people in riddelles, and cloudes of parables, and spake nothyng vnto them than without a parable: to thyntent that he might both excite and stire their mindes with darke speakyng, and make them desirouse to learne, and yet geue them no holde, though they sought occasion busilye, vnmistly to reproue hym. And the soothe saiyng of the Prophete folde of this before in time paste. I wyl open my mouthe in parables, I wyl shewe furth thynges which hath been hyd hytherto sith the worlde was made.

When the people were sent away, Jesus came into the house, & his disciples came vnto hym saiyng. Expound vnto vs the parable of the tares of the field. He answered and said vnto them: He that soweth the good seed, is the sonne of man. The fielde is the worlde, and the children of the kyngdom, they are þ good seede. The tares are the children of that naughty one: The enemy þ soweth them is the deuel. The haruest is the ende of the worlde. The kepers be the aungels. As the tares therfore are gathered and brent in the fyer, so shal it be in the ende of thys world. The sonne of man shal send forthe hys aungels, and they shal gather out of hys kyngdome al thynges that offende, and them whiche do iniquitye, and shal cast them into a fornace of fyer: There shalbe wailyng and gnashyng of teeth. Than shal the righteouse shyne as the sonne in the kyngdome of their father. Whosoeuer hath eares to heare, let hym heare. The texte

Than Jesus departyng from the multitude went home, and they folowed not, for that they vnderstoode not what he mente, and that none occasion was geuen of false reproue. Further whan he was at home alone, hys familiar disciples came vnto hym requiryng hym to expounde them the parable of the cockle mengled with wheate. For the parable of the seed diuersliye sowen once

declared, they gessed well of themselues what he ment by the mustard seede, and the leuen put in the meale. Iesus without any griefe declared it plainely. The good husband (q he) whiche sowed the good seede, is the heauenly father: the felde in whyche he sowed, is the whole worlde and not onely Iewry. Further, the good wheat that spyang vp of the good seede bee they, whyche by the doctryne of the gospell behaue themselfe worthily for the kyngdom of heauen, agreeing to their profession in lyfe and dedes. The naughty cockels spryngyng of the yll seede mengled wyth these, bee yll men whyche professe not purely nor sincerely the doctryne of the gospell, And the aduersatye whiche mengled hys seede priuely in the nyght, whereof spryngeth peruerse and yll doctryne, is the deuill. The seruauntes whiche would gather the cockel before the tyme, be they whyche thynke that the false apostelles and chiefe heretikes shoulde bee rydde out of the waye with swoorde and deathe, where as the good man of the house willeth not that they shoulde bee killed, but suffered, yf happe bee that they repente, and be turned from cockelles into wheate. And that yf they repente not, they shoulde be kepte and preserued to their iudge, of whome once they shall be punished. The time of harueste is the ende of the worlde. The haruestemen folkes be the angels. In the meane season therfore the yll mengled with the good, must be suffered, when they be suffered with lesse daunger and peril, than they bee taken away. Further whan the last tyme shal cum, whan the good shal be seuered from the ill, when rewardes shall be geuen to euery manne for hys dedes: than the sonne of man the iudge ouer all, shall sende furthe hys angels to clense hys kyngdome, and they shall suffer none offence to remaine there, for than neither the good can profite the yll, nor the yll shall be suffered any more to trouble the good: but wholsoeuer liuyng emong the good had rather molest and trouble them, than to be made better by their cumpany, he shall gather them together and shedde them from the others, and deliuer them to the pyt of hell. There shall they punyshed worlde without ende: for their shorte and false lustes and pleasures remoued from the flooze of the churche, and caste into a darke den of hel, that is to say, into the kyngdome of their father, where as nowe ouer late vnprofitable penaunce, shall force those miserable people to wepe and to waile and to gnashe with their teeth. Further they shall cum and spyang furthe of the good seede and perseuer and continue vnto thende, although in the meane tyme they appere here vyle and abiecte, and be afflicted of the yll sorte: than all vyleines of mortalitie set aparte, they shall shyne lyke the bryght sunne in their fathers kyngdome. These thinges because they be great and weighty thinges, of both partes ought not to be heard negligently. That perteine either to the euerlasting felicitie, or to the euerlasting destruction of al men. Wherfore whosoeuer hath an eare, neyther deafe nor stopped with the desyres of the worlde, let him heare, yf he may auoide euerlastyng punishemētes, & obteine the life euerlasting.

Beside these, to thyntent he myght the more kyndle and stirre the myndes of them that were hys, to the desyre of theuangelicall godlines, he added two other similitudes, whereby he teacheth that the profession of the gospell is a thyng not to bee desired lyghtly, or after the common maner, but that this only thyng ought to be laboured for with great studye, all other thynges sette aparte and that thys excellent good thyng must be purchased and obteyned by

And althoughe in the meane ſeaſon it be hyd emong men, and letteth not kueth it ſelfe, yet he that hath it, reioiseth ſecretly wyth hymſelfe, lokyng ſafely for that daye, in the whiche the felicitie that is nowe obſcure and darcke ſhall after bee made manifeſte and open. The kyngdome of heauen (ſaythe he) is lyke to a treaſure hyd in the fielde, which if a man perchaunce do get, he blabbeth it not abroade to others, leſt any take it from hym, but toying ſecretly & reioyſyng to hymſelfe, he goeth to the lorde of the ground, and ſellyng al that he hath and making aſmuch monye, as he can, byeth the fyelde, in the whiche he knoweth the greate or precious treaſure is hyd, and thynketh hymſelfe happye, to looſe all hys meane poſſeſſions, for to be entyched wyth one notable grounde, although he know it not.

Againe the kyngdome of heauen (ſaythe he) is lyke vnto a marchaunte manne, whiche deliteth in goodly Margarites. And when he hadde got a notable good one, byanby he ſolde all that he had, and bought it. And he thoughte not hym ſelfe the poorer, becauſe he had now lefte him nothyng of hys olde ryches. Naye than at the length he thought hymſelfe ryche, becauſe he was priuie to hymſelf, that he had in ſecrete poſſeſſion, a precious Margaritte, whiche though it were but litle, yet it paſſed the price and value of all the other poſſeſſions.

Againe, the kyngdome of heauen is lyke vnto a nette that is caſte into the ſea, and gathereth of al kynde of fiſches, whych whan it was ful, men dyue it to lande, and ſate downe and gathered the good into veſſels, but caſte the bad awaye. So ſhall it be at the ende of the worlde. The angels ſhall com and ſeuer the bad from among the good, and ſhall caſt them into a fornace of fyer, there ſhalbe wayling and gnaſhyng of teeth. Vnto theſe he added alſo an other parable, not vnlyke vn to the parable of the wheate and cockels, ere tyng hys diſciples, whome of fyſhers he made apoſtles, that is to ſaye, fyſhers of men, that they ſhoulde ſtudye and endeuor to allure and drawe manye to the profeſſyon of the goſpell, and that they ſhoulde not byanby caſte awaye and deſtroye the yll mingled with the good, but ſaue them and kepe them to be puniſhed of theyr iudge, yf after that all thinges were proued, they woulde not repent. Againe the kingdome of heauen (ſaythe he) is like a net caſte into the ſea, whiche beyng ſpred abroade, dothe take and embrace all kynde of fyſhe. Whyche when they nowe perceyue to be full, than they drawe it to the banke, and nowe ſyttyng vpon the drye lande choole the good fyſhes and put them in theyr veſſelles; the yll and vnprofitable fiſhes they caſte awaye. So ſhall it bee in thende of the worlde. The angels ſhall go further and loke aboute what the net of the goſpell dothe take and drawe. They ſhall not ſuffer the good to be mengled with the yll any more in one net, but they ſhall eſteme euerye man by his merites, not by hys profeſſyon. They ſhall ſeperate the yll from the cumpany of the good and ſhall lay vp the one ſafely for theyr maiſter, the other they ſhall caſte into a burnyng fornace: there ſhalbe intollerable tormente whiche ſhalbe teſtified by weppyng and gnaſhyng of teeth:

Jeſus ſayeth vnto them, haue ye vnderſtande all theſe thynges? They ſaye vnto hym, yea lorde. Then ſayde he vnto them: therefore euery Scribe whiche is taught vnto the kyngdome of heauen, is lyke vnto a man that is an houſholder: Whiche bryngeth forth out of hys treaſure thynges newe and olde. Jeſus to thintente he myght the more ſurely faſten theſe ſaynges in the myndes of his diſciples: he aſked of them whether they vnderſtode theſe thynges well well. When they made aunswere that they vnderstode them, he added yet an o-ther parable, wherby he monished them that these and manye suche oughte to be learned, and surely remembred, to the intent that by and by vpon euery occasion, they myght redily take them furth: whether the hearer should be allured with rewardes, or elles put in feare, by the feare of punishemente. For the byssh of the euangelicall preacher ought to be (as it were) a certayne store house and a ryche, and a plentiful treasure, from whence they maye easely take out diuers thynges, sumtyme out of the bookes of the olde testament, sumtime oute of the euangelicall Philosophy, as shalbe moste expedient for theyr hearers. For one thyng muste not be spoken at all tymes, nor after one fashyon, nor all men be not moued with all thinges. Therefore they haue nede of a certayne ryche treasure furnished with all kynde of learnyng. The parable is thus. The Scribes of the Iewes (or he) when they bee consulted, make aunswer out of their bookes.

Therfore euery scribe. But whosoeuer wil be a cunnyng Scribe in the kyngdome of heauen, it is not sufficient for hym to bryng furth olde thynges, vnles he bryng furth newe also, lyke a certayne riche householder whiche hath all thynges in hys treasure: whether a man desyre newe thynges, or whether he wolde haue olde thynges, to satisfie and contente all men.

The texte. And it came to passe that when Iesus had finished these simplitudes, he departed thence. And when he came into his owne countrey, he taught them in theyr sinagogues, insomuch that they were astonied, and sayde: whence cummeth this wisedome and power vnto hym? Is not this the carpenters sonne? Is not his mother called Marie? his brethren, Iames and Ioseph, and Simon, and Iudas? and are not all hys sisters with vs? Whence hath he all these thynges? And they were offended at hym. Iesus sayd vnto them: A prophete is not without honor, saue in hys owne countrey, and in hys owne house. And he dyd not many myracles there, because of theyr vnbeleefe.

When that Iesus had taught sufficiently with these diuers parables, both the people and hys disciples, he wente into his countrey, that is, to Nazareth: that by often chaungeing of the place, the doctrine of the gospel myght be the farther spred abrode. In the whiche countrey of hys, he beganne not hys preachyng, lest he shoulde seme any thyng to folowe mannes affection, and yet he wolde not passe it ouer, to teache that we ought to do good vnto all. Iesus therfore entryng into theyr congregacion, began to teache them as he hadde taught other. Here that thyng hindred the matter of the gospel, whyche ought to haue furdered it, because the comon sorte of men had rather to enuy thinges that be knowen and familiar, than fauour them, whereas they make muche of straunge thynges, fondely and folesshely, estemyng a thing therfore to be goodly because it cummeth farre of. Therfore when Iesus was knowen here of certayne whyche knewe the lowenesse and symplenesse of hys flocke, and the pouertye of hys parentes, and also the arte whereby Ioseph (commonly thought to be hys father) founde and nourished his wife and her sonne, knowyng also that Iesus was of the same arte, and where as they neuer hearde saye that he was brought vp in learnyng, thus they mutter and murmoure among themselues: howe hathe he thys notable wisedome? fro whence hathe he power to shewe myracles? Is not thys Iesus the carpenter, Ioseph the carpenters sonne? Is not hys mother poore and a meanne womanne amonge vs, whiche is called Marie? Be not hys cosens with vs, Iames, Ioseph, Simon, and Iudas? Do not as many as be hys nexte kinsfolkes dwell here with vs? Howe is it than that he sodaynly beyng made an other manne, returneth vnto vs preachyng, & mynyng in myracles. Doth he thinke that he is vnknowen vnto vs? So the kinred and the poore estate of Jesus, dyd offend the, and made them to stumble, thynkyng as yet nothyng of hym but as of a man, and one of the common sorte of people, and for the olde poorenes and lowne of hys lyke, enuying the newe renoune and honour. But Jesus rebukyng theyr grosse and ouer rude iudgement, esteming a man not for his vertues, but for fortune and nobilitie of birthe, sayeth vnto them: A prophete is no where lesse set by than in his owne countrey and in his owne kamilye, and among his own kynsfolkes. And where in other places he was redely beleued, and shewed many miracles, here he dyd worke none, but that with laying on his handes, he healed a fewe that were sycke. Not because hys power was straighted or diminished, or hys will chaunged, but because theyr vnbeleefe did let it. For like as a phisition cannot profite the sicke yf he refuse his medicine: not because the arte of the phisician is not effectuall, but because the sicke man is in fault: so because it is the kayth vnto the which miracles be geuen, vnbeleefe is a let to him to shewe them furth, whiche lacketh neyther power nor might, but that he was letted by the defaulte of others. Therfore Jesus reprouing them for so greate malice, saied: This is no newe thyng that ye now do vnto me. The same chaunced in times past to the holy prophetes Helyp and Heliśee, whose tumbes ye haue nowe in veneracyon. For whan it rayned not three yeares and a halfe, and therfore a greate kampne was throughoute all that countreye: Helias beeyng in daunger for hunger, was commaunded to go to no mother wedow, wher as there were many in Jewry, but vnto the straunger in Sarepta, in the countrey of the Sidonians. Of this woma onely was he receiued, and found kaith, & wrought a miracle. Further in the tyme of Heliśee, there were manye lazares in the nacion of Israell, and yet for all thys there was none healed but onely Naaman a Syrian, whole kayth in a maner forced the prophete to shewe a miracle.

A prophete is not without fault in hys owne country.

The. xiiii. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ At that tyme Herode the tetrarche heard of the fame of Jesu, and saide vnto hys seruauntes: This is John the baptyste, he is risen from the dead, and therfore are miracles wrought by hym. For Herode had taken John and bounde him, and put hym in prison because of Herodias his brother philips wife. For John sayd vnto him: It is not lawful for the to haue her. And when he would haue put him to death, he feared the people, because they counted him as a prophete. But when Herodes birth day was kepte, the daughter of Herodias daunced before hym, and pleased Herode. Wherfore he promysed with an othe, that he would geue her what she would aske. And she being instruct of her mother before, sayd: geue me here John Baptist head in a platter. And the kyng was sory, neuertheles for the othes sake, and them which sate also at the table, he commaunded it to be geuen her, and sent tormentours, and beheaded John in the prison, and hys head was brought in a platter, and geuen to the damsell, and she brought it to her mother.

At the meane tyme Herode the Tetrarche of Galile, the sonne of hym whyche hadde slayne the children of Bethleem, hearde the rumour and fame of the doctryne and myracles and wonders of Jesus: of whom when the multitude hadde diuerse opinions, sum saiyng that he was Helye, sum that he was Hieremye, and sum that he was one of thold prophetes, and there were that said that he

that he was Iohn, who restored agayn to lyfe, was becum nowe moze mpghty. Herode laughing them to skorne, sayd: I dyd cut of Johns head, & how thynke ye that he is alive, and not only alive, but also to bee mpghtye wyth miracles. Furthwith when he was certified by diuers, of so manye and so notable wonders, that the rumour nowe couldc not appeare falle, he said vnto his seruauntes. He of whome they tell suche greate wonders is not Iesus, whiche of late was kylled of my father in the noumbze of the chyldren of Bethleem, but it is Iohn whiche is risen from deathe: and therfoze he is nowe becum moze diuine and godly, and is notable by myracles. Foz Herode had layed hãdes vpõ Iohn Baptist, and cast hym into pzison: although he had the man in estimacion, and did many thynges after hys aduyse and counsell. But this fauour of the tirant was turned into hatred, foz the vnchaste woman, whose fauoure and loue obteyned by fylthy scrupee, couldc doe moze wyth the kyng, than the auctozitie of Iohn. Foz he hadde taken vnto hym foz displeasure of hys brother that was alyue, Herodias his brother Philippes wyfe: by whome also Philippe hadde a doughter. Iohn monished the kyng frankly and freely, and tolde hym that the mariage was vnlawfull, bothe because hys brother was alyue, and there was a doughter alyue also whiche his brother had by her. Further, Moyses lade bade that the brother shoulde marry ẽ wyfe of the brother departed, if it chaunced hym to dye withoute children. Herode, loupng the woman the moze outrageously lyue, the lesse it was lawfull foz hym to loue her, was greatelye offended with this lyberty, insomuche that he woulde haue slayne hym but that he feared the styrring of the people, with whom he knewe that Iohn was greatly in fauour, because bothe he baptised manye, and had manye disciples, and was thought of many to be Messias. Truly euery man thought hym to be a man indued with the spirite of prophesy, and of greate holynes. But afterwardes excesse and ryote, and vnreasonable loue towarde the mayde hys neece, chased of this feare. Foz when, after the manner of the heathens, he dyd solempnise the daye of his byzth, vpon the which there was al maner of voluptuous pleasures vsed, Herodias doughter daunsed at the kynges table, wyth wauton gesture, and so pleased Herode, which was nowe warme wyth wyne, that he swoze that he woulde geue vnto the mayden whatsoeuer she asked, yea yf she woulde aske halfe of hys kyngdome. The wenche, leste she shoulde leese so greate opportunitie, and by and by to abuse this filthy lust of the kynges hart, she counselled with her mother what was to bee asked. She fearyng leste the kynges mynde beyng reconciled agayne to Iohn, mpght breake of the incest mariage, counselled her doughter to aske nothing, but that furthwith she mpghte haue the head of Iohn Baptiste geuen vnto her in a dishe. The wenche by the counsell of her vngracious mother came into the feaste, and euery man lokyng what she woulde wishe and desyre: she asked forthwyth that she mpght haue geuen vnto her the heade of Iohn in a dyshe, as thoughe her mother woulde eftsones and make moze of thys dyshe, than of halfe the kyngdome. Whan they heard thys, otherwyse than they loked foz, the kyng counterfeyteth heupnesse in hys countenaunce, and alleageth foz a cloke of hys cruelitie, the feare he hadde to breake his othe, chiefly because he made it before so many geastes, and leste he shoulde seeme lyghte oz periured, he commaunded that the thyng whyche the wenche desired, shoulde be doen. By and by the executours of death were sente into the pzison, and the head of the innocent man was cut of, and was brought in a in a dishe, and geuen to the wenche, the wenche gaue it to her mother whiche was the chiefe deuiser and doer of all this matter. And thus luckely was the birth day of Herode celebrated. This rewarde was geuen vnto him that mo-ned and called to honest thinges. With this sight were the tyes of the geastes fed whome the king did vouchsafe to set at his table. Therefore the vnchaste woman had Johns head.

¶ And his disciples came & toke vp the body, and buried it, & went and tolde Jesus. When Jesus hearde of it, he departed thence in a shippe vnto a desert place, out of the way. And when the people had hearde thereof, they followed hym on foote, and left the cities. And Jesus went furth and sawe muche people, and was moued with mercy towarde them, and he healed of them those that were sicke. And when euen drew on, his disciples came to hym, saying: This is a desert place, and the houre is nowe past, let the people departe, that they maye goe into the townes, and bye them vitailes. But Jesus sayde vnto them: they haue no nede to goe awaye. Geue ye them to eate. They sayde vnto hym: we haue here but fyue loaues and two fishes. He sayde: Bring them hither to me. And he commaunded the people to sit downe on the grasse, and he tooke the fyue loaues and two fishes, and lift vp his eyes towarde heauen, and blessed. And when he had broken them he gaue the loaues to the disciples and the disciples gaue to the people, and they did all eate and were filled. And they gathered vp the fragmentes that remayned, twelue basketfes full. And they that did eate were about fyue thousande men besyde women and children. The texte.

But the disciples of John caried away his body and buried it. When Jesus by the telling of Johns disciples, knewe of this so cruel a dede (for as man he suffered it to be tolde vnto hym as though he knew it not, whereas he knew it before it was doen) he departed into a ship, that being separate from the multitude, he might go into some desert & secrete place, shewing a certain appearance of manly feare, but in dede cutting of occasion from the wicked king, that he shoulde not heape murder vpon murder: Chiefely sith the tyme of Jesus was not yet come, and therwith also teaching vs to geue place sumtime to the furies of tyrnces, leste they beyng prouoked and chafed with well doinges, both hurte the innocentes, and they themselues bee made the worse. It is lawful to shunne the wicked, ready to doe vngraciously, that we maye profitte and helpe the good men. And this going aside declareth the notable fayth of certaine. For assoone as it was hearde that Jesus had left the cityes, and was abiourning in desert, for feare of Herode as they thought, they went out of the cities into wildernes to him, whiche hid himselfe in secrete places: and because they coulde not goe to him by bore or by wagon and suche like, for the lombyhouse places, they followed him on foote: neyther feared nor discouraged by the hardnesse of the way, nor by the daungier of lacke of foode. So gredely now they began to hunger for the doctrine of the gospel. Jesus perceiuing that, cummeth out of the darke corners, and came to mete them that were desirouse of hym, like as he withdrewe himselfe from the wicked. And whan he sawe a great multitude of men flockyng thither, whiche brought with them many encoumbred with dyuers dyseases, he moued with pitye, and consydering and perceiuyng their fayethe by the difficultie and hardnes of the waye, of hys owne accorde he healed all that were dyseased. And so greate was the feruencye of the multytude, that where as they brought with them into wildernes sicke folkes, children, and many wome, yet they brought no vitail with them. Therefore when the nyghte nowe drewe nere, and they stomakes were pricked with hunger, the disciples whiche had sene so many myracles, hauing not yet throughly a perfect opinion of Jesus (for so it was thought good vnto the diuine wisdome to frame them by little and little vnto perfection, to the entent the faith of thinges that were done, might be the more firme and sure, & to teache them withal, by what meanes they should heale & helpe the infirmitie of others) put their maister in remēbrance that night was at hande, & the multitude was great, and that it was high time than to take meate & to send them away, that they might goe into the nerte villages, and euery man to prouyde him of vitailes. But Jesus, to the intent the myracle might be the more euident and open, aunswered: They nede not to goe any whither, rather geue ye them to eate. But the disciples as though they had forgotten all that they had seene, nothing awaked at this saying, aunswerd very grosly, but so that they: weke[n]es set furth the greatnes of the miracle: shall we (sp they) geue a supper to so many, where as we be but thirtene in noumber: we haue very litel prouitaile, truely nothing els, but fiue barely loaues, & two fishes. In case they despyse not and lothe not this supper, how shall it suffice them whiche will scarce suffice vs few? Than Jesus commaunded whatsoeuer they had to be brought vnto him. The disciples obeying simply, not disputing þ matter thus: than ye kill vs with hunger if ye geue them thys lyttle that we haue, they brought their whole vitailes. Here Jesus exhibiting an euangelicall feaste, where lyke as it behoueth to be none excesse, so it is mete there shoulde be an equalitie of al thinges: He commaunded them all to sitte downe vpon the grasse, so that syties shoulde sitte together, that the noumber of geastes might better appeare. And also he folowed the maner of them, whiche making a feaste or geuyng a dole to many, deuide the multitude into companies, that no man should lacke and no man haue to muche. This doen, Jesus than at length the takyng vpon him to be a feaster and a feder of the bodies also, whiche came to feede the soules, & to teache in dede his disciples that they should neuer lacke foode, whiche being geuen vnto the gospell, regarded litle their vitaile: tooke in hys handes the fiue barly loaues, & two fishes: first declaring vnto al men with what maner of vitaile the Apostolical ambassadoures ought to be contēt: furthermore shewing plainly before the eye, the sincere faith of the multitude, which seeing howe litle vitaple there was, and was not ignorāunte howe many thousande men there were, commaunded to sit downe, sate downe. Therefore Jesus the feastemaker, holding in his handes the bread and the meate, lifted vp his yes into heauen, shewyng that whatsoeuer is nedefull to the vse of man, it cummeth from the heauenly father, and whan he had prayesed his bountifulnes & liberalitie, he brake the bread and fishes, and so deliuered them vnto his disciples, that they should set thē before the people, putting them in remembrāce, as it were by a darke figure, of what sorte þ doctoures ought to be, which fede with the worde, the mindes of the simple. For as Christ lokyng vp into heaue, declared that he taught nothing, but that came from the heauenly father, so the Apostolical men as often as they see the people to depende of their mouth, with a playne and a simple fayth, they shoulde delyuer nothyng vnto them, which they had not receiued of Christ, nor should not propose vnto thē sundry deinties out of the shops of worldly philosophie: neither bring out vnto them humaine doctrine after their owne affeccions, but shoulde distribute vnto thē, the simple and playne euangelicall doctryne, as they had receyued it of their master: nor shoulde not otherwise cut it & mince it than he had broken it with his handes, for by suche manner of preparacion both many bee refreshed, and the glory redoundeth to Christe, and not to the dystributour. Wouldeste thou know the ende of this feaste? The disciples doubtyng nothing made distribucion: and they doubting nothing fel to their meate on al handes, not to excelle, but to sufficiency. And the feast of such a numbre lacked nothing, in so muche, that whā supper was done, the scrappes furthermore that were gathered vp, filled twelue basskettes. And the noumber of menne was fiue thousande besyde women, and chyldren.

¶ And streight way Jesus made his disciples to get vp into a shippe, and to goe before hym vnto the other side, while he sent the people away. And when the people were sente awaye, he went vp into a mountayne to pray alone, and when nyght was come, he was there alone. But the shippe was nowe in the middeste of the sea, and was rosse of the wawes, for it was a contrary winde. And in the fourth watche of the nighte Jesus wente vnto them walkyng on the sea. And when the disciples saw him walking on the sea, they were troubled, saying: It is some spirite, and they cryed out for feare. But streighte way Jesus spake vnto them, saying: be of good cheere, it is I, be not afeayde. Peter answered, and sayde: Lorde yf it bee thou, bidde me come vnto thee on the water. And he sayde, come. And when Peter was come downe out of the ship, he walked on the water to come to Jesus. But when he sawe a mighty winde, he was afrayde: And when he began to sinke, he cryed, saying: Lorde, saue me. And immediately Jesus stretched furth his hande, and caughte him, and sayd vnto hym: O thou of litel fayth wherefore diddeste thou doubte?

These thinges done, Jesus desyring to teache, that after that the necessitie of the body was satisfyed, we oughte not to goe vnto wantonnes, or slepe, but vnto prayer: vnto whiche prayer solitarynes is moste mete: he forced hys disciples (for it greued them to departe from their dere Lord) to go to the mere and to row ouer the water before, and he wolde come after, when he had sent away the people. But they although they departed from hym against their will, yet they murmoure not, they make not their excuse that the nyghte was at hande, they aske not when he wolde folowe, but they obey symply hys commaundementes. Therefore when they were gon, Jesus sendyng away the multytude, whome he had satisfyed by all meanes, wente vp to a hyll to pray there alone. For so he taughte hys disciples to pray. Therefore in the top of the hyll, Jesus was alone a good parte of the nighte. And the disciples in the meane tyme, they lorde beeing absent, as they rowed in the water were in perill. For as they entred vpon the water, by and by there arose a contrary wynde, and the ship was tossed, not without perill of the swellyng wawes of the water. The nyght made their feare double. What shoulde they doe? They were in daungier, and he was not there whose helpe they mighte call vpon. Jesus lefte his disciples in this perill, almost all the whole nighte, to harden them by little and little against all feares, and to teache them that the helpe of God shall neuer lacke to them that be in perill, although it come somewhat late. Therefore at lengthe aboute the fourthe watche of the nyghte, they almoste beeyng in despayre, and nowe sore amased in their mynde, and ready to geue ouer oute of hande: Jesus came, not in a bote, but walkyng vpon the waters. They when they sawe one walkyng in the darke, and knewe not Jesus well, they were more a fearde and sayde among themselues, it is a goste that we see, and not a man. And the common sorte of shippemen thinketh that suche manner of syghtes, dooe sygnifye vtter destruccyon to them that rowe on the water. Therefore they were so sore afearde, that beeing almoste beside themselues they cryed out for feare. But Jesus suffered them not to be in daunger any longer, but by and by spake vnto them that they might know him by hys speche, whome in the darke they couldenot see. Be of good chere (sphe) it is I, feare not. At thys woorde by and by they? mynde was comforted. But Peter whiche alway had a synguler loue towarde Jesus, thynking nothing at all harde that he wouldecommaunde, sayed: Lorde yf thou be he commaunde me to come vnto thee vpon the water. For he meruelled not that Jesus walked vpon the water, but he thought that he hymselfe myghte do so like wyse, yf Jesus would. But Jesus frampyng & fashtoning his weakenes by all meanes vnto the strengthe of perfecte faith, bad hym come. At the whiche woorde Peter nothyng lyngeryng, leaped downe out of the bote, and began to haste to Jesus, walkyng vpon the water. And as long as hys fayth nothing wauered, the mopste element serued him. But whan he caste hys yes a little from Jesus, and began to looke about him, and to consider the boysterousnes of the winde, the hurling of the waues, and his owne feblenes, he was afrayed agayn, and began to sinke downe & be in danger of drowning. Feare came of the boysterousnes of the windes, peril came of feare, & feare of distruste. And agayne the greatenes of peril caused vp the sparke of fayth, and nowe being almost ouerwhelmed with waues, he cryed out: Lorde saue me, I perish. But Jesus putting hys disciple in remembraunce, that the perill whiche he feared came not of the waues or windes, whiche before serued his tourne, but of the weakenes of fayth, reaching out his hande catched him and lift him vp, saying: O thou that yet hast little trusted me, why diddest thou wauer? For it is not inough to haue a strong faith for the time, but it must be continual and constaunt, nor thou must not loke how great the peril is, or what thy strength is hable to beare, but what I am hable to do to him that doth trust and beleue in me. Therefore furthwith as he entred into the shippe, the winde ceased. And they that were in the shippe, seping suche a merueylouse wunder, perceyuyng that there was somewhat in him, more than man, fel downe at his feete and worthipped him, saying: Thou art the very sonne of God. And when they came to the banke, he went into the countrey of Genezareth, where he hadde shewed many miracles before. They after that they had knowlege that he whom they had seene before, was come agayne, they sent throughout al the countrey to tel that Jesus was present that if they had any sicke folke, they should bring them. For now they? fayth began to increase, by the myracles that were done before. Therefore flocking together on euery syde, they offer vnto Jesus as many as were diseased, desyring him that at the leaste they mpght touche the hem of hys garmente, if it were to paynful for him to touche them one by one, or to speake vnto them. So strong was they? fayth, and they? fayth deceiued them not: For as many as touched him, were healed.

Peter answered and sayed. &c.

O thou of little fayth &c.

¶ The. xv. Chapiter.

The text. Than came to Jesus Scribes and Pharisees, whiche were come from Hierusalem, saying: Wherefore doe thy disciples transgresse the tradicion of the elders? for they washe not their handes whan they eate bread. But he answered, and sayde vnto them: Why doe ye transgresse also the commaundemente of god, because of your owne tradicion?

To

O the more glory of God these thynges were done, the more the Pharisees were fret with enuie, seyng they: glory to bee darkened thereby, by the which glory hitherto they had magnifyed themselues among men. They hated in euery corner for a quarel, but the more they go agaynst Jesus, the more they blase abrode their owne blindenes, being so manifest and open, that the people also spyed it. Therfore certayn Pharisees of Hierusalem (for there were they most arrogant and proude) goe together vnto Jesus, that the numbre might make their false accusacyon to bee beleued. And where as Moyses forbade that any thyng should bee taken away or put to the wordes of the lawe, the Pharisees, that they might seme to bee not onely therpounders of the lawes, but also the makers, they added certayn tryflyng thinges, as be these: That no man shoulde take meate with vnpure handes, whiche they called vnwashed, as who should say, the handes did defyle the meate or the man, or as who shoulde say, the licour of the water shoulde washe away the filthynesse of the minde. Agayne, that no man retournyng from the market and had been amongeste the common people, shoulde eate meate, but he had fyrste washed hys body: as who shoulde saye, the touchyng of men filed man, or as who shoulde say, he is pure and cleane whiche is washed. Agayne, that their flagons, pottes, brasse, stoles beddes, and other stuffe which was dayly occupyed, shoulde be often washed. With these and many lyke superfluouse and tryflyng thinges, they burdened the simple people, which thynges they wolde haue so much made of and honoured, that for these preceptes, they neglected oftentimes the cõmaundementes of God. Therfore whē they could no waies leye to the disciples charge, the transgression of Moses lawe, they fynde faulte with their mayster, because he suffered his disciples to neglect mannes constitutions: not that they despised them, although they were worthy to bee despised, but that being geuen to seriouse and earnest matters, sometimes they passed little vpon them. Therefore they spake vnto Jesus and sayde: Why doe not thy disciples kepe the constytutions of their forefathers? For they washe not their handes whan they goe to meate. Christ not suffering so malicioule rebuking, for a thing of nothing: payeth them home with a more sharpe rebuke. May with what face dooe ye, which picke quarels for these trifles, make so muche of mannes constitucyons, whiche can bring nothing elles but payneull superstition, and yet for them, ye stycke not to breake the greatest commaundement of God.

For God commaundeth, saying: Honour father and mother. And he that shall curse father or mother, let him dye the deathe. But ye say euery one shall say to his father and mother: What arte soeuer thou dost haue come from me, the same is tourned vnto thy profit. And so that he not honour his father or hys mother. And thus haue ye made the commaundement of God of none effecte, because of your owne tradicion. The xxvii.

For God confirmyng the law of nature, commaunded earnestly that euery man shoulde honoure and succoure his father and mother, promising long life and felicitie of this life vnto the doer hereof: threatning death to him that doeth the contrary. But you folowing your auarice, that ye may tourne that to your owne gayne and aduauntage, which shoulde haue bene bestowed in helping of youre parentes: doe teache that it is holyer and better for men to enryche the temple with gyftes, than to helpe their nedye parentes: and ye haue shewed a caste, how the children may mocke their parentes asking helpe and succour of them, that is, to say thus to the father or mother: the gifte that I offer to the temple, thinke it bestowed vpon you. For that, that is offered vnto God the high parent, is rightely bestowed, and the goddines of the same shall profite the parentes: and by this crafte, vnder the coulour of false godlines, a gainst the commaundemente of God, the father is forsaken, that the priestes may bee better at ease. The thyng cummeth to you, to the helpe and succoure of the parentes, nothing cummeth but wordes. And per coulour a wicked dede vnder the pretence of godlines. Yea what can be more arrogant than to preferre your constitutions before the commaundementes of God, and vnder the pretence of them, to vnndoe, & breake the holy commaundemente of God? Is it a wicked dede to burden the people with such maner of constitutions, which is ouer burdened with the burde of the law. But it is intollerable wickednes vtterly to abolishe goddes law, agreable vnto the law of nature, through your owne inuencions.

The texte. ¶ O Hypocrites: full well dyd Esay prophecie of you, saying: This people draweth nygh vnto me with their mouthe, and honoureth me with lyppes, but their harte is farre from me: in vayne do they worshippe me, teaching the doctrines, mans preceptes. And he called the people vnto hym, and sayde vnto them: Heare and vnderstande: That whiche goeth into the mouth defileth not the man, but that which cummeth out of the mouth defileth man.

This is your counterfeite religion, whiche is nothing lesse than as it appereth. O Hypocrites, Esay worthely prophecied of you, saying: This people honoureth me with their lippes, but their harte is far from me. And they worshippe me in vayne, teachyng doctrines, which be preceptes of men. Jesus whe he had spoken these, as though he had turned away frō the pharisees, whiche hunted for nothing, but for occasion of false accusing: commaunded the multitude to come nere, saying: Heare and vnderstande how reiting thinges they be, whiche the pharisees prescribe vnto you, carefull in little thinges, and neglecting great thinges. They with awkewarde iudgement, put the chiefe poynte of godlynes in outwarde thynges: as in chopce of meates and neglecte those thinges that be of the soule. They abhorre vnwashed cuppes, and neglecte vncleane soules: they washe their handes and their skinnes oftentimes, but they suffer their minde to be defiled with all maner of vices. That whiche entreth into the mouthe maketh not man vncleane, but that whiche goeth out of the mouth maketh man vncleane. For it is no matter what meate a man eateth, but with what minde he eateth it.

Then came his disciples, and sayde vnto hym: Knowest thou not that the Pharisees
The texte were offended at this saying? But he answered and sayde: Euery plante which my heauenly father hath not planted, shalbe plucked vp by the rootes. Let them alone, they be blynde guides of the blinde. If the blinde leade the blinde both shall fall into the dyche.

Jesus semed by these wordes to haue geuen vnto the pharisees a iust occasion to reproue him, because he toke away the chopce of meates, which gods lawe prescribed. In whiche thing also his disciples did not disagree from the pharisees, thinking it a wicked thyng to eate common and vncleane meates, which truely Christ did not yet condemne, but declared that they of their own nature were neither good nor yll, but of incident causes, and therfore lesse to be esteemed than those thinges, which alway and of their own nature be godly or vngodly, & declareth also that such maner of preceptes of the law, which were

ordeined for a time, and do not so much bring holines as signify it, begin now to be obscured & darkened, & shortly shal vanysh away & perish at ỳ clere light of the ghospel. The disciples not yet vnderstanding this thing, goe vnto their lord, & monish him secretly of the daunger, saying: know ye not that the pharisees although they dissemble the matter, be offended with this cõmunicacion of yours, ỳ meate defileth no man? But Jesus minding to teache that thoffice of yll men, which riseth of thinges of nothing, and the doers of it also, oughte mankully to be despised: chiefly whan in obeying of thẽ, none other good riseth of it, but increasing & nourishing of their malice: not without the vndoyng of the simple people, whiche trusting to such maner of obseruacions, neglecte the deuocion of true godlines, answered thus vnto his disciples which were sumwhat offended also. Euery graffe that my heauely father hath not graffed, shall be plucked vp by the rootes. euery ỳdiuidue ỳ men haue inuented of theselues for they: owne glory, & not for true godlines, shall perish and come to naught. These thinges sauour of the earth, & be carnal, made & geuen for a time, to represse & kepe vnder the excesse & outrage of grosse folke. The law of the gospell is spirituall & heauenly, nor resteth in these visible thinges, but in thaffections of the minde. These therfore ought chiefely to be regarded: For without these thother profit nothing but to vayne ostentacion. Seing therfore ye haue begũ to professe this heuely philosophy, ye haue nothing to doe with ỳ counterfeiting and dissembling Pharisees, who promise perfect holynes through suche obseruacions, in which is no godlynes, or surely very litle. They shewe and boast themselues to be doctours and captaines to true religion, wheras they knowe not in what thinges true religion standeth. Therfore they be blinde, and leaders of the blynde. And if the blynde leade the blynde on the way, what shall happen? bothe together shall fall in the dyke. They knowe not what they teache, and they take vnto them foolishe and grosse disciples. Therfore let the foolishe Pharisees goe, with they: folyshe and vnprofitable constitucions. Regarde and care for those thynges whiche make man cleane or vncleane: that is to say, for those thynges whiche do defile or cleanse the mynde, rather than the bodye.

Euery plãte whiche my heauely father hath not planted &c.

¶ Then answered Peter, and sayd vnto him: declare vnto vs this parable. And Jesus sayd: Are ye also yet without vnderstanding? Do not ye yet vnderstande that whatsoeuer entreth into the mouth, goeth into the belly, and is cast out into the priuie? But those thinges which goe out of the mouth, come furth from the harte, and they defile the man. For out of the harte come yll thoughtes, murthers, aduoutries, whoredomes, theftes, false witnesses, and slaunders. These be the thinges whiche defyle man. But to take meate with vnwashen handes doeth not defile man.

The texte.

To these Peter made answere, not yet persuaded, because of the superstition whiche he had depely receiued of hys forefathers, that these constitucions could not be neglected without daunger: wheras he durst not resiste any more the sayinges of Jesus, required him gentilly that he would vouchesafe to declare plainly the thyng whiche he had spoken darkely to the people, concerning thynges that goeth in and cummeth out of the mouth. Jesus minding to sharpen the desyre of his disciples with a litle chydyng, whiche should haue bene now more cumyng in vnderstãdyng of parables, and out of one to haue diuined and gessed another, sayde: Be ye also yet without vnderstandyng? vnderstande ye not that meate whiche receiued and taken with handes washed or vnwashed, entreth into the mouthe, goeth downe into the stomake and afterwarde the grosser parte of it is caste out by the belly into the pryuye? These bodely thinges, and affect and touche nothing but the body. As for the solle they neyther helpe no: hurt, vnlesse a man misuse them. And to misuse them is not the faulte of the meates, but of the misuser. But the thinges which goe out of the mouth bee the thinges whiche men doe speake. Talking cummeth not from the belly but from the harte. And that is in mannes harte, that in dede is pure and cleane, or els vnpure and vncleane. For from that fountaine doe spring norsom thoughtes, wherwith mē go about to lye in wayte to hurt their brother, from thence do spring murder, adultry, rape, theft, fraude, deceite, enuie, arrogancie, strife, false witnes & blasphemie. These thynges though they go not out by the mouth, yet they make men vncleane and abhommnable in the sight of God. If they burste out in maner of a pestilente breath out of a filthy siege, lyke as they declare man to be vncleane, so with their infeccion and blasting they do defile others also. But whether thou take thy meate with handes washed or vnwashed, so thou take it to the vse of nature, maketh not man vncleane. Neither drinke taken out of an vncleane cup, defileth not man, so thou take it meturably for the vse & not for the excesse. Likewyse to syt vpon an vnwashed seate, doeth not defile the minde of man, like as the washed seate doeth not make pure and cleane hym that sitteth in it. Therefore whereas the Phariseis teache and obserue superstitiously these folishe trifles, yet they dooe not abhorre those thinges, wherby the minde is defiled in dede. They lye in wayte for him that doeth them good, they do subornate and prepare false witnes, they do backbite the fame of their neighbour, and so seke for their owne glory, that they enuy the glory of god, falsely reprouing the workes which be done by his spirite and ascribing them to Beelzebub. They should abhorre these thinges, if they wolde seme cleane in dede. But what auke warde kinde of holynes is this, to haue washed and cleane handes, and to haue both minde and tongue defiled with so many mischeuous vices.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus goyng thence, departed into the coaste of Tyre and Sydon. And beholde a woman of Canaan whiche came from the same coaste, cryed vnto hym saying: Haue mercye vpon me lorde the sonne of Dauid, my daughter is miserably vexed with a deuyll. But he answered her nothing at all. and his disciples came and besought hym, saying: sende her away, for she crieth after vs. But he answered and sayde: I am not sente but vnto the lost sheepe of the house of Israell. Than came she and worshipped him, saying: Lorde helpe me. But he answered and sayde: It is not mete to take the childrens bread, and to cast it to dogges. She answered and sayde: Truely lorde, for the dogges eate of the crummes, which fal from their maisters table. Than Jesus answered, and sayde vnto her: O woman greate is thy fayth, be it vnto thee as thou wilt. And her daughter was made whole from that tyme.

After that Jesus had spoken these thinges, he left that countrey, and went into the coastes of Tyrus & Sydon, in maner prophecying with that dede, that the Jewes through the superstition of their lawe, should expell the doctrine of the gospel, which the Gētiles through sincerute of fayth should take vnto the. For Tyrus and Sidon were inhabited of Idolaters. Jesus went thither, not to preache as he did in Jewry, for the time was not yet come, but to be secret & hid there, for he entred into a house desiring to be secret, but the same did vtter him. This was done for the inuincible malice of the Jewes, lest they might complayne complaine that the wicked and prophane Gētiles were preferred before them. Therfore he would that ꝑ miracle that he shewed there, should not seme to be sought after or done of purpose, but offered by chaunce, & in maner extorted & obteyned of him by force. Therfore when the rumour was spred abrode, that Jesus was present, whose fame increasing by litle and litle went beyond the coastes of the Jewes: a certayne woman of Canaan cōming out of her coastes durst not come nere to Jesus, lest she beyng unclean might seme to defile him which was clean, but a far of called vpon him vō a miserable crie: haue mercy vpon me the sonne of Dauid, telling him that she had a daughter at home miserably vexed with a deuil. This Jesus so merciful and easy to be intreated, which was wont to be prompt and ready vnto al men, to thintent both that he might make open vnto al men the very constāt fayth of the woman, & also leye vnto the Jewes charge, their very stiffe & obstynate vnbeleefe, & to teache vs with all, of what efficacy and power importune and earneste prayers powred out of an humble harte, be with god: he despiseth the petityoner whiche cryed out for sorow of her harte, insomuche that he wolde not vouchesafe to make her aunswere: shewing therby a certayn fashion of the Jewes arrogancie, because the Jewes coūted the Cananees their olde enemies, and worshippers of Idolles, to be abhominable, and that they be despysed if they do but talke with them. And the apostles at that time were yet of the same affeccion and minde. But the woman ceased not, although she were repelled. Sorowe and fayth made her importune, she foloweth at hys backe, and cryeth lamentably: haue mercy vpon me lorde, the sonne of Dauid. The disciples not yet vnderstanding what was in drooping, moued with shame rather than with pitie, because of the importune crying of the woman, of a straunge countrey, speake vnto Jesus, not despyzing hym to haue mercye of the wretched woman, but because of her importunitie to sende her away with some aunswere. Therefore Jesus made an aunswere more sore and harde, than the former repulse & shaking of, to the intent he might make the constancie and coldenes of the straunge woman more matuelouse: & also by the example of her to charge the Jewes with their pride and arrogancie. I am not sent (q he) but vnto the lost shepe of the house of Israell. For the Jewes stode meruetiously in their owne conceyte, because of this title, that they were the stocke of Israell. The woman was not wery with so many repulses and denials, insomuche that she durste yet drawe nere vnto Jesus, and falling downe at his knees, sayde: Lorde succoure me. She did not confute the saying of Jesus, but with often repeting of her prayers she went about to wery him. She layed not for her, righte and iustice, she requireth nothyng but mercy. Jesus not contente with this, goeth on still, to trye the sobre importunitie of the woman. It is not mete (q he) to take the childrens bread, and cast it to the dogges: calling the fruite of the gospel which is by fayth, bread: callyng the children, the Jewes, which did glory that they had god to their father: calling the dogges, straungers, & aliens frō the religiō and worshipping of God. Which of the Jewes would not haue bene stirred & angred with suche a rebuke: but the woman not refusyng the name of a dog, entreth not the Jewes the honourable title of the children, but calleth them also lordes whome Jesus called childre. She embraceth the aūswere, rebukeful in apperaunce, and taketh occasion of it not to be repelled, wherwith it appered that she was vtterly repelled. I deny not (q he) that the Israelites bee and behold a woman of Canaan

But he allegeth and sayde.

the

the children, and we the dogges, and therfore I am not vttrely to be repelled. I take not away from them theyr ſyne and delycate bread, whiche they eate ſitting at theyr fathers table: This onely I require, whiche maiſters are not wont to deny to theyr dogges. The table is riche and plentiful of ſuch thinges it ſufficeth me if I chaunce to haue the crummes whiche fal from theyr tables.

O woman great is thy fayth. Than Jeſus maruaylyng at the inſatygable and greate conſtaunce of the ſtraunge woman, in maner ouercome, ſayde: O woman, I can no longer reſiſt thy prayers, great is thy fayth, wherwith thou conſtrayneſt me. Wherfore be it vnto thee after thy deſire. And by and by euen at the ſame tyme it was prayed, that her daughter was deliuered from the deuil.

The ſeeke. And Jeſus goyng from thence, came nigh vnto the ſea of Galile, and wente vp into a mountayne and ſate downe there. And muche people came vnto hym bryngyng with them thoſe that were lame, blynde, deafe, maymed, and other many, and caſte them downe at Jeſus feete. And he healed thē, inſomuch that the people maruayled whan they ſaw the dūme ſpeake, the maymed to be whole, the lame to walke, and the blinde to ſee. And they glorifyed the god of Iſraell.

Whan Jeſus in maner conſtrayned had wrought this one miracle in the borders of ỹ Sidonians & the Syrians, to prouoke a ſtirre by his owne people, he went agayne into Jewry, to declare how more ready he was towardes his owne countrey menne, then to ſtraungiers: if they might haue bene ouercome & wunne with benefites. And he came vnto a meere whiche is called the ſea of Galile, and there goyng vp vpon an hill, ſate downe, that by goyng aſyde and by the difficultye of the place, he might a litle and a litle plucke by the fayth of hys diſciples, and make it firme and ſtable. Anon there flocked about him many flockes of men, bringing with the dūme, blinde, lame, weake, and diuerſe other vexed with diuerſe diſeaſes, of whome there was ſo great a multitude, that they caſt them at the feete of Jeſus. He well perceyuing theyr fayth by the hardē and cumbrouſe iourney, healed them all: and ſo ſpedely healed ſo many, that the multitude whiche came vnto him was much amaſed, ſeyng howe ſodenly the blinde receyued their ſighte, the dūme ſpake, the lame walked, the feeble was whole of lymmes. And they glorifyed the god of the people of Iſraell, whiche did vouchſafe to beſtowe ſo greate benefites vpon his people.

The feaſte. Than Jeſus called hys diſcyples vnto hym, and ſayde: I haue compaſſion on the people, becauſe they continue with me nowe three dayes, and haue nothyng to eate: and I will not let them departe faſting, leſte they ſayntē in the way. And hys diſciples ſayde to him: whence ſhoulde we get vs ſo muche bread in wildernes wherewith we might ſuffice ſo great a multitude: And Jeſus ſayth vnto them: How many loaues haue ye? and they ſayd vnto him: ſeuen, and a fewe litle fyſhes. And he commaunded the people to ſit downe on the grounde, and tooke the ſeuen loaues and the fyſhes. And after that he had geuen thankes, he brake them, and gaue to his diſcyples, and the diſcyples gaue them to the people. And they all did eate, and were ſuffyſed. And they tooke vp of the broken meate that was left ſeuen baſkettes full. And yet they that dyd eate, were fower thouſande men, beſide women & children. And he ſent away the people and tooke ſhip, and came into the coaſtes of Magdala.

This kindenes of the people cauſed him to heape benefit vpon benefite of his owne accorde. For whan Jeſus knewe that the multitude taryed and byd by him three dayes (ſuch was theyr feruency towardes Jeſus) and knew alſo if they had brought any vitayle with them, it was conſumed and ſpent a good whyle before: and that many were in iopardy for hunger: Furthermore that the iorney was long, and that there were no villages nor townes nere: he called his disciples vnto hym and sayd: I haue pitie on this multitude. For now it is thre dayes, that they haue taried with me in desert, nor they haue nothing to eate, and I will not sende them away fasting, leste they faynte in the way, being longer than they be hable to goe fasting.

With these sayinges he put his disciples in remembraunce of the former miracle, when he fed certayne thoulandes of men. But they yet rude and forgetting those former thynges, beyng carefull and doubtefull as though they had ben commaunded to fede suche a greate multitude of men, doe make answere: Where than can we get suche a deale of bread that may suffice suche a great multitude? This simplicitie and forgetfulnes of the disciples, dyd sette furth the greatnes of the miracle. They therefore beyng in dispayre, Chryste taketh in hande, the mater of the miracle. He asketh the how many loaues they had. They answered, seuen, and a few fyshes. And furthwith he commaunded them to sit downe vpon the grounde. And taking the seauen loaues and the meate in his handes, after that he had lifted vp his eyes vnto heauen and geuen thankes vnto his father, he brake them and deliuered them to hys disciples, and they distributed them to the people. Euery man did eate his fill, and there was nothing lacking: insomuch that seauen basketes were filled of the gatherynges of scrappes, whiche remayned. And there were of them that dyd eate, in numbre fower thousande, beside children and women. But Jesus, so many miracles shewed in the mounte, leste he shoulde stirre the people ouermuch to haue him in veneration and honoure: chiefly when these bodely benefites be applied and geuen for none other intent, but to obtayne authoritie to the doctrine of the ghospel, whereby the soules be healed and fed: after that he had sent away the multitude, he went by boate into the lande of Magedon. And he commaunded the people to sit down on the grounde

¶ The. xvi. Chapiter

¶ And the Pharisees with the Saduceis came and tempted hym, and required of him to shewe them a signe from heauen. But he answered and sayde vnto them: when the euen tide beginneth to draw nere, ye say: It will be fayre weather, for the skie is red. And in the morning: It will bee troublesome weather: for the skye is glowmyng red. O ye hypocrites, ye can discerne the face of heauen, but can ye not discerne the signes of the tymes? The froward and adulterouse nation requireth a signe, and there shall no signe be geuen vnto it but the signe of the Prophete Jonas. The texte.

Jesus being here, there came vnto him agayne certaine Pharisees and Saduceis being of a contrary sect, notwithstanding of one consente and agreemente to lye in wayte for Jesus. And craftely they require him to shew some token from heauen, as thoughe hereafter yf he would haue so done, they would haue beleued in him, where as they wente about nothing els, but to seke occasyon to reproue hym. But Jesus when he perceyued that after so many miracles, they remained pertinate in their malice, mourned in the spirite and sayde: Ye hypocrites vttering one thyng with with your mouth, and clokinge another in your hart, in lesse thinges when ye marke heauen, ye can tel before what weather shal folow the day after.

Of the Hypocrites. &c. For whan ye see the sunne go to glade, ye say: to morowe shall be fayre wether, for the aier is cleare and bright. Againe when ye see the sunne rise in the morninge, by and by ye geue sentence, that that shal be a foule and a boysterouse day because the lowring ayre is red. Whan ye see the fashion and countenaunce of heauen, ye can gesse whether the time will be mete for tourneing, rowing, sowinge, or mowing, or for any other thinges appertepning to the vse of the body: And are ye so dul and negligēt in knowlege of the time, that maketh for your soules helth? Ye haue the scriptures, ye see what thinges be done, ye see howe the worlde is renewed, and vnderstande ye not yet, that the tyme spoken of before by the Prophetes, and looked for, so long tyme, is nowe at hande? Of one signe ye geue sentence, of fayre or foule weather, of so many signes, whiche ye see dayly, doe ye not perceiue the thing that is present? If ye would haue bene made better by wonders and myracles, ye would haue beleued me long agon. Now ye require a signe and a token to be the worse thereby. O naughtie and adulterous generation, which goeth farre out of kinde from her forefathers, of whose tyries, the magnifieth her selfe. She seketh craftely for a wonder out of heauen, to proue a quarell and to reproue it: But in tyme to come she shall haue a signe that she shall feare and not reproue. In the meane time she shall haue no signe nor wonder but out of the earth, whiche shal frustrate and disappointe all theyr endeuoures, when they shall see hym alyue agayne, whome they thought to bee dead and buryed. It seemeth a monstrouse thyng vnto them whiche chanced to the Prophete Jonas: they shall haue a lyke monster, but more wonderfull. By this riddell and darke sygure, the Lorde Jesus signified that he should be first slayne, & buried of them, whome they thoughte to be nothyng elles but man, and furthwith shoulde ryse agayne, through the power of God.

The texte. ¶ And he left them and departed. And whan his disciples were come to the other syde of the water, they had forgotten to take bread with them. Than Jesus sayd vnto them: Take hede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees, & the Saducees. But they thought in themselues sayinge, we haue taken no bread with vs. Whiche when Jesus vnderstoode, he sayde vnto them: O ye of litle fayth, why take ye thought within your selues because ye haue brought no bread? Do ye not perceiue nor remēbre eyther the .v. loaues, when there were fiue thousand men, and how many basketes toke ye away? Neyther the .vii. loaues when there were .iiii. thousande men, and how many basketes toke ye away? How happeneth it that ye doe not vnderstande that I spake it not to you concernyng bread that ye shoulde beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and Saducees. Than vnderstoode they howe that he had them not beware of the leauen of bread, but of the doctrine of the Pharisees, and of the Saducees.

Jesus therfore leauing them with their blindnes, went ouer the water by ship, & the disciples had forgotten to prouide theselues of bread before they entred into the shippe. For they had but one lofe in the shippe. Jesus therefore to put them in remembraunce, saide: take diligent hede and beware of the leauen of the Pharisees and the Saducees: noting and touching darkely their Jewishe superstitiō, because they thought it a great matter to eate these meates or those meates, whereas they were taughte before, that man was not defyled with the thynges that entred into the mouthe. The disciples although they vnderstoode not what he mente, were yet monished with this saying, that they had had forgotten to put vitayle in their shippe. Jesus therefore chideth them beyng carefull for thys thyng, blamyng theyr dulnesse, whiche taughte so often both with sayinges and doinges, vtterly to cast out of theyr mynde carefulnesse for vitayle, yet were incumbred with carke and care for suche manner of thynges: O ye of litell trust to me, why dooe ye bere youre mynde with thys carefullnesse, that ye haue forgotten breade, as who sayeth, we shall lacke any thyng, although ye prouyde not for it? Dydde not I teache you that firste of all the kyngdome of God muste bee soughte for, and that these thynges shall be cast vnto you? Haue ye not seene now twyse that such a great multytude lacked not meate? So many wayes taughte and monyshed, vnderstande ye not yet? remembre ye not yet? Is youre herte yet blynded with suche manner of cares? and see ye not after the Phariseys fashyon, that whiche ye see with youre eyes? and that whiche ye heare with youre eares, ys pr as though ye hearde it not: haue ye forgot that, whiche was lately done, your selues being not onely witnesses but also ministers? When that fiue thousande men were fully fed with .v. barely loaues & two fyshes, the numbre of geastes being so greate, the preparacion so small, howe many basketes dyd ye fyll of the scrappes whiche remayned of the feaste? They aunswere hym, twelue. And agayne when fower thousande men were fylled with seuen loaues and a fewe fishes, ye beeyng the dystributoures, howe many basketes filled ye with the scrappes? they aunswere seuen: Why, dooe ye not yet vnderstande the maner of my speaking, whiche ye tourne to the care of bodely thinges, whereas my talkyng studieth and prouideth for the mindes, rather then the bodies? Now ye shoulde of your selues haue conjectured what my riddel ment when I sayde: beware of the leauen of the Phariseis and Saduceis. I had nowe taught you that it litle skilled what kynde of meate we eate. I had nowe diuerslye declared and beaten vpon it, that they whiche haue in hande the matter of the ghospel, shoulde vtterly cast away suche vile cares.

O ye of litell faith.

The disciples beyng more attent and diligent by this litle chyding, vnderstode that Jesus ment that they should take hede diligently, and beware of the doctryne of the Phariseis, whiche had nothyng that was syncere and cleane, but was corrupte with ambicyon, auaryce enuie, and other vyces: Whereas the doctrine of the ghospell tasted of no suche thyng. For they doctrine doeth rather infecte man, than fede hym, and therefore it must be taken hede of diligently, because they bee woonte for to deceiue vnware and symple men by the false cloke of godlynes, whiche is the very poyson of true godlines.

The texte.

¶ When Jesus came into the coastes of the citie which is called Cesarea Philippi, he asked his disciples, saying: Whome doe men say that I the sonne of manne am? they say he: some say that thou arte John the Baptiste, some Helias, some Hieremias, or one of the noumbre of the Prophetes. He sayeth vnto them: But whome say ye that I am? Symon Peter answered: Thou arte Christe the sonne of the liuing God. And Jesus aunswered and sayde vnto hym: happie arte thou Symon the sonne of Jonas, for flesshe and bloude hath not opened that vnto thee, but my father whiche is in heauen. And I saye vnto thee, that thou arte Peter, and vpon this stocke I will buylde my churche, and the gates of hell shall not preuayle against it. And I will geue vnto the, the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen: and whatsoeuer thou byndest in earth shall be bounde in heauen, and whatsoeuer thou loosest in earthe shal be loosed in heauen.

Here when Jesus came into the coastes of the citie called Cesarea, whiche Philippe

Philippe the Tetrarche so named in the honour of Ceasar, folowing his brother Herode, whiche chaunged the name, and called that Cesarea, whyche before was named the tower of Straton, he thoughte to proue howe muche his scholers had profited by hearing so muche communication, and by seeing so many miracles: and whether they had any higher or better opinion of him, than the vulgare sorte. Therefore he demaundeth of them saying: whome doe men talke that the sonne of man is? They say: some say that he is Johan the baptist. For so the Herodians did suspecte. Some say that he is Helias, because he was taken vp: & they suspect that he doeth appere now according to the prophecie of Malachy. Some say that he is Hieremie, because he was a figure of Christ, and that it was sayde of hym: Beholde I haue set thee thys day ouer nations and kinges, to plucke vp and to distroy and to plant: which in dede should be fulfilled in Christ. Jesus hearing these, to thentent he would gette out some more certayne and hygher profession, sayeth: pe (sy he) whiche shoulde knowe me better, who say ye that I am? Here Symon Peter as he loued Jesus best, as the chefe of the Apostolicall order, aunswered for them all.
Thou arte very Christe, the sonne of God aliue: not speaking of suspicion, but professing certainely and vndoubtedly that he was Messias promised of the Prophetes, and the sonne of god after a certayne singuler manner. Jesus delighted with this chereful and substanciall profession, sayde: blessed art thou Symon the sonne of Johu. The affection of man taught thee not this word, but the heauenly father put it in thy minde, by a secret inspiracion. For no man hath a worthy opinion of the sonne, but by the inspiracion of the father, which only knoweth the sonne. And I agayn, lest thou shouldest adourne me thankelesse with suche a noble testimony, allure thee of this, that thou arte very Peter, that is to say, a sound and a sure stone, not wauering hither or thither with sundrie opinions of the vulgare sorte: & vpon this stone of thy profession, wil
I builde my churche, that is to saye, my house and my palace: whiche beyng sette vpon a sure foundacion, I will so fortifie, that no power or strengthe of the kingdome of hell shalbe hable to beate it downe. Sathan will come vpon you with many engines, he will rayse a coumpany of wicked spirites against you, but through my defence my buyldyng shall stande impregnable, onely lette thys sure and sounde profession abyde. The kyngdome of heauen is the churche, the kingdome of the deuil is the worlde. Of thys no man nede to bee afearde, so that he bee Peter, that is to saye, lyke vnto thee. And the keyes of this heauenly kyngdome I will deliuer vnto thee. For it is meete that there he bee firste in auctorite, whiche is firste in the professyon of the faithe, and in charitie. And truely this kingdom of heauen is in earth, but it hath to do with heauen, wherof it doeth depende. Wherfore he that is entangled with sinnes, doeth belong to the kingdome of hell, nor can not enter into the kyngdome of heauen. But he shall enter yf he professe that whiche thou doeste professe, and be loosed from his sinnes by baptisme, and so through thy leading and thy opening of the gates, he shall enter into the kingdome of heauen. This is my peculiar and proper power, to forgeue sinnes: but thys power I will geue vnto thee after a maner, that that whiche thou shalte lose, with my keyes recey-ued of me, vpon earth before men, shal be loosed also in heauen before God.
On the other side, that which thou shalte binde in earth, shall be bounde also in heauen, for God will allowe thy iudgemente cummyng from hys spirite.

And I will geue vnto thee. &c.

¶ Than charged he his disciples that they shoulde tell no man that he was Jesus Christe. From that tyme forthe began Jesus to shewe unto his disciples howe that he muste goe unto Hierusalem, and suffer many thinges of the elders, and hye preistes, and Scribes, and muste be killed and raysed up agayne the thyrde daye: And whan Peter had taken hym aside, he began to rebuke him saying: Master tarieth thy selfe, this shall not happen unto thee. But he turneth him aboute, and saied unto Peter: goe after me Sathan, thou art offence me, for thou sauerest not the thinges that be of God, but those that be of men. The text.

Whan Jesus had spoken these thynges, he commaunded his disciples that they should as yet kepe this godly opinion of him, secret with themselues: not open it to others that he was Messias. For first the sacrifice of the crosse must be accomplished, and the verite of his manly nature declared, and further by his resurrection, and the holy ghoste. his diuinite muste bee declared. For although the voyce and sentence of Peter, was praysed of Christ, as the sentence of them whiche nowe began to profite and spring vp by little and little, unto thinges of more perfection, yet they dreamed of a certayne kyngdome not vterly vnlyke a worldly kingdome. And therefore Jesus darkely, and as in a riddle, promised unto Peter the tyght of the keyes, but he delyuered them not by and by. For as yet he was not mete to vse them, as yet he was not sufficyently taught with the instruction of the holy spirite. And therefore Jesus calleth them backe to the mystery of the crosse and of hys deathe, by the whiche misterie that kingdome must be prepared, the deuil once ouercome, and sinnes abolished, that they mighte bee the lesse troubled in their myndes whan they should se thinges chaunce which they knew should come to passe a litle after. They desyred rather to glory in the mightie and high sonne of the liuing God, but no man can truely glory in hym, but he whiche is not offended with hys humilitie and lowne. Jesus therefore began to prepare his disciples to thys ſorme which was at hand, shewing them that he must first goe to Jerusalem, and that he shoulde haue many griefes and displeasures of the Scribes and Pharisees, and also of the chiefe priestes, and finally that he shoulde be killed, but on the thyrde day ryse agayne. Whan the disciples being yet carnal vnderstoode not fully this communication, because they iudged these thynges vnmete and vnworthy for him, who thoroughe so many myracles declared himselfe to be the sonne of God, yet they durst not demaunde of their maister what ument to dye and ryse agayne. Therefore Peter who for the special loue that he had to his mayster, was bolder then the other, taketh hym aside from the other of the Apostles, as though he woulde tell hym a thyng more familiarly: and chyding hym, and abhorring the speaking of death and afflictions, sayd: Lorde be good to your selfe. These thinges shall not happen vnto you. For it is in you that they come not to passe: For although Peter pronounced hym to be the sonne of God alyue, rather by the instigation of the father, then by hys owne reason or wit: yet he was farre from the vnderstandyng of that misterie, that Jesus by hys death shoulde redeme mankynde, and by his resurrecyon declare vnto the worlde the might of his diuine power. Therfore Jesus to reforme this affection in his disciples, turned vnto them. ¶ beholde thé whome he knewe to haue like mynde and affecyon (albeit onely Peter durste blame the Lorde,) and said vnto Peter: Come behind me Sathan. Be not against the will of my father: it is thy parte to folowe me, not to goe beefore. Nowe thou doocste withstande, and endeuour to lest that thyng whiche bothe my father willeth to be doen, and also it behoueth me to doe, for the healthe and saluacion

of mankinde. Thou desirest to bee a fellowe of the kyngdome, and thou arte agaynste me making spede vnto the crosse of myne owne accorde, to thentente I may winne and get thys kyngdome to my father: what way ye see me goe the same ye must goe also to the kyngdome of heauen. But thou fauourest not yet the thynges whiche be of God: but led by mannes affectyons, reprynestest agaynst the will of God. Refuse not therefore, thou vnprofitable counsaylour, but folow after me, becum rather a scholler then a maister.

The texte. ¶ Than sayde Jesus vnto hys disciples: yf any man will folowe me, let hym forsake hymselfe, & take up his crosse & folowe me. For whoso will saue his life shal loose it. Againe whoso loseth his life for my sake, shall finde it. For what doeth it profite a man if he wan all y whole world, & loase his owne soule? Or what shal a man geue to redeme his soule agayne withal? For the sonne of man shal come in the glory of his father with his angels, and then shal he reward euery man according to his dedes. Verely I say vnto you, there bee some standyng here, whiche shall not taste of deathe, tyll they see the sonne of manne come in hys kingdome.

When that with these sayinges Jesus had cut the combe of Peter for his importune frowardnes, turning to all his disciples began to declare at large what it was that he sayde to Peter: come behinde me. As yf he would bee my disciple and partaker of the kyngdome of heauen, let hym folowe my steppes. And lyke as he seeth me despysyng all the goodes of thys worlde, to beleeue my lyfe also willingly for the saluacyon of menne and glory of my father: so muste he also refuse and caste of all humayne affections, ready to all kindes of death, for the gospels sake, and take his crosse and folow me, which am goyng to the crosse. So to suffer is a blessed thyng: so to bee rebuked is a glorious thyng: so to be killed is a winnyng of lyfe. I know there is nothing more dere then life: but so euery man must lose hys lyfe, if he will saue it: and except he lose it, he shall lose it in dede. He loseth it for aduauntage that loseth it for the gospels sake. He loseth it in dede whiche forsaking the ghospell, prouideth for thys temporal lyfe, and loseth the life euerlasting. There is no man so foolish that would winne this whole worlde with the losse of this corporal and shorte lyfe. To what purpose serue tychelle of the owner perisher? So it is a mad mannes parte to make so muche of hys affections, of tychelle, or els of his body, whiche within shorte time shoulde perishe, yea though no man kil it: that for mennes pleasure he will lese the lyfe euerlasting, whiche whoso hath not, hath all the other in vayne. Therefore nothing ought to be so deare vnto any man, the gain whereof he woulde chaunge with the losse of his soule. For the losse of other thinges may some wayes be recompenced, the losse of the soule cannot be recouered. He that loseth his life for my sake, dooeth not lose it, but commytteth it to me for auauntage, and shall receyue it agayne with lucre, whan the Maiestie of the kingdome of God shall appeare.

For what doeth it profit a man if he wine all ỹ world, &c

No: ye ought not to be discouraged in youre mynde because I haue shewed you that ye must suffer muche aduersitie for the ghospel. They shall haue an ende shortely and euerlasting glory, shall folow the temporal ignominy and rebuke. For the sonne of man whome ye shall see oppressed and troden downe of all men and counted for a wurme: shall come once in an other lykenes, and shall shewe vnto all men the Maiestie and glory of hys father, beeyng garded and accompanted with his aungels. Than he that was iudged here and condemned with a shameful deathe, shall bee the iudge of all menne bothe quicke and dead, and shall yelde a rewarde vnto euery man according to hys dedes. Than shall they bee appoynted to euerlastyng deathe, whiche here regarded more their lyfe thā me: and they shalbe rewarded with immortal life which for my sake despised ꝑ life of the body for a time. Now is the tyme of strife and trauayle, hereafter shalbe the time of rewardes. And truly this felicitie shall than be made absolute and perfecte, when it shall bee seene good vnto the father. For it belongeth not vnto you to knowe the tyme. And yet in the mean seaso there shalbe geuen to you, a certain taste of this glory. For be ye assured of this: there be sum here stādyng whiche shall not taste of death, before that they see the sonne of man shewyng the maiestie of his kingdome, as it may be seene with bodily yes. Surely before death they shal see the kingdome of God shewe furth his power: and now by litle and litle banquyshe and ouercum the whole power of this worlde.

¶ The. xvii. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ And after sixe dayes Jesus taketh Peter and James and John his brother, and bringeth them vp into a high mountain out of the way, and he was transfigured before them, & his face did shine as the sunne, and his clothes wer as white as the light. And beholde there appeared vnto them Moses and Helias talkyng with him. Than answered Peter and said vnto Jesus: Lord here is good being for vs, if thou wilt, let vs make here thre tabernacles, one for the, & one for Moses, and one for Helias. To he yet was speaking, behold a bright cloude shadowed the. And behold there came a voice out of the cloud, saiyng: this is my welbeloued sonne in whom I delight muche, heare him. And when the disciples had heard these tnynges, they fell on their faces, and were sore afrayed. And Jesus came and touched them, and said: Arise, and be not afrayed. And when they had lyft vp their yes, they sawe no man saue Jesus onely.

After sixe dales, Jesus willyng by sum meanes as it were by a dreame, to shew vnto his disciples, that syghte and apperaunce in the whiche office he shall cum to be iudge of the worlde: he chose out three of the numbre of his disciples, Peter, James, and John his brother: and whan he had brought them vp into a very hye hyll, farre from the sight of men, he was transfigured before them. And his face shyned lyke the sunne, and his garmentes wer bryght with whytenesse as whyte as snow, and as no fuller can make vpon the earth, and there appered also to them, Moses and Helias talkyng with hym of the glory of his death, whiche he should suffer at Jerusalem. This was thought good to Christ, that ꝑ Apostles should be confyrmed by those auctours, whom all the Jewes magnified mesie, and that they shoulde not suspect that he would abolish the law, sith Moses stoode with hym: nor the prophetes, sith Helias was present: neither ꝑ they should abhorre his death as a shameful thing, whiche so great men set forth, and shewed it to bee glorious. These thinges wer seen to the apostles as to men newely waked frō slepe: for their yes wer heauy & grieued. For mortall feblenesse was not of capacitie to receiue the greatnesse of the vision. The disciples therfore being afeard and amased with suche a wōderful and incredible sighte, Peter not yet fully wel aduised, but rauished wholly with the pleasure and maiesty of the sight, which semed to be farre from mencion of death, said: Lord let vs build here three tentes or pauilyons, one for thee, another for Moses, and the third for Helias. This was thought vnto Peter more wisedom than to be slain at Jerusalem. Peter had not yet ended his cōmunicatiō, but beholde a bryght and pleasaūt cloude ouershadowed thapostles, lest they should be ablozpte and ouercummed with the highneſſe of the lighte. And behold the voice of the father ſounded out of the cloude, witneſſyng of his ſonne, with the ſame wozdes with the which he witneſſed of hym, whē he was baptiſed in Jozdane: This is my onely beloued ſonne in whom my mynde hath delight, heare him. Whan the diſciples heard this voice ful of diuine maieſtie, and not to be bozne of mannes eares, they fell doune groueling vpon theyr faces, and wer moze afeard. Foz they wer afeard of theyr lyfe, because they had learned that God ſayed thus: man ſhall not ſee me and liue. But Jeſus terciuyng agayn his fozmer ſhape, touched them with his handes, leſt they ſhoulde ſuppoſe that he were a goſte, and with his accuſtomed and knowen voyce he comforted them, ſayeng: Aryſe and feare nothyng. Further when they wer cum to themſelues, and lifted vp their eyes, they ſawe no mā there but Jeſus alone, euen lyke as he came vnto the hill.

The texte. And whan they came doune from the mountayne, Jeſus charged them, ſayeng: Shewe the viſion to no manne vntill the ſonne of man be ryſen agayn from the dead. And his diſciples aſked hym, ſayeng: why than ſay the Scribes that Helias muſt firſt cume? And Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid: Truely Helias ſhall firſt cum and reſtore all thynges. But I ſaye vnto you, that Helias is cum alreadye, they knewe hym not, but haue doen vnto hym whatſoeuer they luſted. Jn like wyſe ſhal the ſonne of man alſo ſuffre of them. Thē the diſciples vnderſtode that he ſpake vnto them of John Baptiſte.

And whan they came doune from the hill, beſoze they came to the cumpany of the other diſciples, he cōmaūded them to tell no man of the ſe thinges that they had ſene, vntil the ſonne of man wer riſen frō death. Foz vntil that time the tale ſhould be vnpzofitable, and not beleued. And the diſciples kept it to themſelues, and conferred betwene themſelues what it myght meane, that Jeſus ſaid after that he he riſen again frō death. Their hart was ſo wzapt & entangled, that that wozde ſo often heard, could not enter into their hart. But a certain doubt roſe in their myndes of that that they ſaw Helias ſtandyng with Jeſus, this doubt they pzopoſe vnto hym in the way. What meneth it than (ſay they) that the Scribes teachyng and telling of the cumming of Meſſias, be wonte to ſaye out of the authozitie of Malachie, that before the cummyng of Meſſias, Helias Thelbites ſhal cum. And he went not beſoze thy cummyng, but this daye was ſeene in the hyll. Vnto whome Jeſus makyng anſwer, ſaied: Truly Helias ſhall cum lyke as Malachias ſayed: and accozdyng to his prophetie ſhall goe beſoze my cummyng, and ſhall reſtore all thynges, the reſidewe of the people of Jewes bring conuerted vnto the goſpell, leſte the whole nacion ſhould be condemned. But this cumming ſhall be in tyme to cum, when I ſhall be here againe with the maieſtie of my father, renderyng rewarde vnto euery man accozdyng vnto his dedes. And yet a certayn Helias went beſoze this my cummyng alſo, whom the Jewes deſpiſed, euen as they dyd me, and dyd vnto him not after his deſertes, but whatſoeuer it pleaſed them. And the ſonne of man ſhall be handeled of them with like mekenes. Than the diſciples vnderſtode that he called John Baptiſte Helias, foz the lykenes of lyfe, and freenеſſe in repzouyng of synges.

Helias is cum alreddy.

The texte. And whan they wer cum to the people, there came to hym a certaine man knelying downe and ſayed: Lorde haue mercy on my ſonne, for he is lunatyke, and ſoore vexed, for oftymes he falleth into the fyer, and oft into the water. And I brought him to thy diſciples, & they could not heale him. Jeſus anſwered, and ſaid: O ſcythles & croked nacion, how long ſhal I be with you, how long ſhall I ſuffre you? bring hym hither. And Jeſus rebuked the deuil, and he went out of hym. And the childe was healed from that tyme.

But

But now when Jesus went vnto his disciples, he sawe a great multitude of men about thē, and the Scribes disputyng with them. The people meruelyng whither Jesus was gone, ran vnto him and saluted him. He demaūded of them what the matter was that they disputed amonge themselues. Than one of the multitude made aunswer: Maister I brought my sonne to ther, which is miserably vexed of an vncleane spirit: which as often as he taketh him, the childe is beaten against the ground, sumtime he is dryuen into the fier, sumtime into the water, he fometh, he gnasheth with his teeth, & cōsumeth awaye. And because I could not haue you, & desired your disciples to cast out the deuil, & they could not. But Jesus to reale the vnbelefe of all men, crieth out in maner angerly: O nacion vnbeleuing and without faythe, how long shall I be among you in payne, how long shall I suffre your vntractable and frowarde maners? Haue doen so many miracles and profitte nothyng: and therwith cōmaunded the childe to be brought, because the miracle might be the more euident and notable to all men. Which when he was brought and seen of Jesu, furthwith euen there before thē al, the spirite toke hym, and the childe was hurled vpon the ground, and tumbled and fomed: a miserable sight to see. Thā Jesu the more to declare ỹ greatnes of the disease, asked the father how long it was sith the child began to be vexed with this disease. The father made aunswer and sayed: from his infancy, and not without daunger of his life. For oftentimes he droue him into the fier, sumtyme into the water to destroy him. I know that it is a sore disease, yet yf thou cāst do any thing haue mercy vpō vs & help vs. Jesu hearyng (yf thou canst) sumwhat reprouyng the weakenes of his faith, as who saieth any disease wer of greater might than the power of God, sayth vnto him: Aske not what I am able to do, but loke what thou art able to beleue. For if thou trust fully, nothing is so hard but it may cum to passe to him ỹ doth beleue & trust. At this word the father conceiuyng a trust, and a more sure hope, with plentifull teares cryyng out, made aunswer: Lord I beleue, and if any thing wāt in my trust and belefe, supply thou it of thy goodnes, and help my vnbelefe. In the meane time when Jesus espied the multitude of people runnyng to gase, desyrous to see whether the thyng that came not to passe to ỹ disciples should cum to passe to Jesus: he threatened the vncleane spirit, saiyng: thou deaf and dumme spirit, I commaund the go out from him, and returne not again vnto him hereafter. But the spirite went frō the childe with howling, yet first he roze him and vexed him so vehemently that he lay for dead, and many warranted that he was dead. So strong and tough was the violence of the disease. But Jesus taking the child by the hand, lifted hym vp: & he arose. Like as the father did hardly beleue: so his sōne was hardly heled.

O faythles and croked nacion, &c.

And Jesus rebuked the deuill, &c.

¶ Than came the disciples a part to Jesus, and said: whye could not we cast hym out? Jesus said vnto them: because of your vnbelefe. For verily I say vnto you: yf ye haue fayth as a grain of mustarde seede, ye shall say vnto this mountayne: Remoue from hence to yonder place, and it shall remoue: and nothing shalbe vnpossible vnto you. Albeit this kynde goeth not oute, but by prayer and fastyng.

The texte.

In the meane season the disciples wer heauy in their mindes, fearing lest thorough their default they had lost the power of doyng miracles, whereas before they had gloryed that deuilles also were obedient vnto their worde: before the multitude they kept silence for shame. But whan Jesus was cū into the houſe, they goe vnto their maiſter and demaund of hym: why could not we caſt out this deuill, ſith this power was once deliuered vnto vs frō thee Jeſus to confyrme the faythe and truſt of his diſciples, which oughte to be ſo great that ſumtyme it myghte helpe the diſtruſte of others, ſayeth: The weakeneſſe of your fayth partely was the cauſe. For the violēce of the diſeaſe was behement, and the fathers fayth weake and waueryng, & your faythe was not ſo mightie, that it was equall and hable againſt both theſe difficulties. For it is ſumwhat wrēſth with mannes affections, and faultye by the reaſon of the leauen of vayngloye. And ye had faythe lyke the ſeede of muſtarde, which beyng vile and litle, yet when it is bꝛoyſed, it ſheweth a ſharpe quickneſs of her nature, and ſowed in the grounde ſpꝛingeth vp into a large tree: nothing ſhould be ſo harde, but with a word it ſhould be bꝛought to paſſe out of hande. Yea if ye ſhould ſay to the hil, remoue from hence, and goe into an other place, it would doe it forthwith as it was commaunded. But this kynde of deuylles wherewith the chylde was poſſeſſed, is not caſt out, vnleſſe fayth be confirmed and ſtrengthned by prayer and faſtyng. The violence of the diſeaſe was ſtrong and tough, and by continuaunce of time, it was tornēd into nature. Againſte ſuche maner of faultes we muſt fyght with faſtynges, which do ſubdue the body being bꝛought lowe, vnto ỹ ſpirite, and alſo with prayer, whiche obteyneth the help of god. By this cōmunicatiō Jeſus taught that greuous, behement, and muche accuſtomed dyſeaſes of the mind, muſt be dꝛiuen away with ſtrong & behemente remedies.

And whan they were in Galile, Jeſus ſayd vnto them: It will cum to paſſe that the ſōne of man ſhalbe deliuered into the handes of men, and they ſhall kyll hym, and the third daye he ſhall riſe againe. And they were exceadyng ſory.

But now Jeſus whan he was in Galile, to the entent he might fortify, & make ſtrong the mindes of his diſciples, leſt they ſhould be ouer much troubled with his death, again he doth iterate & beate it into thē, that the ſonne of man muſt be delyuered into the handes of men, and killed of them, & that the thyꝛde day he ſhould riſe agayn from death. This ſayyng did grieue the mindes of ỹ diſciples aboue meaſure, which ſo loued their lord albeit theyr affection and loue was yet carnal: that their eares could not ſuffer any mencion of death. For they coulde not vnderſtande that Moſes and Helyas called the death of Jeſus a glory & renoume, and that that death ſhould bꝛyng health and ſaluacion to the whole worlde. And although, like as they were heuy and ſadde at the mencion of death, ſo they ought to haue bene chereful & glad at the mencion of the reſurrection: yet their mynd abhoꝛred ſo muche from the remembꝛaunce of deathe, that ſurelye they vnderſtode not what it ment to dye, and the thyꝛde day to riſe agayn. For they thought it better vtterly not to dye, ſeeyng that he was hable to doe that, whiche was hable to reuiue again from death.

The texte.

And whan they were cum to the citie of Capernaum, they that vſe to receiue tribute money called a didrame, came to Peter, and ſaid: Doth your maiſter pay a didrame? he ſaith, yea. And whan he was cum into the houſe, Jeſus preuented him, ſayeng: What thinkeſt thou Simō? Of whom doeth the kynges of the earth take tribute or toll, of their children or of ſtraungers? Peter ſayeth vnto him, of ſtraungers. Jeſus ſayd vnto hym: than the children be free. Notwithſtanding, leſte we ſhoulde offende them, goe to the ſea and caſt an hooke, and take the fyſhe that cummeth firſt vp, and whan thou haſt opened his mouthe, thou ſhalt fynde a ſtater: take it, and geue it vnto them for the and me.

After

After that he came to the citie of Capernaum, they that demaunded tribute in Cesars name, being afraied to speake to Jesus because of his authoritie, whiche he had gotten hym now by miracles: they went to Peter whom they sawe in maner next about him: Doth your maister (q they) pay a didram for tribute? Peter wheras he had no money, and would not offende ye gatherers of tribute, made answwer that he payeth. For Jesus hitherto had paied such maner tributes. And when they were nowe entred into the house (for Jesus had an house there) Peter being perplexed, thought in his mind to speake to Jesus, as touching paimēt of the tribute. For he had promised, and had not to pay. The Jesus not ignorant what Peter had in his harte, preuented his question. Symon (q he) what thynkest thou? Of whom do kynges wonte to take tribute or subsidie, of their childrē or of strangers? Of strāgers q Peter. Then (q Jesus) the childrē be free: signifiyng therby though sumwhat darkly, that he being lorde of the land and the sea, and of all thynges, oweth tribute or subsidie to no mortal prince, and that his disciples, as the childrē of the kingdome, be not bounde: but yet minding to reache that in such thynges whiche make nothing against godlines, obedience ought to be geuen to this kynd of men, lest being prouoked they offend more greuously, he added: yet (q he) lest we offend them, go to the sea and take the fish which cummeth out first, open his mouth, and thou shalt fynd a piece of coyne called a Stater whiche is lower drāmes. Take it, and geue it for me and the. With this dede Jesus both shewed his power, wherby he was subiect to no mā, & his modestie, wherby he would geue place vnto thē, whō it is not mete to stirre or prouoke for a thing of litle value, & to be set nothyng by. For he that can geue after that sorte, is greater than he that ought to geue: and yet when he geueth that he ought not, he reacheth that it is better sumtime for to geue ouer thy right then to striue for thy right with them that be froward, chiefly in those thinges whiche diminiſhe thy substaunce, but hurt nothyng godlynes. The worlde hath his order which must not be troubled in no case, by occasion of liberrie of the ghospell.

¶ The. xviii. Chapter.

¶ At the same tyme came the disciples vnto Jesus, saiyng: Who is the greatteste in the kyngdome of heauen? Jesus called a chylde vnto hym, and set hym in the middest of them, saiyng. Verelye I saye vnto you, excepte ye conuerte and become as chyldren, ye shall not entre into the kyngdome of heauen. Whosoeuer therefore humbleth hymselfe as this chylde, the same is greatest in the kyngdome of heauen. And whoso receyueth suche a childe in my name, receyueth me. But whoso offendeth one of these litleones whiche beleue on me, it wer better for him that a millstone wer hanged about his neche, and that he wer drowned in the depe of the sea. Woe to the worlde because of offences. Necessary it is that offences cum, but woe vnto the man by whome the offence cummeth. The texte

After that these thynges were thus doen, there entered into the myndes of thapostles, a certain worldlye affection, and a pryche of enuy and ambicion. They heard of the kingdome of heauen, they sawe three Apostles led a parte into the mountayne, they heard that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were delyuered vnto Peter, and that it was sayde vnto hym: blessed art thou Symon Barsona, and vpon this stone I wyll buylde my churche, they saw him talkyng with their maiſter of certain thynges bothe familiarely and boldely, and euen now they ſawe hym preferred before thother Apoſtles in paimēt of tribute, and in maner made equall vnto Chriſte, therfore they ſum what enuied Peter, vnto whome the principalitie of the kyngdom of heauen ſemed to be appoynted, where as he was yonger in yeares. Therefore they go vnto Jeſus, and demaunde who ſhoulde be chyefe in the kyngdome of heauen. For yet they dreamed vpon ſuch certaine dignities, as we ſee in princes courtes. But Jeſus to plucke this affection vtterlye out of theyr myndes, called to hym a certayn child, and ſette hym in the middes of his diſciples, a litle one, and yet farre from all affections of ambicion and enuie, ſimple, pure, and lyuyng after the onely courſe of nature. Be ye ſure of this (quod he) vnles a man be wholy chaunged, and caſt away vtterly all ſuche affections, and be tranſformed into ỹ fashion & ſimplicitie of this chyld, he ſhal not once be receiued into the kyngdom of heauen. So that in no wyſe preeminence and ſouerainetie ought ambiciously to be deſyred. Wherfore whoſo doth ſubmit himſelf and becum lyke vnto this babe, in that he humbleth himſelf to be as the leaſt of all, he ſhalbe greateſt in the kingdome of heauen. For whoſo through modeſtie and ſobrenes, maketh hymſelfe as leaſte, the ſame is greateſt in vertue. Princes loue them that be lyke vnto them, and amonge them is he moſt eſtemed, that preferreth hiſelf before others. I delight in my lyke. In courtes of this world the prince thinketh it to redound vnto his rebuke, if a man vſe any of his nobles cōtumeliouſly: & he taketh the gentilnes to be beſtowed vpon hymſelf whiche is beſtowed vpō them. But the fauour of true, ſimple and humble mē is ſo great with me, that whoſoeuer receiueth any one of theſe for my ſake, I will it ſhould be counted as done to my ſelf, euen as though he receiued me. Contrariwiſe, whoſo ſlaundereth or offēdeth any one of theſe litle ones which truſt in me, and depend wholy vpō me, he ſhalbe more greuouſly puniſhed, than if he ſhould be drouned in the depe ſea with a milſtone at his necke. For what is more wicked than to offend thē, which beare no man yll will, whiche enuie no man, which prefer themſelues about no man, whiche loue all men indifferently? But alas, wee be to the worlde for offendyng and greuyng of like litle ones. The frowardnes of menne is cauſe that offences muſt nedes chaunce. There ſhall men, whiche ſtirred vp with enuie and hatred, will perſecute them that doe for them, will ſay yll by them that wyſh them well, will kill them that bring euerlaſtyng healeh. And truly theſe offences and griefes ſhal profit them that ſhal ſuffer them, yea they ſhal be profitable to all the world. But yet it ſhall turne hym to diſpleaſure, thorough whoſe defaulte this offence ſhall riſe.

Precepte perteyne vnto them as vnto children, &c.

Woe vnto the worlde becauſe of offences &c.

The texte. Wherfore if thy hand or thy foote hinder the, cut it of, and caſt it from the. It is better for the to enter into lyfe halt or maymed, rather then thou ſhouldeſt hauing two handes or two feete, be caſt into euerlaſtyng fyer. And if thyne eye offend the, pluche it out, and caſt it from the. It is better for thee to enter into life with one eye, rather than hauing two eyes to be caſt into hel fyer. Take hede ỹ ye diſpiſe not one of theſe litle ones. For I ſay vnto you that in heauē their aungels do alwayes behold the face of my father whiche is in heauen.

Therfore they that deſire to enter into the kingdom of heauen, let them diligently auoid the offences & griefes of litle ones, but rather let the helpe one an other. And it is not ynough to beware that a man offend not another, but alſo to take hede that he offend not himſelf. For then they be offēces in dede, whan a man is an offence vnto himſelf. Therfore let not affection be ſo dere

vnto any man but that forthwith it be cut of, yf it be an offence and a lette to hym that hasteth to the kingdom of heauen. Ye do muche wyse if thy hande or thy foote, that is to say a membre most necessary, be offensyue vnto the, it must be cut of and cast away. For it is better for thee to be receiued into the life euerlastinge maimed or lame, than with perfit handes and feete to be cast into euerlastinge fier. The eye is not onely a necessary membre to be vsed, but also very pleasaunt vnto man. Iesus yet in case it offend the, plucke it out, and cast it away. It is better for the to be receiued into euerlasting life with one eye, than to be cast bodlong into hell fyer with both eyes perfect and whole. But Iesus speakyng thus, meant not that any membre of the body should be cut of, but that all affections should be cut of, whiche withdraw vs frō the care of euerlastyng saluation. For a frend whom thou canst vnethe forbeare, is as it were a mans hand. Thy father vpō whom thou hast left, is thy foote: thy wife or thy child whom thou louest tederly, is thine eye. Therfore as there is nothing that ought to be so precious, and nothing that ought so highly to be estemed of man, wherby he ought to be withdrawen frō the kingdom of heauē: so no man be he neuer so poore, so base, and humble, ought to be despised but holpen rather to cum forward to better and better. Ye haue an example, see therefore that ye despise none of these litle ones. Although with ỹ world they be abiectes, yet with God they be greatly regarded. For this I tel you certainly, angels which as theire ministers haue charge of them, do continually behold the face of the father whiche is in heauen. Hereof ye may estreme how muche they be regarded with God, sith he hath appoynted them suche kepers and guides. They be yet rude and rawe, they may fall, they maye be deceyued, but their simplicitie is worthy helpe, and not punishement.

And if thine eye offende the pluck it out, &c.

¶ For the sonne of man is cum to saue that whiche was losse, what thinke ye if a man hathe a hundred shepe, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leaue .xcix. in the mountaines & goeth and seketh it that was gone astray? And if he chaunce to find it, verely I say vnto you: he reioyceth more of that shepe, than of nintie and nine which wer not astray. Euē so it is not the will of your father in heauen, that one of these litle ones should perish.

The texte

For the sonne of man came not into the erth to destroy any man, but what in him is to saue al mē. But many will not be saued, and persecute him which is willing to saue. These be they whom the worlde hath in great veneracō. They be hyghe in autozitie, they be mighty with ryches, they seme to excel in learnyng, they be commended and set forth with a certaine marueylous coūterfeityng and colour of false holynes. Truely suche must not be prouoked willyngly, but muste be despised stoutely, yf they fearyng lest their owne power decay, oppresse the power of god: if they sekyng their own glozy, enuye the glozy of the ghospell: yf they folowyng theyr lucre, be agaynst the prosytes of all men: yf they boastyng theyr vayne learnyng, do corrupt the doctrine of the ghospel: if vnder the pretence of false religion, they go about to extinct true religion: yf they were fyerce and cruel by benefites and good turnes: These maner of men must thanke themselfes for their owne destruction. But this ought to be our study and endeuour that we suffer none to perish of these litle and weake ones, which so do erre that they be in the way of recouery, beyng more lyke to sheepe than woulfes. Coniecture by your selfes what great care the father (whiche is naturally good) doeth take, lest eny man should perysshe, whom he made to the entente they should be blessed. For yf there be a true and faythfull sheaphyerd, lozde ouer an hundzed shepe, and one should be lost of so great a noumbre, would he not leaue the nynty & nine in the hylles, and seke her which is wandered from the flocke and is so greued with the lack of one lost sheype, that he would put the whole flock beside in daunger. And if he should chaunce to finde her, certainly I saye vnto you, that he will reioyce more for that one gotten again, than for all the other whiche were not lost. Wherefore if a man be yng a shepherd beare such affection toward his flock whiche he doth possesse only, but created not, how much more is it my fathers wyll whiche is in heauen, that none of these litle ones, whom he hath created, should perishe whom he regardeth so that he hathe appointed his aungels to the keepyng of them, and hath bestowed his owne sonne to call them to saluacion.

The texte. ¶ Moreouer yf thy brother trespasse against the, goe and tell hym his faulte betweene hym and thee alone. If he heare thee thou hast wonne thy brother, if he heare thee not, take with thee one or two, that in the mouthe of two or three witnesses euery matter may be stablysshed. If he heare not them, tell it vnto the congregacion. If he heare not the congregacion, let hym be vnto thee as an heathen man, and as a Publican. Verely I saye vnto you whatsoeuer ye bynde in earth, shalbe bounde in heauen, and whatsoeuer ye loose on earth, shalbe loosed in heuen. Agayn I say vnto you, that if two of you agree in earth vpon any maner of thyng, whatsoeuer they desyre, they shall haue it of my father whiche is in heauen. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the middest of them.

Therfore away with offences from your cõpany, which breake brotherly peace, but let there be mutual charitie, whereby ye may louingly helpe and heale others faultes if any chaunce: and the way to heale shalbe this. If thy brother do any thing against the which is worthy to be loked vpon, lepe not out forthwith to vengeaunce, neyther agayn suffer hym not by thy silence to be lost, whiles that he sinneth freely and at large, drunken with his own affections: but first tey him with a very gētle remedy whiche shall not so muche as put him to any shame. Go vnto him alone, & debate y matter betwixt you, none other beyng by. If he do not acknowlage his fault, reproue hym & laye it before his eyes, how muche he hath erred frō the dutie of brotherly charitie. And let thy monicō be such yt may declare the to seke nothing els but his health, & the restoryng of olde amitie. And if he be so curable that he cum to himself at this secret monicō, there is no cause why thou shouldest reuēge or put him to open blame: it is inough for the, that thou hast won thy brother. And my meane season thou hast gained by it. For thou shouldest haue lost a frende, and God should haue lost a soule. But yf the disease be so grieuous that it cannot be healed with this light medicine, yet thou muste not vtterly dispayre, nor forthwith run to the extreme remedies. But yf that he will not heare the alone, go to hym again, taking with the .i. or .ii. eyther that he may be amēded with sum litle shame which shalbe no infamy vnto him, or els that he may be confuted & ouercum by the testimonie of two or three. But yf he be so vntractable that he wyll be moued neyther with shame, nor with feare of iudgemēnt, bring the matter to the congregacio, yf he may be reformed either by the cōsent of the multitude, or by thauctozitie of them which be rulers ouer the multitude. But if he be so far past cure yt he will not be corrected neyther by secret & brotherly monicion, neither by the knowlage & cōsent of two or three, neither by the shame of his fault vttered and disclosed, nether by the auctozitie of the chief rulers, leaue him to his disease. Let hym be cut of frō the congregacion, & take in none other wise but as an Heathē or Publicane.

If he heare thee, thou hast wonne thy brother.

If he heare not the congregacion.

Let this

Let this be the greuousest punishment emong you, whiche notwithstãdyng is vsed for none other purpose, but that the brother eyther should cum vnto hymselfe by shame, considerying that he is shunned and fled of all men, ozels lest he beyng mingled in the flocke, should hurt other with his infection. No man ought to say vnto me, the iudgemẽtes of thy kyngdome be but werith and weake, nay they be very seuere and sore, yf a man wyll contemne thẽ obstinately. For mans lawes, when they punish a greuous offence with death, they do nothyng but kill the body, & sumtime they kill hym whom god doth not condẽne, and they kil onely and amend hym not, for he is not alyue to be amended. But this condẽnation although it proceedeth leysurely to punyshmẽt, yet for this cause it is very seuere and sore, that he that is cõdẽned, vnlesse he do repente, is punyshed with euerlastyng payn, which by no meanes he can escape. Whom Cesar doth condemne, god sumtime doeth assoyle: and whom the prince doth assoyle, god sumtime doeth condemne. The prince whõ he doth assoyle, he leaueth in the cumpany of mẽ, to make other like himselfe: whom he killeth, he taketh from the cumpany of men, not onely not healyng him, but making him in case that he cannot be healed. These be mans iudgemẽtes, rather necessary than praisse worthie. But your sentẽce so remoueth a man that is vncurable, that he cannot infecte them that be good: and yet he is in case that he may repent: because that ye haue power to saue, and not to destroy. And yet they shal not sinne vnpunished, whõ ye suffre to haue theyr lyfe. He shalbe punyshed eternally, god beyng his iudge, whose sentẽce shal approue and confirme your sentence, vnlesse the condemned person repente. For he that seketh not reuẽging, but the amendment of his brother, he that is ready to forgeue the iniurie doẽ against him, he that willingly cũmeth vnto the sicke to heale him, bring offended himselfe, he that once or twise repelled, yet ceaseth not to help & heale, he that trusteth not to his own iudgemẽt, but taketh one or two vnto hym, not to reuenge, but to heale: this mans sentence because it cummeth from an euangelicall minde, god wyll allowe and neuer wil breake it, vnles the condemned person will condemne that that he hath doen. Although therfore your iudgement hath not in apperace such seuerities and sharpnes as the iudgemẽtes of princes haue, yet it is more to be feared than their sentence, where with oftentimes the best be condẽned & the most sinful assoiled. It is a terrible thing to be condemned of god: and he is condemned of hym, whosoeuer is condemned of you, agreeing together with a sincere mind. For that that ye iudge by the spirit of god, is not your iudgement, but his by you: but if ye cõdemne a man by the spirit of man, than it is mans iudgemẽt & not gods: & he that by your iudgemẽt is caste out of your cõpany, is not forthwith banished frõ the cumpany of heauen. Therefore the strength of your auctorite resteth in affeccions, which only god doth behold & see. Truly these be the keyes whiche I wil geue vnto Peter professing me: wherwith that that shalbe bound in earth shall be bound also in heauen: and that yͭ shalbe losed in earth shalbe losed also in heauen. This power though it be specially mete for the heades and chiefe, yet I wil geue it to al men, if so that they haue a consente and agremente among them, not of man, but in my name. Yea and moreouer I wil say vnto you, your consent shal not haue auctorite only in pardoning and condemnyng offences, if ye with me and among your selues do agree: but also yf any two bee found in earth which do truly agree in my spirite, that is to saye, not moued with the affeccion of man, but ioyntly louyng the thynges that be of god: whatsoeuer they aske they shall obteyne it of my father, whiche is in heauen. Suche loue hath the father to-warde the euangelicall and holye concorde. Therfore forasmuch as ye may doe so muche with the prince that is almightye, ye nede not to repent you of your power and authoritie: although before men ye appeare feble & weake.

That whiche is asked of Ceasar, is not forthwith obteyned, nor he is not able to perfourme whatsoeuer is asked of hym. For he cannot put away the agewe, or make the dumme to speake again. But there is nothyng so hard or incredible whiche my father will not geue you, yf ye aske of hym with one consent and agreement.

The texte. Then came Peter vnto hym, and sayde: Lorde howe often shall I forgeue my brother yf he sinne against me, tyll seuen tymes? Jesus sayeth vnto hym: I saye not vnto thee, vntyl seuen tymes, but seuenty times seuen tymes. Therfore the kingdom of heauen is lykened vnto a certain man that was a king, whiche would take accoumpte of his seruauntes. And whan he had begun to reckon, one was brought vnto hym which ought hym ten thousand talentes, but for-asmuche as he was not able to pay, his lord commaunded him to be sold, and all that he had, and payment to be made. The seruaunt fell downe and besought hym, saying: Sir haue patience with me, and I will pay the all. Than had the Lorde pitie on the seruaunt, and loosed him, & forgaue hym the det.

After that Peter had heard the these thynges diligently, supposyng that all that Jesus had reasoned of condemnyng and assoylyng, pertayned chiefly vnto hym: he conceyued in his mynde a certayne doubte, because that Jesus saying after the thyrde reprouyng, let hym be vnto thee as an Heathen, or a Publican, semed to appoint a certain nombre, which who so passed, although he that had offended did repente, yet he should not bee receyued vnto grace.
Therfore to be more exactly taught in this thyng, he went vnto Jesus: lord (q he) how often shall I pardon my brother if he offend me, and after what numbre of faultes shal he be repulsed from pardon? After the seuenth fault?
This noumbre Peter dyd propose as greate ynoughe, wheras Jesus made mencion, but onely of the thyrde reprofe. Than Jesus shewyng that in these thynges whiche he doeth against vs, we must be very gentill and easie in forgeuenes: I doe not saye (q he) that we must forgeue vnto the seuenth faulte, but vnto the seuenty times seuen: shewing that no noumbre ought to be prescribed to a christian forgeuyng: but as often as he that hath offended doeth repent, so often euen with the hart his offence is to be forgeuen: vtterly plukyng out from a christen mynde all desyre to reuenge. And leste that any should thynke it hard and vniust, Jesus teacheth it to be very equall and iust by a similitude. For this is not so muche a clemency as a recompence. For who we offende sumtyme against our neybour, but muche more both ofter and more greuously against God: who as often as we offend, the more greuous-ly we sinne, the greater that he is against whom we sinne. And ỹ greater benefites that we receyue of hym, the more vnworthy we be to obteyn pardone either of our neybour, or of God (who doth pardon him that sinneth a thousand tymes yf that he repent) if we thinke ie muche to pardon our brother offendyng much lesse, chiefly sith god doeth forgeue vs our trespasses on this condicio, that we moued by his example, should be gentle and easie to be in-treated towardes our neybour. Therfore (q he) the kyngdome of heauen is lyke a riche and a myghtye man: who hauyng a great familie, thoughte to take a count of his seruauntes.

And

And whan he began to counte, he founde one that ought hym ten thousande talentes. And whan the sum was greater then the detter was able to pay, ꝑ lord commaunded both hym and his wyfe and children, and al that he had to be sold, that the creditour might be cõtented with the money that was made. But the seruaunt falling doune with meke suite at the lordes knees: I pray the (ꝙ he) to graunt me sum respite, and in processe of tyme I wil pay the al. And the lord hauyng compassion of the seruaunte whiche humbled himselfe before hym, graunted more than he desyred. For he did not onely not bynge hym into the lawe, but forgaue hym the whole summe.

The same seruaunt went out, and founde one of his felowes, whiche ought him an hundreth denaries, and he layed handes on hym, and wrythyng his necke, drew hym, and sayde: pare that thou owest. And his felowe fell doune, and be soughte hym, saying: haue patyence with me, and I will pay the all. And he would not, but went and caste hym into prison, tyll he shoulde paye the dette. So when his felowes sawe what was doen, they were sore, and came and tolde vnto theyr Lorde euery thyng that was doen. Than his lorde called hym, and sayd vnto hym: O thou vngracious seruaunte. I forgaue the all that det whan thou be soughtest me, shouldest not thou also haue had compassion of thy felowe, as I had pitie on the? And his lorde was wrothe, and deliuered him to the tormentoures tyll he payed all that was due vnto hym. So lykewyse shall my heauenly father doe also vnto you: yͤ e from your hartes forgeue not euery one his brother their trespasses. The tenth

But that seruaunt beyng now free and at libertie, whan he was goen out of his maisters sight, by chaūce met with one of his felow seruãtes which oughte hym a lyttle money, that is an hundreth denaries: he forgetting his maisters clemency toward hym, forthwith layed hand vpon hym, and began to plucke the miserable man, saying: pay thy det. This felow seruãt fallyng doune at ỹ knees of his felow seruãt, beseched hym, with as many wordes as the other before ought his lord ꝙ maister: deale patiently with me, and I wil pay you al. But the creditour would not be intreated, but repelled the humble suytour, and plucked him into prison, tyll he had payed his det. Now the other felow seruauntes whiche had seene the meruaylous clemency of their maister toward the seruaunt, whan they sawe so great cruelte of their felow seruaunt, moued with great grief and sorow, declared vnto their maister all the matter toward his felow. Thã the maister stirred with anger called vnto him his seruaunt, whom he had pardoned al. Thou naughty seruaunt (ꝙ he) dyd not I beyng thy maister forgeue the suche a great summe, for none other cause but that thou madest humble suite vnto me: was it not mete therfore that thou beyng a seruaunt, shouldest forgeue thy felow seruãt a litle money, and haue compassion vpon the humble suytoure, lyke as I had compassion on the? Surely so great gentlenes of mine towarde thee, oughte to teache the gentlenes toward thy felow seruaunt. And now the maister being sore angrye, deliuered him to the tormentours to be kept in prison vntyll he repayed the whole sum that was forgeuen before. After this example poure heauenly father wyll deale with you. Euery of you is in det vnto him much more, whom euery man often doeth offende. We also do trespasse agaynst men, but yet farre lesse. But vnlesse euery man forgeue his brother, and that with all his harte, lyghter offences doen against hym, the father wyll not only not forgeue you the greater trespasses doen against him, but also wyll reuoke and call backe those whiche he had forgeuen.

The

The.xix. Chapter.

¶ And it came to passe that when Jesus had finished these sayinges, he departed from Galile, and came vnto the coastes of Jewry beyonde Jordan, and muche people folowed hym: and he healed them there.

Fter that Jesus with this communication had instructed & framed his disciples vnto well doing towardes the simple, and vnto gentlenes toward the offenders, he lefte Galile and went ouer Jordane, into the coastes of Jewrye, as goynge towardes his death to cum, which the Phariseis secretly went about. And thither also folowed many flockes of people, bearyng with them diuerse sicke and diseased: and he healed them there.

The texte.

And the Phariseis came vnto him, and tempted him, and said vnto him: Is it lawful for a man to make a diuorcement with his wyfe for any maner of cause? He answered and said vnto them: haue ye not red how that he which made man at the beginnyng, made them male and woman, and sayde: For this cause shall a man leaue father and mother, and shall cleaue vnto his wife, and they twayne shalbe one flesche. Wherfore now they are not twayne, but one flesh. Let no man therfore separate, that god hath coupled together. They saied vnto him: why did Moses then commaund to geue a testimonall of diuorcement, and to put her away? He sayd vnto them: Moses because of the hardnes of your herres, suffered you to put away your wiues, but from the beginnyng it was not so. I saye vnto you: whosoeuer putteth away his wife (except it be for fornicacio) & marryeth another, he cōmitteth aduoutrie. And who so marieth her whiche is diuorced, doeth commytte aduoutrye.

And agayne the Phariseis seyng so many wonders, and the loue of the multitude towarde Jesus, began to renewe theyr enuye agayne. Who craftilye and subtillye came vnto hym, takyng occasion of the communication wherewith he taughte before that the wyfe ought not to bee repudiate and cast of. Therfore they propose a question with two pykes: whether it were lawful for a mā to cast of his wife for euery cause. And if he had answered: It is lawefull, he should seme contrary to hymselfe, whereas he taught that diuorce is not lawfull: yf he had denyed it, he should seme to haue bene agaynst Moses lawe, whiche doeth permitte for euery cause to geue a boke of diuorce, and to sende her away. But Jesus so doeth tempre and ordre the answere, that he hurteth not the authoritie of Moses, nor recanteth not his doctrine, and stoppeth the mouthe of the Phariseis, whiche were skilful in the law, by the authoritie of the lawe. Haue ye not red (q he) that whan god made mankynde, he ordered the fyrste matrimonie so, that one was coupled vnto one with a knot that could not be broken. For he made bothe man and woman of one piece, that by the imbracyng of these, mankind should spreyng further, and by and by expressyng the indissoluble knotte of the man and of the wyfe, not Moses, but God himselfe the maker of the mariage, said: For this mutuall charitie, man shall forsake father and mother, and bee fastened and coupled vnto his wyfe. And this couplyng shalbe so strayt and fast, that of two, in maner, shalbe made one person, which before were two. Therfore once ioyned in matrimonie, they be not now two, but one bodie: in so muche, that it is as farre agaynst nature to separate the wife from the manne, as to cut awaye a membre from the bodye. Therfore that whiche God hath knyt once together with so straite a bonde, let no man separate.

Here

Here the Phariseis, thinkyng that they had caughte nowe an occasion to catche Jesus: yf god (as they) meant this that thou doest say, why than dyd Moses geue hus bandes leaue to caste of theyr wyfe for euery cause, so that they geue her a boke of diuorce? how durst he permit that which god would not to be doone? Jesus answered: he dyd not permit you this because it was ryght and good of nature, but knowyng the hardnes of your hart, he suffered the lesser ill, that ye shoulde not commit the greater. For he doeth not allow diuorce whiche had rather suffer that than murdre. And the boke of diuorce doeth not make that the diuorce is right & good: but it witnesseth thy hardnes, whiche wilte cast of thy wyfe for euery light cause, and prouydeth her of a new husband, takyng away libertie from the, that thou shalt not cal her agayn once cast of. But from the beginnyng whereas the malice of man was not yet increased, nor the nature of manne was not yet infected with so many vices: because there was not so cruell hatred, that poysonyng or murdre should be feared, there was no lycence of diuorce: and the same law shall not nowe be loced and let at libertie, after that the doctrine of the Ghospell doeth reuoke and make perfecte the syncerite of nature. Moses wished the same that I doe teache, but your maners bent ouer muche vnto murdre, put hym in feare, that he durste not require this of you. I who doe not abolisshe the lawe, but make it more perfecte, playnely saye vnto you, that it is vnlawfull and agaynste the mynde of God, and agaynste the wyll of Moses, whiche ye doe commonlye: refusyng your wyues for euery cause. And it is not therefore ryghte that ye doe, because ye doe it without punyshemente: There be many myscheuous thynges before God, whiche be not punyshed by mannes lawes. Therefore ye shall understande that whosoeuer casteth of his wyfe for euery cause, and maryeth an other, both committeth aduoutrye hym selfe, and geueth also a cause of aduoutrye to his wyfe, vnlesse she whom he doeth leaue of, hath deserued diuorcement by aduoutrye. For she that hath geuen an other manne lybertie ouer her, ceaseth nowe to be wife, and hath taken awaye from her selfe the ryghte of matrimonye, the flesshe beyng deuided, whiche God wolde haue to be one and vndeuided. But he that for suche causes leaueth his wyfe, for whiche ye oftentymes doe caste her of, yf he couple hymselfe to an other, it is not matrimonie, but aduoutrye. And who so maryeth her so caste of, he maryeth not his owne wyfe, but an other mannes, and therfore he doeth not marye, but committeth aduoutrye. But the whole of all these mischiefes doeth redounde to hym that is the refuser and caster of. For first he is stubburne and cruell, whiche neyther could beare his wyues faulte, nor would goe about to amend it. Furthermore he geueth her that is driuen out of his house, whiche cannot lyue without a husband, an occasion to commit aduoutrye.

Why dyd Moses the cõmaũd. &c.

This disciples said vnto him: if the matter be so betwene man and wife, than it is not good to mary. He said vnto them: All men cannot compasshende this saying, saue they to whom it is geuen. For there are sum chaste which are so borne out of their mothers wombe. And there are sum chaste whiche be made chaste of men. And there be chaste whiche hath made themselfes chaste for the kyngdome of heauens sake. He that can take it, let hym take it.

The disciples hearyng these thynges, say vnto Jesus: If maryed menne be in this case that they cannot be dispatched from theyr wyfe, yf she displease

please them, it is better to forbeare matrimonie. For it is an harde bondage to suffer at home a waywarde, a brawlyng, and a dronken woman, or elles paynfull and greuous with sum other lyke fault. Jesus did not reproue the answer of his disciples, whom he desired to be free from the bondage of matrimonie, because of preachyng of the ghospell: but he doeth them to vnderstand, that it is no sase and sure thyng to flee from matrimonie, vnlesse a man be of so fyrme and stable mynde, that he is able vtterly to abstayn from the acte of matrimonie. But there be very fewe that can doe so because that this affection of the body is so common to all men, that there is none affection more violente, or more inuincible. Therfore though it be a greater fredome not to be eyed in matrimonie, yet is it more sure to be kepte within the bondes of matrimonie, than to be defyled with lyng here and there. Therfore Jesus shewyng what was best, and prouokyng this waye with the reward of libertie, dareth not yet exactely require that, whiche in maner exceedeth mannes power. All men (ye he) be not able to receiue this woorde, but they onely vnto whome it is geuen of God: who haue so great a feruencye toward the holynes of the gospell, that of their own accorde and willyngly can neglecte this affection. For chaste syngleneste hath no prayse vnlesse it be taken for loue of the euangelicall godlynes. For there be three kyndes of Eunuches. One of them whiche be so borne, and abhorre from wyues through the defaulte of a colde nature, or sum other secrete affection of nature. Another kynde of them, whom men hath gelded. The chastitie of these men deserueth no prayse, because it cummeth of necessitie, not of the loue of vertue. But the gospell also hath his Eunuches very blessed, whiche be not geldynges of nature, nor gelded of men, but they gelded themselues, for the kyngdome of heauen: not cutting of the membre of the body, but for loue of the ghospell, ouercummyng the desire of matrimonie. Ye see victorie set out before you, let hym trye that wyl, and knoweth his owne strength: Let him beare awaye the game that can: They that contend valyauntlye and willingly, shal not want the fauour of the maister of the game. Because cõmunication was of the puritie of virgins, and of the highneste of that noble vertue, whiche chaunceth to fewe: as by occasion there is brought in also an example of perfecte cleannes, and great modestie: without the whiche, virginitie deserueth no prayse.

All men can not compie hende this saiyng.

The texte.

Then were there brought vnto him yong chyldren that he should put his handes on them and pray, and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said vnto them: Suffre the children & forbid them not to cum to me: for the kyngdome of heauen belongeth to such. And when he had layed his handes on them, he departed thence.

There wer present fathers and mothers, whiche desired to offer their babes vnto Jesus, that he might lay his handes vpon them, and pray for them: thinking that lykewyse as they saw diseases driuen away through his touchyng, so the touchyng of Jesus should preserue them from diseases, from fallyng of houses or walles, or other lyke thynges vpon them, from euyll spirites, and from other hurtes, whereby that age oftentymes miscarieth. But the disciples, (who though they had oft tymes heard many a good lesson of great modestie and coldnes, yet had not vtterly shaken of from them mans affections) thinkyng it not mete that the greatnes or dignitie of their master should be letted or wered with the importunitie of babes, & of their mothers, kept them of, whan they desired to cum nere. Jesus marking this, to the intent that he might the better imprinte euangelicall moderacio in the myndes of his disciples, whiche doeth loth no manne, be he neuer so lowe, suffre (yf he) the children to be brought vnto me: nor let them not, to cum to me. For they that be lyke vnto these, bee moste acceptable vnto me: whome though the worlde doth hate and despise, yet I vouchsafe to haue none other in the kingdome of heauen. What nature doth geue vnto these, the same must gedlines geue vnto you, if ye will be receiued into the kingdome of heauen. Therfore the litle babes wer brought vnto Jesus, and he put his handes vpon them, inspiring into the litle babes (for ỹ simple faythes sake) ỹ theyr parentes a secret power through the touching of his holy body. Which doe, Jesus departed from thence, geuyng a lesson by the same facte of his, that the litle babes must be satisfied, but yet that we ought not to tary lōg with them, but to make spede to thynges of more perfection.

to the intent

Suffer the children.

And whē he had layd his handes, &c

C And beholde one came, and sayed vnto hym: Good maister what good thyng shall I doe, that I maye haue eternall life? he sayed vnto hym: why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, and that is God. But if thou wylt enter into lyfe, kepe the commaundementes. He sayeth vnto hym, whiche? Jesus sayed. Thou shalte not commit manslaughter. Thou shalt not commit aduoutrie, Thou shalt not steale. Thou shalt not beare false witnes. Honour father and mother. And thou shalt loue thy neighboure as thy self. The yong man sayth vnto hym. All these thynges haue I kept from my youth vp: what lacke I yet? Jesus sayd vnto hym: If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell al that thou hast, and geue it to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and cum and folowe me. But whan the yonge man heard that sayng, he went away sorye. For he had great possessions.

The texte.

And loe, as soone as he had doen with the children, there cummeth nerte after them a yong man which talketh of perfection. But Jesus, like as in the litle babes he shewed his disciples an exaumple of simplicitie and modestie: so in the yong man being in dede desirous of perfect godlines, but ouer sore burdened with riches, he setteth before their eyes, how harde it is for them that be geuē to riches, to cum forward to ỹ perfectiō of the euangelical godlines: and how muche more rede they be to the cause of the gospell, whiche possesse nothyng, or is very littell of the goodes of this worlde: and yet pouertie and riches stande not so muche in possessions, as in the affectiōs of the mynde. The yong man had a dreadyng mynde: but because he heard of Christ certayne newe and straunge preceptes, he went vnto him, and fallyng downe at his knees asketh him, sayeng: good maister what good thal I do to obtayn euerlastyng lyfe? The yong man called Jesus good to obteyn his good will by fayre speakyng: whereas yet he toke him to be nothing els but a very mā, although of more excellencie than other men were. Afterward whereas he demaūded of good, he meaneth not of euery good thyng, but of a certain no table good thyng, whiche may deserue euerlastyng lyfe. But no mortal man is absolutely good: and there is no worke of men which can be so good, that it maye deserue the reward of euerlastyng lyfe. Jesus therfore pricking forwarde the yonge manne, to haue a better opinion of him, and to call hym frō the trust of his workes, and to cause him to put the trust of life rather in the free gifte and benefite of God, who is naturally good, and freely beneficial towardes al menne, aunswered in this maner: why callest thou me good, or why doest thou aske me of good? But yet if thou desirest to be receiued vnto the eternall lyfe, kepe the commaundementes. And whan the yong mā asked what the commaundementes were, (for he had heard hym teache that the

Why callest thou me good,

preceptes of Moses lawe bee not enough to obteyne the kyngdome of heauen) Jesus to plucke awaye from all men the truste of the lawe, aunswered: Thou shalte not kyll, thou shalte not commit aduoutrye: Thou shalte not steale: Thou shalte not beare false witnesse: Honoure thy father and mother: and loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. Than the yong manne beyng stumbled at these thinges, sayd: All these haue I kept from my chyldehode: what lacke I beyde? He loked that Jesus should haue aunswered him: Thou lackeste nothyng. But the Lord the wyng what difference there was betwene the Jewishe ryghteousnesse, and the ryghteousnesse of the ghospel: betwene a good Jewe, and a good Christian manne, sayed: If thou wylte be perfecte, goe and sell all that thou haste, and geue the money to the poore: thou shalte not lese thy money, though it be dispersed among many. So to disperse it, is to laye it vp: for in the stede of worldly ryches, thou shalte haue a better treasure in heauen. When thou hast doen this beyng now at libertie, and dispatched of all heauy cariage, bare and poore, cum and folowme beyng also bare and poore. When Jesus sayth: yf thou wylt, he shewed that it was a great matter: but he added the rewarde. Thou shalte haue a treasure in heauen. Anon he moued hym to the loue of perfecte godlinesse: Cum, folowme. When the yong man heard this communication, he wente awaye with a discouraged and heauye mynde, because he was a Lorde of muche possessions, and he thought it hard to leaue the all at once. He desired to get euerlasting lyfe, yf he desired the honour of perfection: but the thornes of richesse ouerwhelmed & chcked this affection whiche was a good seede. Therfore he departed home heuily, not vnderstanding that Jesus did not condemne riches, but the affection, and loue, and carefulnes of riches: to which they cã scarcely be any lesse then bonde, that haue them. And he wouldenot that alwaies they shoulde be forsaken: but yet alwayes set lyttell by: yea and forsaken also, yf they at any tyme withdrawe vs from the loue of the ghospell.

At these thinges haue I kept from my youthe. &c.

The texte.

¶ Than Jesus sayed vnto his disciples: breelye I saye vnto you, it shall bee harde for the ryche to enter into the kingdome of heauen. And agayne, I saye vnto you: it is easier for a Camell to go thorough the ye of a nedle, than for the ryche to enter into the kyngdome of God. When the disciples heard this, they were exceedyngly amased, saying: who than can be saued? But Jesus beheld them and sayed vnto them: With men this is impossible, but with god all thynges are possible.

It shall bee hard for the ryche. &c.

When the yong man was gone, Jesus tournyng to his disciples (for he shewed this sight for them, because they shoulde at no tyme repente them of their ponertie, nor bee entangled with the loue of moneye:) howe harde a thyng it is (q he) for a ryche manne to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. Signifiyng, that the desyre of moneye, and the desyre of the Euangelicall phylosophye, hardely agree together: because ye one requireth the whole man, the other taketh vnto it almost the greatest part of mã. And to make the difficultie of the thing the greater, his disciples musing muche, he said more: yea (q he) I say more vnto you: It is more easy for a Camel to go thorough the ye of a nedle, than for a riche man to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. For the gate is lowe and straight, & it receiueth no Camels laden with burdens of rychesse. For so he reproued the couetous riche men, vnto whom riches be rather a burden, than profit, which they beare for others, rather than for themselfes. This saying because it was not well vnderstande of the Apostles,

Apoſtels, put in their myndes a certayne heauyneſſe, becauſe they were ſorye þ ſo many men ſor riches ſake, ſhould be ſhut out from the kyngdome of heauen. Therfore whan the diſciples marueyled muche what it ſhoulde meane that Jeſus ſpake of the Camell, and the eye of the nedle, they aſke him: Jf it be ſo, who than can be ſaued? For howe many men are there, whiche can caſt awaye the ryches that they haue, or not wyll for them yf they haue none? But Jeſus beholdyng them, to thintent he would aſſwage the heauines that they had conceyued in their myndes, declareth that there is ſum hope for ryche menne alſo to cumme to the kingdome of heauen. To men (q he) this is impoſſible, no- With men this is im- poſſible, &c leſſe than for a Camell to goe through the eye of a nedle: but to God nothinge is impoſſible. Onely he chaungeth the myndes of ryche men, that they wyll thereteully eyther caſt awaye that whiche they do poſſeſſe, or els poſſeſſe thē as cōmon and not proper. euen ready to haue them, yf the matter of the gholpell at any tyme require the ſame. For why ſhould it greue them to deſpiſe ryches, whom it greueth not to beſtowe theyr lyfe.

Than anſwered Peter, and ſayed vnto him: Beholde, we haue forſaken all, & folowed the, what ſhall we haue therfore? Jeſus ſayed vnto them: Verely J ſaye vnto you, that whan the ſonne of manne ſhall ſitte in the ſeate of his maieſtie, ye that haue folowed me in the regeneration, ſhal ſit alſo vpon twelue ſeates, and iudge the twelue tribes of Jſrael. And euery one that forſaketh houſe, or brethren, or ſyſters, or father, or mother, or wyfe, or childrē, or landes, for my name ſake, ſhall receyue an hundred folde, and ſhall inherite euerlaſtyng life: but many that are firſte, ſhall be laſt, and the laſt ſhalbe firſte. The texte. Beholde we haue forſaken all, &c.

This communication whiche Jeſus had with the ponge man (ſeyll that thou haſt and folow me,) made Peter to haue ſum good hope, whiche although he were not riche, yet that that he had, he left it therefullye, bothe his ſhyppe and his nettes, and folowed the Lorde. Lorde (q he) beholde we haue doen that that thou requyredſt of the yonge man: we haue lefte all thynges and folowe the, what rewarde ſhall we haue therfore? But Jeſus willing to ſhewe that this highe prayſe was not offered to riche men onelye, but alſo to poore men: whiche gladly forſake whatſoeuer they haue for the goſpell ſake, for as much as this vertue is more eſteemed of thaffection of the leauer, than of the greatenes of the thyng that is left: did not reiecte the ſaying of Peter although it was to high and ſtoute for ſo ſymple a matter: but teachyng that no ſmall rewarde ſhall be rendered for ſuche ſmall thinges, lefte of and forſaken with a good will, ſayethe. This J warraunte you, that ye whiche haue forſaken no thyng for my ſake, but your boates and your nettes, but yet with ſuche a will that ye would haue forſaken very greate richeſſe for my ſake, and hitherto you beeynge bare and poore haue folowed me lykewyſe bare and poore, if ye perſeuer and continue, in the worlde to cum when the dead ſhal' ryſe, and euerye man ſhall receyue rewarde after his deſerres, and whan that the ſonne of mā, (his humilite that ye nowe ſee, ſet aparte) ſhal ſitte in the ſeate of his mateſtie, ye ſyſthers ſhal be partakers of honor, whiche are nowe partakers of afflictions, ſhall ſit in twelue ſeates, and ſhall iudge the twelue tribes of Jſrael: becauſe they cumming of the ſame ſtocke, hauyng knowledge of the ſame lawe, prouoked with the ſame miracles, and benefytes, yet by no meanes coulde be brought to beleue: whereas ye meane perſones, and vnlerned, by and by at my ſimple bidding, haue lefte, yea thoſe thinges wherevp ye ſuſteyned your life. And this rewarde ſhal not be yours onelye, but whoſoeuer for Ye þ haue folowed me. &c.

the profession of my name, forsaketh his house, his brothers or sisters, his father or mother, his wyfe or children, his landes, or anye other possession: he shall not lose that whiche he lefte for my sake, insomuche, that he shall haue a greate gayne therby. For in this worlde he shall receyue an hundred folde for the thinges that he hath lefte, and in the tyme of resurrection, he shall possesse euerlastyng life. For in the stede of the thinges that he hath left, the whiche are casuall and vyle possessions, he shall possesse here in the meane tyme that precious Margaryte of the euangelicall myndе, whiche is to be estemed and compared with no marchandise of this worlde: In the stede of one house that ye haue left, the doctrine of the ghospell shall make open vnto you a numbre of houses thorough out the worlde. For one piece of grounde manye grounded shall serue your necessitie: for one father or mother ye shall haue so manye as there shalbe olde men and olde women whiche ye shall conuert vnto the ghospell. Ye shall haue so many brothers, systers, sonnes and daughters, as your equals or yongers shalbe, whiche by your prechyng ye shall bryng to euerlastyng life. There shall geue vnto you euery where of theyr owne accorde, yf ye shall neede anye thyng, and theyr affections shall far passe thaffections of the, whom onely kinred of bloud hath ioyned vnto vs. For the kinred of the fellowship of the ghospell, is more nere than fleshly affinitie, and they loue more behementlie, whom godlines hath coupled together, than they whom carnall byrth hath ioyned together. Vnto this great rewarde, that shalbe added also, whiche is the greatest of all, that for thynges whiche shortely shall perishe, ye shall possesse euerlastyng life. I say not this that the profession of the ghospell doth teach vs to despyse them, whom nature hath ioyned vnto vs: but suche maner of affections muste be neglected as often as they withdrawe vs from euerlasting saluacion. This great felicitie is set furth indifferently to all men. There is no difference of fortune, condicion, age, or person. But in this estimacion and iudgement which shalbe made of God the equall iudge, many shalbe last, whiche seme nowe to be first. Contrariwise many whiche seme now vile, and of no reputacion with men, shal there be counted chiefe. There shalbe preferred a common woman before a Scribe, a Publican before a Pharisie, an heathen before a Iewe, a poore manne before a ryche, a plough manne before a king: and they that semed nerre to the kyngdome of heauen shall enter in last and they that semed farre of, shall enter in firste. The heathen men thorough fayth shall goe before, the Synagoge thorough vnbelefe, shalbe set beside.

Euery one that forsaketh house, or brethren &c.

But manye that are first shalbe last, &c

The texte. For the kingdome of heauen is like to a man that is an housholder, whiche went out early in the morning to hyre labourers into his vineyarde. And when he had agreed made with the labourers for a denary a daie, he sent them into his vineyarde. And he went out about the thirde houre, and sawe other standyng pole in the market place, and sayed vnto them: go ye also into the vineyarde. And whatsoeuer is right, I will geue vnto you. And they went their waye. Agayne he went out about the sixte and ninthe houre, and did lykewyse. And about the eleuenth houre he went out, and founde other standyng pole, and sayed vnto them: why stande ye here all the daye idle? They say vnto him: because no man hath hyred vs. He sayeth vnto them: go ye also into the vineyarde, and whatsoeuer is right that ye shall receyue.

And

ND becauſe it ſemed a darke riddell that he ſpake concerninge the firſt and the laſt, he declareth the thing that he ſpake with a parable, whereby he ſheweth that men were called to the keping or obſeruing of righteouſnes in diuers ages: and yet all the ſeruauntes of righteouſnes haue one and the ſame reward of euerlaſting ſaluacion, ſo that they whiche be called, labour diligently in the vineyarde of righteouſnes. For they haue no leſſe, whiche be called in the time of Chriſt, than they whiche be called in the time of Abraham, or Moyſes, or Dauid. And they haue no leſſe whiche be called and drawen to the ſeruice of the goſpell being aged, than they whith be childzen or yong men. The one and the ſame denary and reward of euerlaſting lyfe, is geuen vnto them al. And yet they ỹ came late, ſeme to haue greater honour by this that the liberalitie of the lozde maketh them equall to them whyche came before. The Jewes were firſte called, but yet the Gentiles called afterwarde, be not onelye made equall vnto them, but alſo preferred before the vnbeleuing Jewes. The parable is after this ſozte: The kingdom of heauē (ỹ he) is like vnto an houſeholder, whyche went abzode earely in the mozninge tohier wozkemen into his vineyarde. And getting certayne and bargayning with them that they ſhoulde haue eche of them a denary a piece for theyr dayes wozke, ſent them into his vineyarde: He wente out agayne aboute three of the clocke, and when he ſawe certayne ſtande idle in the markette, ſaide vnto them: go ye alſo into my vineyard, and I ſhall geue you that ſhall be mete: he went oute agayne about sixe of the ſame; and agayne aboute nine, and did likewyſe as he did at one, and three of the clocke. Againe going out aboute three of the clocke towarde night, he found certayne other in the market, to whome he ſayed: why ſtande ye here all day idle? They ſaye: becauſe no man hath hired vs. He ſayeth to them: go ye alſo into my vineyard.

The texte

So, when euen was com, the lozde of the vyneyard ſayeth vnto his ſeruaunte: Call the labourers, and geue them theyr hyre, beginning at the laſte vntill the firſte. But when they had cum that came about the eleuenth houre, they receyued euery man a denary. And when the firſte came alſo, they ſuppoſed that they ſhoulde haue receyued more, and they alſo receyued euery man a denary. And when they had receyued it, they murmured againſt the houſeholder, ſaying: Theſe laſt hath wrought but one houre, and thou haſt made the equall vnto vs, whiche haue borne the burden and heate of the day. But he anſwered one of them, ſayinge: Frende I do the no wrong. Wilt thou not conenaunted with me for a denary? Take thine, and go thy waye: I will geue vnto this laſte, euen as vnto the. Is it not lawfull for me to do as I will with mine owne goodes? Is thyne eye euill becauſe I am good? So the laſt ſhall be firſte, and the firſt laſt. For many be called, but fewe are choſen.

Further toward night the lozde of the vineyarde geueth commaundement to his bayly: Call all the wozkemen and pay them theyr hyer: for that thou begin with the laſt and cum to the firſte. Therfore they that came laſt, that is aboute eleuen of the clocke, and laboured in the vineyarde the leaſte parte of the daye, were called firſte of all, and a denarye was geuen to eche of them. And when they that were called earely in the mozninge perceyued this, becauſe they came longe before into the vineyarde, they thought that after the rate of the time, they ſhoulde receyue greater wages. But a denary was geuen vnto eche of thē. Therfore when they ſawe that they which were not like in ſpace of time, yet were made lyke in wages, they departe murmuringe agaynſte the lozde of the vineyarde, and ſaye. Theſe whiche came at eleuen of the clocke haue laboured but one houre, and yet thou makeſte them lyke vnto vs in wages, who haue continued the whole daye in labour, and haue suffered the heate of the daye where as they came a lytle before nyght, when the heate was nowe paste. But the householder made aunswere to one of them for all: Frende, why hast thou enuy that I am liberall vnto others? Why are liberalytie towardes other, hurteth not the. For I doe the no wrong. Did I not bargayne with the, for that thou shouldest haue a denarye for thy dayes labour? Thou haste done thy labour, thou haste thy couenaunte: I haue nothinge more to doe with the. Take that that is owed vnto the, and departe. Thou were hyered hither for wages to doe thy labour, not to appointe me what I shall doe. Thus it is thought good vnto me, to geue him that came last as muche wages as I geue the. Thou doest lese none of thyne, if I geue this man any thyng of my liberalitie: Shall I not be at libertie because of the, to do with my own what I will? Is thy eye therefore hyred with enuy, because thou feelt me liberal toward whom it pleaseth me? This similitude Jesus brought, willing depely to graffe in theyr mindes that God, naturally beneficiall towardes al men, ceaseth not by diuers wayes and in diuers ages, to prouoke and moue al men to the seruice of true godlines: In whiche they that haue exercised themselues diligently, shall haue for reward euerlasting lyfe, from the which none is excluded geuing eare whan he is called. This reward like as it is in no case due vnto our merites but is of goodnes of god, yet it cummeth not without our endeuour: yet we be bound to the rather for this also, that we cum to the seruice of godlynes, and that we continue in it vnto the euentide of the day. For they that be called and refuse to go into the vineyarde, they disapoynte themselues of theyr wages. And although among laynes there is neyther enuy nor murmuryng against god: yet with these layynges he expressed the high honoure that was shewed to the last, whiche had the first place in rewarde. Whiche dignitie is so noble, that a man might haue cause to enuy. Yet the good Jewes also at the beginning murmured against the Gentiles, because they cumming of idolaters, straungers from Moyses law, finally vncircumcised, should sodenly be made equall vnto them in the grace of the gospel, and be admitted to the same saluation, beeyng incumbred with no burden of the lawe, whereas they long exercised in the ordinaunces of Moyses, were nothyng better than Gentiles, whiche were now admitted to the profession of the gospell, beeng a litle before of a wicked life. Therefore the Gentiles had more forgeuen them, but the Jewes haue no cause to brawle with God therefore, sithe they also maye attayne to like felicitie. And if they had rather enuy than folowe, let them thanke themselues that they be cast of for theyr vnbelefe, the Gentiles in the meane tyme obteyning for the redines of theyr faith, that thing which the Jewes thought that they onely ought to haue. Therefore whoso is called, let him furthwith make haste, or els he shall be called in vayne, excepte he take hede that he be also elected. And al be called, but few deserue to be counted among the elect. Therefore Jesus ended his parable with the same clause that he began with. So shall they be last that were firste, and firste that were laste. For many be called, and fewe chosen.

For many are called but few are chosen.

And Jesus goyng vp to Hierusalem toke his twelue disciples aside in the waye, and traped to the chiefe of the pristes, and to the Scribes, and they shall condemne him to death, and shall deliuer him to the gentiles to be mocked and scourged, and crucified, and the thirde day he shall ryse agayne.

After this Jesus beyng a whyle in Galile, began to drawe nere to the place of his death, going towarde Hierusalem. And now whan he had instructed and framed his disciples many wayes, as concernyng despysing of ryches, neglecting of parentes and kinfolkes, of chastitie, of great modestie, of the rewardes that they should haue also in this lyfe: he leadeth secretly aparte his twelue apostles, whom he had chosen and thoughte mete to commit the mistery of the crosse vnto, whiche the multitude was not yet able to beare: And yet he tolde of his deathe vnto the people, when he spake of Jonas, and of the pulling downe of the temple, and the making vp of it againe in three daies: but so he tolde them of it that they vnderstode not what was sayed, before that they sawe it done. He had opened the mistery of the crosse vnto his disciples, as to them that were more strong and able, now once or twyse speaking vnto them playnly. But because men forget lightly that, whiche they be not glad to heare of, and doe not lightly let sinke into theyr hartes the thing whiche the mynde abhorreth: the Lorde Jesus to confyrme hys apostles agaynste the storme that was at hande, openeth vnto them more playnely and distinctly, not onelye that his death was nere, but also telleth them of the mockes and afflictions whiche oftentymes be more greuous than deathe it selfe. Beholde (sayth he) we go to Hierusalem, and the sonne of man shalbe betrayed to the chiefe prystes and Scribes, whiche nowe goe aboute to laye in waite for him. And they will not rest to blame and accuse him vntill they haue thoughte hym to condemnation of deathe, and they shall deliuer him vnto the Gentiles to mocke him, to scourge him, to spit vpon him, and to nayle him vpon the crosse, and whan that he is deade and buried, the thyrde daye he shall ryse agayne. Behold we goe vp. &c.

Then came to hym the mother of Zebedes children, with her sonnes, worshippinge and desyring a certayne thinge of him. And he sayde vnto her: What wilt thou? She sayde vnto hym: Graunte that these my two sonnes may sit, the one on thy right hande, and the other on thy lefte hande in thy kingdome. But Jesus answered, and sayed. Ye wote not what ye aske. Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I shall drinke of? and be baptised with the baptisme that I shalbe baptised with? They sayde vnto him: We can. He sayde vnto them: Truely ye shall drinke of my cuppe, and be baptised with the baptisme, that I am baptised with: But to sit on my right hande and on my left hande is not myne to geue: But it shall chaunce vnto them, for whom it is prepared of my father. The texte.

In the meane season James and John the sonnes of zebede, because they had heard that the keyes of the kingdome of heauen were geuen to Peter, and had heard also of the honoure of twelue seates, beynge yet rude and dreaming of worldely thinges, and supposinge that this kingdom and these honoures shoulde ryse immediatly after the resurrection, because he sayde, the thyrde day he shall rise: to get theselues nowe some excellēt dignitie, they sente vnto the their mother to be a suiter vnto Jesus for her sonnes. She after that she had done her dutie and worshipped him, requiring him not to deny her suite, desyng required what she would, sayeth: Geue commaundement that these my two sonnes may sit in thy kingdome, one on thy right hande, the other on thy lefte hande. Jesus turning vnto the children, of whom he harde that the mother was sent furth, aunswered them: ye know not what ye aske. Ye delight in the speaking of a kingdom, whiche is far of an other sorte than ye dreame, but at this presente we muste rather talke and debate of affliction, and of the crosse, which is the way to the kingdome. Ye requite the rewarde ouer of ozde, whereas first ye muste trauaile and stryue. I haue opened vnto you nowe what I muste suffer. Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I shall drinke of: Can ye be baptised with the baptisme that I shall be baptised with? They as yet litle knowing their strengthe, but for the gredines that they had to obteyne theyr petition, they answere rashely rather than valiantly, we can. But Jesus was content that they sayde they wer ready to folow his crosse, but as touching the rewarde, because they vnderstode not what they asked, and because it was not for that tyme to commone of it, he sayeth that it is not in him to geue them: but that soch dignitie shoulde not chaunce but vnto them, vnto whom it was geuen of the father, for to deserue the chiefe place through notable and excellente bertue. Truely to encourage al men to clime vnto the highest, he sayeth: ye shall drinke of my cuppe, but to sit one on my right hand, and the other on my left hand, it is not in me to geue, vnto thone or to the other, but this shall chaunce vnto them to whom it shall be geuen of my father. Euery man as he doeth trauelil, so he shall be rewarded.

The texte. And whan the ten heard this, they bigan to disdayned at the two brethren. And Jesus called them vnto him, and sayed: Ye know that the princes of nations hath dominion ouer them. And they that be great men exercyse power ouer them. It shall not be so among you, but whosoeuer will be greate among you, let him be your minister, and whosoeuer will be chefe among you, let him be your seruaunte: as the sonne of man came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister, and to geue his lyfe a redemption for many.

Whan thother ten afterwarde heard these thinges, they were agreued at the two brethren, because they required so great dignitie. They had not yet receyued the holy goste: they were ledde yet with certayne affections of men being ambitiouse and enuying one an other. And Jesus suffered his disciples to be troubled longe with these affections, to thintent he would plucke them vterly out of the mindes of them all, whyche shoulde succede in the roumes of thapostles. And they thought, and were glad, that therfore the lorde did reiect the request of John and James, not because they dreamed of carnall thinges, where as the spirituall kingdome was in hande, but because they required honoure aboue theyr merites, whiche other thought that it ought rather to be geuen to them. Therefore Jesus lyke as he dyd reprelle the ambicion of the folish sutours, because they knew not what it was that they asked: so he repreled the enuy and indignacion of the other, which illewed out of the same fountayne of ambicion, opening vnto them that ther was a farre diuerse kinde of the worldely kingdome from the kingdome of the gospell. For ther in the worldly kingdom he that is lelle, is oppressed with the tiranny of the mightier. Here, the primacie is nothing elles, but the greate delire to do good vnto all men. There the prouder a man is, the greater he semethe: here nane is moze mebe in harte, than he that deserue the chiefly to be the highelte. That he wighte faiten this doctrine in all mennes hartes, he called vnto hym the other of thapostles. Ye know (q he) that they that beare rule amonge the Gentyles, vse lordlynes and tyrannye vpon them, whome they rule: and they that be chiefe, exercyse theyr power vpon theyr subiectes. For with the hurt of the people, they prouide foꝛ theyr owne auctholritie, and care foꝛ thole thinges, whiche do not profite the multitude, but make foꝛ the stoutnes and florishing of theyr welth and glory. But it is not mete to be so emonge you, but whosoeuer will beare rule emong you, let him be the minister of all men, not thing honour foꝛ his owne commoditie, but foꝛ the commoditie of the people, whom he ruleth. And he that emong you will haue the first place, let him be the seruaunt and the lowest of all. foꝛ he taketh vpon him the chefe place foꝛ no nother intent, but to loke foꝛ the commoditie of al men, hunting and leking therof neyther honour noꝛ profit. And if ye thinke it harde, loke vpon me, foꝛ whereas I am your Lorde and Maister and the sonne of God, as ye confesse profelle, yet I take not vpō me dignitie and honour, noꝛ I abuse not my power to myne owne commoditie. But foꝛ this I am cum, to serue al mennes turnes, and to wayte theyr commoditeis, insomuche that it greueth me not to bestowe my life, that by the losse of one lyfe, I maye redeme many. Emonge them therfoꝛe that be thus minded, there is no cause why any man shoulde seke after honour, neyther why any should be emulous at an other mannes dignitie: foꝛ who can enuye him whiche studieth no nother thynge, but to do an other man good, and that it nede be with the losse of hys lyfe: Also if honour be geuen vnto them, they take it not vnto themselues, but yelde it vnto God.

And to geue his lyfe a re dēption foꝛ manye.

And when they departed from Jerico, muche people folowed hym. And beholde two blinde men sitting by the way, whan they heard that Jesus passed by, they cryed saynge: O lorde the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on vs. And the people rebuked them, that they shuld holde theyr peace. But they cryed the more, saying: Haue mercy on vs o lorde the sonne of Dauid. And Jesus stoode still and called them, and sayde: What will ye that I shall do vnto you? They say vnto him: Lorde that our yes maye be opened. And Jesus had compassion on them, and touched theyr yes, and immediatly theyr yes receyued sight, and they folowed him.

The texte.

And whan he went with his disciples out of Jerico, a great multitude of men folowed him. And behold two blind men sate by the wayes side, whiche whē they perceyued by the noyse, that it was a great multitude, and asknge what it shoulde be, knew that it was Jesus whiche passed by: whē they could not see him, and if they had sene him, coulde not go vnto hym for the multitude, they spake vnto Jesus with a loude voyce, saying: Lord Jesu the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus made as though he heardе them not, to thintente that theyr faythe and feruentnes might be the more manifeste to all men. The people seyng that Jesus made no answere at their crying, and supposing that it was paynefull to him, that twoe blinde common beggers made such a clamoure at his eares, rebuked them, and bad them holde theyr peace. But they thrugh a constante truste in Jesus, whom they beleyued to be beneficiall towardes all men, cried out louder, and sayde againe: Lorde the sonne of Dauid, haue mercy vpon vs. Jesus therfoꝛe when he had sufficiently declared theyr fayth to them all, & had taught vs by theyr exaple that we should beare at the cares of God feruently and constantly, if we will obtayne anye thynge: stode still (foꝛ they could not folow but onely with crying) and commaunded thē to cum to him. At his worde they cum. Jesus asketh them what they would with theyr great crying, and what they wouldе that he shoulde do foꝛ them. Jesus was not ignoraunte what they desired, but he would that the disease that they were troubled wyth, should be knowen to all menne by theyr owne confession, that the faythe of the miracle mighte be the more certayne. Lorde (quod they) we desire that oure eyes maye be opened by your helpe. They speakyng these thynges with a great affeccion, declare that blyndnes was a great griefe vnto them. And he is nerte vnto light, whiche is very wery of his blindenes. Than Jesus shewyng his pitifull affeccion both in countenaunce and eyes, with whiche affeccion euery godspeller ought to bee sory for other mens harmes, touched theyr eyes: and forthwith their eyes beyng opened, they saw, and with others they folowed Jesus. So Jesus with his touching healeth the mynde blinded with worldly desyres, and light is geuen to this ende, that we maye folowe his steppes.

The.xxi. Chapiter.

This texte. And when they drewe nye vnto Hierusalem, and came to Bethphage vnto mount Oliuete: Than sent Jesus two disciples, sayeng vnto them: Go into the towne that is ouer agaynst you, and anone ye shall fynde an asse bounden, and a colte with her, loose them, and bring them to me. And if any man saye ought vnto you, saye ye: The lorde hath nede of them, and streyght waye he will let them go. All this was done that it might be fulfilled, whiche was spoken by the prophete, sayeng: Speake ye to the doughter of Syon, beholde thy kyng cummeth vnto the, meke, sittyng vpon an Asse, and a colt, the sole of the asse vsed to the yoke.

Therfore Jesus goyng forwarde to Hierusalē, laboured about this diligently, with his disciples, to faste in theyr mindes, that he went to his death wyttyngly and willyngly, and that no man shoulde hurte him, yf he woulde resiste. Therfore he beate it into them so often, that he must go to Hierusalem and there suffre death. And whereas sumtyme he semed to withdrawe himselfe from perill, it was not for feare, but to kepe himselfe vnto the tyme apoynted of the father. The whiche when it was than at hande, he dyd not onely not hyde hymselfe, but willyngly put furthe hymselfe, and so putte forth himself, that with the noueltie of his pompe, he stirred the mindes of the whole cytie against him: and in the meane season he ceaseth not from myracles: he ceaseth not from preachyng of the trueth, also he reproueth the lyfe of the Pharisees more freely or frankely: he caseth the marchauntes out of the temple, by the whiche thinges he knewe that all theyr myndes would bee the more vehemently stirred against him. Whome because he had prouoked against him with well doyng, he made them not vnfaultie, but gaue them lyberte that they might do the thing that they would do. Therfore now being nere to the citie of Hierusalem, he came into the mount of Olyues, where he thought good to frame a new maner of pompe of his cumming, by the which in maner he mocked the pryde of this worlde, and by this spectacle he somewhat comforted his disciples, beyng yet but weake, that they might the more quietly beare the death of theyr Lorde.

Therfore from this hill he sente two of his disciples, saying: go ye into the village that is ouer againste you, and as soone as ye enter in there, ye shall fynde a female Asse tyed, and her sole with her, whereon neuer hath any manne yet sitten, loose them bothe, and bring them hither vnto me.
And if any manne saye any thing vnto you, demaundyng why ye loose them,

whether or to whom ye leade them, make none other answere, but that the Lorde hath nede of them. At this worde they will suffer them furthwith to be brought. These thinges were doen, partlye because they shoulde understande that nothing is to hym unknowen, and that he hath power to commaunde whom he will, and what he will, if he would use his power: partely that the Jewes might know, at lest wise by this very token, that he was Messias, because they sawe this straunge kinde of entring prophecied in tyme paste by the prophete Zacharie. For thus he did prophecie: Saye ye doughters of Syon: beholde thy kyng cummeth to thee, meke and humble, sitting upon a she asse, and upon a colte the sole of a yoked beaste. All thyng was done, &c.

The disciples went, and did as Jesus commaunded them, and brought the asse and the colt, and put on them their clothes, and let him theron. And many of the people spred their garmentes in the waye. And other cut downe boughes from the trees, and strawed them in the waye. Further the people that went before, and they that came after cryed, saying: Osanna to the sonne of David. Blessed is he that commeth in the name of the Lorde: Osanna in the highest. The texte.

The disciples departed, they found true whatsoever Jesus had tolde them before. By and by at the mencion of the lord, the beastes wer let loose, where as neyther the Lorde was there present, nor the disciples made any countenaunce of any autoritie that they had. In dede the owners of the beastes knewe no suche thing: but yet in their hertes they perceyued that he whiche was lorde ouer all, commaunded this. The disciples because the Lord should sitte the more at ease, cast on their clokes, and so let him upon the coltes backe, whiche colte did beare the figure of the heathen nation beyng uncleane, and filthy folowyng all yll desyres: whiche whan it was once couered with vertues apostolicall, and Jesus receiued upon her backe, ceassed any longer to bee uncleane: ceassed to folow her old vices, beyng made the bearer of him who purgeth and sanctifieth all thinges. This the asse is the dame of the sole, (because healthe and redemption cummeth oute of the Jewes) but thesame asse was fast tyed to the lettre of the lawe: Bare she was of euangelicall vertues: but at the lordes biddyng they are both untied, and couered with the Apostles clothes. The Apostles as yet understoode not these thynges, but yet this it was whiche was signified thereby, and shoulde more playnely be understanded afterwarde. When Jesus was now come to the foote of the hill, a great multitude of men came out of Jerusalem to mete hym. Yea and the multitude had suche a fauour unto him, that the moost parte of them strawed the waye with their garmentes, some cut downe boughes from the trees, and strawed them in the waye. Further the company that went before, and also that folowed, declaryng themselues to bee glad of his cumming, sang unto hym this saying out of the prophecie of the psalme. Osanna to the sonne of David, blessed be he that cummeth in the name of the lorde. Osanna on high. Others cryed: blessed be the kyngdome of our father Dauid, the whiche is come. Others cryed. Blessed be the kyng of Israell whiche is come: and they praysed God for the myracles whiche they sawe done by Jesus. Osanna to the sonne.

This honoure the Lorde Jesus, who hadde euer to fore liued humble and lowe, suffred to be geuen unto hym, whereby he declared that he shoulde not bee without the glorye of this worlde, in case he were mynded to haue it: but that he had rather to despite it, than to embrace it, to the ende it might bee so muche the more shame that it shoulde be sought for of suche as pro-profesſe themſelues to be his diſciples, where as he deſpyſed it which onelye deſerued it. Yet this honor was mete and semely for the cummynge of hym, who by his death ſhoulde redeme the whole worlde.

The texte. And whan he was cum to Hierusalem, all the citie was moued, ſaying. Who is this? And the people ſayd: This is Jeſus, that prophete of Nazareth in Galile. And Jeſus went into the temple, and caſt out all them that ſolde and bought in the temple, and ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, and the ſeates of them that ſolde doues, and ſayd vnto them: It is wrytten. My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues. And the blynde and lame came vnto hym into the temple, and he healed them.

Therfore when Jeſus entred into Hierusalem with this ſtraunge and vnwoonte pompe, the whole citie was moued with this vncouthe ſyght, ſaying: What man is this? The multitude whiche folowed him, anſwered: This is Jeſus the Prophete of Nazareth, the citie in Galile. This they thought a goodly prayſe, although that it was farre vnder his maieſtie. For the people as yet couldе ſuppoſe nothyng of hym aboue man. And Chriſte dyd purpoſely ſo order his iyfe, that he vttered not openly his godlye nature, whiche he ſhoulde haue perſuaded in vayne, yf they had eeene hym after warde ſuffer deathe. Therefore with this ruffiyng Jeſus entered into the temple and there furthwith began to vſe a certayne kyngdome. When he ſawe in the temple a faſhion of a market, ſum ſelling, ſum biyng, and the chaungers of money ſitting, Jeſus moued with the vngoodlines of the thyng, accordynge to the ſayinge of the Prophete: The zeale of thy houſe hath eaten me, he made a whip of litle coardes, and dryue all the byers and ſellers with theyr marchandiſe out of the temple, he caſt downe the tables of the money changers and ſcatered theyr money vpon the grounde: he caſt downe the ſeates of the doue ſellers, alleging furth of Eſay a iuſt cauſe of his griefe, who ſayeth in the perſon of God: My houſe ſhall be called the houſe of prayer, but ye haue made it a den of theues.

My houſe is the houſe of prayer.

By this act Jeſus mente an other thynge. For that the temple was polluted with marchandyſe of bullockes, ſheepe, goates and doues, did not ſo greatly moue hym, but it was hys mynde to ſhewe that auarice and lucre would be a deadly poyſon vnto his church in time to cum, whiche was figured by that temple, whoſe religion ſhould ſhortlye after be aboliſhed. For at ſuche tyme as the temple which is conſecrate to offer vp to God ſpirituall ſacrifice, turned into a denne of theues, whan vnder the pretenſe of religion and pitie hode, the people is robbed. For nothing can be ſincere and holy, where the loue of money doethe reigne. And this miſchiefe is than a thynge vntollerable, when it is vſed vnder the roofe of the temple, when raulne is couered with the ſhadowe of religion. There was no ſorte of men, againſte whom Jeſus at any time ſhewed any more rigour, then he dyd towardes theſe, and yet hath he reſerued the ſame vnto himſelfe to be caſt out, when himſelfe ſhall thinke beſt.

Alſo the blynde and the lame. &c

Then vnto Jeſus being in the temple, there came the blynde and lame, whome the lawe barred from entryng into the temple. But the temple of Jeſus receyueth all whiche make ſpede vnto healthe. For the blynde came, that hauinge theyr ſight they might ſee Jeſus, whome they hearde ſo ſpoken of. The lame came, that folowing his ſteppes, they might come into the kyngdome of heauen. Is manye therfore as came to hym, he healed them.

he left them, and went out of the citie vnto Bethania, and abode there.

The chiefe Prieſtes and the Scribes thozough thoſe thinges wherby they ought at laſt to repente, were the moze kyndled with burning in enuye, when they ſawe the people reioyſing ſo louingly on euery ſyde, and ſawe the greate power in healing of the lame and blinde, and authozitie in calling out of marchandiſe, no manne beeyng ſo bolde to reſiſt. and the children alſo crying in the temple, Os Anna to the ſonne of Dauid. Thei taking theſe thinges greuouſly, moniſhed Jeſus to ceaſe that crying, elſ it would cum to paſſe that he ſhoulde ſeme to acknowleage ſuche honour, of which they iudged him vnworthy, wher as it ſhoulde haue been theyr partes rather moze greekly to prayſe hym, and to ſpeake well of him, whiche beyng auncient men and ſkilfull in the law and the prophecies, keeping ſo many miracles, myght vnderſtande that this is Meſſias whom they loked foz ſo long tyme. Nowe the children by the inſtigation of nature, oz rather by the inſpiration of God, ſpake theſe thinge, whiche they could not vnderſtande foz lacke of age. Therfoze they blinded with enuy, and dronken with anger, ſaied vnto him: heareſt thou what theſe children ſaye? But Jeſus ſtopping their mouth with a teſtimonye of ſcripture, dyd ye neuer reade (ſaye he) of the mouthe of infantes and ſuckelinges thou haſte made perfecte thy prayſe? will ye therefoze that I ſhould ſhut their mouthe, whiche God hath opened to prayſe his glozy? I ſay vnto you: God will not ſuffer his prayſe to be hadin ſilence thzough your enuye, in ſo muche that if theſe holde theyr peace the ſtones will crye, whoſe hardenes ye exceede. Therfoze Jeſus leuyng them with their enuy, departed, and goyng out of the citie of Jeruſalem, went vnto Bethania, and there tarryed.

¶ In the morning as he returned into the citie agayne, he was an hungered: and when he had eſpied a figetree in the waie, he came to it, and founde nothyng theron but leaues only, and ſaied vnto it: Neuer fruite growe on the hence foz ward. And anon the figetree wythered away. And when his diſciples ſawe it, they maruayled, ſaying: how ſoone the figetree is withered. Jeſus anſwering, ſayed vnto them: Verely I ſaye vnto you. If ye haue fayth and doubte not, ye ſhall not onely do this, that is happened vnto the figetree, but alſo if ye ſhall ſaie vnto this mountaine, remoue and caſt your ſelfe into the ſea, it ſhall be doen. And all thinges what ſoeuer ye aſke in prayer (yf ye beleue) ye ſhall receyue them.

In the mozning by the waye as he returned vnto the citie, he beganne to wexe hungery. And when he ſawe a figtree nere the waye, he came towarde it, as hoping to haue ſum foode. And when he came at it, he founde nothyng on it but leaues. Therefoze as beeyng greued that he was deceyued of his hope, he curſed it, ſaying: Neuer man ſee fruite of the hereafter. And whan the diſciples returned agayne the ſame way, ſeing the figgetree which Jeſus curſed, that is be withered, and the leaues fallen of, marueiled and ſaied vnto him: behold the figge tree whiche thou diddeſt curſe, is now withered. Jeſus ſuffered this to be doen foz this purpoſe; that he might inculcate diligently fayth vnto his diſciples, without the whiche he knewe that his death ſhoulde be vnprofitable to menne. Foz he thyrſted maruelouſlye after the healthe and ſalvacion of mankinde, and now deſired and longed foz his death. But whereas he founde an apperance of religion in the Jewes, he found not the fruite of fayth, which only he hungered for. Vnto his disciples therfore marueiling at the figge tree so sodenly withered, he made answere on this wyse: why marueyle ye at this whiche is no greate matter, a figge tree to wyther: ye might of fayth he can doe more, whiche yf ye possesse both stronge and constante, ye shall not onelye doe, whiche ye sawe chaunce vnto the figge tree, but also yf ye saye to this hill, remoue the from thy place, and go into the sea, youre commaundemente shall be doen forthwith. And what soeuer ye shall aske in youre prayers, so that ye haue a sure trust, ye shall obteyne.

The texte. ¶ And when he was cum into the temple, the chiefe priestes and elders of the people came to hym as he was teaching, and sayed: By what auctorite doest thou these thinges? And who hath geuen the this auctorite? And Jesus answering, sayed vnto them: I also will aske you a certayne thyng, whiche yf ye tell me, I will also shewe you with what auctorite I do these thynges. The baptisme of John whence was it: from heauen or of men? But they thought with themselues, saying: If we say, from heauen, he will saye vnto vs: Why then did ye not beleue hym? But if we say of men, we feare the people. For all men take John as a prophet. And they answering to Jesus, sayed: we cannot tell. And he sayed vnto them: Neyther I do tell you with what auctorite I do these thinges.

And when he entred into the temple and taught the people, the chiefe priestes and certayne of the Seniours of the people, not suffering him to be there in his kyngdome freely, go vnto him and saye. By what authozitie doest thou these thinges? And who gaue the this authozitie? For sith no manne gaue hym this authozitie, either he must say that it was geue him of God, or els of Belzebub. If he had sayed of God, he shoulde haue sayed truely, but he shoulde haue doen nothing but prouoked theim. For they aske not that they will beleue, whiche might appere by the thing it selfe, but falsely to reproue and blame. Jesus therfore not ignorant of this thing, requited their question with an other, as though a man shoulde dryue out one nayle with an other. I will aske you (yf he) a certayne thyng, and if ye answer me to that, I will answer to your question. The authozitie whereby John did baptise, from whence came it vnto him: from heauen or from men? They toke deliberation with themselues, what they should answere. For they sawe it was a question with two pikes, and that they must nedes fall vpon the one. They thought in their mindes, yf we say from heauen, he will forthwith say vnto vs: why than did ye not beleue him? for he preached the kingdome of God, and witnessed with me. But yf we saye, of men, it is to be feared lest the people will make a sedicion, because all menne toke John for a prophete. Therfore lest they shoulde be reproued they made answere that they coulde not tell. Than spake Jesus: And I will not tell you (yf he) from whence I haue this authozitie.

The texte. ¶ And what thynke you? A man had two sonnes, and came to the firste, and sayed: Sonne go to day, and worke in my vineyarde. He answering, sayd: I will not. But afterwarde, he repented and went. Than came he to the seconde, and sayed likewyse: And he answered and sayed: I will go, and went not. Whether of them twayne did the will of the father? And they say vnto him, the first. Jesus sayeth vnto them: verely I say vnto you, that the publicans and harlottes goe before you into the kyngdom of God. For John came vnto you by the waye of righteousnes, and ye beleued hym not, and the publicans and harlottes dyd beleue hym. And ye when ye had seen it, were not moued afterwarde with repentaunce to beleue him.

But becaufe a ſimple and playne queſtion could not wrynge oute the confeſſion of truth, Jeſus putteth forth an other queſtion by a riddell, that vnwarres they ſhall geue ſentence againſt themſelues : what thynke ye (o ye) of that I will propoſe now? A certayne man had two ſonnes. He came to the one and ſayed: Sonne, go and worke this day in my vineyard. He anſwerrd frowardly, I will not. But ſtrayt afterward repenting himſelfe, he went into the vineyarde. The father likewyſe came to the other ſonne and ſayed: go, and labour in my vineyarde this day. He anſwereth redily, loe I goe ſir, and yet he wente not. Therfore of theſe two, whether thinke ye fulfilled his fathers will? They not vnderſtanding to what ende theſe went, anſwerred: The firſte ſone, whiche repenting forthwith, wente into the vineyarde. Than Jeſus turning the parable vpon them, ſayed: certaynlye I tell you truethe, that the publicanes and common women ſhall go before you in the kyngdome of heauen. They beyng rebelles agaynſt God before with they; wicked life, yet by and by touched and mued by penaunce obeyed the doctryne of the ghoſpell. Ye which be the people of God by title and profeſſion, and ye which ſayed in times paſte, and this day ſay, we will do all thinges whatſoeuer the Lorde ſayeth vnto vs, whiche alſo haue euer in your mouthe the precepte of God, and the Lordes temple, the Lordes temple, the Lordes temple, beyng ſo many wayes prouoked, cannot be moued to penaunce. For John came the wyng you the waye of ryghteouſnes, and that the wrathe of God was at hande, and the axe ſet at the tree roetes, vnleſſe forthwith ye would repent. Ye ſawe the Publicanes and common women (deſperate folkes after your iudgement,) obedient vnto hym. Ye could not be moued vnto penaunce neyther by the great holines of John, neyther by his holſom doctrine, neither by his threteninges, neither by the example of the publicanes and comyon women. So it cummethe to paſſe, that they throughe fayth, take from you the kyngdome of God: ye baynelye profeſſing God with your mouthe, be ſhut out for the vnbeleefe of your mynde.

¶ Beathen an other ſimilitude. There was a certayne man an houſeholder, which planted a vineyarde, and hedged it rounde about, and made a wine preſſe, and buylded a tower, and let it out to husbandmen, and went ſtraught into a ſtraunge countrey. And when the ſeaſon of fruyte drew neer, he ſente his ſeruauntes to the husbandmen to receyue the fruites of it. And the husbandmen takyng his ſeruauntes, one they beate one, killed another and ſtoned another. Agayne he ſente other ſeruauntes more than the firſte, and they dyd vnto them lyke wyſe. But laſt of all he ſente vnto them his owne ſonne, ſayeng: They will haue my ſonne in reuerence. And the husbandmen when they ſawe the ſonne, they ſayed in them ſelues. This is the heyre, cum let vs kyll him, and let vs enioye his heritage. And they toke him, and caſte him out of the vineyarde, and kyled him. Than when the Lorde of the vineyarde cummeth, what will he doe vnto thoſe husbandmen? They ſaye vnto him: Surely they bee ill be will cruelly deſtroy them, and will let out his vineyarde to other husbandmenne, whiche ſhall deliuer him the fruite in due ſeaſon. The texte.

He put them another parable euen as darke, where with he doth recite leſurely, and leyeth before their eyes, their notable vnkindenes, whiche beeyng prouoked by ſo manye benefites of God, dyd not onely not amende, but alſo cruelly killed the Prophetes one after another, which were ſente, that at their preachyng they myght once repente. And not content herewith, finally they would kyll the ſonne of God himſelfe, and that after that he was caſte out of the the vineyarde,thewyng as it were by the waye the place where he ſhoulde be crucified. By the whiche communicacion he declareth both ỹ their inuincible malice is vnwo;thye pardon(keeyng that nothyng was omitted that myght call them backe to a better mynde)and that he ſhoulde ſuffre nothing of them, whiche he knewe not of before. This was the parable . There was(ꝙ he)a certayne houſeholder, whiche planted a vineyarde , and hedged it aboute and digged in it a ceſterne , to receyue the ſwete wine that was preſſed out of the cluſters of grapes,and buylt in it a lodge for the keeping of the vineyarde, and ſo whan it was well garniſhed, he ſet it out to huſbande menne:that they ſhould truſtely tyll it,and rendre the fruites vnto the lorde. This doen,he went far of. Nowe when the tyme of gatheryng the fruite approched neere,he ſente his ſeruauntes to receyue the fruite of them. But the huſbandemen dyd not onelye not deliuer the fruites that were due , but alſo layed handes vpon hys ſeruauntes,and bette ſum,killed ſum,and ſtoned ſum to death. This knowen the houſeholder did not fureth with puniſhe them,but loking that they ſhoulde repente and amende,ſente vnto theim a greater number of ſeruauntes than he dyd before:truſting that they beeyng kept vnder and in awe with the multitude;they woulde do their duete. But they handeled theim alſo no moze gentely,than they handeled the other before. The houſeholder ſuffered this diſpleaſure alſo,and finally to ouercum them with ſoftnes and gentilneſſe,he ſent vnto them his owne ſonne, ſaying with himſelfe : although they haue been cruell toward my ſeruauntes,yet at the leaſte they will vſe my ſonne reuerently,whan they ſee that he is cum.But the huſbande menne the moze they were prouoked to repentaunce,the moze they were ſtyrred vnto cruelties. For whan they ſawe the ſonne , they did not reuerence him, inſomuche that furthwyth they conſulted to ſlea him,ſaying:this is the heyre, cum let vs kill him,and we ſhall take his inheritaunce. And by and by they layed handes vpon him, and plucked him out of the vineyarde and killed him . Therfore(ꝙ he)when the Lorde of the vineyarde ſhall cum,what ſhall he do to thoſe huſbande menne? The Phariſeis anſwered:thoſe ill men he ſhall ill intreate and deſtroy,and let out his vineyarde to others, whiche may truſtely render the fruite in tyme due to the Lorde whiche lette it out. So they deceyued by this ryddle,condemne them ſelues with theyr owne mouth:pronouncing,that they themſelues for the inuincible frowardenes of their mynde be worthy puniſhmente, and that the gentiles be worthy to be receyued to the grace of the ghoſpel, whiche will till the vineyarde moze truſtely than they dyd.

¶ And whan the chiefe priestes and Pharisees had heard hys parables, they perceyued that he spake of them. And they went about to laye handes on hym, but they feared the people, because they toke hym as a Prophete. And Jesus answered, and spake vnto them again by parables, and sayd.

In lengthe, of the conclusion of thys communication, seyng the chiefe priestes and Scribes vnderstode that he spake the former parables also againste thē, in the whyche they beyng deceyued, gaue sentence agaynst themselues. ¶ The. xxii. Chapter.

¶ The kingdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that was a kyng, whiche made a mariage for his sonne: and sent furth his seruauntes to call theym that were bydde to the weddyng, and they would not cum. Agayne he sent furth other seruauntes, sayeng: Tell thē whiche are bidden. Beholde I haue prepared my dinner, myne oxen, and my fatte wares are kylled, and all thynges are ready, cum vnto the mariage. But they made lyght of it, and went theyr wayes, one to his farme place, another to his marchandise, and the residue toke his seruauntes, and intreated them shamefully. And whan the kyng hearde therof, he was angry, and sent furth his men of warre, and destroyed those murderers, and brent vp theyr citie. The texte.

Agayne Jesus added an other parable, to print the more surely in ꝑ myndes of the Jewes, ꝑ it came to passe by theyr owne obstinate malice, ꝑ they were reiected frō saluacion of the gospel, and ꝑ the Gentiles shal take entoye, that that they made them selues vnworthy of. There is none excluded frō the kigdom of God, but this honoure was geuē to the nacion of Jewes, that they were called fyrste of all, & gently called, not vnto sower or vyle thynges, but vnto a mariage, ꝑ is to honour, delicates, & libertie of ꝑ gospel. And they wer not inuited onely by the prophete John, & by Christ himselfe, but also after his death, they shoulde be called by the Apostles: and the preachers of the ghospell shoulde not go to the gentyles before that for theyr diligence and mell doyng, they had bene areyed long of the Jewes with many mockes, & punishmentes: that they can ascribe it to no man, that afterward they shal be punished with so many miseries, whiche despised Goddes goodnes, so often offered vnto thē. The texte. ¶ Jesus sayeth vnto them: Dyd ye neuer reade in the scriptures? The stone which the builders refused, the same is made the head of the corner: this is doen of the lorde, and is meruailouse in our eyes. Therfore saye I vnto you, the kingdome of God shalbe taken fro you, and geuen to a nacion, whiche shall bryng forth the fruites therof. And whosoeuer falleth on this stone, shalbe broken in pieces. But on whomsoeuer it falleth, he shalbe all to bruised.

After these thinges, Jesus shewed that through their frowardenes he beeyng condemned and reiected, should dye a spitefull deathe, but by his resurrection through the power of the father, he should be made notable throughout all the worlde and shoulde be so founde and strong, that whoso stumbled against him, should be his owne destruction. And that in declaryng of this, he might lesse offend them, he bryngeth a prophecie out of the psalme. Neuer red ye in the scriptures (ꝙ he) the stone whiche the builders dyd refuse and calle

This is doen of the lorde & it is wonderfull in our eyes: signifying that they builded the Synagoge, but castig out Christe, without whom no building was sure: but yet ỹ stone reiected of the, should be in great estimacion & price in the church of ỹ Gentiles. And therfore Jesus dyd adde therfore I say vnto you, the kingdō of god shall be taken frō you, which ye delpise being offered vnto you, and it shal be geuen to other people, which shal bring furth fruites meete for the gospel. And as this stone shal bring health to them that obey the ghospell, so it shall bring destruccion vnto them that be disobediente throughe vnbelefe. For whosō stumbleth at thys stone, shalbe broken. Agayne vpō whō this stone falleth, he shalbe bruled.

¶ And whan the chiefe priestes and Pharisees had heard hys parables, they perceyued that he spake of them. And they went about to laye handes on hym, but they feared the people, because they toke hym as a prophete. And Jesus answered, and spake vnto them again by parables, and sayd.

It lengthe, of the conclusion of thys communication, fyrste the chiefe priestes and Scribes vnderstode that he spake the former parables also againste the, in the whyche they beyng deceyued, gaue sentence agaynst themselues. And therfore theyr madnes was so set a fyer, that they wouldbe furthwith haue layed handes vpon him: But they feared the people, because Jesus was made muche of, of many, and taken for a Prophete.

¶ The. xxii. Chapter.

¶ The kingdome of heauen is lyke vnto a man that was a kyng, whiche made a mariage for his sonne: and sent furth his seruauntes to call them that were bydde to the weddyng, and they wouldde not cum. Agayne he sent furth other seruauntes, saying: Tell the wyche are bidden. Beholde I haue prepared my dinner, myne oxen, and my fatte wares are kylled, and all thynges are redy, cum vnto the mariage. But they made lyght of it, and went theyr wayes, one to his farme place, another to his marchandise, and the residue toke his seruauntes, and intreated them shamefully, and slewe them. And whan the kyng hearde therof, he was angry, and sent furth his men of warre, and destroyed these murderers, and brent by theyr citie.

Agayne Jesus added an other parable, to print the more surely in ỹ myndes of the Jewes, ỹ it came to passe by theyr owne obstinate malice, ỹ they were reiected frō saluacion of the gospel, and ỹ the Gentiles shal take & entoye, that that they made them selues vnworthy of. There is none excluded frō the kigdom of God, but this honoure was geuē to the nacīō of Jewes, that they were called fyrste of all, & gently called, not vnto lowe or vyle thynges, but vnto a mariage, ỹ is to honour, delicates, & libertie of ỹ gospel. And they wer not inuited onely by the prophete John, & by Christ himselfe, but also after his death, they shoulde be called by the Apostles: and the preachers of the ghospell shoulde not go to the gentyles before that for theyr diligence and well doyng, they had bene arayed long of the Jewes with many mockes, & punishmentes: that they can ascribe it to no man, that afterward they shal be punished with so many miseries, whiche despised Goddes goodnes, so often offered vnto the. This is the similitude, tude. The kingdome of heauen (q he) is throughy you made like to a certayne kyng, who makyng a bridale to his sonne, sent out his seruaunte, to inuite and call many to his sonnes marriage. But they once called, would not cumme. Then the kyng sent mo seruauntes to bid them more diligently to make haste vnto the weddyng now in a redines, and to say to them in his name: Beholde the dinet is ready, my oxen and my pultrie be killed, and al other thinges be in a readines. Now nothyng lacketh but cumming of the geastes, that the prepa-ration be not made in vaine. But they againe neglected the bidder. And whan the bidders called vpon them, euery man made his excuse: one sayd, he muste gose e his manour or farme place, that he had lately bought: another sayde, he must go lose vpon his oxen, which he had bought: Another sated, he had late maryed a wyfe, from whome he could not departe. And these men were onlye madde to themselues whiche preferred certayne vile and fylthy cares of frail thinges, before a feast of suche felicitie. But other toyned crueltes vnto their vnkindnes. For the kinges seruauntes, whiche dyd once or twyse inuite them vnto so great honour, they handeled and vsed very sore with many rebukes, and at length killed them also. The whiche doyng when the kinge heard of, he tobe it very greuously: and turnyng his gentiles, whiche they had so despised, into a rage, and sendyng furth men of his garde destroyed these murderers: and not content with that, set their citie a fyer also. These thinges spake Je-sus prophecying vnto them ceuertly the destruction of the citie of Jerusalem: And by and by he geueth intelligence that the gentiles shalbe called on euery syde vnto the gospell, as those whiche wer better than the Jewes.

And whan the kyng, s

The texte. Than sayed he to his seruauntes: The marriage is prepared, but they that were inuited were not worthy. Go ye therfore to the hyghe wayes, as many as ye fynde, cal to the ma-riage. Thā his seruauntes wente out into the high wayes, and brought together as many as they could fynde, both good and badde, and the weddyng was furnished with geastes. The king came in to see the geastes, and whan he spyed a man there which had not on a wed-ding garmente, he sayed vnto him: Frende how camest thou in hither not hauing a weddyng garmente? But he held his peace: Than said the kyng to the ministers. Binde hym handes & feete, and caste him into the vtter darkenes, there shalbe weppyng and gnashing of teethe. For many are called, but few are chosen.

Than he sayed vnto his seruauntes, the bridale is redy: but because they that were called, declared themselues for to be vnworthy for this feaste, whiche not withstandyng I prepared chiefly for them: runne abrode euery where in stretes and crosse wayes, and call to the bridale indifferently, whomsoeuer ye fynd, worthy, vnworthy, lame, mayned, blind, and lame, till my house be full. The seruauntes went forth and brought together a multitude of all sortes gathered together from all places, and the feaste was replenished with geas-tes. After this, Jesus because he had shewed before, that the Jewes shoulde be greuously punished, whiche afflicted the apostles, callyng them so often, and at length killed them, declareth also that they shalbe sore punished whiche once professing the lyfe of the gospell, returne againe to the filthines of their olde lyfe. The king (q he) went in to see the geastes sittyng at the table, and a-mong others he sawe one there, which had not on his weddinge garment. Frende (q he) how camest thou in hither, sith thou hast not thy wedding gar-mente? But he beyng put to shame was dumme, and had nothing to say. Than the king commaunded his seruauntes that they should binde him handes and feete, remoue him far from the feast, and caste him into great darkenes, where is is weeping and gnathing of teeth, the honour and the lyght of the feaste beyng chaunged into a vile ꝑlon, a great pleasure beyng chaunged into great torment. Further though many be called, yet fewe be chosen: al be called freely, but none be chosen but they that obey their calling, and they that were the rude and lowere unto the goodnes of God to warde: them, continuyng in the study and loue of the euangelicall godlynes.

The Phariseis

Than went the Phariseis and toke counsell how they might tangle hym in his wordes. And they sente furth vnto hym their disciples with the Herodians, saying: Maister, we knowe that thou art true, and teachest the waye of God truly, neither regardest thou any man, nor thou haste respecte of persones. Tell vs therfore, howe thynkest thou? Is it lawfull that tribute be geuen to Cesar, or not? But Iesus perceyuing their malice, sayd: why tempt ye me, ye hypocrites? Shewe me the tribute money: and they toke vnto hym a denarie. And he sayed vnto them: whose ymage is this, and superscription? They sayed vnto hym: Cesars. Than sayed he vnto them: Geue therfore vnto Cesar, the thynges whiche are Cesars, and vnto God those thynges that are goddes. When they had heard these wordes, they merueyled, and left hym, and went awaye.

When the Iewes perceyued that they were touched with these parables, they were not yet moued vnto penaunce, insomuche that nowe they mused in their myndes nothing els but howe that Iesus myght be killed. So great a mischiefe is envy and ambicion. They had a will to murdre, but they lacked opoꝛtunitie. They feared not God, the reuenger of suche mischiefes, but they feared the people. They thought therfoꝛe to goe a contrary waye, and to doe the thyng with suche secrete vndermining, that the envy of the dede should redound and reste vpon Cesar and his officers. Therfoꝛe foꝛ the tyme, they dissembled their anger and went awaye. But consulting among themselues, it was thought good, that certayne should be suboꝛnated and sente furth to ꝓpose a question vnto Iesus, and to take hym in his answere, and to bryng hym into the ꝓinces daunger, that by them, as beeyng giltie of treason, and the authoꝛ of sedicion, he myght be putte to death. The Phariseis hauyng nothyng to doe with the matter. And their inuencion was this. When Iewry began now to be tributarie to the Romaynes, king Herode the some of Antipater was made officer of Auguste to gather the tribute: And of this thyng euery man had not like opinion: foꝛ some thought it not meete that the people dedicate vnto God, should paye tribute to ꝓinces that were Idolatours. And in this opinion were they whiche helde with the Phariseis. Agayne there were sum the fauoꝛers of Cesar, which saied that tribute ought to be payed: & the mainteners of this opinion were called Herodians, because Herode was the officer to gather the tribute. A lytle before there were two, Theudas and Iudas, which whilest they did defende openly that the Iewes, a people dedicate vnto god, ought no tribute to any ꝓphane ꝓince, were put to death like sedicioꝰse persones. Now the Phariseis trusted that Christe fauoring religion moꝛe than Cesar, beeyng ꝓphane and wicked, woulde ꝓnounce and iudge accoꝛding to his accustomed libertie against the Herodians, that tribute should not be payed to Cesar: and furthwith by them should be accused vnto Herode, and should be punished like as Theudas and Iudas were before. And yf he had ꝓnounced that tribute shoulde be payed, than they woulde haue layed to his charge that he had flattered wycked ꝓynces, and not fauoured gods religion. Therfoꝛe they doe suboꝛnate, and sende furth certayne of their disciples, whiche, the Herodians beyng ꝓsente with a great numbre of men, that the thing should not lacke witnesses, colourably with layte speakyng should entise him into theyr net. So great was theyr blyndnes, that the thyng so often attempted in vayne, they would not rest. Neyther be they ashamed of theyr inconstancye, nowe calling him maister, where before they layed to his charge that he was possessed with the spirite of Beelzebub. And they commende his libertie, that he should not feare to offende the Herodians.

Maister (q they) we knowe that thou art true, thou flatterest no manne, thou liest nothyng: But thou doest teache with great libertie the pleasure of god, not the phantasye of men. For thou fearest no mortall man, and regardest no person. Tell vs therfore what ye thynke: Is it leefull for the people of Jewes whiche is dedicate to the religion of God, to paye tribute vnto Ceasar, or no? And shall we geue it hereafter, or no? But Jesus to shewe that theyr crafty flatteryng could not deceyue him, so ordered his answwere with woonderfull wysedome, that he endaungered hymselfe to neyther of the factions: but mynished them what dyd moste appertayne vnto their saluation: that is, to pay vnto God the high Prince, the tribute of godlynes. Ye hypocrites (q he) why do ye tempte me? Shewe me a coyne of the tribute. For they went about to catche Jesus in his woordes. He agayne catcheth them in theyr answeres.

Is it lawful that tribute be geue.

Therfore they shewed hym a Denarie, whiche had the Jmage and name of Ceasar. And to declare that he came not for this purpose to make lawes of these thynges, whiche pertayne nothyng vnto Godlynes, and the whiche for the tyme maye be well or yll doen, when he sawe the coyne, as though he knew no suche letters nor Jmages, who went onely about heauenly thynges: he asked whose title and Jmage it was. Answwere was made: Ceasars. Than sayed Jesus: Rendre therfore vnto Ceasar, what any thing appertaine vnto Ceasar, but firste of all rendre vnto God, the thynges that appertaine vnto God: meanyng that it is no hurte to godlines, if a man beeyng dedicate to God, doe geue tribute to a prophane prynce, although he owe it not, desiring rather to be obedient, than to prouoke and stirre him: chiefly in that thyng whiche maketh a man poorer, but not vngodly. Otherwise yf he doeth exacte that which maketh vs vngodly, it is not nowe the tribute of Ceasar, but of the deuill.

And vnto God &c.

When they had this answwer they maruyeled: Firste because they perceiued that theie suttell deuise was not hid from him: Furthermore for his wonderfull wisdome, whom manne crastines wente about to deceiue in vayne. They marualled truely, but they weren not chaunged. And forsaking him, they left of to prouoke him, syth they could not ouercome him: but they did not leaue of to hate hym, whom they ought to loue.

The same daye came vnto hym the Sadducees (whiche saye that there is no resurrection) and asked hym, sayeng: Maister, Moyses sayed: yf a man dye, not hauyng a childe, that his brother should marry his wyfe, and rayse vp seede vnto his brother. There were with vs seuen brethren, and the firste maried a wyfe, and dyed without issue, and lefte his wyfe to his brother: likewise the seconde, & the thirde, vnto the seuenth. Laste of all dyed the woman also. Therfore in the resurrection, whose wyfe shall she be of the seuen? For they all had her. Jesus answwered and sayed vnto them: ye do erre not knowyng the Scripture, nor the power of God: For in the resurrection they neyther marry, nor be maryed, but are as the aungels in heauen.

The terte.

Therfore whan the Pharisees and the Herodians were departed, the Sadducees came vnto him. That faction emong the Jewes, is more grosse and lesse learned, disagreeing from the Pharisees in this, that they denye the resurreſurrecciō: In ſomuche that they beleue not the Aungels to bee, nor the ſoules to bee, after they bee ſeparate from the body, thynkyng nothing to bee but that whiche they ſee. They whan they heard Chriſte make often mencion of euerlaſting life, and of the world to come, and of the reſurrecciō of the iuſt, they come vnto him to proue whether he agreed with the Phariſeis, or taught contrary to them, that they might reproue him if he were againſt them, or els laugh him to ſkorne, if he agreed with the Phariſeis. Therfore they do obiect vnto him this hard queſtion. Maiſter (ſ they) Moyſes made this lawe: If a man hauing maried a wyfe, departe without chyldren, that the brother of the dead ſhould marry the widowe lefte of his brother, and coupling wyth her ſhould rayſe vp iſſue to his brother departed. There were emong vs ſeuen brethren, of whom the firſte married a wyfe, and departed without children. The nexte brother married her, whō alſo died without iſſue. Lykewyſe it chaunced to the thirde, & the foweꝛth, vnto the ſeuenth, all dyed without iſſue. At laſte the wyfe dyed alſo, whiche was married to ſeuen brethren. Therfore in the reſurrecciō, whiche of all them ſhall haue her to his wife? For the cānot be a common wyfe for them all, and all married her indifferently. To this queſtion becauſe it was more of ignoraūce than of malyce, Jeſus did vouchſafe to make aunſwere. For he that erreth by ignoraunce is worthy to be taught. But they that propoſe queſtiōs of mere malice, be not worthy to be aunſwered. Ye erre, (ſ he) whiche rede the ſcriptures, but ye vnderſtande them not: and imagining nothing aboue bodily thinges which ye ſee, ye knowe not the power of god, who is more wonderfull in thinges, which be not ſeen. Here where men by courſes be borne to dye, wedlocke is vſed for propagacion and bryngyng furth of mankynde. But where nowe mortalitie ſhalbe ſwalowed vp and conſumed, and men ſhalbe ſpirituall, whiche thyng ſhall come to paſſe in the reſurrecciō, the whiche ſhall reſtore vs agayne, beyng the ſame in dede that we were, but yet chaunged after another ſorte, there ſhall no man marry, nor no woman ſhalbe married. For there ſhall nede no generacion where no death ſhall be. Further, they that pertayne to the reſurrecciō of the iuſt, lyue without matrimony lyke the aungels of God in heauen: recoꝛding nowe here and mynding to theyr power, that they ſhall come to in the reſurrecciō. For they had rather get ſoules to God, than bodyes to the worlde.

There were with vs ſeuen brethren.

¶ But as touching the reſurrecciō of the dead, haue ye not red that which was ſpoken vnto you of God, who ſaith: I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Iacob. God is not the God of dead, but of liuyng. And whan the people heard this, they were aſtonied at his doctrine. The texte.

After this, Jeſus notyng ſecretely this ſo lyche a queſtion to ſpring of a falſe perſwaſion, for that they beleued not the reſurrecciō: diſdayned not to wede this opinion alſo out of theyr myndes, teachyng them alſo that this is taken out of the bokes of Moyſes, by whoſe authoritie they appoſed Jeſus. Why haue ye an yll opinion of the reſurrecciō of the dead as though Moyſes taught it not openly, whoſe wrytinges ye reade groſſely, and nothing diligently? Haue ye not red in his bokes what god ſayth: I am the god of Abraham, and the god of Iſaac, and the god of Iacob. If they had perylhed wholy by the deathe of the bodyes, he would not ſaye that he is theyr god, but that he was their god. But yf he be theyr god, truly theyr ſoules doe lyue, and they wholy do lyue in maner by the hope of resurrection that shall be, God is lyke, and he is not God of the dead whiche nowe be not, but of the liuyng. So he taught them resurrection to be, but not to be after suche sorte, as they imagined it to bee, whan they proposed a folyche question of seuen brethren. The people when they sawe euery mannes mouthe stopped with wyse aunswers, they mercuiled at his effectuall and redy doctryne.

The texte. ¶ But whan the Phariseis had heard that he had stopped the mouth of the Sadducees, they came together, and one of them being Doctor of lawe, asked him a question, tempting him, and saying: Maister, whiche is the great commaundement in the lawe? Jesus sayd vnto him: Thou shalt loue the lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde. This is the first and great commaundemente. And the second is lyke vnto it. Thou shalt loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe. In these two commaundementes hang all the lawe and the Prophetes.

The Phariseis were not displeased that the Sadducees were put to sylence, chiefly in a matter wherin they were cleane contrary one against another. Therfore whan the Phariseis sawe them put to sylence, and rebuked also for ignoraūce of scripture, they taking harte of grace againe, gather together, and set forwarde a certayne Doctour of lawe, whiche should go vnto Jesus with a clerkly question, that eyther he myght reproue hym of ignoraunce, or els he hymselfe beare awaye the prayse of learnyng. Maister (sayd he) whiche is the chiefe commaundemente in the lawe? Jesus purposyng to shewe that they which crake of the profession of the lawe, be furthest from keping of the greatest commaundement in the lawe, which wholy flame with enuy and harred of their neyghboure, and with other vices whiche haue none affinitie with Christian charitie: and that no man loueth God, whiche is vniust to his neyghbour, aunswered: Thou shalt loue the Lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and all thy mynde: This is the chiefe and greatest commaundemente. The whiche no manne doeth perfourme and kepe, vnlesse he kepe also the seconde lyke vnto that: For this: Thou shalt loue thy neyghbour as thy selfe, doeth depende of the other. And whatsoeuer is commaunded in the whole lawe, whatsoeuer the Prophetes teache, all that is compryssed in these two commaundementes. For whosoeuer loueth God with all his hearte, will neglecte nothyng that he hath commaunded: And he that loueth his neyghboure as himselfe, he will not steale, he will not commyt aduoutry, he will not beare false witnesse, he will not desyre his neyghbours substaunce. Finally he will do nothing to an other, which he would not to be doen to himselfe. Than the Phariseye which was become nowe almoste of a tempter a disciple, sayed: Maister, thou hast spoken truely and rightly, that there is one God, and no nother but he and that he onely ought to be loued aboue all thynges, with all our power, and that we must bende all our affections towardes hym onely: and that to loue our neyghboure as our selfe, is more than all the holocaustes and sacrifices. Jesus seyng that he had aunswered wyselye, and went not forwarde to lye in warte, sayeth vnto him: thou arte not farre from the kyngdome of God. For he perceyued what was best, he lacked onely this, to folowe in affection and harte that that he vnderstode. And in the meane tyme he touched secretly the conscyence of certayne Phariseis, whiche layed deadly wayte for Jesus. And therfore whereas they demaunded onely of the chiefe commaundement, the kepyng of the whiche they falsly toke vpō them: he purposely added the seconde, concernyng the loue of their neyghboure, for as yet they ſuppoſed not that Chriſte was God, but to be theyr neyghbour, and one that had doen muche for them, they could not deny: agaynſte whome notwithſtandyng they did deuiſe that, that no man would ſhould haue come vnto hymſelfe.

Whan the Phariſeis were gathered together, Jeſus aſked them, ſaying: What thinke ye of Chriſte, whoſe ſonne is he? They ſayed vnto him. The ſonne of Dauid. He ſayed vnto them: Howe than doth Dauid in ſpirite call hym Lorde, ſaying: The Lord ſayed vnto my Lord: ſit thou on my ryghthand, till I make thine enemies thy foote ſtoole. If Dauid than call him Lord, howe is he his ſonne? And no man was able to anſwer hym any thyng, neyther durſt any man from that daye furth, aſke hym any mae queſtions. The texte.

But nowe whereas a greater company of Phariſeis were gathered together, Jeſus beyng tempted of them with ſo many queſtions, propoſed vnto them againe a queſtion, ſignifyng vnto them ſum what obſcurely and darkely that whiche he lefte to be declared afterward by his Apoſtles in tyme conuenient: that he had not onely the nature of manne whiche they ſawe, and vpon which they would the wee their crueltie, but alſo that he had the nature of God, the which ſum what they myght haue cõiectured of his dedes, vnles enuy, hatred, ambition, auarice and other vices, had blinded their myndes. Therfore he demaũdeth of them being gathered together, what they thought of Meſſias, whoſe ſõne he ſhould be, that is, of whoſe ſtocke he ſhould come. They anſwer furthwith: of Dauid. Than ſaied Jeſus: what meaneth it that Dauid in the miſticall Pſalme inſpired with the heauenly ghoſt, calleth him Lord, whereas he is his ſonne? For it is wrytten: The Lorde ſayed vnto my Lorde, ſitte on my ryghthande, vntyll I make thyne enemyes the ſtoole of thy feete. Howe agreeth it yf he be the ſonne of Dauid, that the father calleth his ſonne Lorde? And there was not one of them that couldelooce this knot, becauſe that they couldeas yet thynke nothyng of the godly nature of Jeſus. For Chriſte as he was the ſonne of Dauid, touchyng the body of man: ſo touchyng the diuyne nature, he was Lorde of all, and not of Dauid onely. And after this no manne durſt queſtion with hym when they ſawe that the bayters and ſnares whiche were layed for hym, redounded vpon theyr owne head. The texte.

The xxiii. Chapter.

Than ſpake Jeſus to the people and to his diſciples, ſaying: The Scribes and the Phariſeis ſit in Moyſes ſeate. All therfore whatſoeuer they bid you kepe, kepe and do: but do not after theire workes, for they ſay and do not. For they bynde together heauy burdens, and hard to be borne, and laye them on mennes ſhoulders, but they themſelues wyll not lyfte at them with one of theyr fyngers. And they do all theire workes to be ſeen of men. The texte.

Therfore whan Jeſus had put them ſo often to ſylence, in the preſence of the multitude, leſte their authoritie ſhould vtterly decay with the people, ouer whom they were ſette to be doctours and teachers, he declared that they ought to be hearde, but not to be followed. For although it is moſte agreable, that he that taketh vpon him the office of a teacher, ſhould get credite and authoritie to his doctrine, by vertuouſe liuyng: yet it is not expediente vtterly to deſpiſe the hollome doctryne for the naughtie lyfe of the doctour. The reuerence whiche their maners doe not deſerue, muſte be geuen vnto the authoz, whose commaundementes they recite, and preache. For the lawe of god is not pollute, thoughe it be vttered by the mouth of a naughty preacher. Truly vnto hym it is vnprofitable, but it is profitable to the taker. Therfore Jesus tourning awaye from the Pharisees, in whom he sawe no hope of better lyfe, he speaketh vnto the people, and the disciples on this maner. The Scribes & the Pharisees vtter themselues what corrupte myndes they haue, how enuiouse, how courtouse, how greedy of vayne glory they be. But yet for the authozitie of their office they must be hearde. They occupye the chayre of Moyses, whose lawe they teache. The thinges that they teache are holy: for they reache the doctryne of other and not their owne, but their lyfe is farre and wyde in distaunce from theyr doctryne. Wherfore whatsoeuer they prescribe and poynte vnto you by thauctozitie of Moyses, kepe it and do it: but beware that ye frame not your maners after theyr lyfe. If they liued as they teache, ye ought wholy to folowe them. Nowe they do not as they teache. They exacte more than the lawe of other men with great seueritie, and they pardon themselues. They be very rigozouse towarde others, and gentle to themselues. For they bynde together heauy and intolerable bundels of cõmaundementes, and laye them vpon other mennes shoulders, whiche they will not touche saue to touche with their finger. For they lode the lawe heuy enough of itselfe, with their constitucions, to get them a fame of learning and holines. And if they perfourme any thyng accordyng to the commaundement of the lawe, they do it not with their hart, but for prayse and fame of the people. They be players, and as disgised persons they playe their parte, with a counterfayte vsser of religion, to be sern of men. But no man kepeth the lawe but he that doeth as the lawemaker would, he requireth chiefly a pure and sincere mynde. But these men whatsoeuer they do, do it to haue for a vayne opinion of holynes, with the simple people.

At therfore in what soeuer thyng they bid you kepe, kepe & doe.

The texte. And they set abrode their phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garmentes, and loue the vppermoste seates at feastes, and to sit in the chiefe place in counsels, & gretinges in the market, and to be called of men Rabbi. But be ye not called Rabbi. For one is your maister, that is Christ, and all ye are brethren. And call no man your father vpõ the earth. For one is your father whiche is in heauen: neyther be ye called maisters, for one is your maister, that is Christ. He that is greatest among you, shalbe your seruaunt. But whoso exalteth himselfe shalbe brought lowe, and he that humbleth hymselfe, shalbe exalted.

For whan God (after that the commaundementes of the lawe were geuen) added: Thou shalt eye them in thy hande, and they shall not bee remoued from thyne eyes: meanyng therby, that we ought neuer to forgette the commaundementes of God, but after their rule to frame all the doinges of our life: these men neglectyng vtterly to kepe the commaundementes of God, yet they magnifie themselues among the people with a false appearaunce. They walke vp and doune bearyng about brode phylacteries, they go with brode a gorgiouse imbroderinges, and therwe furth the commaundementes of the lawe written in them, where as in their lyfe they neuer appeare. These should haue been written in theyr hartes, and expressed in theyr lyfe. So they should please the eyes of God, vnto whom onely our lyfe should play her pageaunt. But this beholder and loker on despised, they seke after vile praise of the rude multitude. And whereas it becummeth a teacher euery where to expresse noble vertue in his maners and sayinges, and also in his countenaunce, these men do nothyng els els but that that is very vayne, and also stant worthy and meté for manne. If they be called any where to supper, there they place themselues ehyldishly and ambitiously, because the moze honozable place is offered vnto them: In Synagoges and common councels, they loue the honour of the high seate. When they be in the market, they reioyce to be saluted honozably. They set vp their combes as often as they heare of the people that honozable title, Rabbi: as who saith, they only be worthy of honour, oz be only wyse: where as foz this they be least estemed with god, because they seme to themselues greatest: and in this they be most foliche, because they seme to themselues most wyse. Honor is due only to God, who only is great in dede, and to be honoured: The praise of wisedome is but onely to God, and authoritie is due only to God. If any of these thynges be in men, it is but a certayne shadowe only, yf it be compared to the greatnes of God, and it cummeth also from the bountefulnesse of God. Therfoze yf men yelde any honour vnto menne foz the gyftes of God, whiche they suppose to be in them, he to whom it is geuen ought not to chalenge it to hymselfe, but to yelde the whole vnto hym from whom he hath all, yea and that freely, yf he hath any goodnesse. But I would not that ye my disciples should be like vnto them: but rather remembring my ensample and doctrine, flee the arrogant name of wisedome, noz please not your selues yf any manne call you Rabbies, that is to saye, our maisters. Foz there is one vnto whom this name truely agreeth, and this is your common maister. But you in comparison of hym be nothyng els but felowe scholers and brethren together: among whom mutuall charitie maketh all lyke. And it is not cumly that any man prefer himselfe before another: but the contencion is farre contrary, that is to saye, that one geue honour to an other, and one with gentlenes and duetie preuente an other. Therfoze call no man maister in earth, seyng that whatsoeuer holsome doctrine ye haue, ye haue it all of God, and be bounde to hym foz it. By hym he teacheth, whosoeuer teacheth rightly. By his inspiracion he profiteth, whosoeuer truly profiteth. Noz yelde not heareafter vnto manne in yearth, the honozable name of father, sith ye haue once professed the heauenly father, vnto whom ye be bounde both foz lyfe, and foz whatsoeuer ye haue, and vpon whom ye do wholy depende. Let no manne therfoze chalenge vnto hym the honour due vnto God only, let no man geue that to man which is due to God only. To whom only all prayse, honour, and thankes, must be geuen. If any man teache well, let the wisedom of God be praised in him, which doth the we furth and communicate herselfe by him. If any man doth the parte of a father in diligence and carefulnes, let the goodnes of God be praysed in hym, which doeth prouide foz you by him. But the lozde Jesus spake not these thinges as though it were a wicked thing to call a maister by the name of maister, oz call a parent by the name of a parent: but by this communication he endeuoureth to plucke out vtterly from the mindes of his, their pharisaicall ambicion, which chalenge vnto them that, that was Gods, & requireth honour of the people foz the doctrine, which was not theirs, but Gods: as though they were the authours, and not rather ministers. Furthermoze he noted the simplicitie and flatterye of the people, whiche praysed them immoderately, as though they were more bounde to men than to God. And because he perceyued that there sprang of suche ambicion, poyson and destruccion of the congregacions, therfoze he finisheth his communicasion with this clause: he that is greatest among you, he shalbe your minister. For what he hath, he hath receyued it els where, and hath receyued it freely: and hath receyued it for this, that he should geue it to other. Therfore the greater he is by the gyftes of God, he shall not be the more arrogante, but the more carefull to bestowe them, and the more lowly and humble: leste he should lese at once by arrogācy that, that goddes liberalitie hath geuen vnto him. Let him geue all the glory vnto God the author, chalengeyng nothing vnto himselfe, but the diligence of an humble minister. He is great in dede, whiche is least in his owne conceyte. And he begynneth now to be least with God, which is great in his owne conceyte. And if a mā crake and auaunce himselfe of the free giftes of God, being spoyled of them whereof he maketh himselfe vnworthy, of the greatest, he is become the leaste. Contrarywise he that doeth submit & humble himselfe, knowlegyng and setting furth his weakenes, and knowlegyng the gyftes of God, wher by he is great, or els shewing and vttering them to the profite and commoditie of his brethren: he because he prouoketh goddes liberalitie through his modestie, the gyftes beyng increased, of great, he is made greater.

And to be called of me Rabbi.

Whoso exalteth himselfe.

The texte. Wo vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: for ye shut vp the kyngdom of heauē before men, for ye neither go in your selues neither suffer ye them that come to enter in.

After these, Jesus turnyng to the Scribes and Pharisees, inueyeth, and speaketh against theyr malice openly, and very frankly, threteyning them with the vengeaunce of God: that eyther they might repent for shame, or els might turne to better for feare of punishment: and the counterfeityng of holines set a parte, might beginne to be the seruauntes of the euangelicall godlynes. Woe be to you (saythe) ye Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, who professyng the knowlege of the lawe, and therfore in maner kepe the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen: ye do not onely not enter your selues, but ye shut the doores against them that would come in, vnto whom ye ought to open the doores: and ye resiste them that be in a redinesse of themselfe, whom yf they were slacke, ye ought to pricke forwarde. For whereas ye see that the lyght of the ghospell is nowe present, yet for your glory and for your auauntage, ye kepe the people in the shadowes of the lawe, excludyng them from the trueth.

The texte. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites. For ye deuour widowes houses, and that vnder a pretence of long prayer. Therfore shall ye be the more greuously punished.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, who vnder the colour of religion, deuour wydowes houses, whom ye deceyue with a false cloke of holynes. For ye counterfeyte long prayer openly, whereas your myndes in the meane time loke for naught els, but for a prayse of the folyshe women, whiche styll beleue that in the meane season ye talke with God.

The texte. Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, for ye wander about the sea and lande to make one proselite, and when he is become one, ye make hym two folde more the chylde of hell, than ye your selues are.

Woe be to you Scribes and Phatisees, Hipocrites, because ye walke about the landes, and seas, to intice sum one of the Gentiles to the profession of the lawe, who, whan he is brought in with hope to learne the lawe, is brought in suche case through your superstitious doctrine, and peruerse maners, that he is not only not made a pure worshipper of God, and heyre of the kyngdom of heauen: but also a more wicked Jewe then he was beyng heathen, and more in daunger of hell, than ye be. For it commeth to passe in maner, that the scho-

sers oftentymes passe theyr naughtie masters.

Woe be to you, ye blynde guides: For ye saye. Whosoeuer sweareth by the temple, it is nothyng, but whosoeuer sweareth by the gold of the temple, he is gilte. Ye fooles and blinde. For whether is greater, the golde, or the temple, that sanctifieth the golde? And whosoeuer sweareth by the aulter it is nothyng, but whosoeuer sweareth by the gyft that is vpon it, he is gilte. Ye fooles and blinde: For whether is greater, the gyft or the aulter, which sanctifieth the gyft? Whoso therfore sweareth by the aulter, sweareth by it, and by all thinges that are vpon it. And whosoeuer sweareth by the temple sweareth by it, and by him that dwelleth in it. And whoso sweareth by heauen, sweareth by the seate of God, and by hym that sitteth vpon it. The texte.

Woe be to you ye blynde guydes, whiche take vpon you to be teachers, and knowe not what ye teache, swarming from the scope and ende of the lawe: and wrestling all thing to no other ende, but to your owne lucre. For ye saye, whosoeuer sweareth by the temple of the lorde, is not bounde by his othe: but whoso sweareth by the golde, that is in the temple, he is bounde by his othe, leste estemyng, through a corrupt iudgemēt, those thinges that be holy of themselfe, than those thinges that make for your auaryce. Or els ye folysshe and blynde, answere me: whiche is holyer the golde that doeth garnysshe the temple, and is turned to your lucre, and into matter of your excesse and riote, or the temple itselfe? whose holynes causeth that the golde being prophane in other places, is there counted holy. Also ye saye: he that sweareth by the aulter is not bound by religion: but he that sweareth by the gyft that is sette vpon the aulter, is bound by his othe. O blynde teachers, for whether ought more to be estemed the gyft, or the aulter whiche sanctifieth the gyft? For the gyft is holy by no nother meanes, but because it is set vpō the holy aulter. And here through dampnable iudgemente, ye will haue the gyftes estemed holyer than the aulter, because they turne to your profite, whereas the temple and the aulter be buylte to the worshyp and glory of God, whiche ye lytle regarde. With these your inuentions what els do ye, but subuerte the lawe of God, whiche forbiddeth all periury? For lyke as by a glosse ye subuerte the commaundement of the honoryng of father and mother: so here ye teache periury. It were high perfeccion vtterly not to sweare, but yet whosoeuer sweareth by any thyng, whiche is estemed holy with him to whom he sweareth, he is periured, vnlesse that he doth performe his othe. Whosoeuer sweareth by the aulter, sweareth also by the thinges that be on the aulter. So whosoeuer sweareth by the temple, sweareth also by God, who dwelleth in the temple. Whosoeuer sweareth by heauen, sweareth by the seate of God, and so it followeth that he sweareth by hym that sitteth in it: whosoeuer sweareth by an other mannes head, sweareth by a thyng consecrate vnto God, wherof he that sweareth hath no power. The texte.

Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye tythe mynte, and anyse, and cummyn, and haue left the weyghtier matters of the lawe: Iudgement, mercy, and faith. These thinges ye ought to haue done, but not to leaue the other vndone. Ye blinde guides whiche strayne out a gnat, and swallowe a camell.

Woe be to you Scrybes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, whiche do exacte the leste thynges that pertayne vnto your gayne, whiche make but lytle vnto true godlynes: ye be so superstitious in requiring of tythes, that ye will gather your tythes of herbes, of moste vyle pryce in estimacion: as of Mynte, Rue, Anyse, and Cummyne: and in the meane season, ye sette lytle by those thynges that be of moste value, and whereupon dependeth true iustice, that is to say, iudgement, mercy, and faith: iudgement, that ye do iniury to no man:

mercy, that ye helpe the oppressed and needy: Faith, that ye deceive no man with periury. These thinges the lawe so requireth, that it would haue them chiefly regarded, where as for the other thynges the lawe added them, as of lesse value, because of the other. Therfore these thinges suche of all ought to be regarded earnestly, seyth it was thought good that these small thynges should not be omitted. If ye obserued & kept all thinges to the vttermost, it might appeare a religion, no we for as muche as ye let passe these thinges, without which there is no righteousnesse, and care for those thinges which be light and litle worthe, it is hypocrisie, not religion, yea the destruccion of religion. For before the tenthes were ordeyned, yer bytightnes, well doyng, and fayth were required, and perrayned vnto the prayse of righteousenesse. O blynd guydes, whiche dyng of an aukwarde religion, do streyne out a gnat and swalowe vp a camell, superstitious in a litle thyng, and negligent in a great thyng.

The texte. Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye make cleane the vtter parte of the cup and platter: but within they are full of bryberie and excesse. Thou blynde Pharisey, make cleane first that which is within the cup and platter, that the out sydes of them also may be cleane.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, because ye be carefull for cleanlynes disorderly. For ye clense your cuppes, dishes, and candelsticks, with often washinges, which because they be outwarde thinges, do not defile the mynde of man: and that that is within, ye leaue vnwashed, that is to say, your mynde. For it defileth not the mynd of man, yf he drynke of an vnwashed cuppe, but if he drynke wine gotten with fraude: yf he drynke wine for excesse and not for necessitie: likewyse ye washe the body, and the thinges whiche appertayne vnto the body: but ye purge not the minde vncleane and defiled with rauine, filthy lustes, and with other very lythy thinges. Thou Pharisey, I speake to the, I say, thou blinde Pharisey, which by thy title and religion doest boast thy selfe to be a maister ouer the people: Thou blynde, fyrst procure for this whiche onely pertayneth vnto the matter: if thou fansy true cleanes, clense first that which is within, & than yf thou thynke good, clense the vtter thinges, the body, the apparell, the portes, the cuppes, the seates, and the other stuffe: or els to the we furth cleanesse in these thynges, and to neglecte those whiche onely make vs cleane or vncleane before God, is not cleanes, but Hipocrisie, and the destruccion of true cleanes. For with these your constitucions ye corrupte the myndes of the symple, that they trusting vpon this cleanes, despyse those thynges, whiche onely ought to be regarded

The texte. ¶ Woe vnto you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites: For ye are like to painted sepulchres, which appeare beautifull outwarde, but within are full of dead mennes bones, and all filthines. So ye also outwardly appeare righteous vnto men, but within ye are full of dissimulacion and iniquitie.

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees, Hipocrites, which be so farre from true cleanes, that ye be more lyke vnto whyted graues, and a fayre couering the wyng outwardly a counterfeyted cleanes, where as inwardly they be full of bones of dead karkases, and all filthynesse. Euen so ye with long prayers, brode Philacteries, large gardes, palenes and fasting, and lyke coulours and counterfeytinges, seme outwardly religiouse and perfect, where as your minde is full of Hipocrisye on euery syde, berayed with all kynde of vice.

The texte. Woe be vnto you Scribes and Pharisees: for ye builde the tumbes of the Prophetes, and and garnishe the sepulchres of the righteous, and say: If we had been in the dayes of our fathers, we would not have been felowes with them in the bloud of the prophetes. And so ye be witnesses vnto your selues, that ye are the children of them which killed the prophetes. Fulfill ye also the measure of your fathers. Ye serpentes, ye generacion of vipers, howe will ye escape the damnacion of hell?

Woe be to you Scribes and Pharisees hipocrites, because through false boasting of holines, ye build vp honorably the tumbes of the Prophetes, and garnishe the graues of the iust men, whom your forefathers hath slayne: and making as though ye fauoured the vertue of them that were slaine, and detest the cruelnes of them of whom they were slayne, ye saye: if we had liued in the tyme of our elders, we would not haue consented to the death of innocentes, whereas nowe ye goe about more cruell thynges agaynst hym that excelleth the Prophetes: and in tyme to come, ye will endeuour no lesse agaynst them, whiche shall open you the waye of euerlasting healthe. For as muche as ye be of this minde, truely ye declare that ye be the verye naturall children of them which killed the Prophetes, of whom they were monished frankly and freely: and ye would haue been no better than they, yf it had chaunced you to lyue in their time. Go to, be like vnto your elders: & what is lacking to their extreme cruelte, fulfill ye the same that nothyng may wante. They killed the Prophetes, ye kyll him, whom ỹ Prophetes prophecied. O serpentes, the offspring of vipers, o murtherers, the children of murtherers. Sith our malice is so inuincible, sith ye can be amended by no benefites, by no miracles, by no gentle nor rough communicacion, by no promises nor threatninges: in case ye maye escape in the meane season the iudgement of men, howe will ye escape the iudgement of hell? The which ye heape the more vpō you, because ye be not frayed from the desire of killyng, by the wicked example of your elders. So many Prophetes were sent, of whom, ye haue slayne many. At last I came my selfe, agaynst whom, ye know what ye haue endeuored.

Wherefore behold I sende vnto you Prophetes and wysemen, and Scribes: and sum of them ye shall kill and crucifie, & sum of them ye shall scourge in your Synagoges, and persecute them from citie to citie: that vpon you maye come all the righteouse bloud, whiche hath been shed vpon the yearth: from the bloud of righteouse Abell, vnto the bloud of Zacharie the sonne of Barachias, whom ye slewe betweene the temple and the aulter. Verely I saye vnto you: all these thynges shall come vpon this generacion. The texte.

And I not contente with this (that it maye be the more euidente vnto all men, that ye be moste worthy moste cruell condemnacion) behold I will sende againe vnto you other Prophetes, wysemen, and Scribes, which with great gentilnes, maye prouoke you from this cruelte vnto a better mynde: and the murder of the former tymes shall not be layed vnto your charge, yf ye doe penaunce at their preaching. But ye will not fauour them, but some of them ye will kill with the sworde, sum ye will beate downe with stones, sum ye will crucifie, sum ye will whippe in your Synagoges: and will receiue them in no case, insomuch that ye will persecute them frō citie to citie, vntill ye compell the through your vncurable malice, to go to the Gentiles. With the which thyng ye shall so prouoke the yre of God agaynst you, that whatsoeuer manslaughter hath been committed of your elders, from the firste murther where Cain killed his brother Abel, vnto the slaughter of Zachary the sōne of Barachias, whom ye killed betweene the temple and the aulter, beeyng nothyng afrayed from murder, by religion of the place, the punishement of all them beeyng put of and differed, ſhalbe powred vpon your head, who haue not onely folowed, but alſo farre paſſed the crueltie of all your forefathers. Therfore your miſery ſhal be ſo notable, that the whole worlde ſhal vnderſtand what great cruelnes this nacion hath vſed againſt euery good man: and howe ſtiffe their rebellion hath been agaynſt God, ſufferyng them ſo long with ſuche gentilnes, and prouokyng them ſo often with ſuche benefites vnto better thinges.

The texte. O Hieruſalem, Hieruſalem, thou that killeſt the Prophetes, and ſtonest them which are ſent vnto ther: how often would I haue gathered thy children together, euen as the henne gathereth her chickens vnder hir winges, and ye would not? Beholde your houſe is lefte vnto you deſolate. For I ſaye vnto you: Ye ſhall not ſee me hence forth tyll that ye ſay, bleſſed is he that cummeth in the name of the lorde.

After that theſe thynges were ſpoken, the moſte meke Lorde Jeſus, who of his goodnes would no maner wyſe perythe, conſideryng the miſerable deſtruccion nowe at hand of the citie of Hieruſalem, (for all thinges were preſent vnto his eyes) and therewith alſo theyr inuincible ſtubbernes wherwith they ſhould turne goddes gentilnes into fury and rage, doeth bewayle lamentably the deſtruccion of the nacion of the Jewes, geuyng an inckling of his ſeconde cumming: when at laſt the Jewes ſhall repent them ouer late, and acknowlege Chriſt, whom now they deny: where as it were more for theyr profite, nowe to confeſſe theyr ſauiour ſent them from God, and to ſyng the ſame hartely vnto him, whiche they diſdayne that the children ſhould ſyng: Bleſſed be he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde. Hieruſalem (ſay he) Hieruſalem, whiche killeſt the Prophetes, and ſtoneſt to death them that be ſent vnto thee, howe often haue I trauayled to gather thy children together lyke as the carefull henne fearing her chickens doth clocke them together, and nowythe thy vnder her wynges, and thou wouldeſt not? Nothyng is let paſſe of my behalfe, wherby thou mighteſt be ſaued, but contrary wyſe thou haſte done what thou canſt to bryng deſtruccion to thee, and to exclude ſaluacion from thee. But to whom free will is once geuen, he cannot be ſaued agaynſt his wyll. Your wyll ought to be agreable vnto my wyll. Behold a miſerable calamitie is ouer your heades. Your dwelling place ſhall be lefte to you deſerte. Ye ſhall be left to your blyndnes, vntyll that beyng once taught with ſo great miſeries, ye fall to repentaunce. For I ſaye vnto you: hereafter ye ſhall not ſee me vntyll the time come, wherin ye beholding me with the eyes of your fayth, ſhall ſay: bleſſed be he that cummeth in the name of the lorde, whom nowe ye falſely accuſe, that he cummeth in the name of Beelzebub.

ℭ The. xxiiii. Chapter.

The texte. And Jeſus went out and departed from the temple: and his diſciples came to him for to ſhewe hym the buildinges of the temple. Jeſus ſayed vnto them: See ye not all theſe thinges? Verely I ſay vnto you: There ſhall not be here left one ſtone vpon another, that ſhall not be deſtroyed.

But Jeſus to repreſente with a certeyne ſygne and token that the temple and all the religion of the Jewes lawe ſhould ſhortly be aboliſhed, departing out of the churche began to go awaie. And the diſciples becauſe they heard ſum mencion of deſtruccio, ſtedy ſhewe their lorde the hougenes of the temple, being ſuche a meruelous piece of worke, that it ſemed pitie it ſhould be deſtroied, and further so hymely buylte, that it semed not possible to be hurled downe. But Jesus aunswered: see ye (q he) all these? This be assured of, there is none of all these, so strong, so goodly, or so holy, which shall not be thrown downe, and so hurled in peices, that one stone shall not stande on an other.

¶ And as he sate upon mount Olivete, his disciples came unto him secretly, saying: tell us when shall these thinges be: and what shalbe the token of thy cumming, and of the ende of the worlde? And Jesus aunswered, and sayed unto them: take hede that no man deceive you. For many shall come in my name saying, I am Christe: and shall deceyve many. Ye shall heare of warres, and tidinges of warres, be not troubled. For all must come to passe, but the ende is not yet. For men shall rise against nacion, and realme against realme: and there shall be pestilence and hunger, and yearthquakes in all places. All these are the beginnings of sorowes. The texte.

These thinges spoken, Jesus went into the mount of Olives. Here, as he sate, hauing the temple in his sight, fower of his disciples whome he called first of all, Peter, James, John, & Andrew, went unto him severally to knowe more certainly of the time whan suche great miseries should fall, for they supposed that by anby after the destruction of the citie of Hierusalem, and the hurlyng downe of the temple, Christe would come agayne in his majestie. But Christe to make them the more vigilante and ware, so tempereth his communication, that he willeth not that they should know the tyme of the latter cummyng, and yet thorough the rehersyng of miseries, he maketh them carefull, and in a redines against the cumming of miseries. The disciples therfore say: Tell us when these thinges whiche thou speakest of, shall come to passe: and by what signe and token we maye knowe thy cummyng and the ende of this worlde is at hande. But Jesus not aunswering to that whiche they demaunded: turneth rather to those thynges whiche should prepare their myndes to continuall watche in the ghospell, I shall come in dede (q he,) but beware lest any man making a lye as touchyng my cumming, deceyue you. For many shal come, which shall take upon them my name, and say that they be Christe, and shall fynde some to deceyue, folishe and lyght of beleefe. The tumult and hurlyburly of all thynges shall shewe a certayne apperaunce, that the ende of the worlde is at hande. For ye shall heare of warres, and of sundrye rumours of warres more sore and cruell (as it is wonte to be) than the thinges theyr selfe. Nacio shall arise against nacion, and realme against realme. &c.

But let not these thinges by any discourage your myndes, that ye should thinke the latter time is nowe at hande. This troublesome worlde must nedes arise but the ende of illes shall not be furthwith. This storme shall spede farder abrode. For not onely Hierusalem shall be destroyed, but the whole world shall buckell together with warres and slaughters. Nacion shall rise against nacion, and kyngdom shall skirmishe with kyngdom, and the greatest parte of mischefe and miserie, men shall suffer of men. Furthermore, God taking vengeaunce, shall put unto his scourges, pestilence, famine, and in diuerse places earthquakes. And these thinges be yet no certayne argumente of the worldes ende, but only signes and tokens of the ill and misery, and as it were a byrding of that last and greatest storme wherwith the worlde shall perysshe.

¶ Then shall they put you to trouble and shall kyll you, and ye shall be hated of all nacions for my names sake. And than shall many be offended, and shall betrap one another, and hate one another. And many false prophetes shall arise, and deceyue many, and iniquite shall haue the vpper hande, and the loue of many shalbe colde. But he that endureth to the ende, the same shalbe safe. And this ghospell of the kyngdome shalbe preached in all the worlde for a witnesse to all nacions, and than the ende shall come. The texte.

And

And ye shal be hated of all nations for my names sake. &c.

And ye in the meane season shall not be free from suche maner of illes and miseries. For in this tumulte & hurly burly of thynges, men shall plucke you into diuerse afflictions, and finally kyll you: and in the meane season ye shall be hated not onely of the Jewes, but of all the Gentiles, not for your ill dedes, but because ye professe my name. In the meane time many being offended and greued with aduersities, and ouercummed with punishmentes, shall swarue from the professing of my name, and one shall betraye an other, one kinesman shall betraye an other, one frende an other, & whom nature hath coupled with the bandes of charitie, they shall hate eche other. There shall be also another kynde of ill more greuouse and intollerable. There shall arise false Prophetes and false teachers, who counterfeiting to preach my ghospell, shall see to and prouide for their owne glory, their owne lucre, and their owne belly: and in stede of my spirite they shall inspire their owne disciples with the spirite of Sathan, and in the stede of the kyngdome of heauen, they shall teache the kingdome of this worlde. They whom punishmentes and tormentes could not ouercome, shall be caught in the snares of these menne. For there is not a more deadly enemy than a familiar and a fayned frende. In these mischifes and miseries a man shall not lose for muche comfort of his brothers and frendes. For the multitude of sinnes beyng so great, the charitie of many shall ware colde. But yet as for you there is no perill, so that ye perseuer and continue vnto the ende with a constant and a haliant courage. No greatnes of aduersitie, can destroy any man, but him that lacketh the eyght mynde. And I wyll not suffer you to perysshe, nor the ghospell to be oppressed. Nay, by these tumultes and troubles, the strength of the ghospell shall encrease more and more: and the storme of ylles shall be able to doe no nother thyng against you, but to make your godlynes to be the better tried, and the more to appeare. For the ende of the worlde shall not come before that this ghospell of the kyngdome of heauen, be preached throughout all the kyngdomes of the worlde, and hath come to all nacions, lest they that would not obey, myght pretende ignorauncr.

When this shall be doen, than shall come the ende of the worlde.

The texte. When ye therfore shall see the abhominacion of desolacion, that was spoken of by Daniell the Prophete, standing in the holy place, whoso readeth it, let him understande.

Wherof if ye seke a token, this is it. When ye shall see the abhominable Idoll whiche Daniell in tymes past prophecied vnto you, saying: and in the middes of the weeke, the sacrifice & offeryng shall be taken awaie: and the abhomination of desolations shall be in the temple vnto the ende of the worlde: when ye shall see (I saye) this abhominable Idoll set in the temple, that is, in the towre of holynes: he that readeth the prophecie of the Prophete, let him vnderstand. This woorde is mistical, and requireth a spirituall reader.

The texte. Than let them that be in Jewry flee vnto the mountaynes, and let not hym whiche is in the house toppe come downe to take any thyng out of his house. And let not hym that is in the fielde, returne backe to fetche his clothes.

Therfore when this storme shalbe at hand, they that be in the cities of Jewry let them forsake the cities, and flee into the mountaynes: and they that be in the toppes of the houses let them leape downe, & not come downe to take any thyng away with them, out of their houses: & they that be found in the fielde at that tyme, let them not runne backe to theyr house to fetche theyr apparell.

For

For than there ſhall be no leyſure to prouyde for theyr goodes, for it is a great matter yf they can ſaue theyr lyfe with ſpedy flyght. For thother thinges may be recouered, but the lyfe once loſte, cannot be reſtored.

¶ Woe ſhalbe in thoſe dayes to them that are with childe, and to them that geue ſucke. The texte.
But pray ye that your flyght be not in the wynter, or on the Sabboth day. For than there ſhalbe great tribulation, ſuche as hath not been from the begynnyng of the worlde vntyll this time, nor ſhalbe. And except thoſe dayes ſhould be ſhortened, there ſhould haue been no fleſhe ſaued: but for the electes ſake, thoſe dayes ſhalbe ſhortened.

Therfore women with childe, and women that geue ſucke ſhalbe in an yll caſe in thoſe dayes. For they that be great cannot caſte of the burden of theyr belly to flee away ſpedely: nor they that geue ſucke cannot caſte of theyr children, whom they loue more tenderly than themſelues, lyke as they doe caſte of money or apparell. But as for you, who ſhall not be lette neyther with houſe, neyther with poſſeſſions, nor with children, ye muſt onely pray that it chaunce not ſo, that ye be compelled to flee in the wynter, or on the Sabboth day. For ye muſt flee ſpedely and farre. But the wynter by the reaſon of roughnes and ſhortnes of dayes, is not commodiouſe for them that iourney, & on the Sabboth day the religion of your lawe letteth you, that ye cannot flee farre. For at that time, there ſhalbe ſo ſore and behement affliction, as was neuer ſynce the worlde was made vnto this daye, and herafter neuer ſhalbe. And yf the calamitie ſhould be ſo continuall as it is behemente, no man ſhould be lefte alyue. Theyr malyce did deſtroye bytter deſtruction, but for the electe (becauſe they neuer ſo fewe) thoſe dayes ſhalbe ſhortened.

¶ Than yf any man ſaye vnto you: Lo here is Chriſte or there, beleue it not. For there ſhall aryſe falſe Chriſtes and falſe prophetes, and ſhall ſhewe great ſignes and wonders inſomuche that yf it were poſſible) the very electe ſhould be brought into errour. Beholde I haue ſolde you before. Wherfore yf they ſay vnto you: loe, he is in the deſerte, goe not ye forth: Beholde he is in the ſecrete places, beleue it not. For as the lyghtnyng cummeth out of the Eaſt, and appeareth vnto the weſt, ſo ſhall the cumminge of the ſonne of man be. For where ſoeuer the dead carcas ſhall be, thyther wyll alſo the Egles be gathered together. The texte.

In this confuſion and hurly burly of thinges, whan my cumming ſhall be loked for, men muſt take diligent hede, that they be not decey ued throughe the craffte of deceyuers. For there ſhall ryſe many falſe Chriſtes, whiche ſhall boaſte themſelues to be Chriſte, and be not: but be rather myne aduerſaries: whiche alſo ſhall ſaye that they be Prophetes, and be not, but rather be the teachers of errours. They ſhall not be only furniſhed with craftes, and in falſe cloke of holynes, but alſo they ſhall counterfeyte my power with wonders, and magicall mercualles: and they ſhall take vpon them my perſon with ſo many marueylouſe iugelynges, that the electe alſo (yf it were poſſible) ſhoulde be brought into errour. Ye therfore being monished beware, for I haue told you before to the intent ye ſhould beware. Than if they ſay Chriſte is in the deſerte, goe not out: loe, he is in the inner parlers, goe not in: loe, he is here or there, beleue it not. The ſeconde cuming ſhall not be after ſuch ſorte, as ye erſtes, that is to ſay, ſofte, milde, and humble, but ſodayne & compaſſing the whole worlde with the ſodayne light of maieſtie. For lyke as the lightnyng ſhyning furth gathereth ſodaynely from the Eaſt to the weſt: ſo ſhall be the cumminyng of the ſonne of man. And ye nede not to feare, that he ſhall not be with mein ſuche a confuſion and hurly burly of thinges. Wherſoeuer the body ſhalbe, thyther ſhal the Egles flocke and gather. The head ſhall not lacke his membres.

Immediately

The terte. ¶ Immediatly after the tribulacion of those dayes, the sonne shalbe derkened, and the moone shall not geue her light, and the sterres shall fall frō heauen, and the powers of heauen shalbe moued. And then shall appere in heauen the token of the sonne of man, and then shall all the kynredres of the yearth mourne, and shall see the sonne of man cummyng in the cloudes of heauen with great power and glory. And he shal sende his angels with a great voyce of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his chosen frō the fower wyndes, from the highest parte of heauen vnto the endes of them.

The heauenly bodyes also shall feele the greatnes of this calamitie. For both the sonne shall be darkened, and the sonne beeyng darkened whereof the moone boroweth her lyght, the moone shall thewe no lyght. The starres shall fall from heauen, and the powers of heauen shall shake, beeyng in daunger of fallyng. Than amōg the great and thycke darkenesse, the signe of the sonne of man shall shyne from heauen, the signe I saye, wherby he ouercame Sathan, and consumed all his tyrannye: the signe, wherby Sathan craked in payne that he had the hygher hande.

The which once seen, the nations of the whole worlde shall strike their brestes when the Iewes shall see whom they haue offended, when the Gentyles shall see the maiestie of the crosse, whiche they laughed to skorne. For they shall see the sonne of man, whom they nowe despise, humble & simple, cummyng on hygh in the cloudes of the ayer with a great army of aungels, with a wonderfull maiestie and glory. Than he shall sende furthe his aungels, to gather together with a sounding trumpe, all his elect from the fower wyndes, from the high toppe of heauen to the vttermoste coaste of thesame.

The terte. Learne a similitude of the figgetree. When his boughes be yet tendre, and the leaues sprong out, ye knowe that Summer is nigh. So lyke wyse ye when ye shall see all these thynges, be ye sure that it is nere euen at the dores. Verely I saye vnto you: this generacion shall not passe, vntyll all these thinges be doen. Heauen and yearth shall passe, but my woorde shall not passe. But of that day and houre no man knoweth, no not the aungels of heauen, but my father onely.

But at what tyme these thynges shall come to passe, it is not in me exactly to determine. But yet of those aduertisyes whiche I haue recited, as of certayne preambles and tokens before, ye maye gesse that the tyme is not far of. Lyke as the figgetree doth declare before by certayne tokens that Summer is at hande, as whan at the blowyng of the westerne wynde the boughes begyn to wexe tender, and the buddes spryng furth, & the leaues desire to spryde abrode: so ye also whan ye shall see all these thynges whiche I haue spoken of, knowe ye well that the cummyng of the sonne of God is at hande. I assure you, this generacion shall not passe, but that all thynges whiche be spoken before, shall come to passe. Heauen and yearth shall perishe rather than my woorde shalbe haune. Therfore it is inough for you to knowe the signes whiche do precede and shewe the daye of my cummyng, lest it come vpon you vnwares. But it is not your parte to searche out exactly the daye or houre whan the sonne of man shall come, forasmuche as the knowledge of these thynges is not geuen to the aungels of heauen, no the sonne of man knoweth them not. The father hath reserued this vnto hymselfe alone. And so it is expedience for you, to the entente ye map be alwaye in a redines.

The terte. ¶ But as the dayes of Noe were, so shall also the cummyng of the sonne of manne be. For as in the dayes that went before the flud, they did eate and drynke, marry, and were maryed, vntyll the daye that Noe entred into the ship, and knewe not tyll the flud came, and toke them all away: so shall also the cumming of the sonne of man be. Than shall two be in the fielde, the one taken, & other refused. Two women shalbe grynding at the mil, the one receiued, the other refused. Two in a bed, the one shalbe receiued, & the other refused.

That

That day shall cum sodaynly, and vnwares vnto others. Lyke as in the tyme of Noe, when the fludde was tolde them certayne yeares before, yet they thinkyng that it should not cum to passe, dyd eate and dyncke, and married furthe theyr doughters, and marryed wyues vntill the last day in the whyche Noe entred into the arcke, and beleued not that the fludde should cum to passe, vntill they sawe it nowe at hande: wherewyth all they were destroyed, who by example of Noe, would not prepare themselues agaynst that day. Lyke as than a fewe that were taken into the arcke were preserued, the other whyche were lefte without, perysshed: euen so at that tyme when the sonne of manne shal cum, they that shall perysshe, shall sodainly be deuided from them that shall be saued. There shallbe two labouring in one field, fellowes in worke & wages, of whom the one shall be taken, and the other shall be forsaken. There shall be two grynding in one mylle, whereof the one shalbe taken, the other shalbe forsaken. Yea and of two that lye in one bed, the one shalbee taken, the other shalbee forsaken. For it is not the woorke, or the place, or the manner of lyfe, but the affection and good desyre, shal make man blessed.

Watche therefore, for ye knowe not what houre your Lorde wyll cum. Of thys yet be sure, that if the good man of the house knewe what houre the theefe would cum, he would surely watche, and not suffer hys house to be broken vp. Therefore, be ye also ready, for in suche an houre as ye thynke not, wyl the sonne of man cum. The texte

Wherefore seing that these thynges vndoubtedly shal cum to passe, and it cannot certainly be knowen vpon what daye they shal cum: watche and watche continually, leste that daie cum vpon you vnwares and vnprepared. If menne watche that theyr money perysshe not, muche more oughte you to watche that your soule perishe not. For what householder is so negligent whych yf he knew that the theefe would breake into hys house in the nyght season would sleepe all nyght, and suffer hys house to be broken downe? Therefore ye muste wake all your lyfe, because ye be certayne that the daye wyl cum, when ye looke not for it. For so ye must liue, that whansoeuer the day dothe cum, it may finde you doing your duty, that furthwyth ye may be receiued vnto your rewarde.

Who is a faythful and a wyse seruaunt, whome hys lorde hath made ruler ouer hys houshold, to geue them meate in season? Blessed is that seruaunt, whome his lorde (when he cummeth) shall fynde so doing: Verely I saye vnto you, that he shall make him ruler ouer all his goodes. But and yf that euil seruaunt saye in his hert, my lord wyll be long a cummyng, (and so begyn to smyte his felowes, yea, and to eate and dyncke with the dronken) the same seruauntes Lorde shal cum in a daye, whan he lokeyth not for him, and in an houre that he is not ware of, and shal hewe him in pieces, and geue hym hys porcion with hypocrites: there shall be wepping and gnashyng of teeth. The texte

Wyll not a wyse and a faythfull seruaunt do the same, whome his maister going farre from home, hathe made ruler ouer hys familie, to geue them meate in due season? The maister doth not poynte hym when he wyl retourne home, leste he shoulde bee slacke in hys office: but whansoeuer the mayster shall returne, shal not the seruaunt be happy yf hys maister finde him doing his duetye. Certaynely I saye vnto you, that the maister hauing a triall of his trustinesse, will bee bolde to truste hym with greater thynges, and wyll make hym ruler ouer all hys goodes. Contrary wise yf the ill and vnfaithfull seruaunt wil saye in hys harte: my mayster is longe awaye, and perchaunce he wyll neuer returne: and vpon this hope begynneth to beate hys felowe seruauntes, and neglecting the examplye, eateth and dryncketh with dronckardes, howe vnhappy shall he be, when hys mayster shal cum at the daye when he loketh not for hym, and the houre when he thought that he would not returne. For he shal not onely set hym beside hys office, but he will also cut him a sonder in the myddest, and ioyne hys parte with the Hipocrytes, which hath the title and name of the office of the ghospel, where as in their doinges, they be contrayre to the ghospell. And there for hys sensuall pleasures of wrongshaped swetenesse, wherewith beyng inebriate and dronken he had not awayted for the cummyng of hys mayster, he shall be punished with intollerable torment: his laughyng shalbe turned into weppyng, and hys songes into gnashyng of teethe.

¶ The. xxv. Chapter.

The texte. Than shall the kyngdome of heauen be like vnto ten virgins, whiche takyng their lampes, wente furthe to meete the spouse. But fyue of them were foolyshe, and fyue were wyse. They that were foolyshe, takynge their lampes, tooke no oyle with them, but the wyse tooke oyle with them in their vessels with the lampes. Whyle the spouse tarved, they all slumbered and slepte. And at midnight there was a cry made: Beholde the spouse cummeth go forth to meete hym. Than all the virgins arose, and prepared their lampes. And the foolishe sayed vnto the wyse: geue vs of your oyle, for our lampes are out. But the wyse answered, saying: Not so, lest there be not ynoughe for vs and you, but goe ye rather to the sellers, and by your selues. And whyle they wente to bye, the bridegrome came, and they that were ready went in with hym, to the marriage, and the doore was shutte. Afterwarde cam the other virgins, saying: Lorde lorde open vnto vs. But he answered saying: Verely I saye vnto you: I knowe you not. Watche therfore, for ye knowe not the day nor the houre, in the whiche the sonne of man shal cum.

And Jesus to put in the myndes of hys disciples surely, that they shoulde not slacke or sleepe in thys life, but that through the continuall seruyce of godlinesse and duties towarde their neyghboure, they shoulde get and prepare them thynges for the waye to euerlastyng lyfe: for in the resurrection, we shoulde seke it to late, vnlesse we shoulde prepare in tyme) he sette furthe a parable of tenne virgins, who takyng their lampes, wente to meete the spouse. But of these, fyue were fooles, whych prouided them not of oyle agaynst the cummyng of the bridegrome, because they thought he wouldе not cumme so lordenly, but that they myghte haue had space to gette them oyle sumwhere. But the wyse virgins knowyng that the tyme was vncertayne whan their spouse shoulde cum, lest they myght bee found vnredy, carped out with them in their vesselles, oyle for their lampes, whereby they myght refreshe the lampes as they began to fayle. Therefore when the spouse differred hys cumming longe: all the virgines beganne to nappe, and at length fel a slepe. In the dead night sodainly rose a clamour and a noyse emong the seruauntes callyng them oute to meete the spouse: beholde the bridegrome is at hande, goe furthe and meete hym. Than al the virgines wakyng from slepe prepared their lampes. But the fooles when they sawe they muste departe sodainely at middenight, and hadde no oyle, their lampes nowe faylyng of lyght, they desyred the wyse virgines to geue them parte of their oyle. But they made answere: we feare that we haue not inough both for vs and you. Go ye rather to the oyle sellers and by of them.

And

And in the meane tyme as they went to bye, the bydegrome came and they that were ready, entred in with him to the mariage, and furthwith the gate was shut. At last come the foolysshe virgins also, and knocke at the gate, and saye. Lorde, lorde, open the gate for vs. Unto whome the bydegrome made answere: truely I knowe you not. Wherfore after the example of the wyse virgyns, and of the faythfull seruaunt, and the politike householder, watche ye, and prepare in time the store of good workes, because ye knowe not the daye, nor the houre of hys cummyng. and when he shall sodenly appeare, there shalbe nowe no longer time of well doyng: but every manne shall haue rewarde accordyng as he hath done before.

The texte

Likewise a certaine man taking his iourney into a straung countrey, called his seruauntes and deliuered vnto them hys goodes: and vnto one he gaue fyue talentes, and to another two, and to another one, accordyng to hys habilitie, and streyght way departed. And he that had receiued fyue talentes, went and occupyed wyth the same, and gayned other fiue talentes. Likewise also he that had receyued two, gayned other two. But he that had receyued one, went and digged in the yearth, and hyd his lordes moneye.

Jesus added also another parable, stirryng hys disciples to the continuall desyre of good woorkes, that they shoulde not suffer the doctrine and gyftes that he gaue them, to bee barren and vnfruitfull through theyr negligence, but through theyr diligence and carefulnesse, shoulde turne them to the profite of theyr neyghboure, and so make themselues mete for greater giftes, because they hadde bestowed that thyng which they hadde receyued after theyr measure and capacitie, for theyr maisters aduauntage, who deliteth to be enriched with suche gayne. I certayne man (ye he) goyng farre from home, called his seruauntes, and deliuered them hys goodes, not to spende them and laughe them oute for their owne pleasure, but to gette sum bauntage therof to theyr maister, of whome they had receyued the stocke. And to one he gaue one talente, vnto another two, agayne to another fyue, as he thought euery man meete. Thys done, furthwith he toke hys iourney: Wherfore that hadde fyue talentes committed vnto hym, ceased not, but wente furthwith and lente furthe the moneye that he had taken, to vsurye, so often that at laste by vsurye he gayned almuche as hys stocke came to, and of fyue talentes he made tenne. In lyke maner he that had two talentes committed vnto hym, for occupied them, that by vsurye, he made his gaine as good as his stocke. Further he that had one talente deliuered him, went hys wayes for flogilsshenes, and hyd the talente, that he had receyued, in the grounde, thynkyng it ynoughe, yf he restored agayne the stocke to his maister.

The texte.

After a long season, the lorde of those seruauntes came and reckened with them. And he that had receiued fiue talentes came, and brought other fyue talentes, saying: Lorde thou deliueredst vnto me fyue talentes: Behold I haue gained with them fyue talentes mo. His lorde sayed vnto hym: O good and faythfull seruaunt, thou haste been faithfull ouer few thynges, I wyll make the ruler ouer many thynges. Enter thou into the ioye of thy lorde. He also that had receyued two talentes, came and sayed: Lord thou deliueredst vnto me two talentes: Lo I haue wonne two other talentes with them. His lord sayed vnto him: O good and faythfull seruaunt, thou haste been faithfull ouer fewe thynges, enter into the ioye of thy lorde.

Therfore after long iourneying, the maister returned home and required accoumpte of hys seruauntes, of that he had deliuered them, and of that, that they had layed out. Than came furth he whiche had receiued fyue talentes, and brought other fyue whiche he had gayned by vsurye, makyng his accoumpt after this sorte: Ye gaue me a stocke of fyue talentes, lo, I haue gayned as muche more to them. The maiſter praiſyng the diligence of hys ſeruaunte, ſaieth: O good and truſty ſeruaunt: becauſe I haue founde the truſty in a litle money, I wyll truſte the with mo thynges: enter into the ioye of thy maiſter. After him came he alſo vnto whome the maiſter had committed two talentes, and beyng commaunded to make his accoumpt, ſayethe: ſyr ye committed vnto me the ſtocke of two talentes, lo, I haue gayned as muche agayne by vſury. The maiſter commendyng the diligence of this ſeruaunte alſo, ſayeth: O good and truſtye ſeruaunt, becauſe I haue founde the truſty in a litle, hereafter I wyll truſte the with greater thynges: enter into thy maiſters ioye.

The texte.

And he whyche had receyued one talente, came, and ſayed: Lorde I knewe the that thou arte an hard man, reapyng where thou haſte not ſowen, and gatheryng where thou haſt not ſtrawed, and therfore I was afeared and went and hyd thy talent in the yearth: Lo, there thou haſt that is thyne. His lorde anſwered, and ſaied vnto hym. Thou euil and ſlouthfull ſeruaunt, thou kneweſt that I reape where I ſowed not, and gathered where I haue not ſtrawed, thou oughteſt therfore to deliuer my monye to the exchaungers, ſo that at my comyng, ſhould I haue receyued my owne with gayne. Take therfore the talente from hym, & geue it vnto hym whyche hath ten talentes: For to euery one that hath ſhalbe geuen, and he ſhall haue aboundaunce. But he that hath not, from hym ſhalbe taken away that whyche he hath. And caſte the vnprofitable ſeruaunte into vtter darkenes. There ſhalbe wepyng and gnaſhyng of teeth.

Finally came he alſo, whyche hadde hyd in the grounde the talente that he hadde receyued, and beyng commaunded to render accoumpte, doethe not onelye not acknowelege the faulte of ſlowthefulneſſe, but alſo accuſyng hys maiſter of roughnes, and greate couetouſnes, doeth double the faulte of hys diuetye neglected. Syr (ſaythe) I knewe ye were a roughe and a ſoze manne, ye take harueſt there where ye ſowed not: and gather gayne there, where ye did no coſte: Therefoze feareyng leſte yf my ſtocke by anye chaunce ſhoulde haue been loſt, ye would haue been cruell and ſoze agaynſte me: I wente and hydde youre talente in the grounde. Thys hadde I rather doe, than to goe aboute to gette gayne by vſury, and in the meane ſeaſon to be in daunger of the ſtocke. Lo thou haſte that that is thyne owne. If I deſerue not prayſe foz increaſe of game, yet I haue prouided that the ſtocke ſhoulde bee ſafe and ſure. This communication the maiſter turneth into hys owne heade ſayeng: Thou naughty and ſlouthfull ſeruaunte, thou knoweſt as thou ſayeſt, that I am deſtroufe of gayne: and that I take my haruefte there, where I haue not ſowen: and gather gayne there where I beſtowed no coſte. The moze therefoze oughteſte thou to haue committed my monye vnto the exchaungers, and I that hunte foz gayne whereas I haue done no coſte, ſhoulde haue cumme and requyred my monye with gayne, and haue taken auauntage there, where as I hadde ſowen and doone coſte. The ſtocke was myne, not thyne: Thou were bounde to be a diligent ſeruaunt vnto thy mayſter. Than he turnyng vnto the other ſeruauntes, ſayed: take awaye the talente from thys vnprofitable ſeruaunte and geue it to hym that hath tenne talentes. And as they meruayled that he commaunded moze to be geuen vnto hym whyche had alreadye aboundantlye, the mayſter ſayeth: ſo it ſhall cumme to paſſe in thys kynde of ryches. Whoſo hath, he is wozthye to receyue moze, that he maye abounde and haue plenty: but he that by ſlouthefulnes hathe gotte hym no maner of game, ſhall be robbed alſo of that, that he ſemeth foz to haue, becauſe he is vnwozthye to haue it. Furthermoze take awaye that vnprofitable ſeruaunte from my ſyght,

and caſte hym into the outewarde darkenes. There in the ſtede of the ioye of hys maiſter, whych he would not deſerue, he ſhall be pained with wepyng and gnaſhing of teeth. With ſuche parables the Lorde Jeſus pricked forward his diſciples bothe with the greatnes of rewardes, and with the feare of punyſhmentes, vnto the deſyre of the euangelicall godlines, and alſo to doe for theyr neyghboures: and to feare them from slouthfulnes and from boldenes of yll doyng.

The texte. When the ſonne of man cummeth in hys glory, and all hys holy angels with hym, than ſhall he ſit vpon the ſeate of hys glory, and before hym ſhall be gathered all nacions. And he ſhall ſeparate one from another, as the ſhepeerde doeth ſeperate the shepe from the goates, and ſhall ſet the shepe on the ryght hande, but the goates on the lefte hande.

The whyche thyng he dyd alſo farre more manifeſtly and clerely in his laſt narration, where he layeth before theyr eyes, bothe the maieſtye of his cummyng, and the ſeparacion of the good from the yll, whyche nowe lyue in the churche mixte together: and alſo the dyuerſe deſertes and rewardes of bothe partes: whyrly he ſetteth before theyr eyes the whole maner of the latter iudgemente: knowyng and conſyderyng that the day of his deathe was nowe at hande, to the intente his diſciples being inſtructed with ſo many leſſons, ſhould in no caſe diſcourage theyr hartes for the ſhamefull death of the croſſe: but ſhould comforte and ſolace this preſent affliccion and ſhame, with the conſideracion of the felicitie and glory to cum. And alſo that they ſhould not go about or wiſhe any vengeaunce to the yll and wicked men, for aſmuche as they knew that accordyng to theyr deſertes, in that iudgemente they ſhoulde bee puniſhed eternally. When the ſonne of man (ſayd he) whome ye ſhall ſee ſhortely moſt low and abiect, ſhall cum in his maieſtie, the companies of al angels gardyng him, than he ſhall ſit as iudge ouer all in the ſeate of hys maieſtie, and al the nacions of the whole worlde ſhall be called before hym. For no man, be he high or low, can eſcape that iudgemente. Thys ſhalbe done not by mans conjectures, but by the exact iudgement of god, vnto whoſe eyes all thynges be open. And firſt he ſhall ſeperate the good from the yll, lyke as the ſhepeerde when he numbreth hys flocke, bothe ſhed the shepe from the goates. And he ſhall ſette the shepe, that is, the innocentes and well doers, on the ryght hand: and he ſhall ſet the goates, that is, the hurtful and yll doers, on the lefte hand. And ſo the whole number of men deuided into two rayes or ſortes, as a iuſt iudge he will shewe vnto bothe a iuſte cauſe of his iudgemente, that the good maie know by what well doynges they haue attained vnto ſo great felicitie, and the yll may heare with what offences they haue deſerued euerlaſtyng punyſhemente.

Then the kyng ſhall ſaye vnto thoſe that be on hys ryght hand: Cum ye bleſſed of my father, poſſeſſe ye the kyngdome prepared for you, from the begynnyng of the worlde: for I The texte. was an hungred, and ye gaue me meate, I was athyrſte, and ye gaue me drinke, I was harbourleſſe, and ye toke me in, I was naked, and ye clothed me, I was ſicke, and ye viſited me, I was in priſon, and ye came to me. Than the iuſte ſhall anſwere, ſayeng: Lorde, when dyd we ſee the hungery, and fed thee? or athyrſt, and gaue the drynke? And when did we ſee thee harbourleſſe and tooke thee in? or naked, and clothed thee? or when dyd we ſee thee ſycke, or in priſon, and came vnto thee? and the kyng anſwerying, ſhal ſaye vnto them: verely I ſaye vnto you, in aſmuche as ye haue done it vnto one of the leaſte of theſe my brethren, ye haue done it to me.

And salutyng the lefte on the ryght hande, with a mylde and a merye chere, shall saye: Come my frendes, whome the worlde tooke for vyle and execrable, but whom my father taketh for honourable and prayse worthye. Now for the illes and displeasures whych ye have suffered for my sake, take the inheritaunce of the heauenly kyngdome, whiche by the diuine prouision and counsell, was prepared for you of God the fore knower of all thynges, before the world was made. With this so great reward it is thought good to recompence the workes of your greate loue towarde me, leste ye myght thynke that they were lost. For in tymes paste when I was hungrye, ye gaue me meate: whan I was thyrsty ye gaue me drynke: whan I was a straunger, and nedye of harbourie, ye toke me into your houles: whan I was naked, ye couered me: whan I was sycke, ye dyd visite me: whan I was in prison, ye came to comforte me: ye gaue me poures suche as they were: nowe I on the other syde do communicate and geue vnto you my whole kyngdome, whiche is common to me and my father. When these thynges shalbe heard of the iust menne, whiche doe the foluse the workes of charitie that in maner they knowe not that they haue doone them, they shall aunswere hym, saiyng: Lorde when sawe we thee hungrye, and fed thee: thyrsty and gaue thee drynke: whan saw we thee a straunger, & brought the into our house? or when dyd we couer the beyng naked? When dyd we visite thee beyng sicke? When dyd we cum vnto thee beyng in prison? Than the kyng shall saye openly, that he would it to be accounted doen to hym, what soeuer is geuen to any one of them, whome the worlde despiseth for their pouertye and lowne: yet he despyseth them not, inlomuch that he did vouchsafe to honour them with the name of brethren. Certaynely (shall he saye) I saye vnto you, although I haue no nede of mans helpe, whiche am lorde ouer all, yet whereas ye haue doen these thynges for my sake to anye of these my poore litle brethren, ye haue doen them to me.

The texte. Than shall he saye to those that shalbe on the lefte hand: Depart from me ye cursed, into the euerlastyng fyre whyche is prepared for the deuill and his angels. For I haue hungered, and ye haue not geuen me meate, I haue thyrsted, and ye haue not geuen me drynke, I haue bene harbourlesse, and ye haue not taken me in, I haue been naked, and he haue not clothed me, I haue bene sicke and in prison, and ye haue nor visited me. Than shal they also answere to hym, and saye: Lorde when did we see thee hungrye or thyrsty, or harbourles, or naked, or sycke, or in prison, and did not minister vnto thee? Than shall he answere vnto them saiyng: Verely I saye vnto you, in as muche as ye did it not to one of the least of these ye dyd it not to me. And they shal go into euerlastyng punishement, but the iust into life euerlastyng.

Than with an horrible loke turnyng to them that shall stande on the lefte hand, he shall geue a terrible sentence: Goe awaye from me ye whome the worlde flattered and praysed, but execrable and cursed of my father and me: go into the fyer that neuer shall bee quenched, whiche was prepared from the begynnyng of the worlde, for the deuill and his angelles, vnto whom ye hadde rather sticke then vnto me. For whan I was hungrye, ye gaue me not meate: whan I was thyrsty, ye gaue me not drynke: I wandred and lacked harbour, ye toke me not in: I was naked, ye couered me not: I was sicke and in prison, and ye did not visite me. Than shall they aunswere the iudge with as manye wordes, as the iuste menne answered: Lorde when sawe we thee hungrye, or thyrsty, or wanderyng, or naked, or sicke, or in prison, and serued thee not? Than the kyng shall aunswere them alse: Whatsoeuer of these duteyes is denyed to any one of these litle ones,litle regarded of the worlde, and yet my brethren, I counte it denyed vnto me. I was nedy in them, I woulde haue been relieued in them. This sentence once geuen, from the whiche there shall be none appeale,they that be on the left hande,shall goe into euerlastyng fyer,and the iust men into euerlastyng lyfe.

The.xxvi.Chapter.

The texte. And it came to passe whan Jesus had finished all these sayenges, he sayed vnto hys disciples: ye knowe that after two dayes shall ye Paalle daye, and the sonne of man shall be deliuered vp to be crucified.

Than whan Jesus had ended this communication, where with so many wayes he established the myndes of his disciples agaynst afflictions now beyng at hande,that they should not vtterly be dismayed whan they should shortly after see theyr lorde carryed awaye to a shamefull punishmente:at laste he was bolde to open vnto them the daye and the manner of hys deathe. The mencion whereof he doth inculcate and beate into his disciples myndes, lest whan they should see it, they should be so amased at it,as a thyng vnwares & not loked for,that they should be vtterly discouraged:chiefly whan they should perceyue that Jesus came vnto hys deathe willyngly,whiche he mought haue escaped,nor could not be kylled before the day came,whiche he had hymselfe apointed for his death. And that was the Paalle daie, which emong ȳ Jewes was kepte wyth great deuocion, remeworyng the yearely remembraunce of that daye,in the whiche in tyme paste ámonge the Egyptians, the postes beyng sprinkeled with the bloude of the lambe,they were deliuered from the kylling aungell,and passed ouer safely the red sea. In remembraunce of hys thyng, they offered yearely a lambe of one yeare withoute spot:and of the passyng by of the angel,and of the lucky passyng ouer the sea,they called it Paalle. But this was a figure of Jesus Christe,whiche shoulde redeme the whole worlde with hys most holy bloud,from the tyrannye of synne, who alone was cleane from the spottes of all synne. Jesus puttyng his disciples in remembraunce of this thyng,sayth: ye knowe that after two dayes the Paalle shall bee offered, and the same daye the sonne of man shalbe deliuered to be crucified.

The texte. Than assembled together the chiefe priestes and Scribes,and the elders of the people into the palace of the chiefe priest,which was called Caiphas, and helde a counsell to take Jesus by decey te,and kyll hym. But they sayed, not on the holy daye, lest there be an vprore among the people.

Therfore when that holy and chereful daye was nere,for the keping of which it was mete for menne to prepare themselues with godlye woorkes,the chiefe priestes and seniours of the people wer gathered together,whose authoritie, yf there hadde bene any rage emong the people,oughte furthwith to haue pacified it. And they were gathered together in the courte of the chiefe of the priestes,whiche was called Caiphas:For these chiefly conspired agaynst Jesus,because they feared lest(yf he shoulde bee preserued)they shoulde leese theyr lawe and authoritie. Therfore it was decred there through wicked counsell ,that they shoulde laye handes vpon Jesus and kyll hym,not openlye and violently,but by deceite and guile.

Therefore when these greate men agreed emong themselues vngraciously of the murder, they consulted of the tyme. For although they thyrsted sore for the innocent bloud, beyng madde with envye and hatred, yet they thoughte beste to differ the deathe to an other tyme, because the daye ensuyng was holye and festiual emonge the Iewes was at hande. For they feared if they shoulde sette vpon hym on that day, that the people be wonte to resort together, leste any tumulte or busynesse shoulde ryse, because there were manye emong the people, whiche seing hys miracles, and hearyng hys meruayloule doctrine, and markyng the great soberues, and gentilnes of hys maners, had a greate opinion of hym. They feared the people, whyche feared not god: not feared not to defyle the holy daye with murder, whyche durst not eate leauen breade. Sathan gaue them this counsell, desyring to kepe close that sacrifice whiche shoulde bryng health and saluacion to the worlde. But it pleased otherwyse to the deuyne counsell. For it was not semely that the sacrifice shoulde be priuely eaten awaye, whiche the father would to be offered not onely for the saluacion of the Iewes, but for the saluacion also of the whole worlde.

The texte. Whan Iesus was in Bethanie in the houle of Simon the leper, there came to him a woman, hauyng an alabaster bore of precious oyntment, and powred it vpon hys head as he sate at the boorde. But the disciples when they sawe it disdayned at it, saiyng: whereto this waste? For this ointment might haue been wel sold, and geuen to the poore. Whi Iesus knewe hys, he sayed, What trouble ye the woman? For she hathe wrought a good worke toward me. For ye haue alwaies poore folke with you, but me ye haue not alwayes: and in that she hath eaten this oyntmente on my body, she did it to burye me. Verely I say vnto you: Where soeuer this gospel shall be preached in all the worlde, that also that she hath done, shalbe tolde for a memoriall of her.

Therefore whan Iesus was in Bethania, nere vnto Hierusalem, where he should be crucified, and sate at meate in the house of one Simon called Leper, a certayne woman came vnto hym, hauyng an alabaster of precious oyntment, who broke the alabaster, and powred the oyntment vpon hys heade. The disciples seeyng a thing of so great price powred and caste oute at onte, they disdayned and murmured at it. For they knewe that Iesus was not wont to vse suche delicacies, and that it shoulde haue bene more for his appetite, yf the woman had deliuered her alabaster whole, that the oyntmente beyng solde, the poore men myght be relieued with the value hereof. To what purpose is it (say they) to leese suche a precious thyng? For it myghte haue bene solde for muche, and the value therof geuen to the poore? Thus sayde the disciples not vnderstandyng to what purpose Iesus suffered this to be done. For he was not in loue with suche delicacies, but he wouldo haue his deathe to be adorned with suche honour, whiche death he would suffer of no necessitie, but of hys owne wyll, for the health of the whole worlde. For whereas in all hys lyfe he behaued hymselfe most lowlye, yet he honoured hys deathe with a certayne magnificence, by the which deathe he should ouercum the deuil. And therefore once he was caryed into Hierusalem with a greate tryumphe: and than, as preuentynge the honoure of hys buryall, he was embaumed with a swete oyntmente: and whan he was deade, he woulde bee buryed in a newe sepulchre grauen in stone: and he woulde bee wynded in a cleane shete: and he would be buried with the busy care of a noble man. The barbares of ryche and honorable men: be wont to be embaumed with precious oyntmentes, eyther for honour, or elles to preserue theyr bodyes from corrupcion. And because he

shoulde reuiue and ryse agayne, before that hys frendes shoulde do hym thys honoure, he suffered this pompe of buriall to bee bestowed vpon hym before hys death: to the intente he myght imprinte by manye meanes in his disciples myndes the mention of his deathe, and by honoure, to mitigate the horrible nes therof.

Therfore when his disciples beyng ignorannt of these thynges murmured and grutched at the costes and expenses, Jesus restrayned them saying: Why be ye grieued with this woman? She hath done a godlye office and a louyng benefite to me, whiche shall shortly dye. Jesus not meete that ye should haue enuy at thys my last honoure. Poore men of the common sorte ye haue alwayes with you, to whom ye maie doe good, but ye shall not euer haue me. This oyntment is not lost, but this woman gessing that I should shortely dye, with her offyce and duetye hath preuented my burryall, and hath powred vpon me beyng alyue, that that is wonte to be powred vpon the dead. Therefore departe not her goodlinesse. whiche is so acceptable vnto God, that whereas the gospell of my deathe shalbe preached throughout all the worlde, this woman also shall be mencioned: whiche with a godly and an holy Quetye, hathe preuented my sepulture.

Then one of the twelue which was called Judas Iscariotb, went vnto the chiefe priestes, and sayd vnto them: What will ye geue me, and I will deliuer hym vnto you? And they appointed to hym thirty denaries. And from that tyme forth, he sought opportunitie to betraye hym.

Where as this communication hadde repressed the disdayne of others, which reed of a simplicitie, nor knowyng the misterye: yet it pacified not Judas Iscariotb, whiche falsely pretended care for the poore, where as lucre and gayne were more pleasaunte vnto hym. For he bare the purse, and was wount to stele sumwhat of ỹ thynges which were geuen of the liberall frendes of Jesus, to be distributed emõg the poore, hereof by litle and litle he encreased his money. Therfore whan he was wholy geuen to the filthy disease of auarice, myndyng to recompense that, whiche he counted lost in the oyntmente, with the price of the Lorde, he wente vnto the chiefe prestes and officers, whome he knewe with bent myndes had conspired the deathe of Jesus, and that there was nothyng to lette them, but that he myght be taken without tumulte or busines. To bring this to passe there wer none more mete, thã sum of the number of the whiche were familiare with the lorde, and nexte aboute hym, who knewe certaynely whyther Jesus was wont to go. For he had hys secret places to praie in. And there was one found in that chosen and picked numbre of twelue, who Christ toke vnto hym to bee the chiefe ouer all: whiche loued better wicked gayne, than so mylde and so beneficiall a lorde. So greate a poyson is auarice, if it possesse wholy the mynde of man. But Jesus woulde signifye by thys example that there should be mẽ, which beyng corrupt with the desyre of money, woulde betraye the woorde of the gospell, and this mischiefe shoulde chiefelye cum of them, who beyng the chiefe and heades of the religion of the churche, semeth to be priuy of the secretes of theyr lorde: with whom they be so familiar that with wrong interpretacion they betray his doctrine to the wicked Pharisaicall rulers, whiche seke for nothyng elles, but the destruction of the truethe of the gospell. Judas therfore goyng vnto the officers, sayd: what reward will ye geue me, if I delyuer you hym into your handes? And thei bargayned with

hym for thirty denaryes. With so litle wages could he be hyered to so beastely and cruell a dede: so lyghtly and vilely was that precious blonde estemed, whiche was sufficient to redeme whole mankynde. Therefore Judas gredye and gapyng for the money that was promysed hym, bygan bby from that time forwarde sought for occasion to betraye Jesus.

The texte. But the fyrst day of the vnleauened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saiyng vnto hym: where wilt thou that we prepare for the to eate the paaske? And he sayde: Go into the cite to suche a man, and saye vnto hym: The maister sayth, my tyme is at hande, with the dor I kepe my Easter with my disciples. And the disciples dyd as Jesus had appointed them, and made ready the paaske.

Therfore whan the fyrst daye of leuen was at hand, in the whiche the Jewes were accustomed to abstayne from leauen bready, after the eatyng of the paschall lambe, the disciples go vnto Jesus, saying: Lorde where wylt ye that we shall prepare you a place to feaste and kepe youre paaske? so greate was the scarcenes, that neyther he, nor his disciples had any house of theyr own to go to. But Jesus to shewe that this whole matter was mystical, and not doen by chaunce or necessitie, but that all thynges were done by the prescience and counsell of God, he answered them: Go into the citie, and anon as ye entre in, there shall meete you a certayne manne bearyng a potte of water, folowe hym, and whereseouer he goeth in ye shall go in, and saye to the householder, the maister sayeth: My tyme is at hande, at thy house I kepe my paaske with my disciples. He shall shewe you a great and a fayre parler, there prepare my paaske. The disciples went and founde all thynges, as Jesus had tolde them before, and prepared hym a feaste in the place that he commaunded.

The texte: When the euen was cum, he sate downe with the twelue, and as they were eatyng, he sayd: Verely I saye vnto you: One of you shall betraye me. And they were exceadyng sorowful, and begonne euery one to saye: Lorde is it I? He answered and sayde, He that dippeth his hand with me in the dyshe, the same shal betraye me. The sonne of man goeth as it is written of hym, But woo vnto that man, by whom the sonne of man is betrayed. It had be better good for that man, yf he had not ben borne. Than Judas whiche betrayed hym, answered and sayed. Maister, is it I? He saye vnto hym: Thou hast sayed.

And towarde nyght Jesus went thither, and sate downe to supper with his twelue disciples. And now as they were at supper, Jesus sayeth vnto them: one of you shall betraye me. This he sayed to declare that nothyng at all was hyd from hym, and also that the conscience of the traytour beyng touched, myght be turned vnto penaunce. At this woord all theyr hartes began to be very heuy. Euery man suspected and distrusted hymselfe knowyng the weaknes of man. They desyryng therfore to bee deliuered from this beastlines, began for to aske seuerally: is it I Lorde? Than Jesus confirme and establyshe the others, almoste dead for feare, and to touche the conscience of Judas more sharpely, yf perhappes he myght be moued vnto penaūce, pointed the author of the dede with a more certayne sygne, and withal put hym in remembraunce of the great familiaritye, whiche ought to haue withdrawen him from such a mad mischiefe, saying: He that putteth his hand with me in the dyshe, and is my felow not onelye of the table, but also of the dyshe, shall betraye me, and for the office of familiaritye, he shal rendre vnto me the office of extreme enmitie, whereas the communion and felowshypp of bready and salte bee wonte for to ioyne men vnknowen and vnacquaynted, with the bonde of amitie. And that these thynges should chaunce to the sonne of man, it was ordeyned heretofore of the father, and prophecied before of the prophetes. But yet woo be to that man, through whose wickednes, the sonne of man is betrayed.

The

The diuine wisedome doth vse hys wickednes to the saluation of mankynde, but yet he is no lesse in fault, which thrugh his owne malice was brought to this dede, whereas I omitted nothyng whereby I myght heale hys mynd. Wherfore for so wicked a deed, he shall be cruellye punished, vnlesse he repente, that it had bene better for him neuer to haue been borne. This communication whiche with shame might haue healed an yll man, or with payne myght haue feared a wicked manne, made Judas nothyng the better, insomuche that he toyned impudencie and vnshamefastnes to hys wicked deed, and as thoughe he had knowen himself to be nothing culpable, asked the Lord: Is it I? And here Jesus not forgettyng his wont tentines, answered: Thou hast sayde, geuyng an inckling rather than expressyng playnly that it was he, and maketh as though he had a suspicion, and not knowledge of it.

Whan they were eatyng. Jesus toke bread, and when he had geuen thankes, brake it, and gaue it to the disciples, and sayed: Take, eate, this is my body. And he toke the cup, and gaue thankes, and deliuered it to them, saying: Drynke ye all of this, for this is my bloud whiche is of the newe testament, that is shed for many for the remission of sinnes. But I say vnto you: I wyl not drynke henceforth of this fruit of the vyne tree, vntil the day when I shall drynke it newe with you in my fathers kingdome. The text.

Therfore in this latter supper ỹ he made with his disciples, before his death, he dyd institute that most holye remembraunce of hys death: that beyng often renewed, it should be a perpetuall memorial emong them, of his great charytie, whereby he sticked not to bestowe his lyfe to redeme mankinde: that the remembraunce of that godly sacrifice shoulde neuer out of our myndes, wherein that most pure and immaculate lambe the newe and trewe paasse, offered him selfe in the aulter of the crosse for vs to God the father, whom beyng angrye, he hath made mercifull to vs by hys bloud, suffering paynes himselfe for our offenses, whiche were due to our synfulnes: Jesus dyd institute and consecrate this secrete sigue and memorial in two thynges, by the which amitie emong men is wont to be intertayned: that the charitie by the which Christ gaue himselfe to his, shoulde couple vs together also: who often tymes eate together of one breade, and drynke of one cuppe. And also shewyng by a certayne spirituall figure, the rites and manners of Moses his lawe, in the whiche was no purgacion of sinne, but by bloude of the sacrifice: Furthermore signifiyng that he did consecrate a newe league of the euangelicall profession by this misterie. For whan Moses had recited the roll of the lawe, wherin the preceptes of the lawe were conteyned, and the people had answered: We will do al thynges that the lorde hath spoken, and wyll be obediente, wyth parte of the bloude of the sacrifices whiche they had killed receyued in a vessell, he sprinkled the people saying, this is the bloude of the league, whiche the lorde hath made wyth you touchyng these wordes. And truely all these thynges signifyed with certayne figures and shadowes, this most holye sacrifice, wherin the lorde Jesus delyuerying his body willingly vnto death, and shedyng his bloud, went about to clense the synnes of the whole worlde, reconcilyng vnto God all men freelye, wholoeuer woulde professe this league of the newe testament. And he would that this sacrifice and this league shoulde be commended, and set furth to the myndes of hys disciples with certayne misticall sygnes, before that it was offered, to thyntente that they shoulde vnderstande that his death was not a common or an idle, but an effectuall sacrifice to purge the synnes not onelye of the Jewes, but also of al nations and of al tymes.

But (because the deathe of Christe oughte not to bee iterated) leste so greate a benifite myght go out of mennes myndes, or leste they myghte forget the holye league once entred, and the authour of theyr healthy also, he did institute and ordayne, that with often communion of ỹ holye breade, and the cup, the memorie should be renewed among the professours of the euangelicall lawe. And he would that this sygne should be very holy among hys souldiers, and to be had in such veneration, that ỹe as much godly grace shoulde bee geuen to them, whiche shoulde receyue the body and blonde of the lorde purely and worthely: so they that should take them vnworthely, should be the cause of their greuous dãnacion. Therfore Jesus toke the breade into hys handes, and when he had offered the sacrifice of prayse vnto God, he breake it and distributed it vnto his disciples saying: Take ye, eate ye, this is my body. Afterwarde he toke the cup into hys handes, & when he had geuen thankes vnto the father, he dyancke before, and reched it vnto them, saying: Dyncke all ye of thys cuppe. For thys is my bloud of the newe testament, which shalbe shed for many, for the forgeuenes of synnes. As often as ye shall do thys, doe it in the remembraunce of me. For as often as ye shall eate of this breade, and dyncke of this cuppe, ye shall declare the lordes death vntil he cum, not now as a sauiour, but as a iudge. In the meane time none other sacrifice for synnes shal be loked after. For this one is sufficient for to take awaye the synnes of the whole world. And I saye vnto you, I wyll not eate of this bread hereafter, vntil I shall eate it with you complete and perfect in my fathers kyngdome: and I will dyncke no more of this fruite of the vine, vntil I shal dyncke it new with you in my fathers kingdom. And the moste meke and gentil lorde did not exclude Judas the traytour from thys holy memorial, that by thys so great clemencie and gentilnes, he myght be reformed. But because he receyued the sygne of the league and testament, hauyng treason in hys harte, he departed more vnclean than he came.

When they were eatin &c.

I wyll not dricke hence furth, &c.

The texte. And wyan they had song the hymne, they went out vnto the mount Oliuete: Than sayd Jesus to them. All ye shall be offended because of me this nyght. For it is written: I wyll smite the shepeherde, and the shepe of the flocke shalbe scattered. But after I am risen again, I wil go before you into Galile. Peter answered and sayd vnto him: Though al me be offended because of the, yet I wyll not be offended. Jesus sayd vnto hym: Verely I saye vnto the, that in this nyght or ere the cocke crowe, thou shalt deny me thryse. Peter sayd vnto hym: Yea, though I should dye with the, I wyll not deny the. Likewise also sayed all the disciples.

And after that they hadde song an hymne in the prayse of god, they arose and went into the mounte of Oliues, whiche place he knewe to bee well knowen vnto the traytoure, lest he should leme to desyre to be hyd, as fearyng deathe: but purposelye he withdrawed hymselfe into a solitarye place, that he myghte bee taken without tumulte of the people, which thyng they went about and loked after. There he telleth his disciples agayne how it should cum to passe, that byanby they should be sore troubled, seing the punishemẽt of their lorde: but lest they should be vtterly discouraged, he doethe coumfort them with a prophecie, and with the resurrection that shoulde folowe furthwith, poynting also the time and the place nere at hande, where they should see hym agayne: all ye (ỹ he) shall be troubled thys nyghte for my cause. For so God ỹ father prophecied by the mouth of hys prophete zacharye: I wyll strike the sheperde, and the shepe of ỹ flocke shal be scatered abrode: But ye nede not to despayre. Deathe shall trouble your myndes, but byanby the resurrection shal comforte you.

For

for I will rise agayne the thirde daye, and after that I am risen, I will goe before you into Galile. There I will offer my selfe to bee seene of you. Jesus suffered all his disciples to be thus troubled, to thintent he myght teache them by the very dedes, howe great the weakenes of mans nature was, and how lothly a thing it is for a man to trust to himselfe, that hauing experience of themselues, they myght learne to helpe other mennes weakenes. Peter therefore not well knowyng himselfe, with a certayne manly and worldly boldnes, beleeth that it shall cumme to passe, which Christe by the Prophecie sayed shoulde cumme to passe, and (whiche was a poynete of more rashnesse) he preferreth himselfe before all other: If all bee troubled (sayth he) in thy cause, yet I will not bee troubled. To whome Jesus aunswered: what sayeste thou Peter, wilt thou alone not be troubled? Nay this I tell the of a suerty, before that the cocke crowe twyse this nyght, thou shalt denye me thryse, Yet Peter not knowleagyng hys weakenes for all thys, aunswered stoutly: yea yf I shoulde dye with the, I wyl not denye the. And the other of the Apostles folowed the rashenes of Peter, who would haue denied Christ also, yf they had bene brought to a lyke streight as Peter was.

The texte.

Then came Jesus with them vnto a village whiche is called Gethsemany, and sayed vnto the disciples: Sit ye here vntyll I go and praye yonder: and he take with hym Peter, and the two sonnes of Zebedee, and began to wexe sorowfull and heuy. Than sayde Jesus vnto them: My soule is heuy, euen vnto the death. Tarry ye here, & watche with me. And he went a litle farther, and fell downe on hys face, and prayed, sayeng, O my father yf it bee possible, let thys cup passe from me: Neuertheles not as I wyl, but as thou wilt.

Than Jesus knowyng that the tyme drewe nere, that the laste storme shoulde cum, he led apart his eleuen disciples (for Judas was gone out from supper) into a village called Gethsemany. Here he commaunded eight of them to tary, whiche yet were loth to departe from theyr maister, whom they loued hartely, but as yet with a worldly affection. Tary (sayth he) in this place, whiles I goe into my accustomed place, and praye there. For he durst not make them priuy of his conflicte, sith they were yet but weake, leste they shoulde be discouraged, and taketh with hym but only three, Peter, and the two sonnes of Zebedee, that he myght haue them to be witnesses of hys extreme manly weakenesse, whome he tooke with hym into the mounte to beholde hys maiestie: and to teache with all, that as often as any greate storme of suche troubles than mans strength can aoyde, is at hande, that we vtterly distrustyng our selues, commit vs wholy to the helpe of God. And the feare of deathe, when it cummeth vpon a man, is more bitter than deathe it selfe: Therfore this horryblenes begynne than to cum vpon Jesus, and he felte great sorow and heuines of mynde. For he would not that hys chosen frendes (bould be ignorayunt of the griefe of his mynde that they myght playnly see that he was very man, troubled with affections bothe of body and mynde: my soule (sayth he) is heuy euen vnto deathe. Tary here and watche with me. For this time requireth not slepe, but wakyng and earneste prayer. Therfore Jesus goyng forwarde a litle, from hys three disciples, hangyng downe his heade, bowed his face to the yearth: and so prostrate, prayed vnto his father, sayeng: My father, if it be possible, take away this cup of death from me, for I feele the affection of the body much abhorring from death. Notwithstanding let it be, not as I wyl, after the weakenes of the body, but as thou wilt, to the health and saluation of mankynde.

Tary here and watche with me.

My father if it be possible, &c.

And

The texte. And he came vnto hys disciples, and founde them slepyng, and sayed vnto Peter: could ye not watche with me one houre? Watche and praye, that ye enter not into temptation. The spirite is ready, but the flesche is weake.

When he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his disciples, and found them slepyng, and sayeth vnto Peter: Thou that diddest crake a litle before that thou wouldest dye with me, couldest thou not wake with me one houre? I wake and praye for you. Wake you with me, and praye to the father that ye fall not into temptacion and be ouercum. The victorye chaunceth not but vnto them that wake. Therfore we must wake, leste the flesche ouercum the spirite, and the spirite must be susteyned with the helpe of God.

The texte. Againe he went the second tyme and prayed, saying: My father, if this cup can not passe away from me, but that I drinke it, thy will bee done. And he came and found them again slepyng. For their yes were heuy. And he left them, and went agayn, and prayed the third time, saying the same woordes. Than cummeth he to hys disciples, and sayeth vnto them: Slepe now & take your rest. Behold the houre is at hande, & the sonne of man is betrayed into the hades of sinners: Arise, let vs be going. Behold he is at hand, that doeth betray me.

So hys disciples beyng rapted, Jesus went agayne, and prayed agayne with as many woordes vnto hys father: My father, yf it bee not possible that thys cup shall passe from me, but that I shall drynk of it, thy will bee doone. Afterwarde he returned agayne vnto hys disciples, and found them again slepyng. For their yes were very heuy, by the reason of sorowe increasyng their slepe. Therfore leauyng them, he wente alone the thyrde tyme to praye for hys disciples, for the weakenes of the flesche ouercame them. And he prayed likewise the thirde time, to teache vs to praye continually and vehemently, as often as the storme of temptacion is at hande. For than the Angels be present and geue strength to the spirite. Afterwarde he returned vnto hys disciples, and rebuked them for their slepyng out of tyme, sith the tyme required great watching. For nowe (sayth he) the tempest is at hande which shall fynde you vnreadye, and therfore vnmete and ouermatched: nowe (q he) slepe and take your rest. Lo the houre is cum, that the innocent sonne of manne shall be deliuered into the handes of the wicked. Therfore arise, let vs go meete the hurte and displeasure that cummeth against vs. Beholde he is at hande whiche betrayeth me.

The texte. Whyle he yet speake, lo, Judas one of the numbre of the twelue, came, and with hym a great multitude with swordes and staues, sent from the chiefe priestes and elders of the people. But he that betrayed hym, gaue them a token, saying: Whomesoeuer I kysse, the same is he, laye handes on hym. And furthwyth he cummeth to Jesus, saying: Hayle master, and kyssed hym. And Jesus sayed vnto hym. Freende, wherefore art thou cum: Than came they and layd handes on Jesu.

Jesus had not ended this communication, but lo, Judas Iscariote one of the numbre of the twelue came, folowyng Jesus his capitayne a lytle before, and now become ouer a wicked cumpany a more wicked captayne. For a great cumpanye of souldiers folowed hym with sweordes and clubbes, whome the chiefe of the priestes, and the sentours of the people, had sent for thys intente, that Jesus myght be taken without tumult of the people. For althoughe they hadde purposed to differ this matter vnto another tyme, yet hauyng opportunitie of the traytour, they chaunged their myndes. And therfore Judas chose bothe the myghte and the place, in the whiche Jesus was wonte with a fewe to praye. Finally leste they should faile of the persone, the traytoure taught them by what token they shoulde knowe Jesus: whomesoeuer (q he) I shall kysse, he it is: layе handes vpon hym. Therefore Judas Iscariote went before and and went vnto Jesus as though he wouldе salute hym, saiyng: Hayle Rabby, and therwith kissed hym, whiche in tymes paste was vsed in salutacions, because of honour and duty. Now Jesus to geue a perfect exaumple of meknes in euery place to hys disciples, dyd not repell the wicked disciple from hys syng, nor dyd rebuke hym for hys madnesse, but wyth gentle speakynge touched hys conscience, saiyng: Frende, for what cause art thou cum? For he came wyth a kysse after suche sorte as though he wouldе haue tolde hym sum newes. At this token the multitude came rumpyng, and layed handes vpon Jesus, and helde hym fast. The disciples myndes were sore amased at this ruffling, whome Jesus suffered to fall into this affection, because he wouldе vtterlye plucke oute of their myndes, all greedy delyre to reuenge and to defende themselues.

And beholde, one of them which was with Jesus stretched out his hande, and drewe oute hys swerde, and stroke a seruaunt of the hygh prestes, and smote of hys eare. Than sayed Jesus vnto him: put vp thy swerd in his sheath. For al they that take the swerd shal perishe with the swerd. Thinke ye not that I can praye to my father, and he shal geue me more then twelue legions of angels: Howe than shal the scriptures be fulfylled. For thus mustе it be. The texte

And Peter, eyther because he was more feruente euery where than the other, or elles because he hadde made stoute promyses of himselfe before, lest he shouldе seme not to doe for hys maister, plucked out his swerde, and stroke Malcus the seruaunte of Caiphas, and cutte of hys syghte eare. Jesus for ordeyning the stroke, that bothe it was a lyght wounde, and whatsoeuer the hurte was, he healed it, and restored the eare agayne. But Peter erred by the reason of a certayne good loue towarde the Lorde, and this errour he tooke in maner of the wordes of Jesus not well perceyued. For he commaunded them to sell their coate and to by swerdes: and whan thei answered, there wer two swerdes, he sayed: it is sufficiente. But they thynkynge that he spake of a swerde of proon, whereas Jesus mente a spirituall swerde, after supper they tooke further theyr swerdes with them readye to defende theyr Lorde, yf the matter hadde so required, or yf he had commaunded. Therefore to plucke this affection vtterly out of the myndes of all hys disciples, he dyd chyde Peter sharpely, saiyng: put by thy swerde into his place. They that dooe stryke wyth the swerde, perysshe with the swerde, the recompence of vengeaunce turnyng backe vpon their owne heade. We haue no nede of this fence, whyche doe get the victory better by suffering than by killing. Or els thincke you that I couldе lacke helpe if it pleased me to haue this defence? Could not I make suite vnto my father, and could not he send to helpe me in the stede of twelue disciples, twelue legions of angels? But thus it is thoughte good to my father, thus it was spoken before of the Prophetes. And none of these thinges is done by chaunce or fortune.

In that same houre Jesus sayed to the multitude: ye cum out as it were to a theefe with swerdes & clubbes for to take me. I sate dayly wyth you teachyng in the temple, & ye toke me not. But al this is doen that the scriptures of the Prophetes might be fulfylled. Than al the disciples forsoke him and fled. And they toke Jesus and led him to Caiphas the hygh prest, where the Scribes and elders were assembled. And Peter folowed him a far of vnto the hyghe prestes courte, and went in, and sate with the seruauntes to see the ende. Than

Than Jesus turnyng to the multitude, sayed: nowe weponed with swerdes and clubbes, ye cum furth to take me. But whan I sate dayly emong you teachyng in the temple, and healyng the sicke and diseased, ye layed no handes vpon me. Nowe in the dead nyght, ye seke me out beyng quiet and styl in a secrete place. But al these thinges be done not by your violence, but by the ordinaunce of goddes counsell, whereof the scriptures of the Prophetes haue prophecied long before. The disciples hearyng thys, and seing that there was no hope, for

This all the disciples, &c. al muche as Jesus offred him vnto deathe, they left theyr maister and ran awap. But the mynisters nothyng mitigate with remembraunce of the doctryne and benefite of Jesus, leddе hym awaye lyke a pyssoner, to the house of Cayphas the chiefe of the priestes, whyther the Scribes and seniours dyd resorte. But Peter alone (for the other disciples beyng afrayed, were fledde euery man hys wape) although hys skirmishe came not well to passe, yet he couldе not leaue of vtterly the care of hys maister, whome he loued hartely: and yet again he durst not be present with hym, notwithstanding he folowed as it might be a farre of, and at length, in the darke as vnknowen, he entred into the court of Cayphas. Finally entryng in he sate among the ministers warming him at the coles, that whereas he couldе not defende Jesus, yet at the least he myght see what shouldе be the ende of the iudgemente. For as yet Peter had lum hope in hys myndе.

The texte. ¶ The chiefe priestes and elders, and al the counsell, sought false witnesse against Jesus for to put hym to deathe, but founde none: yea whan many false wytnesses came, yet they founde none. At laste came two false witnesses, & sayed: he sayed, I am able to destroye the temple of God, and builde it agayne in three dayes. And the chiefe priestе arose, and sayed vnto hym: Answerest thou nothyng? why do these beare witnes agaynst thee? But Jesus held hys peace. And the chiefe priest answered and sayed vnto hym: I charge the by the lyuyng God, that thou tel vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of God. Jesus sayeth vnto hym: Thou hast sayed: Neuertheles I saye vnto you: hereafter ye shall see the sonne of man, sittyng on the ryght hande of power, and cummyng in the cloudes of the ayre.

Further the chiefe priestes and the whole counsel, to make sum appearance of a lawfull and iust iudgement, went about to suborne, and set furth false witnesses agaynst Jesus, whose innocecie was so greate, that it was very harde so to lye of him, that the lye myght haue any colour of treuth. And after that many

The chiefe priestes and the elders, &c. false witnesses came furth, but of suche sorte that theyr testimonies & saiynges were so yll framed together, that they confounded themselues, insomuche that they were not thought meete, neyther of thole iudges, neither of that cumpany. At length cummeth furth two false witnesses, whiche sayed: He sayed, I canne destroye the temple of God & after three dayes make it vp. They toke occasion of this lye by the wordes of Christe, who sayed: loose thys temple, and in three dayes I wyll rayse it vp, meanyng thereby that he shouldе be slayne of them, but within three dayes he should lyue agayne. The witnelles to make the thing more odious, dyd depraue and mystake these wordes whiche they vnderstoode not. For he sayed not I can destroye, but loose ye: and he sayed not, I wyll build agayne, but I wyll rayse vp, applyng it to hys body whiche should be slayne, and lyue againe. Therfore at thys testimonye because it semed to bee of some weyght, and no nother was found more meete and conuenient, the chyefe of the priestes roose vp, and counterfeityng the person of a iuste iudge, as thought he would geue Jesus liberty to defende hymselfe, sayed: Doest thou make no answere to these testimonies whiche be brought agaynst thee? But Jesus held his peace, knowyng that whatsoeuer he sayed, should be reproued & mistaken. Than the chiefe of the priestes desyryng to wrestе out sumwhat, wherby Jesus myght be condemned (for nowe hys madnes was such that al tarying semed to long) sayeth vnto hym: I coniure the by the liuing God, tel vs whether thou be Christ the sonne of God. This was a craftу question of the wicked byshop.

If he

If he had denied that he was the sonne of God, he would haue cryed out: why than takest thou vpon thee, the thing that thou arte not: If he had affirmed it, he woulde haue falsely accused hym for blasphemy. If he had holde hys peace being required and adiured, he shoulde seme to despise God, and the authoritte of the highe priestе. And what was he that dyd adiure hym: A wicked bishop, whiche had boughte of Herode for money the annuall honoure: and he which did assault the sone of God, adiured him by God. Yet Jesus, as it were shewing a reuerence to the honour that he did beare, beyng demaunded whether he was Christ the sonne of God, aunswered: Thou hast spoken: so confessing himselfe to be that he was, that yet he auoyded the faulte of arrogancie. And he added a thing whiche oughte to haue reuoked the wicked bishop from his purposed wickednes: yet (q he) thys I say vnto you, hereafter ye shall see the sonne of man sittyng on the ryghte hande of the power of God, and comming with maiestie in the cloudes of heauen. He gaue to vnderstande, that he being than lowe and condemned of the wicked, shoulde once come with the power of God to be iudge ouer all the worlde.

Jesus sayeth vnto hym, thou haste sayde.

¶ Than the high priest rent his clothes, saying: He hath spoken blasphemie, what nede we of any more witnesses? Lo, now ye haue heard hys blasphemie, what thynke ye? They answered and sayde: He is worthy to dye. Than dyd they spitte in hys face, and buffeted hym with theyr fystes. And other smote hym on the face with the palme of their handes, saying: Tell vs Christe, who is he that smote thee?

The texte.

The chiefe priestе beyng the more prouoked with this saying, to thyntente that through the counterfeyted zeale of religion, he myghte make the cryme of Christe the more sore, he rente hys garmentes, and sayde: he speaketh blasphemously. He doeth vsurpe and take vpon him diuine honour, whereas he is but man. What nedeth there any more witnesses? Beholde nowe ye haue heard manifeste blasphemie. What thynke ye? They aunswered: he hath deserued deathe. Than they began to handle hym cruelly with mockes and skornes, as though he had bene lawefully condemned, whiche also Jesus suffered moste meekely, to geue vnto his a perfect example of pacience. They did spette in his face, and coueryng hys face, they gaue hym buffettes and blewes. Agayne, some stroke hym on the face with theyr handes, saying: prophecye and tell vs Christ, who is it that stryketh thee. With these skornes and rebukes they caste him in the teeth, because he woulde bee taken for Messias, and because he was honoured of the people, by the name of a Prophete.

Lo, now ye haue heard his blasphemie, &c.

¶ Peter sate without in the courte, and a damsell came vnto hym, saying: Thou also wast with Jesus of Galile: but he denied it before them all, saying: I wot not what thou sayest. When he was goen in to the porche, another wenche sawe hym, and sayde vnto them that were there: This felowe also was with Jesus of Nazareth. And he denied it agayne with an othe, saying: I dyd not knowe the man. A whyle after came they that stode by, and sayde vnto Peter: Surely thou art one of them, for thy speche doth bewraye the. Than he began to curse and sweare, that he knewe not the manne, and immediately the cocke crewe. And Peter remembred the saying of Jesus, whiche he spake vnto hym: before the cocke crowe, thou shalt deny me thryse, and he went out, and wept bitterly.

The texte.

In the meane season Peter sate without in the courte, beholding a farre of the heaute sight, and loking for the ende of the matter, for he durste not come nere, lest he shoulde be knowen of the ministers. And a certayne wenche came vnto hym, whiche partely knewe hym, and sayde: Thou also wast one of the folowers of this Galilean. Here Peter beyng amased at the wenches woorde, and forgetting that stout woorde that he spake to Christ: and if I should dye with thee, I wil not deny thee: denied his lorde before the al, saying: I cannot tell what thou sayest. And furthwith the cocke did crowe. And as he prepared to goe out, euen in the doore an other wenche spyed him, which vttering hym to the ministers standyng by, sayeth: Thys man also was with Iesus of Nazareth. And agayne he denyed it, swearing that he knew not the manne. And a little after, certayne of them that stoode by, knowing Peter, sayd: Truely thou arte one of this numbre. For not onely thy face but also thy speche doeth vtter thee to be a Galilean. Than Peter being more afrayde, began not onely to abiure and forsake Iesus, but also to execrate and ban himselfe, if euer he knewe the manne. And furthewith the cocke crowed agayne. After these, Iesus dyd beholde him, and speaking (as it were) vnto him with his eyes, monished him. Than at length Peter cumming to himselfe, remembred that Iesus tolde him before, when he craked of hys boldenes and valiantnes: before the cocke crow twise thou shalt denye me thryse. But because he sinned thorough the weaknes of man, being amased with feare, and not of purposed malice, he deserued mercy. Christe suffered this in hys chosen apostle, that no man, offende he neuer so sore, shoulde dispayre of pardon so that he repent, and washe the spot of his mynde with teares. For Peter, whiche was as it were beside hymselfe, at the looke of Iesus, by and by came to hymselfe agayne and repented, and goyng furth wepte bitterly.

¶ The.xxvii. Chapiter.

The texte. ¶ Whan the morning was come, all the chiefe prestes, and elders of the people helde counsel against Iesus to put him to death. And bysoughte hym bounde, and deliuered hym to Pontius Pilate the debite.

THerfore that night was thoroughly watched of the heades of religion, with these wicked & cruell deedes. And when day drew nere, againe the chiefe prestes and the seniours of the people, went to counsayl against Iesus, to put hym to death. Therfore they deliuered him bound vnto Pontius Pilate president, to take punishment of the condemned man. Here Iudas that betrayed hym, seeing that he was now condemned, and that they went to extremities, moued with repentaunce, bysoughte agayne the thirtie pieces of syluer to the heades of the prestes and seniours of the people, saying: I haue synned because I haue betrayed the innocente bloud. Truely this mannes confession should haue moued the prynces myndes. He confesseth that it was doen by the infection of auarice, and he confesseth that he hath betrayed an innocent. But they vtterly raging, and thirsting after nothing els but innocent bloud, answered: what is that to vs, whether thou hast betrayed an yll doer or an innocente? Looke thou to that.

C Than Judas whiche had betrayed him, seing that he was condemned, repented hymselfe, and brought againe the thirtie plates of syluer to the chiefe priestes and elders, saying: I The texte.
haue sinned, betraying the innocente bloude, but they saide: what is that to vs? See thou to that: and he cast downe the syluer plates in the temple, and departed and hong himselfe.

Judas now repenting of his gayne, desired to breake of his bargayne, but they? cruelnie coulde by no meanes be mitigated. Judas therefore casting the pieces of syluer at their feete departed away, heaping and increasing his wicked dede with a moze wicked dede. He knowledged the greatnes of his sinne, but he knowledged not the greatnes of goddes mercy. Peter wepte bitterly, and obtayned mercy. Judas wept also, but with a desperate minde, rather thā a conuerted minde, and therfore he went aside, and hanged himselfe and burst in the middes, and his bowels fell out.

And the chiefe priestes toobe the pieces of syluer, and sayde: It is not lawfull to put them The texte.
into Corbon, because it is the price of bloude. And they tooke counsell, and bought with them a potters fielde to burye straungiers in. Wherefore the fielde is called the fielde of bloude vnto this day. Than was fulfilled that whiche was spoken by the Prophete Ieremye, saying.
They toobe thirtie siluer pieces, the price of hym that was valued, whome they bought of the children of Israell, and gaue them for the potters fielde, as the lorde appoynted me.

After this the heades of the priestes went to counsayl agayne, and that they?
cruelties mighte be the better knowen to all menne, they dyd nothing without a common counsell. They consulte to what vse the thirtye pieces of syluer shoulde goe, whiche Judas had cast at they? feete. And being menne of auke-warde religion hauing no religion nor feare in killing of an innocente, who had doone so muche for them: It is not lawfull (q they) to put this money into Corbon, that is, emong the gyftes of the temple, whiche they woulde haue esteemed and regarded religiously. For it is the price of bloude. But the holines of the temple must not be polured with bloud. And in the meane season, they dysclose they? vngraciouse conscyence, confessyng hym to bee inno-cente, whose betraymente they had boughte. Therefore because that they all shoulde bee partakers of the synne, they counselled together, and with that money they bought a grounde of a certayn potter for godly vses, that straungiers mighte be buried there, as though they woulde haue recompenced the sinfull dede that they had in hande, with thys good dede. And yet by thys meanes they prouyded very yll for they? good name. For they coulde not by any other meanes, moze blase abrode they? wickednes. For the thyng is come to suche a common saying, that at this daye that grounde is called of the Syrians, Acheldema, that is to saye, the grounde of bloude. Neyther was thys thing done by chaunce, for Hieremie prophecied that it shoulde come to passe:
and they tooke thirtie pieces of syluer, the price of him that was prised, whome they boughte of the children of Israell, and they gaue them for the grounde of a potter, as the lorde appoynted me.

Jesus stode before the debitie, and the debitie asked hym, saying: Arte thou the king of Iewes? Jesus sayeth vnto hym: Thou sayest. And whan he was accused of the chiefe priestes The texte.
and elders he aunswered nothing. Than sayde pilate vnto him: hearest thou not how many witnesses they laye agaynste thee? And he aunswered hym to neuer a woorde, insomuch that the debitie maruayled greatly.

Therfore whan Jesus stode before the president as giltie, they accused hym busely of many thinges, spe aking nothing in the meane season of blasphemy, of the reply vpon of the temple defyled and broken, and of the cummyng of the sonne of man, with the whiche thinges they knew that Pilate, passing litle of suche superdition, wouldbe litle mourd: They leye in other fayned faultes whiche might sturre the prieste ntes minde agaynste Jesus, saying: we haue founde this man goyng about to subuert our nacion, and forbidding tributes to be geuen vnto Ceasar, and saying that he is Christe the kyng. Pylate hearing mencyon of the kyng, because thys semed to touche Ceasar demaunded of Jesus. Jesus. Arte thou the kyng of Jewes? Jesus lesse he shoulde seeme prouide of the kyngdome, he woulde make no aunswere, sayeth: Thou sayeste: not vtterlye denying that he was king, but yet adding that hys kingdome is spirituall, & not worldlye, that it perrayneth nothyng to Ceasar or Herode. Agayne when hys accusers called vpon the matter. Pilate desirying to get out of hym, wherby he mighte bee delyuered: Heareste thou not (sayd he) howe sore faultes they laye agaynst thee? But vnto these Jesus aunswered vtterly nothyng, insomuche as the president maruelled greatly, that an innocent man in daunger of death, did kepe silence with so great meekenesse. Pylate perceiuyng by the countenaunce and behauiour of Jesus, that he was farre from suspicion of desiryng of the kyngdome, sayeth vnto the heades of the priestes and they: folowers: I fynde no deadly offence in this man. But they were the more hote and behemente, saying: he is a sedityouse manne, he hath styred the people with hys doctrine, walkyng ouer all Jewry, begynnyng from Galile vnto thys place. Pilate perceiuyng that Jesus was innocente, but that the priestes and the Scribes went about that they: purpose of enuie and malice, and therfore seekyng occasyon to deliuer Jesus, or at the leaste to sende hym from the courte: whan he herarde the name of Galyle, he asked hym what countrey manne he was: and when he knewe that he came oute of the coastes of Galyle, where Herode had rule and imperie, he sente hym agayne vnto Herode, who than, as it happened, was at Hierusalem. Truely Herode seeyng Jesus, was very glad. For of long time he desyred to see Jesus, because the fame wente that he did wonderfull thynges. Therfore he hoped wel that he wouldе worke some miracle before hym also. And whan Herode asked hym questyons of manye thynges, Jesus aunswered hym nothyng, who came not for: this purpose to delight the curiositie of princes, but to see and prouyde for the health of men. And wheras he was accused before hym for many causes, and aunswered nothyng, Herode contemned him, with his garde: and putting vpon him a white garment in skorne, sente hym agayne to Pilate. And by this occasion Pilate and Herode were made frendes wheras before they were at strife. Therefore Pylate callyng together the heades of the priestes, the magystrates, and the people, protested that he had founde none offences in Jesus whiche they obiected agaynste hym: and that Herode also had sente hym awaye as innocente, whiche he wouldе not haue dooen, yf he had iudged hym in daunger of a capitall crime. And to pacifye the enuie of the Jewes, I will reforme him (sayd he) and let him goe.

The text. At that feaste, the debite was wont to deliuer vnto the people a prisoner, whome they wouldе desire. He had than a notable prisoner, called Barrabas. Wherefore whan they were gathered together, Pilate sayde: Whether will ye that I geue loose vnto you Barrabas, or Jesus whiche is called Christe? For he knewe that for enuie, they had delyuered him.

And

And whan he could nothing preuayle by these woordes, he seketh an other occasion to delyuer Jesus. There was a custome emong the Jewes that vpon that holy day, for religions sake, the president should set at libertie some one of them whiche were kept in holde. He had fast in holde at that tyme a certayne notable and famous theefe, named Barrabas, whiche name he knewe was hated of the people. Therfore calling the Jewes vnto him, he asked them whether they would haue geuen them, and pardoned, Barrabas, or Jesus: hoping that in comparison of so famouse, and so strong, and violente a theefe, they would rather deliuer Jesus.

¶ Whan he was sette downe to geue iudgement, his wife sente vnto him, saying: Haue thou nothyng to doo with that iuste man. For I haue suffered manye thynges thys daye in my slepe, because of hym. And the chefe preestes and elders perswaded the people, that they should aske Barrabas and destroy Jesus. The presidente saped, and answered vnto them: whiche of the twoo will ye that I lette loose vnto you? They sayde, Barrabas. Pilate sayde vnto them: what shall I doo then with Jesus which is called Christe? They all sayde vnto him: Let him be crucified. The president sayde, what euill hath he done? But they cryed the more, saying: Let him be crucified. The texte.

But the president sitting agayne in iudgement, his wife sendeth vnto him one that shoulde saye to hym in her name, that he shoulde not contaminate hym selfe with the bloude of the innocente, saying that she was vexed that nyghte with horrible visions for Jesus sake. And thys chaunced not without cause, but by the ordinaunce of god, that there should yet be some of whome Jesus should haue testimonie of his innocencie. For that was very expedient for all men to knowe, that hys deathe was freely bestowed to redeme vs. And whereas the people were in doubte, whether of both they might desire to be geuen vnto them, it came to passe by the counsell of the preestes and the senyoures, that they asked Barrabas, that Jesus in his place myghte bee kylled. Suche is the iudgemente, and thys is the kyndnes of the people: thys is the counterfeyted religion of the preestes, and the elders. It was a matter of religion to them to enter into the courte of Pilate that they mighte eate theyr paschall Lambe beeyng pure and cleane, and it was no matter of relygyon with suche raging madnes to put hym to deathe, whiche was innocente, and throughly tryed with so many vertues and benefites towarde them. Pylate therefore proposed vnto them agayne, whether they would haue Barrabas or Jesus lette at libertie. They cryed vnto hym: Barrabas. Pylate agayne sayde: Than what shall I doe with Jesus whiche is called Christe? Truthyng that they would bee content with some more gentle punishement. But they cryed with a greate consente of voyces, let hym bee crucifyed. Thys kynde of punishmente, was bothe cruell and very slaunderouse, and shamefull. Agayne (of Pylate) shall I crucifie an innocente? what hath he deserued? I fynde nothyng in him worthy death: Therefore I will chastice hym, and let hym goe. With these woordes the madnes of the people was more styrred, crying out: vp with him, vp with him, crucify the man.

¶ Whan Pilate sawe that he coulde preuayle nothyng, but that more busynes was made, he toke water and washed his handes, before the people, saying: I am innocent of the bloud of this iuste person, see you to it. And all the people answered and sayde: Hys bloud be vpon vs, and oure children. Than let he Barrabas loose vnto them, and tourned Jesus and deliuered hym to be crucifyed. The texte.

Pylate perceyuyng that prouyng all wayes and meanes he preuayled nothyng, but that the tumulte of the people was styrred vp more, he assoyled Iesus before that he condemned hym. For in the presence of the people he toke water and washed hys handes, saying: I am innocente from the bloude of this iuste manne, ye be the authours of his deathe, and not I: the vengeaunce of the innocent bloude shall lyght vpon youre head. Yet the vnhappie Iewes were not feated with thys saying, but the whole people cryed out altogether. Let hys bloude lighte vpon vs, and vpon our chyldren. They wished destruccyon to them and to theyr succeſſoures. But Chryste more gentle towarde them than they were themselues, hath repelled none from pardone and forgeuenes so that they doe repente. For many afterwardes dyd worshyppe the Crosse of Chryste, whiche than cryed in the multytude, vp with hym, vp with hym, crucyfie hym. Therefore Pylate ouercome with theyr stiffe madnes, gaue vnto them Barrabas the authour of sedicyon, and a murderer, and condemned by all mennes iudgementes, yea, before iudgemente. But after the maner of Rome, whan Iesus was scourged, he deliuered him to be crucifyed.

The texte. ¶ Than the souldiers of the presidente toke Iesus in the common hall, and gathered to him al the compauny. And they stripped him, and put on him a purple robe, and platted a crowne of thornes, and put it on his head, and a reede in his ryghte hande, and bowed the knee before him and mocked hym, saying: All hayle the kyng of Iewes. And whan they had spit on hym they tooke the reede, and smote hym on the head. And after they had mocked hym, they tooke of agayne the robe, and put on him his owne garmentes, and toke him away to crucifie him.

Than the souldiers of the presidente, after that they had receiued Iesus in the courte, gathered the whole garde about hym, cruelly to take theyr pleasure by mocking of the innocent, partely folowyng theyr owne naughtye dispocyon, partely prouoked by the Iewes. And because they hearde, that he made himselfe king of the Iewes, they in maner hitting him in the teeth, because being such an abiect he wolde proudely clyme vp to a kyngdome, they spoyled him of hys owne garmentes, and put vpon hym a purple garmente, that is to saye a kyngly robe. After that in the stede of a dyademe, they sette a crowne vpon hys heade made of thornes. In the stede of a scepter they gaue hym a reede in hys right hande. And nowe as saluting theyr newe kyng, they kneele downe before him and mocke hym, saying: Hayle king of Iewes. Nor beyng contente with these despites, they spit vpon hym and stryke hys heade crowned with thornes with the reede that they gaue hym in stede of a mace. And whan they omytted no maner of despyte, he suffered all thynges with great meekenes, to shewe vnto hys a perfecte exaumple of patience. Therefore after that the souldiers had satisfyed the myndes and the eyes of the company with all kindes of mockes and skornes, they plucke of his robe agayne and put on hys owne apparell, that he mighte be the better knowen of all menne.

The texte. And as they came out, they founde a man of Cyren named Symon, him they compelled to beare hys Crosse. And they came to the place, whiche is called Golgatha, that is to saye, a place of dead mennes sculles: and gaue him vineger to drinke, mingled with gall. And whan he had tasted therof, he wolde not drynke.

Than they bring furth Iesus out of the courte, bearing his crosse. And as they wente, they founde one Symon a Cyrenyan, whome they forced to beare the crosse of Iesus, and they came into the place where he shoulde be crucifyed, whiche of the Syreans is called Golgatha, that is, the place of Caluarie, because it was horrible with bones and sculles of them that were put to death.

here that no parte of hys body shoulde bee rent from tormenting, or that no mocking or skornyng should be let passe, they offered him a cup of drinke tempered with vineger and gall, that it myghte be fulfylled whiche is written in the prophecye: They gaue me gall to eate, and in my thyrste they gaue me vineger to drynke. And whan Jesus had tasted, he wolde not drynke.

The texte. Whan they had crucyfyed hym, they parted his garmentes, and cast lottes, that it myghte be fulfilled whiche was spoken by the prophete. They deuyded my garmentes emong them, and vpon my vesture dyd they caste lottes. And they sate and watched hym there, and set vp ouer his heade the cause of hys deathe written. This is Jesus the kyng of the Jewes. Than were there crucyfied with him two theues, one on the righte hande and another on the lefte.

But after that they had crucified him, they deuided emong them the garmentes of Jesus. As for hys coate whiche was so wouen that it coulde not be rypped, they cast lottes: that the saying of the Prophet might be fulfilled. They deuyded my garmentes emong them, and vpon my coate they caste lottes. And syttyng by the crosse they kepte hym, that no man shoulde take hym awaye. Also a title in mockage was sette vpon the crosse: Thys is Jesus the kyng of Jewes. The whiche notwithstanding was more honourable than the Jewes coulde suffer. For they were in hande with Pilate that this title might be corrected, and it shoulde not be put, kyng of Jewes, but he made hym selfe kyng of Jewes. And in thys thyng onely they suffered Pylate to haue the higher hande. Also this was procured of the Jewes, that two theues shoulde be crucified with hym, so that Jesus beyng in the myddest, shoulde haue one on the righte hande, and an other on the lefte hande: that he might be taken of all men, both payne himselfe, and a deceiuer, and lyke vnto them with whome he was matched.

The texte. They that passed by, reuyled hym, waggyng theyr heades, and saying. Thou that destroyest the temple of God, and buyldest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe. If thou arte the sonne of god, come downe from the crosse. Lykewise also the hyghe priestes and the Scrybes, and elders mocked hym, saying: He saued other, hymselfe he cannot saue. If he bee the kyng of Israell, let him come downe nowe from the crosse, and we will beleue hym. He trusted in god, let hym deliuer hym nowe, yf he will haue hym. For he sayde, I am the sonne of God. The theues also whyche were crucified with him, cast the same in his teeth.

The crueltie of the Jewes was not yet satysfyed and filled with these so greate mischiefes. They scorne and reuile him beyng crucifyed, and passing by, they railed on him, and shaking theyr heades, they mocked him, saying: Ie on thee, art thou he that hurlest down the temple of God, and in three dayes makest it vp agayne? Thou didest promise healthe to others, now saue thy selfe. Thou didest boast thee to be the sonne of God, now than come down from the crosse. Likewise also the heades of the prestes, with the Scrybes and the semoures of the people mocked him and reuyled him: he gaue healthy vnto others, now he cannot preserue himselfe. If he be the kyng of Israel, as he wolde appere, let him declare now what he can doe, let him come downe from the crosse, and we will beleue hym. He trusted in god, whome he craked to be hys father, if he loue him, let him nowe deliuer hym. And that of euery syde the most innocente Jesus might be arayed with reuylynges, the theues also felowes with hym in punishmente, in lyke manner rebuked hym. The whiche all Jesus suffered with stille and strong patience, to bring to passe and offer for al men that healthfull sacrifice. He kepte still the diuine power, and sette furthe the whole nature humaine to al maner of paynes and tormentes. And he did not requite or reuenge so cruell reuylyng bestowed vpon hym, as he was dying, keping more bitter then the crosse it selfe. insomuche that he prayed vnto hys father, for the souldyers and the Iewes that skorned hym: and one of the theuys repentyng himselfe, he receyued into his paradise.

The texte. From the fyrst houre was there darkenes ouer all the lande, vntyll the .ix. houre. And about the .ix. houre Jesus cryed with a loude voyce, sayng: Dely, Dely, Lamazabarthanye, that is to say: my god, my god, why haste thou forsaken me? Some of them that stoode there when they hearde that, sayde: This man calleth for Helias. And furthwith one of them ranne, and toke a sponge, and when he had filled it full of vyneger, he put it on a reede, and gaue it hym to drinke. But other sayde: let be, let vs see whether Helias will come, and delyuer hym. Jesus, when he had cryed agayne with a loude voyce, yelded vp the ghost.

The very Sonne felte the punyshmente of the innocente, and coulde not abyde to beholde so wycked a dede. He couered hys face with a blacke cloude, and all that countreye was couered with darkenesse, from syre of the clocke, vntyll nyne. And yet in the meane season, the darkenesse of the Iewes hartes coulde not bee shaken of. Further aboute nyne of the clocke, Jesus cryed with a greate voyce, saying thys sentence oute of the psalme. Dely, Dely, Lamazabarthany, my God, my God, why haste thou forsaken me? And certayne that stode by, and hearyng afarre of, Dely, and supposyng that he had called to Dely for helpe, sayde: Thys felowe calleth for Dely. Let vs see whether he will helpe hym. Than Jesus to shewe that it was a true deathe whiche he suffered for all menne, cryed: I am athirste. For thys is wonte to folowe vpon woundes and sheding of bloude, whiche oftentymes is a punyshemente more sore and paynfull than death. And one runnyng to hym, put vnto his mouth as he hanged, a sponge full of vineger, putte vpon the toppe of a reede. Jesus thirsted sore for the health of menne, but the Iewes offered hym nothyng but vineger and gall. Therefore he dyd forbeare from it when he had tasted, saying: It is consummate and fynyshed, sygnifyeng that nothyng was omytted whiche did perrayne to the manner of the sacrifyce. And anone to declare that he lefte this life of hys owne accorde, after that he had commended hys spyrite vnto the father, he cryed with a loude voyce, and bowing down his head, died.

The texte. And beholde the vayle of the temple did rente in two partes, from the top to the bottom, and the earthe quaked, the stones dyd rente, and graues dyd open, and manye bodyes of sayntes which slepte, arose and went oute of the graues after hys resurrection, and came into the holy citie, and appered to many. When the Centurion, and they that were with him watchyng Jesus, sawe the earthquake, and those thinges which happened, they feared greatly, saying: Truely this was the sonne of god.

And furthwith all thinges dyd testifye the effectuall death of the lorde Jesus. For the vayle of the temple whiche deuyded the holye place from the other parte of the temple, of his owne accorde, was cut in two partes, declaring that the shadowes of Moyses lawe, hereafter shoulde banyshe away, at the bryght light of the ghospell. Furthermore the earth did quake, and the stones brake a sunder, reprouing the Iewes for their vnuncyble hardnes of hearte. The graues did open, and many bodyes of holy menne whiche were dead, did reuyue and lyue agayne, and goyng out of the graues after the resurrection of Christe, came into the holye citie of Jerusalem, and appered vnto many, beeyng the preachers and folowers of the resurrection of Jesus. Furthermore the Captayne and hys seruauntes whiche were there to keepe Jesus, perceyuing the earthquake, the darkenesse, the breakyng of the stones and other wonders, were greatly afeard, saying: Truely this was the sonne of god.

And

¶ And many women were there, beholdyng a farre of, whiche folowed Jesus from Galile, mynystryng vnto hym, amoiig whiche was Marie Magdalene, and Marie the mother of James and Joses, and the mother of the chyldren of Zebedee. When the euen was come, there came a riche man of Aramathia named Joseph, whiche also was Jesus disciple. He wente vnto Pylate, and begged the holy bodye of Jesus. Than Pylate commaunded the body to be deliuered. And whan Joseph had taken the body, he wrapped it in a cleane clothe and put it in his new toumbe whiche he had hewen out of the rocke, and rolled a great stone to the dooze of the sepulchre, and departed. And there was Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie sitting ouer against the sepulchre. The xxvii. chapter.

There were also many women lookyng a farre of, vpon the thynges that were doen, whiche had folowed Jesus from Galile, mynystryng vnto hym necessaries, among whome there was Marie Magdalene, and Marie the mother of Jacob and Joseph, and also the mother of the sonnes of Zebedee, and diuers other with them. And when the nyghte drewe nere, a certayne riche Captayne of Aramathia called Joseph, who also was the disciple of Jesus, wente vnto the presidente, askyng of hym the body of Jesus. Pylate maruepling if that he were dead, a man of lustie age, and not hauyng hys legges broken, as soone as he knew certaynely of the captayne that he was dead, he commaunded the body to be geuen vnto him.

He receyued it, and wrapped it in a cleane shete, and layde it in a newe graue, the whiche he had grauen in an whole stone. And rollyng a greate stone to the dooze of the graue, he departed away: And thys was doneby the prouidence of God, that they shoulde vse no cruelte vpon the dead karcas, or that no man shoulde dygge by the graue and steale hym awaye. And when the other were departed, Marie Magdalene, and an other woman contynued there syttyng ouer against the sepulchre, and markyng the place where they layde the body, that at conuenient time they myght doe the duties of annoynting to it, and the lorde had styred vp their great diligence to this intente that the beliefe of his resurrection might be more certayne.

¶ The nexte daye that folowyth the Parasceue, the hyghe priestes and Pharisees came together vnto Pilate, saying: Sir we remember that this deceyuer sayde whyle he was yet aliue: after three dayes I will rise agayne: commaunde therefore that the sepulchre be made sure vntyl the thyrde daye, leste his disciples come and steale him away, and say vnto the people he is risen from the dead. And the last errour shall be worse then the first. Pylate sayde vnto them: Ye haue a watche, goe your waye, make it as sure as ye can. And they went and made the sepulchre sure with watche men, and sealed the stone.

But the daye after the Parasceue, whiche is the daye of preparation, agayne the heades of the priestes and the pharisees come vnto Pilate, confirming the truethe of the resurrection, whiles they goe about to lette it, and they saye vnto the president: Sir we remember that this deceiuer being yet alyue, sayde that he would rise agayne after three dayes. Therfore commaunde the sepulchre to be kepte vnto the thyrde day, leste his disciples come, and steale away hys body, and persuade the people that he is risen agayne. Which if it come to passe, we shall preuayle nothyng, but the latter errour shalbe worse then the fyrste. Pylate sayeth vnto them: ye haue a watche, goe and kepe as ye knowe. But they, whiles they goe about to stoppe hym that woulde tyse agayne, they encreasle the miracle, and the faythe of the resurreccyon. They sette kepers and made sure the sepulchre, they sealed the stone also, whiche dyd shut the mouth of the Sepulchre, leste there mighte be any decepte in the kepers also.

The texte. And vpon the euen of the Sabbothes whiche ſprynggeth in the firſt day of the Sabbothes Marie Magdalene and the other Marie came for to ſee the Sepulchre. And beholde there was a greate earthquake. For the Aungell of the Lorde came downe from heauen, and came and rolled downe the ſtone from the doore, and ſat vpon it. And hys countenaunce was like vnto the lightening, and his garment white as ſnowe. And for feare of him, the keepers were aſtonied, and were made as dead men.

AND when the euen of the firſte Sabbothe dape was come, after the ende of the whiche, was the morpng of the dape folowpng. whiche was the fyrſte dape of the weeke next enſuing, Marie Magdalene, and the other Marie, they; (wete ſpices prepared ouer night, went agapne in the morpng to the Sepulchre, to ſee what was dooen, and to enbaulme the bodye of Jeſus. And there was a great yearthquake. And whan the women deuyſed emong themſelues, howe they mighte remoue the ſtone from the Doore of the graue (for it was to greate to bee remoued by the ſtrength of women) beholde the aungel of the lorde came downe from heauen, and remoued the ſtone from the dooze of the graue, and than ſate vpon it. And the countenaunce of the aungell was lyke vnto the lyghtening, and hys garmentes ſhinyng as white as ſnowe. The keepers of the Sepulchre loking vpon him, were afrayde and ſo amaſed that they laye aſtonied like dead men.

The texte. And the aungell made aunſwere vnto the women, and ſayde: Feare ye not: For I knowe that ye ſeke Jeſus whiche was crucified, he is not here, for he is riſen as he ſayde. Come ſee the place, where the Lorde was layde. And go quickely, and tell his diſciples that he is riſen agayne from deathe. And beholde he goeth before you into Galile, there ye ſhall ſee hym. Loe I haue tolde you.

But the aungell comforted the women, ſaying: Theſe men worthyly be amaſed at the glory of the reſurrection, whiche doe perſeuer and continue ſtyll in they; vnbeliefe: But feare not ye, for I know that ye ſeeke Jeſus who was crucifyed. Nowe he hath left hys ſepulchre, and hath perfourmed that he promiſed to do. This is the mornyng of the third day. Therfore he is riſen. Come and ſee the place, whiche beyng voyde of the boodye, hath yet a ſygne where the body laye: It hath alſo the apparell of the bodye, the lynnen wherein he was wrapped. Lette theſe thynges make you beleue, yf ye beleue not me. But ſpedely departe hence, and tel theſe thynges that ye haue ſeene to the other diſciples, being ſadde for the deathe of the lorde, that he is ryſen agapne. Whome if ye deſire to ſee, beholde, he will goe before you into Galile, like as before his death he promiſed. There ye may ſee hym alyue, for whome ye mourned when he was dead. Loe I haue tolde you before.

The texte. And they departed quickely from the ſepulchre with feare and great ioye, and did runne to bring his diſciples worde. And as they went to tel his diſciples, beholde, Jeſus met them ſaying: All hayle. And they came and helde his feete and worſhipped him. Than Jeſus ſayde vnto them: Be not afrayde: goe and tel my brethren, that they goe into Galile, and there they ſhall ſee me.

And whan they had looked in the voyde graue, whiche they had founde ſhut, ſpedely they returned, partely fearefull for the greatnes of the miracle, partely rauyſhed with greate ioye, for the deſyre and hope to ſeethey; Lorde alyue agayne, and they runne to communicate thys ioye to the diſcipples of Jeſus.

And

And as they wente, Jesus met them, that they myghte tell the moze certayne tidinges. And to encourage them being fearefull, he sayde: All hayle. They leped him. Agayne Jesus to take from them all feare, that they mighte the better perceiue the thynges that shoulde be spoken, he sayeth: feare not, goe and tell my brethren the thinges that ye haue seene, and bid them go forward into Galile, there they shall see me.

The texte

¶ Whan they were gone, beholde some of the keepers came into the citie, and tolde the chiefe of the priestes all thynges that had happened. And they assembled togethere with the elders and tooke counsell, and gaue muche money to the souldiers, saying: Saye ye that hys disciples came in the nyghte, and stole hym awaye, whan ye were aslepe. And if thys come to the presidentes eares, we wyll perswade him, and saue you harmeleße. But they tooke the money, and did as they were taught, and this saying is noysed amõg the Jewes until this day.

And when they were departed, to thintent the trueth of the resurrection myght be confirmed also by the testymonie of the aduerſaries, certayne of the keepers, leuing the Sepulchre, went vnto Jerusalem, and tolde the heades of the priestes, what thinges had bene dooen, howe the sepulchre beyng shut and sealed, the body was not founde. And howe the aungel being of meruelouſe beautie, remoued the stone, and of the earthequake, and howe they were amaſed for feare. And how they hearde the aungell talking with the women. Whan the priestes hearde these thinges of the keepers, they went to counsel agayne with the Sentours: forasmuche as the thyng was to manyfeste to bee doubted, they bye a lye of the keepers for money, lyke as before they boughte the helpe of the traytour for money: but that they paye more for the labours of the lyers, than of the traytoure: keepe close (ye they) the thynges that ye haue seene, but make a bruite abrode, that hys disciples came in the night & stale him awaye, whan ye were aslepe. And if thys inuencyon and slepyght be brought vnto your president, we will perswade hym, and deliuer you from all daunger of this matter. Therefore the souldyers receyuyng money, dyd as they were instructed, and thys trieayng and payne sleight was beleued of the people. For thys rumoure is bruited abrode vnto this day emong the vnbeleuing Jewes.

The texte

¶ Than the eleuen disciples wente away into Galile, into the mountayne where Jesus had appoynted them. And whan they sawe hym, they worshipped hym. But some doubted. And Jesus came and spake to them, saying: all power is geuen to me in heauen and yearth.

Nowe the eleuen disciples monished of the women, wente forewarde into Galile, and went vp vpon the hyll whiche Jesus had appoynted them. There he shewed hymselfe. They saw and knew hym to be their Lord, and honoured him, as now being on high and in heauen. Notwithstandyng, some yet doubted, vntil they were made to beleue, with many and very certeyn argumentes. Albeit they doubting was profitable for the certaintie of oure beleefe. Therfore Jesus drawyng nere vnto them, dyd not onely offer hymselfe to bee seene and touched presently, but also spake vnto the with hys knowen and accuſtomed voyce: declaring that by his death, he had obteyned a kingdome & authoritie both in heauen and in earth. In heauē, where euer he reigned with the father: in earth where hereafter he shoulde reigne, not by tirannical powers and aides, but through fayth of beleuers: and that he shoulde dispose the office of this euangelicall kyngdome vnto his disciples, who shoulde folowe his steppes, committing vnto them the office to preache the Ghospell, not onely to the Jewes, but also to all nacions: and also authoritie to baptise, and by the holy ghoste, to forgeue synnes to all menne, that wyll professe an euangelycal lyfe with a sincere hearte: and to enstructe and frame them, not after the lawe of Moyses, no: after the constitucions of the Phariseis, but after his preceptes, vntyll they wered and grewe vp vnto the perfeccyon of the wyll dome of the ghospell. And that they should nothing dystrust, for: that he should not be continually conuersaunt with them, he promiseth that they: felowshyp shal neuer fayle, and that he will neuer forsake hys, but be alwayes presente with hys in spirite and power vnto the laste ende of the worlde: All power (& he) is geuen me in heauen and earth. Ye haue sene me by the reason of the weakenes of the flesh, hungrie, thyrste, weary, nedy, despised, taken, bounde, spetted vpon, condemned, beaten, crucifyed, couered with all kyndes of spytefulnes, and in maner detect vnder the loweste sorte of menne. Because I haue suffered all these thinges willingly and of myne owne accorde for: the health of man: my father hath rapsed me from deathe, and rewarded me with the glory of immortalitie, and hath lifted me vp to the felowshyp of hys kyngdome, and hath submytted vnto my power and rule, all thinges that be in heauen and earth. Ye haue an authour whome ye ought not to distrust, ye haue a Lorde, of whome ye ought not to repente.

The texte. Goe ye therefore and teache all nacyons, baptise them in the name of the father and the sonne, and the holye ghoste, teaching them to kepe all thinges whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you.

Lyke as I dyed for: the healthe of all men: so there is no nacion whiche belongeth not to my righte. It shall be youre parte to get vnto me, as muche as lyeth in you, all kinde of men. But ye shall not gette them by weapons or war, but by the same meanes that I got vnto me this right, by wholsome doctrine, by a lyfe worthy and meete for: the ghospell, with free well doyng, with pacyent sufferyng of illes. Goe ye therfore as trustie Imbassadoures, & trusting me youre authour, reache firste the Jewes, than the nerte neighboures vnto them, afterwardes all the nacions of the whole worlde. Teache what they ought to beleue of me, and what they ought to trust of me. First to knowledge the heauenly father, the maker, the orderer, and the restorer of al thinges visible and inuisible. Whose power no man can resist, because he is almightie, whose knowledge no man doeth deceiue, because hee seeth all thynges: whose iudgemente no man shall escape: from whome, as from the fountayne, rumneth all goodnes in the worlde. To whome is due all honour, prayse, and thankes geuing. They must knowledge also his sonne Jesus, by whome through hys eternall and vnsearchable counsell, he hath purposed to deliuer mankinde from tiranny of sinne and deathe, and by the doctryne of the ghospell, to open the waye vnto euerlasting felicitie. Who for: this cause by his will, came downe into the earth, and was borne very manne, of the virgyn Marie, and beyng man long conuersaunt emong menne, taught the heauenly philosophy, which only maketh menne blessed.

And being an innocent, was afflicted and punished for: the sinnes of the whole worlde, and put to death vpon the crosse. And layde in his graue, the third day he arose agayne according to the prophecies of the Prophetes. After that, beyng conseruaunt many dayes with his disciples, and the trueth of his resurrection declared by sure argumentes, he wente vp agayne into heauen, whereas partaker of the kyngdome and glory of his father, he sitteth on the righte hande of his father alwightie. Once he shall come agayne into the worlde, not lowe and abiecte as before, but with the diuine maiestie: not a sauioure, but a iudge, bothe of those whome that day he shall finde alyue, and of those whome nowe being dead, the trumpe of the ghospell shall sodainly call agayne to life: that by his ineuitable iudgemente, euery man may receiue rewarde worthy and mete for his doinges. They must knowledge also the holy ghoste, whome I haue nowe partely geuen vnto you, and will geue more plentiously, after that I come into heauen, whose secrete inspiracion shal coumforte, teache, and strengthen the mindes of them that trust in me: and being powred into the hartes of all men, shall glue and conferer them together with mutuall charitie, as many as professe hartely the fayth of the ghospell, of what nacyon soeuer they come of. And if a man doth sinne any thing through the weakenes of mā, he shal obteyne forgeuenes of his sinnes, so that he doth not seuer himselfe frō the league & felowship of the holy cumpany. And whosoeuer ioyneth himselfe vnto this league, all the sinnes of his former life shall be forgeuen him freely. Finally lest any man shoulde thynke the rewardes of good dedes to be despised in this life, or shoulde goe aboute vengeaunce agaynst yll doers, let them knowe that this hereafter shall come to passe in them, whiche ye see doone in me. The dead shall liue agayne, and euery soule shall be restored to her owne body. The whiche as soone as it shall bee doen, whosoeuer shall belong to this holy felowship, and stiche constantly vnto me, shal be translated with me vnto euerlasting life, to be partakers of felicitie, which were felowes and partakers of afflictyons. After that ye haue taughte these thynges, yf they beleue the thinges that ye haue taught, yf they repent them of their former lyfe, if they be ready to embrace the doctrine of the ghospell, then dippe them in water, in the name of the father, the sonne, and the holy goste, that by this wholy signe, they may trust themselues to be deliuered from the filthines of al their sinnes, freely through the benefite of my death, and nowe to be chosen to the number of the children of God. Lette no manne be circumcysed, let no manne bee baptized in the name of Moyses, or of any manne. Let them all knowe to whome they be bounde for their health, vpon whome they oughte wholy to hang. Let them not bee burdened with the ceremonyes of Moyses, or of manne. Lette this token be sufficient for all menne that cumme to the profession of the ghospell, whiche is easye to bee had in euery place. But leste any manne myghte thinke it sufficient to saluacion, once to be baptysed, and to professe the fayethe of the ghospell, they must be taughte agayne by what meanes they may kepe their innocence, by what meanes they may goe forwarde to perfeccyon of the euangelicall godlines: I haue omitted nothyng whiche may make to the obteinyng of euerlasting health. And that heauenly spirite whiche ye shall receiue, will not suffer you to forget that whiche ye haue learned of me. Therefore whatsoeuer I haue commaunded you, deliuer ye the same to be kepte of them. I haue not prescribed vnto you the ceremonies of Moyses law, whiche like shadowes must now vanishe away at the light of the euangelicall trueth. I haue not prescribed vnto you pharisaicall constitutions, but those thinges, whiche onely bringeth true innocencie and godlines, and whiche onely maye make you derely beloued of God, and truely happy.

Baptising them in the name of the father, &c.

Therefore teache these thynges to them that professe my name not onely in woorde,

woꝛde but also in life, as I, whatsoeuer I taught, I perfourmed it in dede. Wherfore ye be doyng of these thynges, and whyles ye bring moꝛtall menne to heauen, the woꝛlde will ryse agaynste you, lyke as it rose agaynste me. For my spirite agreeth not with the spirite of thys woꝛlde, and my doctrine is wholy agaynst the affeccions of them, whiche loue the thinges that be of this woꝛld. They will ryse agaynste you with greate tumultes, but there is no cause why ye nede to distrust, though ye be but lowe and abiecte, vnlearned, weake, and fewe. I haue ouercome the woꝛlde, and ye shall ouercome thꝛough my helpe, I by myne ensample. Ye shal ouercome thꝛough my might, and not your owne, whatsoeuer is terrible in this woꝛlde.

The texte. ¶ And loe, I am with you alway, vntill the ende of the woꝛlde.

And although I shall take vp this body into heauen, because it is so expediente foꝛ you, yet I wil neuer foꝛsake you. For after that I shall ceasse to bee with you in body, than I shall be moꝛe effectually with you in my spirite. And I will be with you vnto the woꝛldes ende, but whan the woꝛldes ende shalbe, it pꝛofiteth not, noꝛ behoueth not you to know. In the meane season do what is commaunded you, euer ready agaynst that daye. Whiche whansoeuer it shal come, than ye also, your moꝛtalitie layed aparte, shal bee wholy with me, fellowes of my fathers kyngdome, whiche shall neuer haue ende.

FINIS.

To the moſt excellent and ver-tuous princeſſe quene Catherine, wyfe to our moſte gra-cious ſoueraigne Lorde, Henry the eyght, Kyng of England, Fraunce and Irelande, defendour of the faythe, and of the Churche of Englād, and alſo of Irelande, in earthe ſupreme heade, Thomas Key, her dayly Oratoure, wiſheth perpetuall felicitie.

Wōge the innumerable benefites whiche we haue receiued of almighty God, moſt worthye and excellent Princeſſe, there is none in myne opiniō for the whiche we are more bounden vnto his merciful good-neſſe, then for that it hath pleaſed hym more clearely to illumine vs of this age with the knowledge of his ho-ly woorde, then our forefathers and elders. For who knoweth not how long this realme hath bene miſera-bly ſeduced through ignorance of the Scriptures? Who, euen amonge the vplandiſhe, perceyueth not what intollerable abuſes haue bene vnder pretence of true religion, and Godlyneſſe, mayntayned in this Churche of Englande, tyll ſuche tyme ỹ God of his infinite mercy, ſent vs a newe Joſias, by whoſe righteous adminiſtracion, and Godly policie, the light of Gods worde that ſo many yeares before was here extincte, began to ſhyne agayne: to the vtter extirpation of falſe doctrine, the rote and chiefe cauſe of all ſuch abuſiōs. This Joſias is our moſte redoubted ſoueraigne Lorde Kyng Henry the eyght, a Prince garniſhed with ſo many excellent gyftes of grace, nature, & Fortune, that he is in very dede, & therfore moſte worthely called, the perfite mirroure, & pearle of all Chriſten Princes. To wade here in the prayſe of his princely qualities, & noble actes atchieued to Gods honoure, and the publique weale of this realme, is not my purpoſe, for that I knowe it to be an enterpryſe farre exceadyng the compaſſe of my ſymple learning, and barrayne eloquence: But onely to declare howe muche we are bounden, chiefly vnto God, and nexte vnto his moſte excellent Maieſtie, ỹ we haue the Scriptures in our mother tōgue, & are cured of our olde blindneſſe by the medicine of veritie. For nowe hauing our ſpirituall iyes opened, and daily receyuing into the ſame the cleare light of Gods woorde, we begyn to ſee, & perfectly to knowe our onely ſauiour Jeſus Chriſt: whome to knowe is euerlaſting lyfe and ſaluatiō. But ſo longe as the ſaide Scriptures were hyd, and kept from the knowledge of the people, fr we knewe Chriſt aryght: and none leſſe then they, who appeared to be the chiefe profeſſours of chriſtian religion. For what elſ is it to knowe Chriſt, but to knowe and confeſſe that of him onely, and by hym cummeth oure ſaluacion: that by hym oure good dedes are acceptable vnto almyghty God the father: that by him the fathers wrathe is appeaſed: that by him we be enfraunchiſed from the captiuitie and thraldome of the deuell: and to be ſhorte, that by hym we are adopted and chosen to be the children of God, and enheritours of the kyngdome of heauen: & who so knoweth Christ aryght, surely beleueth to attayne saluacio by him onely, who sayth: Cum vnto me all ye that do trauaile, and are charged, and I shall refresh you. The very office of Christ is to saue: & therfore he was called by the high wisdome of God (Jesu) that is as muche to say, as a sauiour, because (so sayth the angell in Mathew) he shall saue the people from their sinnes: So that it appeareth hereby how greatly they are deceiued that thinke to be saued by any other waye or meane then by Christ, or that make themselues quarter sauiours with him, ascribing any parte of their saluacio vnto their owne workes and deseruinges. Nowe how could Christ be knowen aright, that is to say, to be our onely sauioure and iustifier so long as the scriptures were shut vp, & kept from the people: And Legenda aurea, with such like trūperye lay open for them to passe the time withall, and reade in stede of the byble: For this cause chiefly, and also for lacke of good preachers, to preache and teache the truthe, it came to passe, that he was almost cleane out of knowledge in this realme, insomuche that (during the tyme of this great ignorannce and blyndes) many a thousand putte more confidence of soule healthe in workes that were but of mennes phantasying, as in pardons, in pilgrymages, in kyssing of relyques, in offeryng to saintes, in halowed beades, in numberyng of prayers, in mumblyng vp of psalmes not vnderstand, in the mercyes of those that called them selfes religious, and in other lyke thynges, disalowed by god, and his holy word, then in Christe thonly auctor, as is afore sayde, of mannes saluacion. But nowe that by the gracious permission of our sayde soueraigne Lorde, the scriptures are open for euery man to read soberly, and reuerently for his owne edifying in vertue and godly lyuing, it is right well knowen that the foresayd abusions were doctrines of Antichristes inuencion, and not of god: and that al such as teache any other waye or meane to attayne saluacio, then by hym who sayth: I am the waye & verite, are false teachers, seducers, and liers. Nowe do the commaundementes of God no lenger giue place, as they were wonte to do, vnto mans tradicios. Now haue we learned what is our dutie to God, & what obedience we owe vnto our prince, gods chief minister, and supreme head in earth of our churche & cōgregacion. Now is idolatry, hipocrisy, and superstition, cleane plucked vp by the rootes, and true religion euery where planted. Nowe is false doctrine exiled, & Gods worde truely set forthe and preached. Nowe hathe England for saken Antichrist of Rome, the greatest enemy of gods holy worde, with all his moste vngodly deuices, and diuilysshe inuencios. And all this came of the mere mercy and goodnes of almygty god towardes vs, who vndoubtedly for thaccomplishyng of his holy word, and the deliueraūce of vs his people out of captiuitie, ignorannce, and blyndnes, hathe rayled vp in oure tymes thi Christen Josias, and ioyned vnto the same by most lawfull matrimony youre noble grace, a Lady, beside other speciall gyftes, and singuler qualities, wholy geuen to ꝑ study of vertue and godlynesse. Wherfore all England hathe iuste occasion to reioyce at this youre graces honorable aduaunceiment, yea rather hyghly to thanke god that our moste gracious soueraigne hathe matched himselfe with so vertuous a Lady, in whome is the very expresse resemblance of all his maiesties excellent vertues, but specially of that his graces ardent zele, and deuocion in fauourying and setting forthe of Gods word, the mother of all ioyful prospe-

ritie. I manifest argument wherof besydes many other, is that your grace so muche desyreth to haue the Paraphrases of the renounied clerke Erasmus of Roterdame vpon the new testament (a worke very fruitefull and necessary for the true vnderstandyng of this parte of holy scripture) tourned into Englishe: and for the exploiture and spedy accomplishement of this your graces most Godly desyre, hath (as is sayde) commaūded certein well learned persōs to translate the sayde worke, the paraphrase vpon S. Marke excepted, which the right worshypfull maister Owen (a man of muche lerning, & no lesse honestie, and therfore worthyly Physician to the kynges moste royall person) moued me, your graces pleasure fyrst knowē, to go in hād withall, affirming that I should do a thyng right acceptable vnto your hyghnes, if I would diligently trauell therin. The whiche thing, being very desyrous to gratify your highnes, and with my poze seruice and diligence to further, as much as in me lay, ỹ godly purpose of the same, I right gladly promised him to do, trusting rather vpon the benigne acceptacion of your gracious goodnes, then vpon the slenderneſſe of my wytte & lerning farre vnable worthely to atchiue so weyghty an entreprise. For thauctour herof was a man of incomparable eloquēce: and therfore it is not possible for a person scarcely of meane learning (as I am) to set out euery thing specially in our English tongue being very barrain of wordes and phrases (I will not saye barbarous withall) so lyuely, & with like grace as he wrote it fyrst in the Latine. Wherfore I mynded nothyng lesse then to contend with him in ornate sprache, and eloquence: but haue done my diligent endeuour so to interprete the sayde worke, that it shoulde be bothe plaine and pleasaunte vnto the reader: and not onely that, but also to discharge the chiefest office of an interpretour, whiche is faythfully to translate, and expresse euery thing according to the true sence & meaning of thauctoure. If I haue, most vertuous Princesse, any where fayled thus to do, it hath bene rather for lacke of learning, and better knowledge, then of any good willand diligence. To speake here any thyng eyther in praise of thauctour of this present worke, or of the worke selfe, in myne opinion shall not be nedefull, for that thauctour is so muche renoumed for his excellencye in lerning, that my prayses can no more illustrate and set forthe his glory, then a candell (as the common prouerbe is) giue light vnto the sunne: and the great vtilitie of thother, cannot so well be set out by any mans prayse and commendacion, as it shall euidently appeare vnto them that wyll diligently rede and peruse it. If this my good will and endeuour maye be acceptable vnto your highnes, as the great fame of your bountye, and gracious goodnes putteth me in comforte it shalbe, I wyll hereafter, god assisting me, employ my whole study and labours in suche wise, ỹ the fruite therof shalbe more worthy to be presented vnto your noble grace, then this rude translation, the whiche I am bolde at this present tyme throughe thaffiaūce of your natural gentleneſſe to dedicate vnto the same.

I beseche almighty God long to prestrue our sayde soueraigne Lorde, your grace, and that moste conforteable flower of all England, noble Prince Edward,
in continuall honour,
ioy, and prosperitie.

¶ To the moste chriſtian prince Fraunces the Frenche kynge, the firſt of that name, Eraſmus of Roterodame ſendeth greting.

That I haue not tyll this day (moſt Chriſtiã kyng Fraũcis) enioyed the commoditee of your maieſties ſpeciall fauour and beneuolence towardes me, hathe neither ben thorowe my defaulte or negligẽce, neyther yet can ſ cauſe therof iuſtly be aſcribed vnto your excellency: but among ſondry lettes and impedimẽtes that hytherto hath chaunced, there hath none ſo muche enuied me this felicitie, as hathe this troublous and vnquiet worlde. For I haue euer loked when that in theſe long ſtormes and tempeſtes of warres, there woulde ſome fayre wether or clernes of peace ſhyne vpon vs out of one quarter or other. Neither haue I thought my ſelfe at any time the leſſe bounden of an hear vnto your bountefull goodnes, then if I had accepted whatſoeuer your grace of your princely liberalitie offered me. And I truſt ere it be lõge to haue an occaſion more euidently to teſtifye the earneſte zeale and good mynde I beare towardes your highnes.

In the meane whyle vntyll opoꝛtunitie ſhall ſerue me ſo to dooe, I haue thought good to ſende your grace the Paraphraſe vpõ the ghoſpell of Saiꝛnct Marke as an earneſt penny of this my promiſe. And where I was of my ſelfe very prone and redy thus to dooe, and as it were runnyng forwarde of mine owne accorde, the very kynes of the matier did alſo not a lytle excite and moue me therunto. For after I had dedicated Mathewe vnto myne owne naturall liege lorde Charles the emperoure: and Iohn (vpon whome by and by after I had finiſhed Mathewe I made lykewyſe a Paraphraſe) vnto Ferdynande his maieſties naturall brother: & Luke (whiche was the thyrde that I wente in hande withall) vnto the kyng of Englande: there remained there Marke, who ſemed to be lefte behynde for your grace, becauſe the fower goſpels ſhoulde be dedicated vnto the fower chiefe princes and rulers of the worlde. And god ſende grace that the ſpirite of the ghoſpell maye lykewyſe ioyne the heartes of you all fower together in mutuall amitie and concorde, as youre names are in this ghoſpell boke aptely conioyned. Some there be whiche extende the byſhoppe of Romes dominion euen vnto hell or purgatory: other ſome geue him impery and power ouer the aungels. And ſo farre am I frõ enuying him this preeminente auctoꝛitie, that I woulde wiſhe hym to haue a great deale more, but yet woulde I deſyre withall, that the worlde might once fele this his power, good and holſome, in ſettyng chriſtian Princes at one, and in conſeruing the ſame in peace and amitie, whiche haue a lõg ſeaſon with no leſſe diſhonoure, then ſlaughter and effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, warred one agaynſte a nother to the vtter decay of Chriſtes religion.

And all this whyle we curſe and banne the Turkes. But what pleaſaunter ſight can there be vnto the Turkes, (or yf any other natiõ there be of the miſcreaunces that are greater enemies vnto Chriſtes religion) then to ſe the ſtate of the moſte floriſhing and moſte puiſſaũt princes of all Europe, thus by reaſon of miſchie-

of miſchieuous diuiſion, to purſue eche other with mortall battaille. It will ſcarcely ſticke in my brayne that there is any ſo cruell a Turke who wyſheth more miſchiefe vnto Chriſten menne, the theſelues worke one an other. And all this whyle ariſeth there no peace maker which w his authoritie maye appeace this vngodly buſines and ruffling of the worlde, whereas there lacketh not prouockers and ſetters on ynowe, and ſuche as poure oyle (as it is in the olde prouerbe) vpon the fyer. I tis not my parte to make any ones title either better or worſe with my foreiudgement. I know eryght wel that euery one thinketh his owne cauſe moſte rightful and iuſte: I knowe alſo that in all ſuch iudgementes that ſame partye is euer woonte to haue more fauoure that defenderh himſelfe from iniury offred him, then he that offreth the wrong: but yet would I very fayne that all chriſtian princes, wouldе debate the matter tyght, and would well conſider with themſelues, how much he hathe gotten hereby, whatſoeuer he be, that had lieffer haue and embrace an vniuſt peace, then wage battaile be it neuer ſo iuſt and lawfull. What is more bryttle, more ſhorte, or more full of miſery and wretchednеſſe, then is this preſent lyfe of ours? I will not here ſpeake of ſo many kyndes of diſeaſes as reigne in the worlde, ſo many iniuries, ſo many caſualties, ſo many fatall calamities and miſaduentures, ſo many peſtilences, ſo many diuers kyndes of lyghtninges, ſo many yerthquakes, ſo many ſortes of fiers, ſo many ſluddes and inundacions of waters, with other like calamities out of all meaſure and numbre. For as mоgе all the euils that manner lyfe is vexed or troubled withall, there is none where of more miſchiefe and hurte enſueth, then of battaile, the which yet doeth muche more miſchiefe vnto meunes maners, then it doeth vnto theyr ſubſtance or bodyes. For he doeth the leſſe harme of bothe, that bereaueth a man of his life, then he that bereaueth him of his vertuous and good minde. Neyther is battayle euer the leſſe deteſtable & leſſe to be abhorred, becauſe the moſte parte of the euils there of lyghteth vpon poore folkes neckes, ſuche as are of lowe ſtate and degree, as of husbandmen, crafters menne, and wayfaryng men. For the Lorde of all Jeſus Chriſte, ſhedde no leſſe blonde for the redemption of ſuche, be they neuer ſo vile raſcals & abiecte perſons, then he dyd for ỹ greateſt kynges and princes that be. And when at the dreadfull daye of dome we ſhall cummie before the iudgement ſeate of Chriſt (where muſte ereſong be preſented all the potentates and rulers of this worlde, howe mightie and puiſſaunte ſoeuer they be) that rigorous iudge will require as ſtreyght an accompte for thoſe ſely poore wretches, as he wyll doe for the rulers and great menne. They therfore that thynke it but a ſmall loſſe vnto the cōmon wealthe when theſe poore ſoules and vnderlinges are robbed, afflicted, dryuen out of their houſes, burned, oppreſſed, and murthered, doe plainly condemne of folyſhnes Jeſus Chriſte the wyſdome of the father of heauen, who for to ſaue ſuche, as the ſayde perſons are, dyd ſhed his preciouſe blond, and ſuffred paſſion. Wherfore in mine opinion no kynde of people is more pernicious to the common weale, then ſuche as put into princes heades thoſe thynges that maye kyndle and moue them to warre, who the more highe ſtomaked and couragious they be, the ſoner are they deceyued. And amonge all princely vertues, highe ſtomake and noble courage of mynde is reckened the chief. For this cauſe was Julius Ceſar of olde wryters hyghly commended. And for the ſame is noble kyng Frauncis lykewyſe extolled in oure tyme, with the full consent and testimonie of all nacions. Nowe what greater argument is there of a very lokte and courageous mynde, then to be able nothinge to passe vpō iniuries? The doughtynes and valiauntise of the olde Capitaines who warred for empire, and not for defence of lyfe, is muche renoumed and praysed, but in Gentyle wryters, and of Panyms or Gentiles. Certes it is a muche more honourable and glorious facte for a christian prince to bye peace and tranquilitie of the common weale with the losse of some parte of his dominion and enheritaunce, then for victory obteyned to be receyued with muche goodly triumphe, bought with so great displeasures of the people. Therefore such as haue incesed the mynds of princes with a desyre to enlarge their empire, what els haue they inuented but a continual fountaine and quicke spryng of warres. Agayne as much mischiefe doo they in the worlde that minister vnto the same princes occasion and matter of wrathe, bearyng them in hande that it is a thyng appertainyng vnto princely manhod or couragiousnes, to be auenged by force of armes for some folyshe worde spoken, whiche happely was vntruely reported, or at the leste wyse made a great deale worse, and more haynous then it was spoken in very dede. But howe muche greater a poynte is it of a noble courage, for consideracio to haue the peace and tranquilitie of the common wealthe conserued, nothyng to passe vpon a raylyng woorde. For yf any hurte cumme therof, it is but a priuate hurte, yea, to say the truthe, it hurteth not at all, if it be neglected and not passed on. And in other matters concerning worldly affaires, kynges peraduenture maye take summe bacation, and nowe and then sequestre them selues from busynesse, at leste wyse if it be lawfull for them to be any where idle and without busynesse, vnto whose office it specially belonged to watche, for the preseruacion and safegarde of so many. But in rabyng vpon them the daungerous enterpises and aduentures of warre, for so muche as the same bryngeth with it a whole floude of great euylles and mischiefes, they ought with all their eyen in their heades to watche, and to be as circumspect as is possible to be, leste they decree and determine any thyng vnaduisedly. Neither speake I these thynges (moste christen kyng) of any entente to plucke the sworde out of the handes of princes. For peraduenture it is the parte of a good kyng sumtymes to make warre, but that muste be at suche tyme, when all other thynges hauyng ben assayed in vaine, extreme necessitie compelleth him so to doo. The lorde Jesus tooke away the vse of the sworde from Peter, but not from princes. Saincte Paule also confirmeth their authoritie, commaunding suche as in the citie of Rome professed Christes religion, euno wyse to contemne thauthoritie of their soueraigne rulers, although the same were Gentiles and misereaunts, in so muche that he would not haue taken from them, being as the very ministres of God, neyther theyr customes, theyr rates or talages, nor theyr honoure. Taketh he the sworde from them, who sayeth: For he beareth not the swerde for naught? The selfe same thyng doethe Peter also teache beyng one of ỹ chiefe Apostles, saying: Submitte your selues therfore vnto all maner of ordinaunce of manne, for the lordes sake, whether it be vnto the kynge, as vnto the chief heade: either vnto rulers as vnto them that are sente of hym, for the punishment of euil doocrs, but for the laude & prayse of them that doo well. &c. Christe wolde haue Peter to haue no weapon saue the sworde of the ghospell, whiche is the heauenly worde, the whiche as

ſaincte Paule teacheth in the epiſtle to the Hebrewes, is quicke and mightye in operation, and ſharper then any two edged ſweord: and entreth through, euen vnto the deuiding aſoudre of the ſoule and the ſpirite. For he thas commaundeth the ſweordde to be put vp into the ſcaberte, and taketh it not away, doeth more then yf he toke it awaye. For why doeth he commaunde it to be put vppe? Truely becauſe the euangelyke paſtoure ſhoulde in no caſe make warre. Why doeth he neither commaunde it to be layde aſyde, nor yet forbid it ſhold be. Veraylye to dooe vs to vnderſtande, yᵗ we ought not ſo much as then to go about to be auenged, when we are of power to reuenge the iniuries done vnto vs. Wherfore I conclude, that the euangelyke paſtoures haue the ſweord of the ghoſpell deliuered them of Chriſt, wher with they ſleagh vices, and cutte awaye mans carnall luſtes and deſyres. Kynges alſo and temporall princes haue theyr ſweordde by his ſufferaunce and permiſſion, to make euillmen afearde, and to preferre good men accordingly. The ſweorde is not taken from them: but the vſe therof is preſcribed. They haue it for a defence and conſeruation of the publike tranquilitie, and not to bolſter, and maynteyne therwith theyr owne ambicioulnes. There are two manier of ſweordes, alyke wyſe two maner of kyngdomes: The prieſtes and biſhops haue theyr ſweordde, and alſo theyr kyngdome. In ſtede of Diademes and helmettes they haue theyr Myters: In ſtede of a ſcepter they haue a croſyers ſtaffe: they haue theyr bucgandyne, theyr ſouldiers girdle, and to be ſhorte, al that compleate harnes whiche that valiaunt warriour Saincte Paule deſcribeth vnto them in ſondry places. Theſe euangelyke kynges are called paſtours, ſo lykewyſe are temporall kynges named of the Poete Homer, paſtours of the people. They bothe dooe one thyng, and yet is theyr office and miniſtery diuers, euen lyke as wolde that in the ſame enterlude and play, ſome play one parte, and ſome an other. But yf they both had eche of theym theyr owne ſweord in a readines, I meane, yf eche of theim would vſe the power geuen them aryght, and as they ought to dooe, I thynke verily that we, who are rather chriſten men by name, then in dede, would not ſo often times drawe out our wicked ſwordes, to thruſte theim into the bellies of our chriſten brethren, howe whiles they bothe nothing regardyng theyr owne duetie, haue eche one a deſyre to entermeddle with that, whiche in no wyſe appertayneth vnto theyr vocation, it cummeth to paſſe that neyther of them both do maintayne theyr owne dignitie accordyngly, nor yet conſerue the publike tranquilitie. Wherfore hath a kyng more kyngly maieſtie, then at ſuche tyme as he ſitteth in iudgement, and miniſtreth iuſtice: then when he repreſſeth iniuries, endeth controuerſies, helpeth the oppreſſed: or when he ſitteth in counſayle ſtudying how to aduaunce the common wealth? On the other ſyde, when hath a biſhop more of hys dignitie, then at ſuche tymes as he preacheth the doctrine of the goſpel out of a pulpit? For then is that euangelike king in his ſeate royall.

Loke howe vnſeemyng a thyng it was for the Emperour Nero to contende with the maiſters of Muſyke and with harpers in the ſtage, or to prone maiſteries with wagoners in the lyſtes or turneying place, called in latyne Circus: ſo vnſeemely a thyng it is for a kyng to meddle wythlawe and pettie matters that perteine vnto his own priuate affectiõs, and hurt the proſperous ſtate of the common wealth. Agayne loke how vncomely a thyng it were if a Philoſophier would with his cloke a long beard ſtip about the ſtage, a play a parte in an enterlude: or els holde a bill & a net in his hande in the place where the swordplayers are wonte to fyght at bearwarde, and syng they yͤ accustomed song: I would not haue the, I wolde haue a fyshe, cocke why fleest thou from me? cum no lesse vnsemely a thyng it is for the euangelike kyng to playe the warryer, to bye and sell, I will not speake of other thynges more vnhoneste, and lesse agreable with his vocacion. Howe chaunceth it that there is anye one byshop in our dayes that thinketh it a goodlyer thyng for hym to haue in his trayne. CCC. horsmen well appointed with crosbowes, launces, and handegunnes, then to bee accompanied with a good numbre of learned and vertuous deacons, and to carry about with hym bokes of holy scripture? Why dooe they thynk them selues great by the pompous shewe and setting fooorth of those thynges, by contemnyng wherof, suche as they succeded were accompted great and worthy persons? Why haue trumpetters and hornes a sweter sounde in theyr eares, then the readyng of holy scripture? Well then, what if a kyng in stede of a Diademe, and a robe of estate, put on a Myter and a prisstes attyre? and contrary a bishop in stede of a Myter and prisstes attyre weare a Diademe, and a kynges robe or kyrtel: will it not appeare a monstreous sight vnto vs?

Nowe if the bryght and dissordred vse of suche thynges as are but signes of theyr office and ministerie dooe so greatly moue vs, why then are we not a greate deale more moued to see their offices turned cleane cam, & misordered? Certes if either kyng or bishop dooe any thing priuately, they must auenge it not to nothing els, but to the health and conseruacion of the people. For yf they dooe theyr dutie aright, either they admonisshe such as are out of the way, correct suche as haue done amysse, or cum fortte the dismayed, or kepe vnder the prowde and hye mynded, or stryue vp stoute persons, or make those that are at variaunce frendes and louers againe. This is the very office of kynges but specially of the euangelike kynges, who in no wyse ought ambicioussly to desyre this worldly kingdome. And forasmuche as the Lorde Jesus was in bery dede both a spirituall and a temporall kyng (although he expressed in perth but a spirituall kyngdom alonely) it is both theyr partes to dooe what in them lyeth to counterfaicte and followe theyr prince.

He wholly gaue himselfe for vs. And howe then for shame dare any other calleth hymselfe Christes vicar, lyue onely to his owne priuate wealth and commoditie? Christe whether he were in the temple, or in the Synagoges, or went abrode, or taried at home in his seuerall house, or were carried by water, or continued in the wilderness, dyd nothyng elles all his lyfe long but playe the parte of a sauiour, of a comforter, of a well dooer. He taught the multitude, he healed the diseased, he cleansed the lepres, he restored the syght of the palsey, the lame and the blynd. Further he chased away hurtefull spirites, raysed the dead, deliuered those that were in perill, filled the bellies of the hungry, reproued the Pharisies, defended his disciples, and also the synner that so lauishely poured out her ointmente vpon hym.

He cumforted the synfull woman of Canaan, and her that was taken in aduultery: Peruse all the whole lyfe of Jesus, and it shall euidently appeare that he neuer harmed any bodye, notwithstanding he had so manye hurtes and displeasures done to hym of others, and that he coulde easily haue been auenged yf it had pleased hym.

He euery where played the ſauioure, euerywere the well doer.
He reſtored Malchus eare agayne whiche Peter cut off with his ſweord. He would not haue his ſafe garde defended wyth ꝑ leaſt hurte or diſpleaſure that might be to any body. He made Herode and Pilate at one. Hanging on the croſſe he ſaued one of the theues. Whan he was dead he dzewe the captaine of the garilon vnto the chriſtian profeſſion. This was the very office and parte of a kyng, to do all men good, and hurte no bodye. His example all chriſtian princes ought as nygh as they can, to folowe. And foraſmuche as youg grace is called the moſte chriſtian kyng, the very name and title ſelfe that is geuen your highnes, ought ſpecially to moue you to exployte in all your doinges, as nere as ye can poſſible, the prince of all princes, Chriſte: But what parte of ſhame remayneth there in thoſe perſones, who albeit they haue a pleaſure to be called the vicars of Chriſte, doe notwithſtandyng require to haue (I ſaye not the pzyſe or dignitie) but theyr auarice and pryde defended with greate effuſion and ſhedyng of chriſtian bloud? And this wryte I (ryght noble prince) not for to defame or reproue any bishops (albeit I wolde wiſhe of God that there were not ſome chriſtian bishops of whome theſe wordes might be iuſtely ſpoken) but onely to ſhewe wherein ꝑ true dignitie of kynges and bishoppes conſiſteth, to the ende that bothe of them knowyng and mayntening theyr owne dignitie, maye happily paſſeoure this tranſytozye lyfe to Goddes pleaſure and contentacion. But muche farder are thoſe euangelike paſtours from doyng theyr dutye, who, where it had been theyr parte to make peaces beyng at debate and diſſencion at one agayne, do of their owne accorde incenſe them to warre, and as it is an old prouerbe, do caſt brandes vpon the eyers or flames of battayle. Surely yf euer it were nedefull for a good paſtour or ſhepherde anye where to prouide for the ſafegarde of his flocke with the loſſe and ſpendyng of his lyfe: if the example of that chiefe ſhepherde Chriſte, in whoſe ſtede they are, were any where to be expreſſed and folowed, here chiefly ought they to haue doone theyr duetie, where ſo greate a ſea of miſchiefes guſſeth and floweth out into the worlde. But howe chaunceth it that amog ſo great a noumber of Abbottes, bishops and Archebishops, and Cardinals, not one ſteppeth forth that dare putte, yea euen his beraye lyfe in hasarde, to make an ende of this greate ſtirryng and troubious buſſynes of the worlde? Howe happily dyeth he, whoſo by his deathe cauſeth ſo many thouſande menne lyues to be ſaued? There is no cruelter a thyng, then is that fyghting hand to hande, and butcherly mangiyng and cuttyng of ſweard players: And yet was antiquitie ſo fondly delyted with this ſyght, that the moſte naughtie and deteſtable example remaynyng of the vſe of the Gentiles, continued a long ſeaſon, euen emong chriſten men, namely in the Citie of Rome, whiche could not yet forget her old paganitie. But that this manoure of fyghtyng is vtterly ſet aſyde, wemaye thanke (as wytneſſeth the hiſtorye called the tripartite hiſtory) one Telemachus a manne of theyr order and profeſſion, who for chriſtian ſimplicitie, and a deſyre they had to leade a ſolitarye lyfe, and to eſchewe the compayne of the ſynfull multitude, were commonly called monkes or ſolytarye perſons. This Telemachus came for this purpoſe out of the eaſte parties to Rome, and entryng into the place (whiche was called of them Theatrum, that is to ſaye, a place ordayned to beholde ſhewes and paſſimes in) when he ſawe two armed men come

some into the fighting place; and about to slee one another, he leaped be-twixt them as they were in their furye and rage, crying and saying with a loude voyce: What doo ye wretches? why go ye about like wylde beastes to murther one another? Ca make short tale, whyles the good man were-about to saue both their lyues, he lost his owne, beyng stoned to death of the people: So muche dyd the boyling multitude set by thys cruell lye pastime and pleasure. But what came of thys? Honorius the Emperoure, allone as he was enformed herof, commaunded this maner of the wyng the people pastyme by coupling or matchyng together of swearde players, to be lefte and vtterly abolyshed. Nowe marke me well howe vnhoneste a pastyme it was, and how many thousandes had by reason therof been miserably slayne and murthered, and then shalt euidently appere how much the world is bou-den vnto this one mannes death. And for this cause was Telemachus wor-thely canonized and made a sainct. How muche more then by all ryght and reason shoulde he deserue to haue lyke honoure gyuen hym, that woulde ad-uenture his lyfe to parte so mightye and puissaunt princes, that thus warre and fyght continually one agaynst another? For the commen welth suffe-rethe no great losse of a swerd player lyeth a swerd player, and one vngracious varlet sleyeth another: And yet as princes cannot be enemyes together with-out the vtter detrement and annoyaunce of the whole worlde: so contrariwyse may they with lesse ieopardy be parted, then Telemachus parted the swearde players: fyrste bycause they are christen men, and seconde arily because the more noble courage and stomacke they be of, the more tractable they are; yf any bi-shop, or els any other prelate of the churche go about to persuade them with-out craft or dissimulation. Nowe yf anye chaunce vpon suche a prince as can by no meanes be intreated, but is of a tyrannous and cruell nature: then in him consyder how the greatest hurt and displeasure that the cruellest tyranne in the world is able to do, is but death.

And where I praye you shall the successours of the Apostles shewe an exaumple of an Apostolyke spyrite, yf they shewe it not in this case? Some will here saye: What shall my death profyte, yf I haue not my desyre? I answere: Christe the rewarde gyuer wyll not see his champion to lose his re-warde. Albeit many tymes death obtayneth, what lyfe could neuer bring a-bout. For the death of vertuous men is of no small power and efficacie.

I wyll not here stande in the recitall of olde exaumples whiche are innu-merable. John Baptist was beheaded for his franke speakyng: but al prin-ces are not Herodes: nor all haue not suche peramours as Herodias was. Ambrose bishop of Millayne thaunke not to suspende Theodosius the Em-peroure out of the churche, for his cruell and rashe sentence agaynst the Thes-salonians, and after he had sharply rebuked hym, and commaunded hym to make satisfaction, he put hym to his penicence. And so with the martlye of so myghtye a prynce gaue place, and was obedient vnto the auctoritie of a bishop.

The holy man Babylas Bishoppe of Antioche attempted to vse lyke seue-ritie againste a kynge whiche had murthered an innocent, and he was slayne for his labour: but anon as he was deade, he began to be feared not onely of the heathen Emperour, but also of the deuyles, whiche were as yet in their dayes worshypped for Goddes. I haue (ryght excellent prince) suche an opi-nion

nion of the Emperours maieſties nature, of your Graces diſpoſicion, and of the kyng of Englandes good nature, and vertuous inclination, that I put no doubtes but you all would long ere this haue folowed good aduertiſementes, if there had ben any ſuche counſaillour, whiche would haue ben plaine and franke with you all with diſcretion, and diſcrete with franke plaines.

And all this whyle there lacketh not great plenty of ſuche as incense the myndes of princes to battayle, namely of thoſe perſones whome it behoueth, for aſmuche as they: profit and lyuing dependeth therupon, to haue all the worlde in an vproze, and vnquieted with warres. One ſayeth: he ſetteth your maieſtie at naught: he gaue your grace ſuche a mocke. Another, yf your highneſſe ioyne this part vnto your dominions, you may alſo at your pleaſure eaſely ioyne that. O vnaduiſed and rathe counſaylour. Why doeſt thou rather put into his head howe farre he may extende the boundes of his dominions, then put him in remembraunce with howe narrowe lymites the ſeignorie, whiche he hath nowe at this preſent was in olde tyme bounded. Why doeſt thou not ſhewe hym whiche way that he hath may be well gouerned, rather then enlarged. The extending of boundes is endleſſe: and therefore moſt true it is that Seneca reporteth: Many Emperours and princes haue entreated vpon others, and taken their marches from them: and yet neuer none yt this daye hath appointed hymſelfe any lymittes to be content withall. But the verye true commendacion of a prince ſtandeth in well gouerning. Alexander the great when he was come to the Orcian ſea, wiſhed there had ben another worlde for him to conquere, as who ſaye this, worlde was to litle to ſatiſfye his ambicioufnes, & deſyre that he had to enlarge his Empier. Hercules neuer went beyond the pyles called Gades. But no Occian, no Gades can bound our inſaciable ambition. Howbeit againſt the peſtilent worldes of ſuche perſones, chriſtian princes ought to haue their myndes diligently fortyfied afore hand, with the decrees and ſayinges of Chriſte, as it were with triacles or preſeruatiues againſt poiſon, and in all their counſayles to haue ſpecial regarde vnto the rule of the goſpell, as vnto a marke.

Peraduenture your maieſtie will aſke what I meane to lyng ſo long a long vnto your highneſſe, ſence the ſame is moſte occupyed aboute the weightye affaires of the common wealthe. Yea, my deſyre was to haue this ſong ſongen to all menne, for no cauſe elſ, but for that this vniuerſall calamitie of the worlde greueth me very ſore, and alſo for that I muche deſyre to ſee more tranquilitie and quietnes in euery parte of Chriſtendome, but ſpecially in the realme of Fraunce, then whiche kyngdome I wote not whether there be anye more excellent eyther in true chriſtianitye and good lyuing, or elſ in worldly aboundaunce and proſperitie. Now yf ſuche ruffelyng and troublous buſynes dyd ſeldome when chaunce, lyke as great fluddes, earthquakes, or famine are wont to do, then were it a thyng more tollerable: but ſo it is that the worlde is continually troubled, and neuer at quiet by reaſon of ſuche diſorde and diuiſion. The phyſytcians whenſoeuer there chaunceth any newe bodely diſeaſes, do wittely ſearche out the cauſes of the maladie, the whiche once knowen, then do they eaſly cureit: And not onely contented thus to do, they alſo inuent wayes to let that the ſame plague maye not often tymes deſyre to rage afreſhe, or reigne agayne. Why therfore in theſe ſo great euils,

and ſo many tymes chaunceing, do not men of great wiſedome and experience lykewiſe ſearche out the welles that all this troublous buſſines ſo oft ſpringeth out of into the worlde, to the ende that the rootes therof beyng cleane cut vp and deſtroyed, they maye perfitely cure and remeady theſame? why are we quycke ſyghted in thynges of litell weight and importaunce or none at all, and in the weightieſt thing of all moſte then halfe blynde? Whyne opinion is, that battaile for the moſte part ſpringeth of vayne wordes or titles as it were inuented to nouriſhe mās pryde & vayne glory, as who ſaie, there were not ambition ynoughe in the worlde, vnleſſe we fed & maintened this naughtie vice with newly inuented titles, the whiche vice of it owne propre nature groweth to faſt in vs. Theſe, and ſuche other lyke rootes and chiefe cauſes of battaile beyng once cut awaye, then ſhould it be eaſie to cõclude and eſtabliſhe a peace among chriſtian princes, with ſuch lawes and conditions that woulde neuer ſuffre ſuche ruffling buſineſſe and hurly burly to begyn agayne. By this meanes ſhould the princes encreaſe in richeſſe, now beeing common bytwene them by reaſon of amitie and frendſhip: and the chriſtian people ſhould lyue in lowely peace and tranquilitie vnder their moſte wraithye princes. So would the lorde Jeſus, that true king of the whole worlde, be fauorable vnto vs: and cauſe all thinges to proſper & goe forwarde with vs. So ſhould we be feared of the enemies of Chriſtes religiõ againſte whom we haue muche a do at this daye to defend our owne, much leſſe than are we able to diſcoumfite them and chaſe them away far from vs: Albeit I had rather haue them refourmed of their miſbeliefe, then by force of armes chaſed away and put to flyght. But howe is it poſſible for vs to reforme other, yf our ſelues be (I had almoſte ſayed) worſe and more vicious in our conuerſation then they are? For I doe not here reſteme chriſtien menne by the articles of the fayth whiche we profeſſe with mouthe, but by theyr maners and lyuing. Where ſoeuer ambition, couetouſnes, pryde, wrathe, reuengemente, and a deſyre to hurte reigneth, there (ſay I) lacketh the fayethe of the ghoſpell. Nowe albeit this peſtilence haue infected, euen thoſe vnto whoſe office it chiefly appertayned to ſee a remedy for the decay of chriſten religion, yet haue I ſome good hope of reformacion, becauſe I ſee the bookes of holy ſcripture, but ſpecially of the newe teſtament ſo taken in hande, and labcured of all men, yea euen as muche as of the ignoraunt and vnlettred ſorte, that many tymes ſuche as profeſſe the perfyte knowledge of Goddes woorde, are not able to matche them in reaſonyng. And that there be very many readers of the bookes of the newe teſtament, this one thyng maketh me to beleue, becauſe notwithſtanding the printers do verely publiſhe and put forth ſo many thouſande bolumes, yet all the booke ſellers ſhoppes that be, are not hable to ſuffice the gredynes of the byers. For nowe a dayes is it well ſolde ware whatſoeuer a man attempteth vpon the ghoſpell. This ſo ſtrong a medicine once receiued and dronken cauſe not but woorke and put forth his ſtrength. Wherefore me thynketh the worlde is in caſe lyke to a mānes body vexed with greuous diſeaſes, after it hath receyued an herbe called Elleboze, or ſome other ſtrong purgacion. For then is it all together diſtempered and out of quyet, and fareth as though it woulde yelde vp the ghoſte. And God ſende grace that this ſame gelike Elleboze, after it haue once ſearched and entred into all the bowels of our ſoule, maye ſo come vp agayne, that (the ſeedes of vices beyng ther-

by cut

by caſt out and auoyded) it maye reſtore vs made whole and purged of all our ſynnes, vnto Jeſu Chriſte, and maye alſo after this greate ruffliyng and almoſte vncurable diſeaſes of the worlde, bryng agayne vnto all menne that ioyefull and muche deſyred tranquilitie. And verily I would hope better that the common prayers of all good men to that ende and purpoſe ſhoulde not be made in vaine, if the chiefe eſtates of the worlde, would lyke trudie and faythfull phyſycians, do theyr endeuour to helpe the worlde in this euill caſe, that is to ſaye, yf the princes, in whome it chiefly lyeth to rule the worlde as they wyll, would call vnto theyr remembraunce that they ſhall (hortlye (for what thing is there in this preſent lyfe of any long continuaunce) gyue an accounpt vnto that moſte ſoueraigne and high prince, how they haue gouerned theyr dominions: Agayne yf the biſhoppes, diuines, and all eccleſiaſticall prſones would likewyſe remember, how they haue not ſucceded in the places of Annas & Caiphas, or of the Scribes and Phariſeis, (who whyles they wickedly defended theyr owne kyngdome, wente about to oppreſſe the kyngdome of the ghoſpell: whyles they vpholde and defended theyr owne glorye, dyd theyr endeuour to bury and ouer whelme Chriſtes glorye: and finally, whiles they laboured to appropue theyr owne righteouſneſſe, made God vnrighteous) but rather in the place of the Apoſtles, who had a pleaſure euen with the leeſyng of theyr owne blonde and liues to defende Chriſtes kyngdome, Chriſtes glory, and Chriſtes righteouſnes. Chriſte hath once ſuffered, ouer aryſen agayne from death to lyfe, and neuer wyll dye agayne. But he ſuffereth the ſame paſſion afreſhe, ſo oft as the truethe of the ghoſpell is condemned, beaten, ſpytte vpon, crucified, and buried. To be ſhort, he reckeneth done vnto hymſelfe, whatſoeuer euell or diſpleaſure is done vnto his membres. Peraduenture (moſte Chriſtian kyng) I haue ſpoke herre more frankely, and more at large then it became me to do: howbeit the great loue I beare towarde your grace hath made me both lauiſhe of my woordes, and alſo more bolde to vtter my minde vnto your highneſſe: I beyng a Chriſtian man, do wiſhe well vnto all Chriſtian menne generally: but yet haue I a certaine ſpeciall loue and affeccion to the moſte noble and floriſhyng realme of Fraunce. I beſeche Jeſu thimmortall kyng of the whole worlde, vnto whome the heauenly father hath geuen all power in heauen and in yearth, to geue hys holy ſpirite both to the people, and alſo to the princes and rulers: to the princes, that they may haue grace happely to paſſe ouer theyr lyues in mutuall amytie and concorde vnder theyr common kyng and prince Jeſu: vnto the other, that they maye lyue in reſte and peace vnder their moſte godly and wealthy princes: and the ende of all to be this, that chriſtian vertue and godlineſſe beyng well planted among vs, maye be enlarged and ſpreda-brodeas muche as is poſſible to be, not by inuadyng or waſting of others dominions or countreys (for ſo our enemies become the poyzer, but neuer the better and more godly) but by preaching euery where the doctrine of the goſpell ſyncerely and truely, by theyr miniſtery that haue in them the ſpirite of the ghoſpell: and by ordering our liues after ſuche ſorte, that herye many may be allured to profeſſe our religion euen by the ſwete ſmell or ſauour of our good lyuing. So be ganne the chriſtian empire, ſo encreaced it, ſo was it greatly enlarged, ſo was it eſtabliſhed: and by the contrary we ſee how it is now almoſt at a point and come to nothing, if we conſidre the greatneſſe of the whole worlde.

worlde. Wherfore loke by what aydes it firſt begonne, by what meanes it was encreaced, and eſtabliſhed, by theſame muſt we repaire it beyng decaied, enlerge it being brought into narro we roume, and finally eſtabliſhe it againe beyng vnſtable and at no ſure ſtaye. Theſe thinges wrote I (moſte chriſtian prince) of a pure zele and good mynde, neyther reprehending any man, ſence I beare all men my good wyll, neyther flatterying with any, or cozying fauoure, becauſe I ſeke naught at no mannes handes. Almightie God graunt your highneſſe weil to fare. Peuen the firſt of December, in the yere of our lozde,

¶ The lyfe of S. Marke written by S. Hierome.

MArke the diſciple and interpreter of Peter, beyng deſired of the brethren at Rome, wrote a ſhorte ghoſpell accozdyng as he hearde Peter preache & ſhew euery thing by mouth. The whiche ghoſpell the ſame Peter, after he had heardit, dyd allow and publiſhe by his authozitie, becauſe it ſhould be red of the congregacion, as recozdeth Clement in ꝑ firſt boke of his wozke entitled, Diſpoſitiones. Of this Marke, Papias alſo, biſhop of Hieruſalem, maketh mencion. And Peter in his firſt Epiſtle, where vnder the name of Babylon by a figuratiue manour of ſpraking he vnderſtandeth Rome, hath theſe wozdes: The congregacion of them which at Babylon are companions of your eſlection, ſaluteth you, and ſo doth Marke my ſonne. Wherfore he toke the ghoſpell that hymſelfe had written, and went into Egipt, and firſt of all men preached Chriſt at Alexandria, where he ozdeyned a churche or congregacion of ſuche pure doctrine and perfite liuing, that he made all that profeſſed Chriſt to folowe his exãple. To be ſhorte, Philo the eloquenteſt wryter of the Jewes, perceyuyng the firſt congregacion of Alexandria yet to perſeuer in the Jewiſhe religiõ, wrote a boke of their conuerſation, as it were in the praiſe of his nacion: And as Luke ſheweth how all thinges were common emong the beleuers at Hieruſalem, ſo dyd he put in wryting all that euer he ſawe done at Alexandria during the time that Marke there taught and preached. He dyed in the eyght yere of Neros reigne, and was buried at Alexandria, in whoſe place ſucceded Anianus.

The Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gospell of Sainct Marke.

The first Chapter.

THis is naturallye gyuen to all men, to desyre felicitie. This felicitie many worldly men right politique and wyse, as touchyng a certain kynde of wisdome, haue hitherto promised: some, by suche lawes as they haue made and written: other some, by rules and preceptes that they haue giuen, to teache men how to leade a vertuouse and a godlye life. But for as much as they were mēne, they were not able to performe their promise. For they neyther wist themselfes what was the true, & perfyte felicitie of man, nor wherein it stoode. And for this cause it came to passe, that in stede of true felicitie, they embraced a certain deceyuable image or shadowe therof, and infected other with their errour, beyng bothe deceyued them selfes, and deceyuers. Therfore bothe the lawe makers, and philosophiers, brought vs a certaine gospell of their owne inuencion, but suche a one as was partely false, and deceyuable, and partly weriche and of no efficacie. Moyses and the Prophetes wrote a more certain and pithythie gospell than they, but to one nacion alone: and as that tyme required, wrapped with figures and shadowes, disposing men onely to ỹ knowleage of veritie, but vnsufficient to giue perfite saluacion, neuertheles sumwhat promoting therunto, wherin goddes wisdome resembleth nature, whiche bringeth vs, and as a mā would say, leadeth vs by the hande, from the knowleage of thynges that are vndre our corporall sight, vnto the knowleage of thinges inuisible. And yet the yr gospell conteineth in it more feare then glad and ioyfull promise, and hath muche more bewrayed the wickednes of man, than taken away the same, rather beaten into mennes myndes goddes might and power, than set out his mercie and goodnesse, caused more rather dreade, then emplanted loue.

For what could man do but feare, tremble, and despayre, after he had learned by the law, that he was alwayes in bondage and subiection of sinne, and not able to refrayne therfro, and also did know how no manne coulde escape the iudgement of God, a very rigorous & sore auenger of synne and vngodlinesse. Who is he that can finde in his harte to loue hym whome he feareth? Now ỹ dreade of goddes iustice, although it be many tymes the beginning of saluacion, euen as a bitter medicine that vexeth the whole bodie of manne, is the entrey to health, yet is it not the thyng whiche maketh man to haue perfite felicitie. The grace and beneficiall goodnes of God, causeth man to loue God, and loue to godward is the thing that auaunceth hym to happie state and felicitie. Therfore after ỹ whole worlde was sumwhat prepared, as wel by the prophecies and foresayinges of the prophetes, as by the commaundementes and figures of Moyses, in these laste dayes was opened and preached vnto ỹ same, that verye ioyefull gospell, that all mēne ought to embrace, and most lowingly to receyue: whiche of the owne accorde, or without any deseruyng on mans behalfe, bringeth not onely to the Iewes, but also to all nacions of the worlde remission of all sinnes. And lest haply any manne put doubtes in ỹ certaintie taintie of this promise, it is God that maketh it, and no manne: neyther is his ambassadour Moyses, or anye of the Prophetes, but the verye sonne of God hymselfe, Jesus Christe, who for oure saluation came downe from heauen, & toke vpon him our corruptible flesche, to thintent that he beyng guiltlesse, and without all synne, might by hys passion and death, freely geue innocencie and lyfe to all that beleue his promyses, and put theyr whole assiaunce in hym.

For God, who is of his own proper nature gracious and beneficial, would by this meanes, shewe that exceadyng great and inestimable kindnesse that he bare vnto vardes mankynde: which was so great, that greater can neyther be deuised, ne ought to be looked for. He could not sende a more honorable messenger than his owne onely begotten sonne, nor shewe more kyndnesse, than through faythe onely, freely to release all maner offenses were they neuer so many, neuer so great and heynous: yea and ouer this, through his holy spirite, chose those that were before slaues and bondmen of the diuell, to be felowes with his soonne, by whome he hath geuen vs al thinges both in heauen and in earth.

And bycause nothyng could be more ioyfull then this message, or tydinges, it is by right good skyll called of the Greekes, Euangelion, that is as muche to saye in Englishe, as glad and ioyfull tydynges, to comfort you, that you should no more feare the yoke and burthen of Moyses lawe.

The texte. ¶ The beginning of the ghospell of Jesu Christe, the sonne of God as it is written in the Prophetes. Beholde I sende my messenger before thy face, whiche shall prepare thy waye before the. The voyce of a crier in the wildernesse, prepare ye the waye of the Lorde, and make his pathes streight. John did baptise in the wildernesse, and preached the baptisme of repentaunce, for the remission of synnes: and all the lande of Jewrye, and they of Jerusalem, went out vnto him, and were all baptised of him in the ryuer of Jordan, confessing theyr synnes.

And albeit summe menne had leuer make a further rehersall of thistorye of the ghospell, and begynne the same with the nativitie and birth of Jesu Christe: yet me thinketh it sufficient, for that I woulde be briefe, to take my begynnyng of John Baptistes preaching: For lyke as the day starre goeth before the Sunne, so came he, and appeared vnto the worlde before Christes preaching, not by chaunce and fortune, but by Goddes determination, to stirre vp the myndes of the Iewes, to looke for Messias that would streightwayes cum, yea and to poynte hym vnto theim wyth his finger, when he came: the whiche John, the Prophetes so many hundred yeares sythens, prophecied and told before should cum. For the same prophetes whiche prophecied and spake of Christes cummyng, spake and prophecied also of John, the forewalker of Christe. For in Micheas the prophete, God the father speaketh vnto his Sonne in this wyse: Lo, sayeth he: I sende my especiall and electe messenger before thy face, who shall make a waye for the, that anon after shalt cum, and take on the thoffice of preaching the ghospell. Lykewyse the Prophete Esaye sygnifying the preachyng of John, sayeth: The voyce of a cryar in wildernesse: prepare ye the waye of the Lorde, make strayght his pathes. In semblable wyse the patiente is monished before the cummyng of the Phisician, to knowlage hys disease, and reuerently to receyue hym whan he cummeth, and in all thynges to do after him, and folowe his counsayle. When therfore the tyme approched, that Jesus Christe the sonne of God, who was not yet knowen vnto

the worlde, should begin to take vpon hym this ministracion, for the whiche he was sent downe from heauen into earth. Iohn according as the Prophetes had prophecied and tolde before, played the forecurrour, baptizing in wildernesse not that he dyd therby washe awaye sinnes, but onely stirred and exhorted men to be repentaunt for their former lyfe, that they knowleaging their vnfrutefulnesse should gredely desire his cumming whiche onely baptizeth with spirite and fyre, takyng awaye at once through fayth in him, all sinnes: endowyng mens soules with heauenly grace, whiche he poureth out of hymselfe, as out of the well and fountayne therof: freely delyuering from vnrighteousnesse, freely geuyng ryghteousnesse, freely delyuering from death, and freely geuyng lyfe euerlastyng. The greater that this loue and kyndes was which God shewed vnto mankinde, the greuouser shall their punishment be that haue set nought by the same when it was offred them. And lest any should so do, Iohn came before to prepare and dispose all men by his carnall baptisme, to the spirituall baptisme of Christ: to cause them by exhortyng, and making them afrayde, to forthinke, and hate their former lyfe: and fynally to geue them forewarnyng, that messias, and the kyngdom of God, were at hande. Iohn was not the light that shoulde lighten euery man, whiche cummeth into this worlde, but a messanger of the light that anon after should appeare. He was not the physician whiche should take awaye mennes sinnes, and geue health, but made them inwardly to tremble in their conscience, in that he declared vnto them the great daunger they stode in: finally he stirred vp all mennes hartes, to the great desire of euerlasting saluacion, by preachyng vnto them, how he was not farre of, the whiche only should deliuer frō sinne. He was not ꝑ bydegrome but a forewalker of the bridegrome, to wake and call vp all men, to meete the bridegrome cumming. He was not the semy of God, but a voice forethewing the semne of God, who anon after should be disclosed vnto the worlde. Moses lawe was a fraefull lawe, in somuche that the children of Israell could not abide the voyce of God, when he spake vnto them. Iohn being a limitte or bordre set betwene the lawe and grace, and as a man mengled of both: dyd herein vse a poynte of the olde law, because in his preachyng he menaced all men with euerlastyng death and damnacion, vnlesse they would tourne in season from their synfull lyuing. And againe this had he of the new, that he moued not the people to sacrifices, burnt offrings, vowes, or fastinges, but to baptisme, and repentaunce of the former lyfe: and shewed moreouer how the moste mercifull Messias was already cum a present, who shoulde freely forgiue all men their offences, that would put their whole trust and confidence in hym. The former lawe was written or published in wildernesse, and from thence also cummeth the beginning of the newe. He must cleane forsake all the worlde, that will be worthy to be partaker of the grace of the gospel, whiche compendiously geueth all thynges. In great cities are riches, delicates pleasures, pride and ambicio: But specially Ierusalem had in it a famous temple, by reason wherof she was not a litle proud and stately. The same citie had also carnall sacrifices & wherunto the people trusted. Further more it had holye dayes, obseruāces of the sabboth, a prescribed choise of meates, and other ceremonies, wherby she supposed that man was iustified and made righteous before God: finally, there were highe minded priestes, and dissemblyng pharisees. But whoso desireth the baptisme of the gospel must vtterly laye apart all truste and confidence of these thynges. He must forsake all Jewry with her Jerusalem, her temple, her sacrifices, her priesthod, and pharisaicall fashions, and from thence depart into wildernesse where he may hear the most ioyfull tydinges of our sauiour that straight wayes wil cum. To returne to John, he cried not in vain. For he made a great many so afrayed with his crying and preaching, that they forsoke their dwelling places, and hasted to the water of Jordan: and that not alonely out of all the countrey of Jewrie, but also out of Jerusalem it selfe. Thither flocked a great rablement of soulditers and publicanes, and also certaine of the pharisees. John receiued and taught as many as came, without choise or regard of person, and did also baptise suche of them as were displeased with themselfes for theyr offences, and confessed the same: expressing herby as it were by a certain corporall figure, the very order of the newe lawe and gospell. For the first office and ministerie in christian profession is to teache. Whom þ christian nouice (by this name vnderstande good reader suche a one as forsaking eyther the Jewish or Panims religion, and intending to be christened, is newely instructed in the faith: in the wiche state he is called of thauncient fathers, catechumenus) when I saye, the christian nouice beginneth once through the doctrine of the teacher both to know his owne filthie liuyng and also the goodnesse of God, than is he wholely displeased with himselfe, and perceyuyng no where els to apprease any hope of saluation, hath strayght wayes recourse for ayde and succour to the beneficiall lorde, who freely extendeth his mercy and goodnesse towardes vs. It is a great furtheraunce to the recouering of health, if the pacient knowe his owne infirmitie. It preuayleth not a litle to the obtayning of light, if a manne perceyue the present darkenes he is in. He hath already much profited to puritie of lyfe and vertuous liuing, whoso abhorreth his owne wickednesse. The preaching of John, figureth the christian instruction, or fyrste teachyng by mouthe of Christes religion. His baptisme representeth the baptisme of Christe. That he so gentlye receyued all that euer came vnto hym, betokeneth nothyng els, but lyke as euery man nedeth the grace of the gospell, euen so no man of what degre or nacion so euer he be, ought to be secluded from the same. The pharisees had their washinges. They washed their handes at meale tyme or when they shoulde take theyr repaste: They washed theyr bodyes at theyr returne home from the market: they washed oftymes theyr cuppes, dishes, stooles, tables, and the rest of theyr houshold stuf, as though cleanelie and puritie of lyfe, whiche God loueth, and alloweth in vs, stode in the obseruacion of suche trifles, or as though a litle quantitie of the Pharisees water, were of suche force & vertue that it coulde make a man euer the cleaner in the sight of almightie God. Suche maner of washinges & baptismes do not make a man cleaner in soule then he was before, but rather more proud and arrogant. Happy therfore are they who haue vtterly forsaken Moyses, and the Pharisees washynges, and with al haste runne vnto the bathes of Jordan. For in the Hebrue tongue this word (Jordan) is as muche to saye, as the floude of iudgement. He is not iudged of the Lorde, who so iudgeth himselfe. This is that same purifying floude whiche issueth out of two fountaynes, that is, out of the knowlege of our own vnrighteousnes, and the remembraunce of the mercifull goodnesse of god. This is that baptisme of repentaunce, and flood of teares, which causeth streames of bitter water, to flow out of the most inward baines of mannes

hart, but it hath suche strēgth & vertue, that it doth as it were with the sharpnesse of saltpeter, scower and wipe away al the spottes and filthe of the soule. The Pharisies also haue a confessiō of their owne, but such an one as plainly declareth their pryde and arrogancie. I fast, sayth the proude Pharisei, twyse in the weke. I geue vnto the poore the tenthe parte of all my goodes, and I am not as other men be. The Iewes cōfesse other mens sinnes, and not their owne. Now they that prepare and make themselues ready to receyue the baptisme of the ghospell, will neyther be knowen of their owne good deedes, nor make rehersal of other mens faultes, but eche of them truly cōfesse their owne. It is a poynt of arrogancie, for a man to stande in recitall of his owne good dedes, euen as to discouer other mens offences proceedeth of malice, and euill will. To be shorte, to acknowleage thine owne sinne and iniquitie, is to glorify the goodnes of god.

¶ John was clothed with Camels heare, and with a gyrdel of a leyther about hys lornes. And he did eate locustes, and wilde hony, and preached, saying: He that is stronger then I, cummeth after me, whose shoode latchet I am not worthy to louse downe and vnlose. I haue baptised you with water, but he shall baptise you with the holy ghost. The texte.

And to thintent that John, who in lyke manier came before the first cummyng of Christe, as Hely according to the prophecie of Malachi, shall cum before the last, might the more in holy and perfite lyuing resemble Hely, he led his lyfe in wildernes, vtterly eschewing the sinfull company of worldly people. He was not clothed with silkes nor yet with woullen clothes, but with a garment made of Camels heare, and girded about the loynes with a leather gyrdle. And by this straught manour of liuing, he shewed a certaine euangelike and christian perfection, euen before the gospel was published or preached. His foode was agreable to his dwelling place, and apparayle. For it was euen suche as came to hand, and was easie to be gotten: suche as the place of the owen accorde, and without husbanding or tillyng, graue hym, most commonly certaine flies, called locustes, and wild hony. And here the friar or preacher of Christ, did a great deale more then Moses lawe required. For that law made distinccion only betwene sundrye kyndes of beastes. But he vtterly, a that without commaundement, abstayned from eating of all fower footed beastes, fowles, & fishes: That law forbedde to were any clothing of linsaye wolsaye: but he eleane dispised himselfe bothe from the vse of wull and flaxe. Suche a lyfe doubtles was conuenient for the preacher of repentaunce, who although he were sanctified in his mothers wombe, yet would neuer the lesse leade a straight life, lest his preaching thonsde haue bene litle esteemed and set by, if his liuyng and doctrine had in any point disagreed. And by this meanes he gate hymselfe so great renoume, and auctoyrite among the Iewes, that manye of them supposed he had bene very Messias in dede. But John, albeit he was a man highly in the fauour of God, and endewed with many godly giftes and qualities, yet perceiuing what a great offence it was, for manne to chalenge that glorye whiche is dewe vnto God, or for one man to put a dye of saluacion in an other, openly preached in the presence of them all, and sayde: I am not he who ye suppose me to be. My doctrine is a base and a worthe doctrine. My baptisme is not effectuall. I am nothing els but a manne as ye are, conceyued in sinne: nothing elles but boys messenger, whiche will straught wayes cum to gyue saluacion vnto all men.

He is behynd me in tyme, and after the estimacion of the worlde, of muche lesse auctorite then I am: but he surmounteth me so farre in heauenly power, that I, whom you haue in suche reuerence and veneracion, am not worthy to serue him in the office of the vilest drudge or slaue: not worthy, I saye, to lye vpon the ground, and vnlouse the latchet of his shoes. You oughte to honoure him. You ought intierly, and with most feruent affection, to desire his cummyng. I preache vnto you earthly thinges. He shall teache you heauenly matiers. I haue hitherto baptised you, as touching the bodye, with water, preparing your myndes to repentaunce: When he once cummeth abrode, he shall baptise you with the holy ghoste, whose secret vertue sanctifieth all thinges. For as no man hath righteousnesse of himselfe, euen so can no man geue thesame to an other. He must nedes be of more power and excellencie than man, whoso geueth that thing, which pertaineth to God alone to geue. Knowe you the differences betweene an vnworthy seruaunt, and the maister: betweene the minister, and the author: betweene the cesar, and the kyng.

He that is greater the I, &c.

The texte. ¶ And it came to passe in those dayes, that Jesus came frō Nazareth of Galile, and was baptised of Johan in Jordan: and assone as he was cum out of the water, he saw heauen open and the spirite descending vpon him, lyke a doue. And there came a voyce from heauen. Thou art my deare sonne, in whom I delite.

After that John had with wordes of lyke sentence, moued and stirred by the myndes of a great manie of them, to wayt for Messias that was cummyng, then furth came Jesus when his tyme was cum, forsakyng the litle village of Nazareth in the countrey of Galile, where because of his educacio and long continuaunce in thesame, men thought he had bene borne. Certes this is the nature and propertie of all euangelike thinges, to begyn very baselye, and from suche beginnynges by litle and litle, to cum at the length to highest perfeccion: whereas contrarily all thinges that cum of the worlde and the deuel goeth about are after merueilous goodly beginninges, sodainly cast downe, and brought to nought. So lucifer whiles he set his seate in the northe ymagenyng to be equall with the highest, was sodainlye cast downe headlyng into hell. In semblable wise Adam when that through the diuels instigacio, he desired to be equall with God, was by and by exiled, and cast out of paradise. Therfore if thou here consider the high excellencie and greatnesse of Jesu, it will cause the muche more to wonder at his singuler humblenesse of mynd & modestie. He came out of a poore and homely village, out of Galile the vilest countrey of all Jewrie. He that purifieth all thinges, came as one of the rackall sort, humble & lowly to the baptisme of repentaūce, amōg sinners, souldiers, bacthelles, & publicās without any seruaūtes to wayte and attende vpō hym. It was not enough for hym to be circumcised accordyng to the ordynaunce of the lawe, and purified after the tradicion of Moyses: He desired also to receiue Johns baptisme, teaching & instructing vs hereby, that whoso maketh hym selfe ready to be a ministre and preacher of the gospell, muste omitte nothing whiche in any wyse pertayneth to the increase of vertue and godlines: And again eschew all thinges, wherwith the weakelinges may be offended. John taught vs this lesso, that a preacher of goddes word shoulde, not get himselfe estimacion and auctorite, by gorgeous apparell, or pōpouse liuing, but by honest behauiour, and godly conuersacio. But the ensaple that Christ shewed, was of muche more perfection, and farther from the Jewishe

fashion then this: for that he differyng nothyng at all from other, neyther in his apparell, nor yet in dyet, dyd neuertheleſſe by his godlye lyuing, mekenesse, and beneficiall goodnes towardes all men, vtterly darke and deface the auctorite of Iohn. For that is of hyghest perfeccion whiche is geuen by the grace of the gospel, then that whiche proceedeth from the austeritie, and straitnes of the lawe. The whole intent of the lorde Iesus was this, to make the worlde to knowe how he was the onely auctheur of saluacion, to expresse and set out vnto vs, a certaine fourme of euangelike and true godlynes, to confirme the truth and certentie of all that euer Moyses and the Prophetes had writte of thinges past, and to make vs, as it wer with the giuing of an earnest peny, to haue a sure hope and expectacion of thinges yet to come. For we right gladly beleue him, of whom we haue conceyued a meruelous good opinion, and vpon whom many witnesses do consent and agree.

Wherfore it was procured by the prouidence and wisdome of god, that the Lorde Iesus shoulde euery where haue an euident recorde and testimonie of his deitie: Of the whole lawe of Moses, of all the Prophetes, of the angels, of the shepardes, of the wise men called Magicians, of the Scribes, of Simeon and Anne, of Iohn baptist, of the father, of the holy ghost, and finally of Pylate, and the deuils. The miracles also that he wrought, plainely declared hym to be y sonne of God. He dyd many thinges, not because himselfe had any nede so to do, but for y he would set out vnto vs in his owne person, a certaine fourme and trade of lyuing: as when he fasted, when he was tempted, when he oftentymes prayed, when he came to baptisme, when he obeyed his parentes, when he patiently suffered all iniuries and wronges, and finallye when he came to his crosse and passion.

He perfourmed many thynges that the prophetes had prophecied of before, lest the people should doubt of the promises afterwardes to be accomplished: as when that in his baptisme he receyued the holye ghost in the lykenesse of a doue, lightyng vpon the crowne of his heade: as when he arose agayne from death to lyfe. Wherfore he came as a penitent to Iohn: he desired his baptisme, and obteyned it. He was baptised in Iordane, wherin were baptised both tanners, Publicans, and soudiers, a sorte of people so sinful, that none are more blemished or defiled with sinne. Are not here y stately princes of this worlde ashamed, who will haue nothyng common with the vulgare people? No kyng, nor priest cummeth to baptisme, and if it were theyr pleasure so to do, they would scarcely vouchesafe to receyue baptisme in a bason of golde or precious stones. Nowe our sauiour Iesus, that fountayne of all puritie, that kyng of all kynges, that lord of all lordes, disdayned not the common bathe, wherin the common sorte were washed. But whoso humbleth hymselfe before man, the same is highly exalted before god. Iesus was baptised as the rest, and euerychone of the common people there present. But the father of heauen discerned hym frō the residue, by a certayne notable signe neuer sene, neheard of before. For as sone as he was come out of the water of Iordane (whiche he halowed with the touche of his holy body) vnto lande, as he was in his contemplacion and prayers, Iohn sawe the heauens open, and the holy ghoste slie downe from thence, and light vpon the holy crowne of his heade, and there tarye. The pride of Adam closed the gates of paradise agaynst vs: The humblenesse of mynde and modestie of Christe, hath for paradise opened vs the gates of heauen. There was a visible signe shewed vnto mannes eyes, but by the same we were taughte what maner of myndes that heauenlye spirite both loueth and maketh. The spirite of the deuill, and the worlde maketh and loueth suche myndes as are haute, puffed vp with pryde, & fierce: but that heauenly spirite loueth those whiche are lowely, meke, and peacible. There is nothing more harmles, and more without gyle, then the doue: nothing whose nature worse agreeth with fighting and raueny. It was plainlye expressed & set out in the lord by this corporall figure, what is spiritually wrought in all those, that with a sincere and pure faith, receyue the baptisme of the gospell.

And alone as he was come.

The body is washed with water, but the soule is throughly annoynted with grace inuisible. Moreouer that the done abode still vpon the croune of the lordes head, signified that the holy ghoste is geuen to all other godlye men, and good lyuers, ratably after the measure and proporcion of their faithe, as it is presently expedient. But in Jesus was the continuall fountaine of al heauenly grace. For the doue brought hym not then any new grace whiche he had not before, but euidently declared howe he was full of grace, and showed moreouer, from whence all grace and goodnes issueth, and cummeth vnto vs. John beyng stablyshed in mynde with this so euident a signe receiued of the father of heauen, doubted not to pronounce Jesus to be the very sonne of God. The witnes that he gaue vnto Christ, was of great waight and authoritie amõg the Jewes, but much greater was the testimonie of the father himselfe: whose voyce sounded doune from the heaues, saying: Thou art that my derely beloued sonne, in whome my minde delighteth. For a wyse childe is the fathers ioy and comfoxte. That heauenly spirit of God is not ydle, weake, faynt or feble, but of nature all fiery, and by and by worketh, and putteth furth his vertue, as soone as it is once entred into the soule of man.

The spirite of man is slacke and slowe, and thinketh vpon nothing, but that whiche is lowe, vile, and worldly. But they that haue the spirite of the fleath mortified, and are led with the spirite of God, do furthwith goe in hande with high thinges, and of manly enterprise, that is to say, doe fight against the vncleane spirite, their ghostly enemy the deuil, whō they are not afrayed euen to prouoke to battayle, as men puttyng their whole confidence in the ayde and succour of the heauenly spirite, whiche is of muche more vertue and puissaũce than all that withstande the gospell.

¶ And immediatly the spirite driue him into wildernes: and he was there in the wildernes fowerty dayes, and was tempted of Sathan, and was with wild beastes: and the aungels ministred vnto hym. After that John was taken, Jesus came into Galile, preachyng the gospell of the kyngdome of God, and saying: The tyme is cum, and the kyngdome of God is at hande: repent and beleue the gospell.

Wherfore Jesus plainly expressing in himselfe, what he wouldе haue vs to doe incontinent after we haue receyued baptisme, was brought by force of the holy goste, into wildernesse. There he made his abode fowertie dayes, and as many nyghtes, styll continuyng in prayer and fastyng, and in the meane season he was tempted of the deuyll, whom (after he had discoumfited, and ouerthrowen hym) he delyuered vnto vs to ouercum: shewyng vs also the verye waye and meane, howe to gette the victorye. He is ouerthrowen by the spirite of Christe, by continuall prayer, and sobernesse of lyfe, and by the weapon of holy Scripture. The whyle that Christe continued thus in wyldernesse, he lyued among saluage beastes, vtterly abstaynyng from all comfort and solace

taken of the company of man. There had been no daunger for hym yf he had bene conuersaunt with the multitude of people, but he thewed hereby howe expedient it is for a Christian soulidour, to eschewe the compainye of the common sorte, vntill he haue sufficiently tamed the flesche, and ouercome the deuyl, and by continuall recordyng of Goddes lawe, and deuout prayers, made hym selfe strong ynough in spirite. For many be in more saferie when they lyue among beastes as Christ dyd, then when they be conuersaunt with suche mēne as are more noysome then any brute beastes. The Lorde and sauiour Jesus Christe kept company with beastes: but whiles he lacked the ministery of me, Angels were alwayes present, and serued hym. They that vtterly despyse all the pastimes and pleasures of this worlde, neuer wante heauenlye pleasures, and solaces. For vs and our profite Christ was baptised: for vs he prayed: for vs he was notably described by the testimony of the father, and the holye ghost: for vs he went into wyldernesse: for vs he fasted: for vs he was tempted: for vs he gatte the victorye ouer the deuil. Here consyder thou Christian soulidour, the very true and right order of thy perfeccion. The first instruccion and teachyng by mouth of Christes religion, causeth hatred of the former lyfe, and hope of clensyng or remission of synnes. With these capitalines thou runnest to Jordane: and there throughe fayth in Christe, washest away the fylthynesse of all thy synnes. And anon after at thine owne prayer and at the petition and prayer of the churche, thou hast a newe spirite geuen the from heauen, and by it arte admitted to be of the number of the children of God, and enlysted into the body of Jesu Christ, as a member of hym, who is the very heade of the churche. In the meane whyle it behoueth not the souldiour of Christe, to be careles. Thou hast promysed thy service to Christe thyne Emperour. Thou hast renounced the deuil. Thou hast receyued the holy ghoste as it were gifte money, a bond, and an earnest penye of thy salarye. Thou must enforce thyselfe with thy better endeuour to get victory. But that neuer chaungeth to the negligente and recheleffe person. Thou must take to thee armoure and weapon, leste thyne enemie whiche euery where lyeth in wayte for the, cum vpon the vnwares, and when thou arte vnarmed. Thou shalte incontinent be assaulted with the worlde, the deuil, and the flesche. Thou muste alwaies fight, to the entent thou mayest alwayes gette victory. For this battaile shal not rude before thou make an ende of thy lyfe. But yet the ofter ner thou chaunce to vanquisshe thine ennemye, the weaker shall he departe from battayle, and thou the stronger. When thou haste here behaued thyselfe valiantly, and played the manne a while, then at the length addresse thy selfe to the ministracion of the ghospell, specially yf thou feele that the spirite of God dyue the therunto.

The Lorde Jesus was meete to preache the ghospell (then whiche ministerie, there is none of greater perfeccion) euen when he was a perye lyte chylde: But he ordeyned a patarne or an example in hymselfe, for vs to counterfayte and folowe: wherby we are taught, that we ought not by and by after our profession, rashely to hasten ourselues to this so high and holy a ministracion. The lawe of Moyses had her tyme. There was also a tyme when it behoued that as the lyght of the euangelyke verite, begaune by litle and litle to shine furth vnto the worlde: euen so shoulde the shadowes of the olde lawe banisshe awaye: and the carnall lawe gyue place vnto the spirituall, puttyng

furth her vertue. Lyke as in transformacions and naturall chaungynges of thynges, there is a certaine meane, whiche hath some affinitie with both the extremes, to the intent that thinges of muche contrarietie maye easily be transformed, and to turned one into another: Euen so John came as a meane betwene the carnall law of Moyses, and the spirituall law of ỹ ghospell, to this ende, that men might the soner be transformed, and brought from the flesche vnto litterall sence of the lawe, to the spirite, and true meanyng of the same. For ayre is not sodainly, and immediatly made of yearth, but in this transformacion water is the meane betwene both, whiche at the lengthe by litle and litle is fined into ayre, a more pure element. Wherfore as long as the preachyng of John (who partly vpheldethe olde lawe, for as muche as it also sumwhat helpeth to bryng a man to Christ) florished, our sauiour Jesus, lest he should haue seemed to any, eyther to contende with John, or els to disanull the law, whiche he came to make perfect, neuer preached openly, ne declared his diuine power, but with a fewe miracles, nor gathered together any disciples, but rather withdrawed hymselfe as the disciple of John: teachyng vs hereby, that no man can well exercise the office of a mayster, vnlesse himselfe haue been before an obedient disciple. But after that John was cast into prison for his plaine and frake speakyng, then dyd Christ as it were succede him, & come in his place. It is meete that the carnall be fyrste, and that laterwarde, whiche is spirituall and gostely. That whiche is vnperfect goeth before, and the perfect cummeth after. Grace foloweth the propertie of Nature. Corne is fyrste grasse before it haue eeres, and manners state foloweth after infancie. The ceremonies of the lawe, notwithstandyng they haue sum what shadowed and figured Christ, yet nowe at the lengthe drawe they to theyr ende, and the light of the ghospell shineth abrode, whose only auctour is Jesus Christe. He went firste to preache in Galile. For it lyked hym that this newe lyght shoulde begin to shyne out of that parte of Jewry, whiche was counted vilest of all other. Wounde Jerusalem deserued not to haue this preeminence, which, albeit she were in very dede as blynde as a betell, yet thought her selfe to haue a perfect good syght, and for that cause was more vncurable.

But in these thynges, whiche came not to passe by hasard of Fortune, there lyeth hyd a certayne secrete significacion of thynges to be doen. For what betokeneth it that John is closed and shut vp in prison? Forsoth that the law of Moyses shall at the appearyng of the moste cleare light of the Gospell, be made darke, and vtterly loose her lyght. What signifieth it that he is bounde? Truely that the carnall parte of the lawe shalbe bounde, and freedome lesed and set at large, through the grace of the gospel. And what meaneth it that Johns heade is striken of? Certes that nowe is presente the true heade of the whole congregacion, which shalbe assembled of all nacions of the whole worlde.

What is this that Jesus preacheth the kyngdome of God in Galile? Undoubtedlye he maketh a foresigne that the grace of the ghospell shall forsake the wicked Jewes, and go from them to the Gentyles, because the Jewes embraced styll that olde heade whiche was chopped of by the ghospell, and contemned Christe the very head of the whole lawe. For this woorde (Galile) in the Sirian tongue, signifyeth a flyttyng or chaungyng of habitacion. Before tyme grace laye hydde, and ceremonies were in highest hyghest estimacion. Nowe are they gone, and Jesus cummeth abrode, the eternall auctour and preacher of the grace of the gospell. Therfore accordyng to the mistical sence here of, whoso will heare Christ preache, must flyete away from their olde vsages, and naughty lustes, to the intent they maye be receyuable of this newe and heauenly doctrine. Let the Jewe caste awaye the persuasion and sure beliefe he hath conceyued of his owne holynes: the Pharisey, the pryde he taketh by trustyng to his woorkes: the Bishoppes, the glory of their temple, and sacrifices: the Philosophers, the bayne aydes of mannes wisedome. Let Kynges and tyraunte cast awaye that moste foolyshe truste, whiche they repose in their eyches. Let all nacions laye aparte all ungodly customes, all filthy lustes, and hearken vnto this newe Preacher Jesus, who teacheth not worldly, but heauenly thynges. He speaketh indifferently to all menne. Let all men therfore heare hym alike.

Here is it very expedient to consider how our sauiour Christ beginneth to set furth his doctrine. Worldly Philosophers do first teache their audience, not those thynges which are moste fruitfull & profitable, but such thinges as may cause thē to be had in admiracio for their singuler wisedome, minding nothing so muche, as to get themselues a name by dissenting in opinion, from other famous teachers. But the lorde Jesus woulde neyther disanull thauctorite of the olde law, (for he doth truely interprete ỳ same, which was before muste vnderstād: rather making it perfit, thē destroying it) neither disprooued he Johns doctrine, although it were imperfit, but began his preaching with the selfsame beginning, which John had vsed before. A man would haue saied he had bene the very scholer and disciple of John, who was in dede the maister, and auctour of all. Now what preacheth he? what is the eye that ỳ word, a sone of the euerlasting father maketh? The world had far swarued frō ỳ right vsage of the law of nature, whiche God hath grauen and planted in al mens hertes. The wisdome that the philosophers taught, increased the foly of the worlde. The religion which the gentyles vsed before time, was moste wicked, and detestable. The law of Moses caused muche hipocrisy with her shadowes, her sacrifices, and her fears. The lawe signified or meant by her figures, and the Prophetes tolde before by their prophecies, how one should cum, who should offer vnto all nacions perfite saluacion. But because this promise was so long differred, the worlde beyng as it were deafe, gaue no eare thereunto at all. Yet the lorde of his gracious goodnesse, forgate not to performe the same. Now is the time already fulfilled that he prefixed or afore pointed vnto this busines. You nede not from henceforth to await for the fulfillyng of any other figures, or any mo darke sayinges of ỳ lawe. You nede not to looke after newe prophetes. Lo, the kyngdome of God is now present. In steade of shadowes critie shall shine abrode. In steade of the carnall lawe, the spirituall shall succede and cum in place. In steade of corporall ceremonies, true godlines shall raigne. In steade of the denilles kyngdom, Gods kyngdom shal be enlarged. There is no cause why you should lynger or stay: why any man shoulde looke backe vnto the aydes of his owne righteousnesse.

Perhaps as Moyses lawe taketh righteousnesse, sum are righteouse in the sighte of the worlde: but as the new lawe requireth the same, all men are synners, and vnrighteous. yet for all that there is no cause why you should dispayre. knowe your disease, and then receyue remedy, that is, onely be you re-promitte for your former lyfe, and stedfastly beleue the gospel. Nowe is there brought vnto you a message right ioyfull, and muche to be desyred, I meane free remission of all your trespasses. You haue no nede of burnte offringes. Onely knowledge your vnrighteousnesse, and repose youre affiaunce in the righteousnes of almighty god, who doubtlesse will performe what he promiseth by his ghospell. For that man shal sufficiently deserue to enioye the promise therof, whoso beleueth the promiser.

The texte. ¶ As he walked by the Sea of Galile, he sawe Symon and Andrewe his brother casting nettes into the Sea, for they were fyshers. And Iesus sayd vnto them: Folowe me, and I wyll make you to become fyshers of men. And streyght wayes they forsoke their nettes and folowed hym. And when he had gone a litle further thence, he sawe Iames the sonne of zebede and Iohn his brother, whiche also were in the hyppe mending their nettes, and he anon called them, and they left their father zebede there in the hyp with the hyred seruauntes, and folowed hym.

After the Lorde Iesus had with suche wordes moued and styrred vp the myndes of the Iewes to receiue the newe Philosophy, and doctrine of the ghospell, he lyke wyse began after the ensample of Iohn to gather certaine disciples, but fewe in number, and suche as were vnlettered persones, and of lowe degree, to the entent that when he had brought their ministery conuerted all the whole worlde, it should plainly appeare how this kyngdom was the very kyngdom of God, and not a worldly kyngdom. Therefore as he trauayled on a daye by the lake or sea of Galile, he spied Symon, and Andrewe his brother, labouryng together, and abouten to caste their nettes into the water: For they were fisher men, and by this occupation gat their lyuyng. The baskes of their crafte, made for the aduauncyng of goddes glory. The concorde of the two brethren, sygnified the consent and agreement of the churche. The crafte of fyshing, bare the figure of the ministracio of the ghospell, which by vertue of Goddes worde plucketh vp into the lyght of veritie, and loue of heauenly thynges, suche as are drowned in the darkenesse of ignoraunce, and the fowle stinkyng puddell of worldly cares. And thus fyrste of all fyshed he for these two fyshers. Come ye (sayd he) and folowe me, for I will make you begynne from this day forwarde, to fyshe after men. Alone as the Lord Iesus had spoken the word, the two brethre leauyng their nettes euen as they were, folowed him without any tarying. For Iesus voice hathe in it a certaine heauenly charme or inchauntment. And goyng thence a lytle forwarde, he sawe other two, that is to wete, Iames the sonne of zebede, and Iohn his brother, who were also trymmyng and mendyng their nettes in the shyppe, and makyng themselues ready to go a fyshyng. And these two not withstanding their myndes were bent another waye, he sodeinly spake vnto, callyng and commaundyng the to folow hym. Now, that thou mayest know young men of an euangelike faith, they made no tarying, but leauyng their father zebede with his hired seruauntes in the shyp, streyght wayes folowed their caller. Thus beganne Christe to gather the electe prelates, and ministers of his Churche, cleane refusyng the priestes, and Pharisies of Ierusale, with all their pompe and pryde.

The texte. ¶ And they came into Capernaum, and streyght waye on the Sabboth dayes, he entred into the Synagoge, and taught, and they were astonyed at his learnyng. For he taught them as one that had authoritie, and not as the Scribes.

And being accompanyed with suche a felowshyp, he came vnto Capernaum. This

This Capernaum was a citie muche florishyng in substaunce, but no lesse proud, lywodly, and vicious, than it was welthy. Here lyanby he beganne to playe the parte of an Euangelistr, or preacher of the gholpell.

For vpon the sabboth daye he entred into the Synagoge, and taught the Iewes openly, not the bayne fables of the Pharisees, but declared vnto them the very true meanyng of the lawe, which was in dede spirituall, and not carnall. And the people perceiued him to be a newe teacher, & his doctrine also to be of a newe sort. Then sawe he was a mā of lowe degre, & that suche as accōpanied him were but fewe in number, very rascals, & men of no reputacion: yet wondered they greatly at his wordes, for that they breathed a certaine godly vertue. For he did not after the maner of the Scribes, teache tryflyng cōstitucions of men, or olde wyues tales of genealogies, and pedegrewes, but his wordes were pithy by and of authority, and the wonderfull great miracles he wrought, caused those verities that he spake to be beleued. What thyng soeuer is humayne and worldly, the same is of litle price and estimacion, when Goddes power be gyuen ly once to put furth his strength and efficacie.

¶ And there was in their Synagoge, a man vexed with an vncleane spirite, and he cryed, saying: Alas what haue we to do with the thou Iesus of Nazareth? Arte thou cum to destroye vs? I knowe the what thou arte, euen the holy one of God. And Iesus rebuked him saying: holde thy peace, and cumme out of the man. And whā the vncleane spirite had torne him, and cried with a loude voyce, he came out of him, and they were all amased, insomuche that they demaūded one of another among themselues, saying: What thing is this? What newe doctrine is this? For with authoritie commaunded he the vnclē spirites, and they obeyed him. And immediatlye, his fame spred abrode throughoute all the regiou rounde about in Galile. The texte.

And lo, lyanby there was occasion ministred for him to worke a myracle. For in that assembly, was there a certaine felowe whiche was vexed with an vncleane spirite. This wicked spirite could not abyde the heauenly spirite speakyng in Christ. For he beganne to clatter agaynst his heauenly doctrine, crying aloude, and saying: O Iesus of Nazareth, what hast thou to do with vs? Arte thou cumme to destroye vs before the tyme? I right well knowe who thou arte. Certes the selfe same holy one, whiche the prophete Daniel promysed long sithens, whom God hath singularly sanctified aboue al other. The lorde Iesus, eyther because the tyme was not yet cumme that he should openly confesse who he was, or els because he was not pleased with this confession, beyng vndoubtedly true, but yet made inoughe constraint of feare, and of a wicked spirite (who sythe he is of hymselfe a lyer, and delighteth to deceiue man, was not to be hearde in the presence of the people when he spake the trueth, lest any manne would haue taken occasion there by to beleue hym afterwardes when he had lyed,) the lorde Iesus, I saye, rebuked hym, and sayed: Holde thy peace, and departe out of the man, and so shalt thou better declare who I am. And furthwith at the lordes cōmaundemēt, the vncleane spirite forsoke the mā. But at his departure he tare him, & cryed out with a loude voyce, so that it euidently appeared there by, how he fled awaye not wyllingly, but by force and constraint of Gods power. And here was shewed the figure of a manne possessed with the spirite of the deuyll. Is not he vexed wyth the worste, & cruellest of all the deuils, whiche is wholly possessed with ambicion, couetousnes, rancour, malice, hatred, pleasure of the body, & suche other

lyke deuilliſhe luſtes, and appetites. Suche as are vexed with theſe ſpirites, cannot in no wyſe abyde to heare the goſpell preached, but yell and crye out a gaynſt it, as the deuill dyd, ſaying: what haſte thou to do with vs Jeſus? Arte thou comme to deſtroye vs? For ſo many as the ſpirite of this worlde poſſeſſeth, thinke themſelues vtterly forlorne, whenſoeuer they are conſtrayned to forſake thoſe thinges wherein they haue ſette theyr falſe felicitie. And therfore theyr myndes are ſore troubled, and as you woulde ſaye, tugged and haled into ſondrie pieces, whyleſt on the one ſyde feare of eternall damnation mouyth them to vertue and goodnes, on the other ſyde the benimmouſe lyſtes of ſuch vices as they haue of long time accuſtomed vnto, holdeth them faſt and withdrawyth them from theyr godly purpoſe.

But yet no maner of deuill taketh ſo faſte holde, but he wyll at the commaundement of Jeſu, flye awaye. It is a muche greater myracle to make of an ambicious man, a temperate, of a fyerce felowe, a patient, of the lecherous perſone, a chaſt liuer, of the extorcioner or one that liueth by pollyng and pyllyng, a liberall man, than to deliuer a mannes body from a wycked ſpirite.

But yet men woonder more at this, then at the other, not becauſe it is more wonderfull and meruailous in dede, but for that it is ſeene with bodely eyes.

And they were all amaſed, &c. Therfore when he had thus chaſed awaye the vncleane ſpirite by commaundement onely, then the Jewes greatly wondered at it, inſomuche that they demaũded one of another ſaying: What new thing is this? we haue not read that euer the Prophetes dyd the lyke, caſtyng out deuyls by bare worde of mouth onely. Or what new kynde of doctrine is this, that hath ſo great vertue and power folowing it? He preacheth the kyngdome of god, and putteth further Gods power, in that he treadeth vnder foote, and ſubdueth the power of the deuill. Neyther is it by ſorcery or inchauntment, or by makyng of long prayers vnto god, nor yet by any other laborious meane that he thus putteth to flyght the wycked fendes: But he commaundeth them with worde onely as theyr lorde and conquerour, and they incontinẽt whether they wyll or no, obey hym. Of this wonderful facte, a great fame of Jeſu was ſpred abrode throughout all the countrey of Galile. And becauſe it ſhoulde appeare that in him is the wellſpryng of godly power, whiche can neuer be conſumed, one miracle dyd streyght wayes ſucceede and folowe another.

The texte. ¶ And ſtreyght with when they were comme out of the ſynagoge, they entred into the houſe of Symon, and Andrew, with James and John. But Symõs mother in lawe laye ſicke of a feuer, and anon they tell hym of her, and he came and toke her by the hande, and lyfte her vp, and immediatlye the feuer forſoke her, and ſhe miniſtred vnto them. And at euen when the Sunne was downe, they brought vnto hym all that were diſeaſed, and them that were vexed with diuels, and all the citie was gathered together at the doore, and he healed many that were ſicke of diuerſe diſeaſes, and caſt out many deuils, and ſuffered not the deuils to ſpeake, becauſe they knewe hym.

For anon as they were departed out of the ſynagoge, they came into the houſe of Symõ and Andrew, whither alſo James and John folowed. Now Symons mother in lawe, as it ſhe fortuned, laye ſycke and was ſore vexed with an ague. Anone as Jeſus was by them aduertiſed therof, he went to the bed ſide and toke the woman by the hande, and lyfted her vp, and forthwith the feuer forſoke her, and euẽ as ſhe was ſodainly, ſo was ſhe perfectly made whole. For ſhe was ſodainly made as luſty and ſtrong, as ſhe was before, inſomuche that ſhe did her accuſtomed office in the houſe, miniſtring vnto Jeſu, and his diſciples.

The

He lyeth lycke of a perilous diſeaſe, whoſe mynde burneth with the loue of carnall pleaſures: whō by reaſon of ſuperfluitie and exceſſe, leadeth an vdle and a ſluggiſhe lyfe. It is a woman that lyeth lycke. And at the beginning the fyrſt woman deceiued with the pleaſaunt alurement of an apple, began to be lycke of this ague. Our fleſhe that alwayes luſteth agaynſte the ſpirit is our Eue. But happy are they whome Ieſus, with the touche of his moſte holye ſpirite, lifteth vp to the loue of heauenly thynges, that he whiche before tyme ſerued vdleneſſe, riotous liuing, and vncleannes, maye ſodenly recouer his olde ſtrength, and luſtynes, and being made a newe manne, hereafter vſeth the ſeruaunt of cleanes, chaſtitie, & ſoberues. For theſe are the meates, whiche Chriſte is refreſhed, and delyghted withall. Now ymagine, that the houſe of Symon ſygnifieth the churche of Chriſt, in the whiche it is not conuenient that there be anye feble and weake in ſpirite, but ſuche as are full of cuange lyke ſtrength, and luſtines. And yet many tymes Peters mother in lawe, that is to ſaye, the ſynagoge, lyeth ſicke in the ſame. For he is a membre of the ſynagoge, vnto whoſe corrupte taſting, the vnſauery and werylhe letter yet ſauoreth: who taſteth well the water of the Phariſaicall vnderſtanding, and can in no wyſe taſt the wyne of the ſpirite, and true meaning of the ghoſpell.

They that were in the houſe with the Lorde Ieſu, deſyred him to lyfte vp the woman that laye ſycke in her bedde. In ſemblable wiſe let vs all, who are mēbres of the churche, deſyre his mercyfull goodnes with moſt humble praiers, that he wyll vouchſafe to put out his holy ryght hand, and therwith to lifte vp alſo thoſe timerous perſons, whiche cleuing only to the letter of ſcripture, and wholy geuen to the ſuperſticious obſeruation of cere mouyes, doue of a certaine ouright iudgement, greatly deſyre thoſe thynges that are hurtfull & noyſome: and contrarily, hate and abhorre ſuche thinges as are onely to be deſyred: to lyfte them vp, I ſaye, to the fredome of the ghoſpell, whiche ſeeketh not for this purpoſe that we ſhould with more libertie committe ſinne at pleaſure, but to the intent we ſhould gladly, and with right good will, doue the workes of Euangelike or chriſtian charitie, and cheriſhe Ieſus in his membres. The Lorde is alwayes ready to heale the ſoule, yf he be deſyred, and called vpon. He loueth thoſe that call vpō hym, call they neuer ſo importunatly, and out of ſeaſon.

It was nowe late in the euening, and the ſunne was ſet, ſo that it might be thought a great point of importunitee, to cal vpon the phyſycian at that time. But the great deſyre of healthe had the vpper hande of ſhame. They brought vnto him a very great numbre of ſuche as were diſeaſed with all kyndes of infirmities, and among them alſo, ſome whiche were vexed with vncleane ſpirites. The whole citie of Capernaum came thieke and threfolde, to the gate of the houſe to ſee this ſyght. Ieſus without excuſe healed very many of them, of ſundry diſeaſes, and caſt out many deuils. He was a quicke and a ready phyſycian, who with worde cured diſeaſes. He oecourr he put to ſilence the deuils, who cryed with a loude voyce that he was Chriſt, vtterly deſpyſyng the teſtimonie of his enemyes, and of them with whome he wouldē that his ſhoulde in no wyſe haue to do. He ſuffered the chyldren of the Hebrewes, and fyſhers, to deſery hym: But he admitted no recorde of the deuils, though it were true. The naughtines of the perſon that telleth the trueth, doth hurte the ſame. And he doeth more harme with his lies, whiche hath gotten himſelfe credence afore

by some true tale tellyng. This was then done accordyng to the hystorie. But to open the secrete sence and meaning therof. We se very many euen no wee dayes, that cum flockyng vnto Simon Peters house: whiche as I sayde before, bare the fygure of the Churche. For the citie of Capernaum representeth the whole world: the setting of the sunne, fygureth the deathe of Christe. The gate of the house, signifieth baptisme, whiche is beset with repentaunce of the former lyfe, & trustе to obtayne soule healthe of Jesus. The syeke people sitte aboute the gates, that is to saye, the Publicans and sinners desyre to be restored into the felowshyp of the churche. They should not deserue to be healed except they surely beleued that Jesus bothe could and would geue them helth. The churche of Christ conteyned in it but a very small number, so long as he lanterne & lyght of the world, liued in yearth. But after his death a great multitude of people began thither to resorte, out of all the countreis of the world.

¶ And in the morning very early, Jesus (when he was risen vp) departed, and wente out into a solitarye place, and there prayed: Symon, and they that were with him folowed after him, and when they had found hym, they sayed vnto hym: all men seke for the. And he sayed vnto them: Let vs go into the next townes, that I may preache there also. For therfore I am come. and so he preached in their synagoges, and in all Galile, & cast the deuils out. The xxxix. text.

These thinges so done: when the Lorde Jesus who came not for this onely purpose to cure corporal diseases, whiche he sendeth many tymes to vs to the intent they maye be whole in soule: when, I saye, he sawe the multitude greatly desyre to be healed of their bodely diseases, and not with lyke affection couet to heare his heauenlye doctrine, wherewith the maladies and diseases of the soule are cured, the nexte daye, as though he had bene desyrous to take some ease and rest, he departed them, for he roose verie earlye in the morning, and went from Capernaum vnto a solytary place, where he made his prayers to the father, genyng hym thankes for the benefites wyche he had decreed to gene vnto mankynde by hym. And here are sundrye ensamples prepared for our instruction. Fyrste he teacheth vs that we must assone as we haue done our neyghbour good, departe away: leste we seme to loke after any rewarde or reward, of those that we haue done good vnto. Secondarilye we are taught manye tymes to leaue of the teachyng of holsom doctrine for a season to styre vp a desyre in vs to aduaunce the same. Finally we learne also that we ought to refreche and quicken the spirite, by often goyng abyde into solitary places: I meane not suche goynges aparte, as are for pleasure and pastime, but for prayer, and heauenly contemplacion: because we maye returne from thence more willyng in spirite, and better disposed to helpe the weake: Euery man which hath chaunged place, is not goen into wildernes, but he that hath cleane severed his mynde from worldly cares, and wholly bent himselfe to the studie, and contemplacion of heauenly thinges. When Simon Peter, and the reste of the disciples vnderstode that Jesus was priuilye departed, they folowed after til they had founde where he was. For it is not beseming that the true disciples of Jesu be any tyme awaye from their maister whome they ought in all thynges to folow. In the meane season, when the people, whiche flocked early in the mornyng to the gate of the house, had also learned how Jesus was gone awaye, they lykewyse folowed hym into the wildernesse. Nay there be that folow Jesus, but none fynde hym oute saue alonly his disciples: who after they haue once founde him, do shewe him vnto other.

Wherfore

Wherfore they tolde the lorde, how there was a great multitude of the citizens of Capernaum come thither to seke him. The lorde then answered again and saying. It is sufficient at this present, to haue layed these foundations among the Capernaites. Nowe it is tyme for me to go in like maner, and diuerse the litle townes, and villages here about, that I maye likewyse there preache the kyngdome of god: For I came not to preache to one citie alone, but to declare saluacion to all men. For this cause the Lorde trauayled through the townes, and villages of all Galilee preachyng in their Synagoges, curyng diseases, and castyng out deuils, because the ignorant people shoulde by reason of his mighty dedes and myracles, geue firme credence vnto his doctrine.

The texte. And there came a leper to him, beseechyng hym and kneelyng downe and saying vnto hym. If thou wilt thou canst make me cleane. And Jesus had compassion on hym and put forth his handes, touched hym, and sayth vnto him: I will, be thou cleane. And as sone as he had spoken, immediatly the leprosy departed from hym, and he sent him awaye forthwith, and sayth vnto him: See thou saye nothing to any man, but get the hence, shewe thy self to the priest, and offer for thy cleansyng those thynges whiche Moses commaunded for a witnes vnto them. But he (assone as he was departed) began to tell many thynges, and to publishe the saying, insomuche that Jesus couldeno more openly entre into the citie: But was without in desert places, and they came to hym from euery quarter.

It chaunced on a tyme whē Jesus had taught the people in a certaine mountayne many goodly lessons, concerning the perfection of the euangelike or christian profession, that there met him as he came downe agayne, a certaine man infected with leprosy, a disease vncurable, and abhorred of all men: in whome was shewed to the corporal eyes, a figure of those thinges which be wrought by inuisible operation in the soules of the hearers. The leper hated his filthy disease, and had a meruelous great confidence in Jesu. Here thou seest a figure of a sinner, which returnyng from vicious liuyng, and entendyng to amend, is at the nexte doze to saluacion. The same leper feared not ꝑ people although he knewe right well that they abhorred his company, but onelye regarded the goodnes of Jesu. Wherfore he came vnto hym, and fell downe at his knees. What woulde the proude Pharisey here do? He would crye: hence with this ougly and abhominable creature, leste he infect euen oure very eyes. He would call for water to washe awaye his noysome, and contagious breath. This would the Pharisey do, more vncleane in soule, then any leper in body. But what doth the moste meke and gentill Lord, whiche onely was pure and cleane from all spot of synne? He commaundeth hym not to be had out of his sight, nor to be remoued awaye from his knees. It was not vnknowen vnto him what he defyred: but his will was ꝑ the notable fayth of this mā, should be an ensample to all men. All suche as be lecherous persons, couetous, full of hatred & enuy, or attached with other filthy lustes and appetites of the body, are foule arayed with this horrible & detestable leprosy. And such as are herewith infected, let them heare, and marke the wordes of this leper, to thintent they maye folow hym. If thou wilt, sayth he, thou canste make me cleane. He knowlegeth his disease, and doubteth not of the power, & goodnes of God. He wholy referreth ꝑ iudgemēt to the lorde, to iudge of him whether he be worthy to receiue so great a benefite at his handes, or no: readie to geue thankes yf he obtayne his desire: and not to murmur, and grutche agaynst hym, yf he obtayne it not. For he would saye thus: He is able to put awaie leprosy, who not onely cureth all kindes of diseases, but also casteth out deuils: and he wyll do it,

it, that so willingly helpeth all that are in distresse and misery, wherseuer he cummeth. But so great is myne vnworthynes, that I alone deserue not that, whiche all other obtain of his moste mercifull goodnes. This so perfite a belefe, ioyned with exceding humblenes of mynde, and modestie, procured hym mercy of Iesu. For our sauiour shewing outwardlye, euen with his countenaunce, a certayne affecte of pitie and compassion, ther by to reache what affection of mynd ought to be in vs towarde synners, held deout his hande, and

And Iesus had compassion on him stretched, made hym cleane.

therewith touched the leaper, and by vertue of wordes that hymselfe pronounced, made hym cleane. The leper sayed: If thou wilt thou canst make me cleane. Iesus answered: I will, be thou cleane. True fayth maketh not many wordes, neyther gruttcheth the charitie of the gospell to do a good deede. And Christ had scarcely spoken these wordes (be cleane) but the disease was quite gone from the man, so that no token therof remayned. The lawe of Moses forfendeth to touche a leaper, the spirituall meaning wherof, conteyneth wholsome doctrine. We must abstayne from the company of vncleane persons and synners, lest we be infected by the contagiousenes of their vyces. But the Lorde Iesus is aboue the lawe: neyther can he be defiled with touchyng, who purifieth whatsoeuer he toucheth. He touched the leaper with his hande, and furthwith he healed his whole bodye. Let vs therfore praye that he may in semblable wyse touche our soules with his holy worde, and therwith purifie our inward vncleannes. O thou that best to haunt the company of harlots, thou that arte an adulterer, or pollated with lyke diseases, runne in lyke maner vnto Iesus, for he cumeth downe from the heigth of his maiestie and meteth the) and knowyng thine own filthines, fall downe at his knees, prostrate thy selfe, and lye flat vpon the grounde: Crye and call vpon him, but crye with moste stedfaste belife of harte and mynde: Lorde, if thou wilt, thou canste make me cleane. And anon thou shalt heare these wordes agayne of thy mercifull sauioure: I will, be thou cleane. After these thynges were done in maner before rehearsed, the Lorde suffered not the man to folowe him, but caused him to departe, commaunding hym straytly to disclose nothing of this matter to any creature lyuyng, but rather (yf he) get the hence, and shewe thy selfe to the priest, by whose iudgement accordyng to the ceremonies of the lawe thou wast iudged to be a leaper. And if he geue sentence that thou arte clensed in dede of thy leprosy, then offer that Moses hath commaunded to be offered, of those that should fortune to be deliuered therof. Thus shalt thou with more ernest dēce publiche gods benefit towardes the, thē if thou straight wayes tell euery body that thou arte made cleane. For by this meanes it shall appeare, euen vnto the Phariseis themselues, whiche depraue my benefites, that thou wast a verye leper, and hast bene clensed without eyther help of the Phisicias, or els of Moses law, by bare worde of mouthe. and touche onely: & so shall they know how there is one present that farre passeth their priestes: who can easely cure leprosy, thoughe it be dete stable, & abhorred, wher as they haue muche a doe, truly to discerne the same. This fellow departed, in stede of a leper cleane in bodye, and went to the priest, and was sene, and iudged to be cleansed of all leprosie. And anon after he conceled not this dede, but published it euery where, reportyng bothe this, and many other thynges of Iesu. Sum will here aske: Why did this man as he was commaunded in the one thyng, and in the other, nothyng regarde the Lordes commaundement? Truely for that the one ſerued to confirme the certaintie of the miracle, becauſe the prieſt not knowing as yet who had healed the man, ſhoulde pronounce his healthe reſtored by Jeſu, to be a perfit health, who elſ peraduenture woulde haue deprayed Chriſtes benefit, yf the autour therof had bene knowen, before he had geuen his verdite. But after the miracle was once confirmed by his ſentence, then made it muche for Gods glory to haue it publiſhed abrode. Wherefore then cõmaunded Jeſu that thing to be kept ſecret, which in dede his will was ſhould be blaſed abrode and vttred. Forſoth to moniſhe vs that we ought to ſeke no glorye and prayſe of man for the benefites wiche it pleaſeth God to worke by vs, becauſe the goodlyer prayſe euer foloweth them wiche refuſe the ſame. It prorceth of an high courage ſo to do a good turne, ỹ thou woulde ſt haue no thankes therfore yelden the of him, whom thou haſt doen good & pleaſure vnto, beyng only contented with this, that it lay in thy lot to helpe thyne euen Chriſten in his neceſſitie. But he that is holpen by ſuche benefite as he hath receyued at thy handes, ought with ſo muche the more diligence to publiſh and ſet out thy well doing euerywhere to thy prayſe & cõmendacion. Chriſt was in no daunger to offende in vainglory: and therfore this enſample was ordeyned for our inſtruccion, wiche are continually in very great ieoperdy to fall therin. Neyther did this man contemne Chriſtes commaundementes: but the great gladnes that he was in by reaſon of the reſtitucion of his health, and a certaine feruent loue wiche he was kyendeled withall towardes Chriſte ỹ autour therof, would not ſuffer hym to kepe ſilence any longer. Verely it chaunceth for the moſt parte that we are beſt beloued, when we tell thoſe thinges, whiche we had rather in very dede kepe ſecret, the diſcloſe, if the matter it ſelfe enforced not vs to vttre that which lyeth hyd in our ſtomakes. Now we what came of it that this man did thus blaſe abrode this miracle. Truly by reaſon therof, euery man conceyued ſuche an opinion of the Lorde Jeſu, that he could not now for the great thyrſt and prayſe of people that thyther reſorted, openly enter into the citie, as he was wont to do: but was constrayned to auoyde the good townes, and make his abode in the wildernelſe. Suche as goe about to get a name and gaynes by iugglyng caſtes and worckyng of Magicall miracles, deſyer to be in thoſe cities, wherras moſte haunt and reſorte of people is. But oure ſauiour Jeſus, in that he ofte tymes ſhunneth muche aſſembly of people, plainly teacheth vs what we ought to do. He that is able to worke the miracles of the goſpell, doeth not ſomuche deſyer the great multitude, as the feruent mynde and affeccion of beholders. In great cities many reſorted vnto hym for this purpoſe only, to delite their iyes with newe and ſtraunge ſightes. No man foloweth Jeſus into the wylderneſſe, vnleſſe he long after hym with a certaine vehement deſire and affeccion. He that forgoeth al pleaſures of good townes, and foloweth Chriſt thorow rough and cumberous places, foloweth hym to his great commoditie. For he that loueth hym vnfaynedly, doeth in all thinges folowe hym whome he loueth: thorough reproche, hunger, deſpoylyng of ſubſtaũce, banyſhmẽt, impriſonment, tourmentes and death. And ſuche folowers of Chriſt, were figured by thoſe that came flockyng out of all countreis, and partes of Galile, vnto Jeſu: who kept hymſelfe cloſe, in deſert and ſolitary places.

The.ij. Chapter.

BVT whitherſoeuer a man flieth, bertue hath euer her fame and glory folowyng her, euen as the ſhadow followeth the body. For he that is vnfainedly good, cãneuer be but one maner of man, and lyke himſelfe. And as there is alwayes light, whitherſoeuer the body of the ſune remoueth: euen ſo to what place ſoeuer true godlineſſe remoueth, there is alwayes great reſort of people. Now wildernes was no longer wildernes, after the lorde Jeſus, the true light of this woꝛld, was gon thither. And yet the perſone in whome is the power to woꝛke the myracles of the ghoſpell, ceaſeth not (aſmuche as in him lyeth) to auoyde ſuch places whereas muche people is aſſembled to beholde hym, foꝛ that he knoweth certainly, what a perilous vice vaine glory is. Neuertheleſſe the feruent deſyre he hath to helpe and do all men good, doeth of times cauſe hym, thoughe it be againſte his nature, to haue recourſe thither againe. And by this meanes cummeth it to paſſe, that whiles the good man is compelled to remoue from place to place, the moꝛe receiueth bmefite at his handes.

The texte. ¶ After a fewe dayes also he entred in to Capernaum agayne, and it was noyſed that he was in the houſe, and anon many were gathered together: inſomuche that now there was no roume to receiue them, no not ſomache as about the dore. He preached the woꝛde vnto them. And there came certaine vnto him bringyng one ſicke of the palſey, whiche was borne of fower men. And when they could not come nye vnto him foꝛ preace, they vncouered the roofe of the houſe that he was in. And when they had broken vp the roofe, they did (with cordes) let downe the bed wherein the ſicke of the palſey lay. When Jeſus ſawe their faith, he ſayd vnto the ſicke of the palſey: ſonne thy ſinnes be forgeuen thee.

Wherfoꝛe Jeſus geuyng vs enſample bothe to flye vayne glory, and alſo continually to doe good to our euen chriſten, within fewe dayes after returned agayne to Capernaum, from whence he ſeemed to be dryuen away before, by reaſon of the great impoꝛtunitie of the people, whiche euen in the night tyme lay about the gates of the houſe wherin he ſoiourned. Foꝛ as he made Bethleem muche renowmed by his byrthe, and Nazareth very famous by his education, and the countrey of Egypt happy, becauſe he fled thyther foꝛ his preſeruacion and ſafegarde: ſo did he, as it were adopte and chooſe Capernaum to be his countrey, bothe by his oft tarrying there, and alſo by ſhewyng of many fayer miracles in the ſame. He came agayn hyther in maner by ſtealth, and kepte hymſelfe ſecrete in a houſe, before it was knowen in the citye that he was cum. But as the Sunne can not be hyd, ſo the Lorde Jeſus can not be kept cloſe and ſecret. The rumour whiche (as it is commonly ſeen) roſe of a few perſons, had now blowē abrode throughout the whole citie, that Jeſus was in the houſe. And furthwith thither flocked ſuche a multitude of people that all the houſe was fylled, and not onely that but alſo the porche, and al the places about the dore were not ſufficient to receiue them. It is a bleſſed houſe whither Jeſus is cum to dwell, and neuer departeth thence agayne. That houſe is the churche. Foꝛ Capernaum beareth the figure of the whole woꝛlde, where ſoeuer the Gentyles inhabite. Certes at Jeruſalem the Jewes caſt Jeſus out of the temple, and among the Gentiles, the kyngdome of heauen uen ſuffereth violence, and the multitude of all ſortes of people entreth into it, after a certaine fortible faſhion. The Chriſtian Mouices ſitte aboute ỳ gates, greatly deſyring to be admitted into the Lordes houſe, muche houngryng and thirſtyng after the rightuouſnes of the kyngdom of heauen. And verily Jeſus excludeth no manne from this houſe, neyther poore, nor ryche, whole nor ſycke, ſo that he haue a vehement deſyre to heare hym. Wherefore the Lorde teachyng vs that we ought alwayes chyefly ye to care for our ſoule health, and after warde for our bodies, fyrſte of all miniſtred vnto them the doctrine of the ghoſpell, wher with the diſeaſes and maladies of the ſoule are cured. For this cauſe ſuch as are diſpoſed to geue almes to ỳ poore, do very well, yf they geue them fyrſte a fyrme exhortacion, that maye make them the better in mynde and ſoule, and then departe with theyr charitie. For the common ſort of people be of ſuche a diſordered iudgement, that they are more deſyrous of thoſe thynges whiche are expedient for the body, then of thoſe ỳ pertayne to theyr ſoule health. The lord euidently declared vnto vs by his enſample, that our chiefe care ought te to be for that parte, whiche is the chiefeſte parte of ỳ portion of man, in that he fyrſte taught, and then by and by healed ſuche as were diſeaſed. Nowe whyles Jeſus was teachyng, and buſye about curyng the diſeaſes of theyr ſoules, there came vnto hym certain men, bryngyng with theim one that was ſycke of a Paſſey, whoſe ſynowes were ſo reſolued in all partes of his body, thrꝛough the violence of the diſeaſe, that he couldnot ſtyrre out of his bed, but was fayne to be caried thither vpon fower mennes ſhoulders.

Be ꝓpre the w. vnto t

And ther came certain vnto hym.

Here haſt thou plainly ſet out, the very ymage and fygure of a minde, whiche is by worldly luſtes and deſyres made ſo womanlyke, and diſſolute, that it can in no wiſe lift vp it ſelfe to doe any thyng that is good & godly, but lyeth ſtyll in the bedde of lowe and filthy cares, and neuer remembreth any thyng that is hygh or celeſtiall. Nowe when they ſawe howe they coulde not for preaſe of people that ſate ſo thicke about the gate and porche, bryng this ſycke man to the ſight of Jeſus, they lifted hym vp vpon the houſe, and after they had remoued the ſlates, and made a way in, they let hym doune bed and all, with a long corde, and layed hym at the feete of Jeſu, nothyng doubtyng but that he of his great mercie and goodneſſe, wouldе help the ſelye wꝛetche, aſſone as he once caſt thoſe his pitifull iyes vpon hym, and beheld how he laye in his bed lyke a quicke karkas, impotent, and benummed in all his lymmes. Jeſus ſawe this miſerable perſon, euen before he was brought vnto his preſence, and knewe right well the great faith of thoſe that brought hym. He could if it had liked hym, without leauig of or breaking his tale, haue ſygnified his pleaſure vnto them, by whom he had luſte, in this wiſe: Let the ſycke of the palſye aryſe, and beyng ſodainly healed, cary home his bed again. But his will was to ſhewe al men there preſent, that piteous ſight, and alſo to declare of what great ſtrength and efficacie true belief vpon hym, is wyth almighty God the father. The diſeaſe was vncurable, and of long continuaunce: the caꝛꝛying to Chriſte very cumberous. And yet the gracious goodneſſe of the lorde, ioyned with lyke power, put them in a ſure hope to obtaine theyr requeſt. Wherefore after he ſawe theyr notable fayth, the more he perceyued the man to be diſeaſed in ſoule then in body, the more pitye and compaſſion he toke on hym. Euery man thought hym in a miſerable caſe that thus lacked the vſe of all his membꝛes: but more miſerable was his ſoule, beeyng in subiection and bondage of sinne. They loked after nothing els but that the poore wretche should be restored to perfite health of body, which was a thing farre aboue mannes power. But Jesus beyng highly pleased with so notable a faithe, and therfore willyng to make hym all, and in every part whole, turned vnto hym, and sayed: Sonne, thy synnes are forgeuen.

The texte. ¶ But there were certaine of the Scribes sittyng there, and thinking in their hertes: Why doeth he speake these blasphemies? Who can forgeue sinnes but God onelye? And immediately when Jesus perceiued in his spirite, that they so thoughte within themselues, he sayeth vnto them: why thinke ye suche thynges in your hearres? whether is it easier to saye to the sicke of the palsey, thy synnes be forgeuen thee, or to saye, aryse, take vp thy bed and walke? But that ye maye knowe that the sonne of man hath power in earth to forgeue sinnes, he spake vnto the sicke of the palsey: I saye vnto thee aryse, and take vp thy bed, and get the hence vnto thyne owne house. And immediately he arose, toke vp the bed, and went forth before them all, in so muche that they were all amased, and glorified God, saying: we neuer sawe it on this fashion.

There were present in that assembly, certaine Scribes, who for the knowledge they had in the scriptures, were neuer the godlyer, and better in theyr liuyng, but rather more enclined to surmise matters agaynst hym. They had learned of the bokes of the Prophetes, and Moses, that it perteyneth to God alone to pardon sinnes. For the priest dyd not release sinne, but made intercession vnto God for other mens offences, and that not without sacrifice. Because the Scribes knewe this right well, they had suche secrete thoughtes & imaginations with themselues: What newe saying is this that he speaketh, whiche neyther Moses, nor Aaron, nor any of the auncient Prophetes, durst presume to speake. For he sayeth: thy synnes are released. Trulye he is a blasphemous person against God, that thus taketh vpon hym gods power. The law commaundeth sum offeres to be punished with death. And other sum there are, for the whiche satisfaccion is made with burnt offeryngs, and diuers other kyndes of sacrifices, by the mediacion or intercession of the priest: But he passyng nothyng vpon suche rites and ceremonies, doeth at once forgeue all sinnes with bare worde of mouth. This thing that he taketh vpon hym, and promyseth, pertayneth not to manne. It lyeth in Goddes power alone to performe it. Surely they were offended with the imbecillitie and weaknesse of his manhode that they sawe, and therefore couldе suppose nothing of hym, aboue the state and condicio of man. Neythe had the vulgar people any greater opinion of him, whiche yet by reason of theyr simplicitie, were not so muche enclined to pycke quarels, as the other were. The spirite of this worlde putte those thoughtes in theyr myndes, who whyles they stacke harde to the litterall sence of Moyses lawe, were farre frō the spirite and true meaning thereof, and were so much the more vnapte to be taught the same, because they thought themselues very well skilled in the scriptures: in so muche that the same thyng hath here also place, and is verified, whiche we see chaunce among paynters, and singing men, who are wonte to take lesse for teachyng of one that is altogether rude and ignorant in theyr arte or science, then for him who hath ben euell instructed of an other maysler in the same: and the reason is, because in teachyng of the ignorant, there is but one labour to be take: whereas yf a man take vpon hym to instruct the other, as it is the firste, so is it the more paynfull labour to teache hym to forget what he hath learned before, then to teache hym. And these vngodly thoughtes, they of a certain worldely politeie, kepte in theyr stomakes for feare of the people, in whose presence

they muche aduaunced and magnified themselues for their greate knowledge & vnderstandyng. The Lord Jesus who rather delyred to declare his diuine power by deedes, then to vtter the same by wordes, because he wolde plainly shewe vnto the Scribes howe there is nothyng so closely hydde in mennes brestes, be they neuer so suttle and decaftie, that this holy spirite (whiche searcheth, and throughly seeth all thynges) knoweth not, tourned him vnto them, and as though they had spoken out those thynges, whiche they in warolye thought in theyr myndes, sayed in this wise: Why haue you suche slaūderous imaginacions in your heertes? why do you rather iudge me by this weake and feble body of myne, then by my deedes?

And knowes diuerse wyse Jesus perceiued in his spirite. &c.

Why do you not gather of these my workes which you see with your iyes and cannot deny, that those thynges are of trueth, whiche can in no wyse be sene with your corporall iyes? you are offended with me because I sayde: Thy synnes are forgeuen: and deme it to be a vayne saying, and of none effect, because you see not the efficacie therof, whiche putteth forth and sheweth it selfe in the soule of man. But you that haue your bodely iyes whole and faultlelle haue spirituall iyes faultie and blemished.

But that ye maye know that the sonne of man. &c.

Nowe that yf I speake like wordes vnto the other, and make the efficacie therof appeare vnto your iyes? Is it not then reason that you beleue the thyng whiche you see not, beyng thereunto enduced by the thyng you see? There is nothing that man can calcyne do, then speake: and contrarilye, there is nothing so harde, as to perfourme what is spoke. God alone cā as easely do the one as the other. And though hytherto he neuer gaue this power to manne, yet it is not oute of his power to geue it to whom it pleaseth hym. And long sithens he promysed by the prophetes that he would sende his Messias, who shoulde cure the diseases of the people of Israell, and abolithe and cleane take awaye synnes. Therfore regarde you not this symple bodye of myne, lyke in all poyntes to yours: neyther beholde ye my garmente, not decked & trymmed with Phylacteries, and embroudered he mnes: not yet my speache not hyng differyng from other mennes. Let the thing selfe be the grounde and foundacion of your iudgement. It is no maistrie for a man to saye vnto a synner: Thy synnes are pardoned. And it is lyke easy to saye vnto ỹ sicke of the Palsy: Arise, take thy bed and walke. You haue hearde me speake the one saying and fynd faulte therewith. Nowe heare ye the other, which ye cannot lykewise of fynd faulte withall, when you see euidently with your iyes how the thing ensueth immediatly of my wordes. And this will I do: not to boast and brag vpon my power, but to the entent you may perceyue that God hathe geuen power vnto the sonne of manne, who appeareth vnto you an vnderlyng and a weake person, to release synnes with worde, (which power your priestes neuer had) and that not in Jewry alonely, but also in all regions and countreys of the worlde, in suche wise that whatsoeuer he releaseth in earth, is released in heauen: and whatsoeuer he leuseth not in earth, the same remayneth still bounde and vnlensed in heauen. You haue no cause to picke quarels, and surmyse matters against me but to reioice and be glad for your singuler wealthe and commoditie, if god of his infinite mercie, haue encreased his bountreous goodnes towardes you. If you saye that God cannot thus do, then do you derogate or diminithe his Maiestie. If you saye he wyll not, you offende his goodnelle. If you saye he doeth not, albeit he hath once promysed so to do, the

do you make hym a lyar. Finally yf you be boyde of belefe in suche thynges as are spirituall, and pertaine vnto the soule, whereas yet can not thwarte and cauyll in the thynges you see doorn before youre iyes, then do you plainly declare your obstinate malice.

He spake vnto ỹ sicke of the palsey. &c.

When Jesus had spoken these wordes, and they diligently marked what he would do, he tourned hym to the sycke of the Palley, and sayde: I saye vnto the, arise, take vp thy bed, and go hence vnto thy house. And he had scarcelye spoken these wordes, but an effectuall vertue therof manifestly ensued. For the sycke manne began not by litle and litle, and at the length with muche a do to moue hymselfe: But assone as Jesus had spoken the worde, he rayled hymselfe, and stode vp as lustie and couragious, as though he had neuer felte any Palley at all. Then lifted he vp his bedde, and layed it on his shoulders, and so went out through the preasse of people, shewyng the al a newe syght that neuer had bene sene before ỹ day, in as muche as he, who was a litle before bedred, and caried lyke a dead karkas on fower mennes shoulders, was now cranke, and lustie: yea and able ynough without anye helpe, to carrye so great a burden. They made hym roume to go oute, who woulde geue hym none to cum in. And both these thinges were right expedient to be doen. For the that the people shoulde not let hym haue entraunce, because to make the greatnesse of his faythe manifest to them all: then ỹ roume shoulde be made hym to go out through the middest of the preasse, because euery body might see this wonderful sight and miracle. The Scribes saw these thinges, and were not onely neuer the better therfore, but also more enuious, and maliciously set against Jesu. They residew, so many as were present, being greatly amased with this straunge miracle, glorified god, who had geuen such power to man, with bare wordes of mouth both to forgiue sinnes, and also to heale an vncurable disease, truly confessing that among all the marueylous dedes, whiche were eyther reported to be doen of the holy men that were before theyr dayes, or els of suche as liued in theyr tyme, there was none comparable vnto thys. Now if we stand still many tymes when we see thinges wrought by greuers, & painters, & diligently behold and vew euery point of the workemanshippe, alwaies espying some newe thig, that we sawe not before: me thinketh it right expedient ỹ we stay & tarrie here a while, to behold this notable syght, & with godly curiositie, to comsyder euery thing: because what soeuer the Lorde dyd in earth, he dyd it for this purpose, that we studying the mysteries therof, shoulde picke out for our instruction, what so euer conduceth to vertuouse and godly lyuing. And this shall we doe with muche more profite, if we first cõsider what was outwardly shewed vnto the corporall iyes: then what was sygnified by this figure to be inwardly wrought in mens soules. Let vs therfore fyrst of all ponder the violence and greatnesse of this dysease, whiche the lord Jesus cured with worde. For the palsey is nothing els but a noysom humour, that taketh and astoyneth the synowes of the body, whiche are the instrumentes of mouing, so that he that is sycke of this disease, hath membres not to vse, but to payne hym with greuous burthen, & doeth almost appeare to be a liue carkas lyuing only to his payne and torment. And for the most parte, this disease either riddeth a man sodainly out of the world, or els if it chaunce not so to doe, then after long continuance it maketh an end of him, with a more cruell and paynfull death: and is one of those diseases, that the phisycians reckon vncurable, and for that cause will not by theyr good will, medle with all, or elſe if they allaye to ouercome it, then at the length, after they haue a great while ſtriuen therwith in vayne, they as the weaker parte, geueit ouer, & forſake theyr cure, ſpecially if the ſayd diſeaſe haue once taken not oue or two partes, but the whole body. Now how vncurable this mans diſeaſe was, it plainly appeared in that he kept his bed continually, and was borne lyke a dead carkas, on fower mens ſhoulders. Furthermore this kinde of diſeaſe, manye times maketh a man ſpeachleſſe and alſo febleth & dulleth the quickneſſe of the wyt. And ſo did it fare (as it ſemeth) with this patient, who albeit that he was in this ſuell taking, yet neuer deſyred he the lorde to helpe him. Who is ſo hard harted, whom ſo pitifull a ſight woulde not moue to compaſſion? who would not thinke ſuche a one to be in better caſe dead, then after this maoure aliue? But now, chriſtian man, beholde a lytle whyle with thy ſpirituall yes, and conſyder how muche worſe is the palſey of that mannes ſoule, whoſe powers are altogether entangled with the moſte trifling cares of tranſytory thynges, and worldly vanitees, in ſo muche that when he ſhould doe any charitable dede or worke of mercye, then is he altogether benummed & taken with a palſey, ſo that he hath neyther handes to relieue the poore at theyr nede, nor feete to goeto Jeſus, nor tongue to deſyre his ſauiour to helpe hym: but as one cleane dead to Juſtice is carried about hither and thither, whither ſoeuer it pleaſeth the ſenſuall luſtes and appetites of his body, whiche be as it were his porters, to carry hym. What ſhall the ſely ſoule do, whyche becauſe it is altogether diſſolute, and weakened by ſuperfluitie, by carnall pleaſure, by inordinate deſyre of vayne glorye, and worldly riches, hath no ſtrength at all to lyfte vp it ſelfe from the filthy cares of this world, to the loue of heauenly thynges? It is altogether faſtened to the naughty bed of carnall luſtes, and therein lieth, and reſteth. And beyng in this caſe, it farre paſſeth mannes power to helpe it. Only Jeſus is able with his almighty commaundement, to put away all the violence of this diſeaſe. Wherfore we ought to reſorte vnto this phyſycia, vnto whome no diſeaſe is vncurable, but not without a greate fayth, which may doe ſo muche with him, that this patient was holpen euen for the beleſe of other men. They prayed not with woordes, but yet were they carneſte ſuters in dede. When fayth hartely deſyreth any thyng of Chriſte, her requeſt is very affectuall, and no meruayle ſyth that euen we mortal men, fele great carefulneſſe in our mindes (ſuche are the naturall affections of man) when we ſe one that hageth vpon vs, with all his harte and mynde, & hath put his ſure confidence and truſt in vs. God requireth of ſynners, neyther burnt ſacrifices, nor offered gyftes. Onely acknowlege thy ſyckines, and truſte in thy phiſycian: and yet no man can make the able thus to doe, but god alone. For after that he of his ineſtimable goodnes, hathe once decreed to heale the ſoule taken with the palſey, he fyrſt of all putteth into it a certaine wonderfull heauineſſe & yrkeſomneſſe of ones ſelfe, in ſo much y the ſynner hateth himſelfe, and is wery of his former lyfe. Nowe he ſeeth in what ignorauñce and darkeneſſe he hathe ben of long ſeaſon, what greuous offences he was wonte to cõmitte, and abhorreth himſelfe, and wouldbe without doubte, bein vtter diſpayre of ſalnacion, vnleſſe he that put in the vinegre of ſorowe, dyd alſo gine hym the oyle of good hope. The iuſtice of God, fore troubleth the ſynneſull ſoule. Je threateneth with vengeaunce, and puniſhmẽt due vnto the ſynnes: Jt threate-neth with hell and damnation. But on the other syde the remembraunce of the goodnes and great mercy of God, calleth backe the synner from desperacion, for that god seketh not the death of a synner but wylleth rather that he tourne and lyue. The lorde Jesus who restored the lawe of nature, and destroyed not Moyses lawe but made it perfite, did also applye hymselfe to the common reason and iudgement of the vulgare people. As the pocion ministred by a fayethfull phisitian sore vexeth the whole bodye, and bryngeth it out of quiet, specially in a leperdous disease, and the more it worketh, and troubleth the patient, the more hope is there of health: euen so the nearer vnto desperacion the penitent synner is, the nearer is he to his soule healthe, Jesu being his phisytian. Now marke me well a shamefast vnshamefastnesse. For shame, as it is commonly sayde, is vnprofitable to the ready man. Shame putteth awaye shame, euen as one nayle dryueth out another. It is an vnprofitable shame that causeth a man to hyde and kepe secrete his sycknesse. This shame is put awaye by the longe wearnesse of the disease, and the great hope that a manne hath, to recouer his health: and nowe is he not ashamed to confesse his sycknesse, because he is ashamed to be sycke. What manne yf he be greuously diseased in his bodye, hathe any regarde of shame at all. Loose not menne in suche case discouer, euen the moste pryuie membres of theyr bodyes, and suffer the physician to handle them. Lyke affection of minde is in hym, who hath begonne to knowledge the fylthie disease of his soule. For what lewder pageaunte or prancke could there be played, then to clime by vpon another mans house, to cast downe the tiles, to make an hole, and conuey downe from aboue a foule lothsome syght that euery body abhorred, and lay it before all theyr eyes? &c. What would pryude pharisey haue sayde here? Certes he would haue cryed: Oh villayn cus dede: and ouer this haue rayled out of measure agaynst theyr lewdnesse, who had contrary to the common lawe, made an hole, and forcible entred into an other mans seuerall house, and with suche a deadly syght, dothe interrupted the holy preachyng of goddes worde, and also defiled the eyes of the audience. He would haue commaunded the barkasly ke sycke man to be had away, and then haue all to washed himselfe with water. But with those thinges, in as muche as they were an euident proofe and argument of a notable fayethe towardes him, the Lorde Jesus was highly delyted, whiche they that crake vpon the righteousnesse of Moyses lawe, would haue bene offended with all: in so muche that he, and yet not lokyng to be desyred, healed this miserable creature: and fyrst of all he cured the diseases of his soule, whiche are synnes, and then forthwith deliuered his body of the palsey, because that as there are many vices, whiche after they haue taken theyr begynning of the body, doe from thence redounde into the soule: so it chaunteth oftentimes that the body is infected with the disease, that is first bred and ingendred in the soule, as when lecherye whiche is engendred of the humours of the flesshe, defyleth the sowle, and from thence returneth agayne her maladie and euyll effect into the body, there causyng eyther the palsey, or the fallyng euyll: or els when that enuie, whiche taketh her begynnyng of a vicious soule, dothe also waste the body, and bryng it to a consumption. He onely is able to cure bothe the partes of man, whiche made bothe. Here is it also to be consydered, howe greate was the largelle of Jesu in forgeuyng of synnes. For whe he saithe: thy sinnes are remitted, he leweseth the all togeither.

In somuch that they were all amased.

Neyther

Neyther is there any mencion made of the merites paste, nor any requiring of sacrifices, or satisfaccion, but mencion of faythe only. It is inoughe humbly to haue cum to the feet of Jesus. That man hathe made sufficient sacrifice, who with perfecte faythe hath shewed hymselfe vnto Jesu, then whiche sacrifice, there is none more acceptable vnto him. The syeke of the palsey was wholy displeased with himselfe, bothe for that he knewe his owne synfull liuing, and also because his body was oppressed with so miserable a sickenesse. All his trust was in the mightye goodnes of Jesu, who made hym all whole because he wholy committed himselfe vnto this physician: he cõsidered not how vncurable was his disease, but only regarded how mygthy, and good was the physician, vnto whome he committed himselfe. Nowe what hope of recouery is there in those persons, that cherysh, and make muche of their disease, that flye out of the physicians syght, yea that hate, and abhorre hym? Jf thou be ashamed to acknowledge thy sickenesse to a mã physician, or els yf thou haue any mistrust in hym, who peraduenture when he knoweth thy sickenes, wyll rather hit the in the teeth therwith, then cure the same, yet hide it not from Christ, who disclosethno mannes offences, but healeth all men, and that freely: and thus do thou to thentent it maye lykewyse chaunce vnto the, as it chaunced to the sicke of the palsey. What did he? he all thynges now turned cleane cõtrary, lyfted vp his bed on his shoulders, as one ruling his sensuall appetites and passions, whiche he serued before. For this is the very thing that is meant by bearing of the crosse. This is it that is vnderstand, by crucifying the flesche with her lustes and cõcupiscences. Now neadeth he no more fower porters to carry hym. He walketh on his owne feete, whither soeuer ỹ spirite of Christ leadeth hym, neither goeth he, but whither he is commaunded to go. For what is it to walke, but by continuall encrease of vertue, styl to goe forwarde, and euery daye to waxe better and better: what is it to returne into the house fro whẽce he came, but to knowleage in what case he came out frõ thence, and by whose benefite, he returned thither againe soodainly chaũged, & altered bothe in body and sowle. For it is the propertie of the pharisies, to dwell without in stretes, market places, and whereas conuenticles and vnlawfull assemblies be. He dwelleth at home in his owne house, whoso into weth howe nought and vertuelesse he is of himselfe, and wholy ascribeth what vertue and goodnesse soeuer he hath, to the free liberalitie of our sauiour. Now will I diligẽtly the frõ any lõger beholding of this syght, after I haue rehersed vnto the by waye of epilogacion, the persones of this scene or pageaunt. The syeke of the palsey, and they that carrye hym, he made shamelesse through they? great fayth, and obtaine they? petition. Jesus is so muche delyted with they? faythe, that euen of his owne accorde, and not desyred of them, he doubleth his benefite. The symple and vnlearned people, discerning nothyng in him, whom they beleued to be nought els but a manne, only merueyleth at the power of God. The scribes alone murtre softly with themselfes agaynst Jesu. Let vs therfore eschewe the ensample of the saide Scribes, who wyples they studie to aduaũce they? owne glorie, goe about to dulse the glorye of Jesu. Let vs be of ỹ simple sorte of people, and with them glorifye God, not only yf it please hym at any tyme of his great mercifull goodnesse to heale the infirmytie of our soules, but also whensoeuer we see any other, through his saide bounteous goodnes, forsake they? olde vicious lyuyng, and cumme to amendement.

companye, wolde amende theyr lyues: When the disciples, who were as yet raw in theyr profession, had no ready answere to make them, but onely with a symple plaine fayth hanged vpō theyr Lorde, then Iesus, vnto whom neyther the secrete wordes, nor yet the hid thoughtes of the pharisees were vnknowen, made answere for them in this wyse: O you pharisees, why do you grudge and murmour agaynst me, for that I rather fraute with the whome you take for wycked and abominable persons, then with the priestes, scribes, and pharisees? The physicians are praysed who being themselues in good health go yet vnto ṕ sycke when they are sent for: And am I blamed for going vnto them who acknowledge the disease of theyr soule, and desyre a physycian to cure them? Suche as are in good health do not quarell with the physycian a saye: Why dyddyst thou suche, and suche, a not vs? For they that are whole haue no nede of a physycian. The facultie of physycke muste alwayes be redy for those that be cuyll at ease. These folkes which acknowledge theyr disease, are right glad that the physician is cum. For you sawe by that I did vnto the sicke of the palsey, howe I haue power geuen me to take away sinne. You that thinke your selues whole, a take vpon you to be right wisemen, haue no cause to quarell with the physicia if he cum not vnto you. I was sent into ṕ worlde, to take awaye the sinne of the worlde. Who so knowleageth his sickenesse, and desyreth the physycians helpe, him will not I fayle at his nede. Howe be that thynketh hymselfe faultles, yf he be in a right beliefe, neadeth nothing that I can do. But if he be deceiued in his opinió, or els knowe right wel his inwarde infirmitie, and yet dissembleth the same, then is he past all hope of recouery.

Who Iesus harde that he sayde. &c.

I cam not to call the righteouse but sinners &c.

And for this cause the physycia should but lose his labour, if he wēt vnto him. For who can heale a manne agaynst his wyll? Therfore the physycia is vniustely reproued, yf he folowe the rules of his facultie: but they are very vnrighteouous, who when thēselues are in good healthe, haue great disdayne and mup that the physycia should be present with the sicke. And this my sayde ought not to seme straunge and vncouth vnto you, whiche professe the knowledge of the lawe. For you reade therin as foloweth: I will mercy rather then sacrifice. God spake these wordes by his Prophete, sygnifying therby that the carnall iustice of the lawe, whiche standeth in abstayning from open offences and the obseruacion of ceremonies, should be set asyde and abolyshed. He that neyther cōmitteth murther, theft, nor aduoutry, he that reseth on the Sabboth day, fasteth vpon dayes apointed, washeth, a maketh sacrifice, is righteous after the estimacio of man: But god requireth another maner of righteousnes, which standeth in free beneficence or well doyng to our neyghbour, in forgeuyng the that haue offended vs, in meknesse and gentle demeanour. Now how farre are they from this prayse, which do not onely themselues not helpe their neighbour in his necessytie, but also haue great despite, and bable agaynst it, yf anye manne so do? God promised to sende you suche a Messias, not as should excell the Pharisees in sacrifices, phylacteries, fastinges, and long prayers, for thobseruacio wherof they magnify a set out themselues vnto the people, but suche a one as should be beneficiall to all men, a lanterne to them that be out of the way, a helper to oppressed persons, a cōforter to suche as are in aduersity, a pitie ficia to all that are cōtrite in herte, and finally suche a one as should ioyne vnto god, those that seemed to be farre frō God: a contrary wise, declare that suche

as appered to be next God, and moste holiest, were verie far from true godlynesse. With these wordes the lorde Jesus bothe stopped the mouthes of the Phariseis, and also taught his disciples how charitably they should demeane themselues toward sinners. For this cause we are much bound to the wicked phariseis, who so oft prouoke the lord to expouñe the doctrine of the gospell.

¶ And the disciples of Iohn and the Phariseis did fast: and they cum and say vnto hym: why doe the disciples of Iohn and of the phariseis fast: But thy disciples fast not. And Jesus sayed vnto them: can the chyldren of the weddyng fast whyle the bridegrome is with them? As long as they haue the bridegrome with them, they can not fast. But the dayes will cum when the bridegrome shalbe taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those dayes. The texte.

Behold there went also vnto Jesu certain of Johns disciples in cõpany with the false accusyng Phariseis. For they also were attached with a spiece of humain enuie, for that Jesus semed to deface the great estimacion of their mayster Iohn, notwithstandyng his life & rule appered to be strayter then Christes was, and that he had mo disciples then thother. Wherfore they went vnto Jesus, & moued vnto him this capcious question: why (q they) do Johns disciples, and the phariseis oft times fast, and thy disciples not fast at all? vnto this question, because they allayled hym and not his disciples, the lord made a gentler aunswer, than he did a litle before, when he defended his disciples: teachyng vs hereby, that Christian charitie, whiche vseth all mylduesse in the cuyls and displeasures doen vnto herselfe priuately, is more diligent in defendyng other from the same. For the Christian byshop must be patiente, and meeke, in sufferyng all iniuries doen vnto his owne person: but yet ought he with diligent endeuour to helpe his flocke, whensoeuer it is in ieopardie. Wherfore Jesus sayd: you that haue diligētly heard Iohn Baptist preache, ought to call to remembraunce how we hee preached that I was the bridgrome and he the bridegromes frende. It is mete that all heauinesse be away when the bridegrome is present.

Can the chyldren of the wedding fast?

Moses is a seruaunt and no bridegrome, and therfore fastinges were conuenient for hym, because the same doe cause sadnesse, and abate myrthe. It is well doen that they fast, whiche continue in the Synagoge, beyng a seruaunt and not a bride. For suche haunt not the bridegromes chaumber. But the free borne chyldren, who haunte the weddyng chaumber, cannot fast, as long as they haue the bridegrome hymselfe present with them: because they myrthe is so great, that it wyll not suffer them to remembre heauy thynges. He that for dread of punyshment doeth his duetie, can in no wyse be merry. Now the chyldren who haue receyued the spirite of libertye, perceyuyng that they are dearly beloued, and cared for of the bridegrome, be neuer carefull leste they offende in these thynges whiche wer commaunded for a tyme, to men of a seruile nature: as for an ensample, in washinges, in thobseruacion of the Sabbothe, in choyce of meates, in apparell, in holy dayes, in sacrifices. They put their confidence in the myght and goodnes of the bridegrome who is able without all these thynges, to geue them perfite righteousnesse. Spirituall beste taketh awaye fleshly carefulnes. Charitie that maketh all thinges pleasaunt, causeth gladnesse. The bridegrome hath his owne proper meate, from the whiche his companions can not abidayne.

The worde of God, and the flesh of the bridegrome, is the meat and foode of the soule, and his blood is the drinke of the same. Suche as cleaue vnto

The facultie of phisycke muste alwayes be ready for those that be cyuyll at ease. These folkes which acknowledge theyr disease, are right glad that the physician is cum. For you sawe by that I did vnto the sicke of the palsey, howe I haue power geuen me to take away sinne. You that thinke your selues whole, a take vpon you to be right wisemen, haue no cause to quarell with the physicia if he cum not vnto you. I was sent into ỹ worlde, to take awaye the sinne of the worlde. Who so knowleageth his sicknesse, and desyreth the physycians helpe, him will not I fayle at his nede. For howe be that thynketh hymselfe faultles, yf he be in a right beliefe, neadeth nothing that I can do. But if he be deceiued in his opinio, or els knoweigeth wel his inwarde infirmitie, and yet dissembleth the same, then is he past all hope of recouery.

Why Iesus heardc that he lately. &c.

I cam not to call the righteouse but sinners &c.

And for this cause the physycia should but lose his labour, if he wēt vnto him. For who can heale a manne agaynst his wyll? Therfore the physycia is iustely reproued, yf he folow the rules of his facultie: but they are very vncurtuous, who when theselues are in good healthe, haue great disdayne and enuy that the physycia should be present with the sicke. And this my facte ought not to seme straunge and vncouth vnto you, whiche professe the knowledge of the lawe. For you reade therin as followeth: I will mercy rather than sacrifice. God spake these wordes by his Prophete, sygnifying therby that the carnall iustice of the lawe, whiche standeth in abstayning from open offences and the obseruacion of ceremonies, should be set asyde and abolyshed. He that neyther cōmitteth murther, theft, nor aduoutry, he that resteth on the Sabboth day, fasteth vpon dayes apointed, washeth, a maketh sacrifice, is righteous after the estimacio of man: But god requireth another maner of righteousnes, which standeth in free beneficence or well doyng to our neyghbour, in forgeuyng the that haue offended vs, in meknesse and gentle demeanour. Now how farre are they from this prayse, which do not onely themselues not helpe their neighbour in his necessytie, but also haue great despite, and bable agaynst it, yf anye manne so do? God promised to sende you suche a Messias, not as should exell the Phariseis in sacrifices, phylacteries, fastinges, and long prayers, for those seruacio wherof they magnify a set out themselues vnto the people, but suche a one as shoulde be beneficiall to all men, a lanterne to them that be out of the way, a helper to oppressed persōs, a cōforter to suche as are in aduersity, a physicia to all that are cōtrite in herte, and finally suche a one as should ioyne vnto god, those that seme to be farre frō God: a contrary wise, declare that suche

as appered to be nert God, and moste holiest, were verie far from true godlynesse. With these wordes the lozde Jesus bothe stopped the mouthes of the Phariseis, and also taught his disciples how charitably they should demeane themselues toward sinners. For this cause we are much bound to the wicked phariseis, who so oft prouoke the lozd to expoune the doctrine of the gospell.

¶ And the disciples of Johñ and the phariseis did fast: and they cum and say vnto hym: why doe the disciples of Johñ and of the phariseis fast: But thy disciples fast not. And Jesus sayed vnto them: can the chyldren of the weddyng fast whyle the bryegrome is with them? As long as they haue the bryegrome with them, they can not fast. But the dayes wyll cum when the brydegrome shalbe taken away from them, and then shall they fast in those dayes. The texte.

Behold there went also vnto Jesu certain of Johns disciples in coõpany with the false accusyng Phariseis. For they also were attached with a spiece of humain enuie, for that Jesus semed to defãce the great estimacion of their mayster John, not withstandyng his life & rule appered to be strayter then Christes was, and that he had mo disciples then thother. Wherfore they went vnto Jesus, & moued vnto him this capcious question: why (q they) do Johns disciples, and the phariseis oft times fast, and thy disciples not fast at all: Unto this question, because they allayled hym and not his disciples, the lord made a gentler aunswer, than he did a litle before, when he defended his disciples: teachyng vs hereby, that Christian charitie, whiche vseth all myldnesse in the cupls and displeasures doen vnto herselfe priuately, is more diligent in defendyng other from the same. For the Christian bychop must be patiente, and meeke, in sufferyng all iniuries doen vnto his owne person: but yet ought he with diligent endeuour to helpe his flocke, whensoeuer it is in ieoperdie. Wherfore Jesus sayd: You that haue diligently heard John Baptist preache, ought to call to remembraunce howe he preached that I was the bridgrome and he the brydegromes frende. It is mete that all heauinesse be away when the brydegrome is present.

Can the chyldren of the weddig fast &c.

Moses is a seruaunt and no brydegrome, and therfore fastinges were conuenient for hym, because the same doe cause sadnesse, and abate myrthe. It is well doen that they fast, whiche continue in the Synagoge, beyng a seruaunt & not a bride. For suche haunt not the brydegromes chaumber. But the freborne chyldren, who haunte the weddyng chaumber, cannot fast, as long as they haue the brydegrome hymselfe present with them: because they myrthe is so great, that it wyll not suffer them to remembre heauy thynges. He that for dread of punyshment doeth his duetie, can in no wyse be meary. Now the chyldren who haue receyued the spirite of libertye, perceyuyng that they are dearly beloued, and cared for of the brydegrome, be neuer carefull leste they offende in these thynges whiche were commaunded for a tyme, to men of a seruile nature: as for an ensample, in washinges, in thobseruacion of the Sabbothe, in choyce of meates, in apparell, in holy dayes, in sacrifices. They put theyr confidence in the myght and goodnes of the brydegrome who is able without all these thynges, to geue them perfite rightcousnesse. Spirituall beliefe taketh awaye fleshly carefulnes. Charitie that maketh all thinges pleasaunt, causeth gladnesse. The brydegrome hath his owne proper meate, from the whiche his companions can not abstayne.

The worde of God, and the flesh of the brydegrome, is the meat and foode of the soule, and his blood is the drink of the same. Suche as cleaue nygh

vnto me, are euer deſyrous to eat theyr fyll of this meat: and they that haunt the bryde gromes weddyng chamber, doe alwayes couet to be dronken wyth this drinke. But lyke as corporall meate cauſeth not righteouſneſſe, euen ſo faſtyng maketh not a man iuſte: yea it is oftentymes ſeen that he whiche eateth his meate, is more righteous then the faſter. Suche faſtynges as are commaunded by the lawe, are full of beauineſſe, and therfore diſpleaſaunt to almightye God, who loueth a cherefull gyuer. He can in no wyſe be merye and chereful, that feareth and trembleth. But whoſo knoweth that he is ſet at libertie in theſe thynges, eyther to doe them, or not to doe them, and yet mooued by charitie faſteth, the ſame vndoubtedly faſteth wyth great myrth and gladneſſe: not becauſe this faſting is ſo preſcribed by the lawe, but for that charitie moueth hym ſo to doe. When my diſciples are once cum to that ſtrengthe of mynde, that I nowe goe about by my teachyng and preachyng to bryng them vnto, than ſhall charitie cauſe them to doe more of theyr owne free wyll, than now doth the preſcripcion eyther of the law or els of Iohn get of you by compulſion. But as yet they are not cum to this ſtrength and perfection. They are yet tender and weake: for the preſence of my body letteth them to attain therto. The day ſhall once cum, when the corporall preſence of the brydegrome ſhalbe taken away from them, and then being made ſtronger by receiuyng the holy ghoſte from heauen, they ſhal not onely faſt, and that of theyr owne accorde, but alſo gladly and with right good wyll doe thynges, in the atchiuyng wherof, more ſtrengthe and conſtaunt courage of mynde ſhall be wed, then in faſtyng. But foraſmuche as this doctrine is ſpirituall, it can not be receyued of them, who all theyr lyfe long haue enured themſelfes wyth Phariſaicall ceremonies. And for this cauſe I pyked out ſimple, and ignorant yong men to be my diſciples. For I ſhoulde but loſe my labour if I dyd commit ſpirituall and heauenly doctrine vnto theyr mindes, that are ſo ſuperſticious in keping of carnall ceremonies. Old thynges beſt agreeth with old, and newe thynges with newe, the whiche if a man myngle together, he dooeth not onely labour in vaine, but alſo maketh thoſe perſons worſe, whome he goeth about to reforme. For it is better for them ſtil to continue in theyr olde ſuperſticionſneſſe, then whyles a man goeth his endeuour to bring them to the freedome of the ſpirite, to prouoke them (all feare of tranſgreſſion layed aſyde) to committe ſinne at libertie. For as it is more a doe to teache ſuche an one any crafte or occupacion, as hath conceyued a wrong opinion of hym ſelfe, thinkyng that he hath good ſkyll therin, and hath none at all, then hym who is altogether ignorant in the ſame: euen ſo is it the hardeſt thyng that maye be, to teache ſuche perſons the ryghteouſneſſe of the ghoſpel, whiche for thobſeruacion of certain folyſh carnall ceremonies, beleue ſurely they haue attayned perfite ryghteouſneſſe. And this doubtleſs is the cauſe that I fynde fiſhermen, publicans, ſinners, vnchaſt women & Ethnikes, more apt to learn this ſpirituall philoſophy, then the ſcribes, phariſeis & prieſtes, who ſuppoſe that perfit godlyneſs ſtandeth in thobſeruacion and kepyng of mans ceremonies. Iohn as a meane betweene the old law & the newe, wer about to myngle together two ſundry doctrines. For he durſt not commit this lyuely philoſophy, pure and vnmengled as it was, vnto them that were weake of mynde. Nowe all is weake that is humayne & carnall. And contrarily that is full of lyfe, vertue, and ſtrength, whatſoeuer is godly, ſpirituall, and heauenly.

wherfore vnto my disciples (whome I chose rude and ignowraunt, to the entent I myght the soner instruct them in this straug and pitiful Philosophy) I prescribe none of these thinges following: Eate these meates, forbeare these, rest, now labor, vse suche apparel, touch not this thing, handle not that. And the cause is for feare lest they would alwayes continue we weake, if they once learned of me theyr maister to put any trust in suche vayporall thynges. It is a thyng very vnprofitable to ioyne thynges together, whiche disagree one with an other.

¶ No man also seweth a piece of newe clothe vnto an olde garment, els taketh he away the new piece therof from the olde, and so is the rent worse. And no man poureth newe wyne into olde bottels, els the newe wyne doth burst the bottels, and the wyne runneth out, and the bottels are marred. But newe wyne must be put into newe bottels. The text.

For there is no man so farre from reason, that if he be disposed to amende an olde garment, will sewe therunto a patche of newe clothe. And why so: certes for that he perceyueth yf he should so do, he shoulde bothe lose his new cloth, & also make the hole of the olde garment bigger then it was before. For beyng offended with the notable diuersytie betwene the piece of cloth sewedon, and the yll mended garmente, he strayght wayes plucketh of the piece that he sewed to, and so the hole of the same garment gapeth fowler then it dyd before. Neyther is there any man so folysh as to put newe wine in olde bottels. And why? because he seeth that he should sustain double losse therby. For the new wyne worketh so feruently through the vehemencie of the fumes therein enclosed, that it breaketh ꝑ bottels beyng weake by reason of age, all to pieces: and so are bothe bottels and wyne cleane lost, and spilt. Howe doeth he then prouide bothe for the safetie of the one and the other? Truly he putteth the newe wyne into newe bottels. Euen so they whose myndes haue of long time been accustomed to the naughtie wine of Pharisaicall superstition, can in no wyse away with the newe wine of heauenly & spirituall doctrine, but lothe and abhorre the same, stylle callyng after a taste of the worse wine that hath been theyr accustomable drynke. And that Iesus spake the truthe herein, the Pharisees them selues many tymes declared by theyr deedes. And no man poureth newe wyne into olde bottels.

¶ And it chaunced again that he went thorow the corn fieldes on the Sabboth daye, and his disciples began by the way to plucke the eares of the corne. And the Pharisees sayd vnto hym: Beholde why do they on the Sabboth dayes that whiche is not lawfull? And he sayed vnto them, haue ye neuer read what Dauid dyd when he had nede, and was an hungred, both he and they that were with hym: howe he went into the house of God in the dayes of Abiathar the hye priest, and dyd eate the swe bread, whiche is not lawfull to eate, but for the priestes onely, and gaue also to them whiche were with hym? And he sayed vnto them: the Sabboth was made for man, and not man for the Sabboth: therefore is the sonne of man Lorde also of the Sabboth. The text.

For as it chaunced on a certaine season that his disciples trauayled thorough a corne feild, and that vpon the Sabboth daye, on the whiche day it was a matter of conscience among the Iewes to doe any maner of worke, they wente before, and Iesus theyr mayster followed. And anon prouoked by hunger, they beganne to plucke the eares of the corne, and with the chafyng of theyr handes to rubbe out the corne, and eate it. Nowe heare howe the olde bottels were offended with the newe wyne of the libertie of the ghospell, calling after the olde wyne of keppyng the Sabboth, that hadde cleane lost his verdure. For the Pharisees, who as menne very righteouse in theyr owne conceyptes folowed Iesus, beholdyng what the disciples dyd, wrongfullye fully blamed the Lorde in them. For lyke as the vertuousnesse of the scholers is a great commendacion to the mayster, euen so theyr myspehaueoure, and lewde tachys are reproched and layed vnto those that instructed them. They tolde the lorde, and poynted vnto his disciples, as thoughe they had done a greuouse offence, for that they brake the Sabboth daye, to the ende that he shoulde cause them to leaue worke, and by that meanes appryue the pharisaicall superstition: orels yf he wouldde not so do, then myght they take some occasion to picke a quarell, or surmise some matter agaynst hym. The Lorde so defended his disciples, that he disprooued the learned in the lawe of Moses, by the auctorite of the lawe, and of his gentilnesse vouchesafed to teache them the true meaning therof, whiche in dede deserued chaperly to be rebuked.

And he said vnto them: haue ye neuer read, &c.

With what face (qhe) do ye accuse my disciples, for that thorough constraint of hunger, they pluckt a fewe eares of corne, beyng by chaunce in their waye, for theyr refresshe and sustenaunce? sithe there is expresse mention in the very lawe it selfe (wherof you professe your selues to be teachers) howe Dauid when he was in lyke necessitie, dydde a thyng whiche soundeth muche more to the breache of the lawe then this. For he beyng almost famished, and in great daunger to perysh for lacke of foode, fled for succour vnto the house of God: and although he were a laye man, was not afrayed to desyre Abiathar, then chyef of the pristes, to geue him those moste holy loaues called the shewe bread, the whiche it was not lefull for any man to eate of, but the priestes onely: and that but duryng the litle whyle they were within the precinct of the Temple, occupied about makyng of sacrifice. Abiathar was not here ignoraunt what the lawe had commaunded, and yet feared not he to deliuer vnto Dauid, and his trayne, the sayed holy loaues, to be eaten in the holy place. If you knowe not that this is scripture, orels yf you haue it not in memoiy, howe thā for shame dare you professe the knowledge of the lawe? If you know, and remembre it, why doe you in a lyke case quite Abiathar, and Dauid, yea and allowe theyr facte, and yet accuse my disciples as giltie of an heynous trespasse? If the rigorousnes of the lawe did then geue place vnto the necessitye of the neyghboure, when the lawe was of mooste force & strengthe, howe muche more then standeth it nowe with reason that the ceremonies of the same lawe, geue place therunto, whensoeuer charitie moueth a man to help his euen Christen?

Moreouer it is lykewyse commaunded in the lawe, that euery man ought to loue his neyghbour with lyke affection as he loueth hymselfe. Nowe syne this is the moste principall and greatest of all the commaundements in the whole lawe, why doe you then of an vnright iudgement breake that whiche is chiefest, and alwayes continueth, for the obseruacion of those thynges whiche are of lesse value, and shall not endure for euer? The tyme once hath been when the Sabboth was not holy daye. And the tyme shall cum when to all true and Godly men, euery day shal be lyke holy. But the tyme neuer was, nor neuer shall be, when it hath not or shall not be an holy dede for man to succour his neyghbour in his nede. The lawe forbiddeth murder. Truely he murthereth, whoso when it lyeth in his power to saue a manne, doeth not succour hym at all. And this lawe is permanent, and shall continue for euermore.

The same lawe forbiddeth also to worke vpon the Sabboth daye. Nowe what a wrong shapen holynesse is this, yf a man whiles he feareth to breake

the Sabboth, ſuffer his brotherto perythe, when he wyll not ſticke to plucke out his aſſe fallen by chaunce into a dyche vpon the ſame daye, without anye feare, or ſcruple of conſcience to breake the ſtuenth or Sabboth daye.

When Jeſus had with theſe, and ſuche lyke manifeſte reaſons, declared how aukewardly be uout and holy they were, he added this generall ſentence. The Sabboth day (ſaythe) was inſtituted for mens cauſe, and not men made for the Sabboth daye. The ſonne of manne came not to deſtroye men, but to ſaue them. And for that cauſe hath he power, yea, cleane to take awaye the Sabboth, ſo ofte as mans healthy ſo requireth. And that whiche I haue ſpoken of the Sabboth, is to be thought and demed of all like conſtitucios. They were all inſtituted for a ſeaſon, to this ende, that the ſturdye and diſobediente people ſhoulde by little and little accuſtome themſelfes to obey goddes commaundementes, to thintent that they might by corporal figures, be brought, and as it were ledde by the hande, to the vnderſtanding of ſpirituall thynges.

And he ſayde vnto them: the Sabboth. &c.

He breaketh the Sabboth daye godlily, who nothyng troubled with cuill luſtes, breaketh it onely for the good zeale he hath to helpe his euen Chriſten. Faſtyng is a godly thing, but the ſame is made vngodly, and deteſtable, if it beyng only inſtituted for mannes ſoule helth, be abuſed to the deſtruccion both of body and ſoule. Againe a vowe is a holy thing, but the ſame is made vnholy, yf a man by reaſon of a ſuperſtitious mynde be hath to perfourme it, bee withdrawen from the perfourmaunce of ſuche thynges, as neuer apperteyne to true godlyneſſe. He doeth well, and lyke a good holy manne, whoſo maketh his oblacion at the aulter. But agayne, that is an vnholy gift which a manne offereth, before his neighbour be made at one. So is it alſo well doen to paſſe litle vpon the ceuloure, and faſhiō of apparell, ſo oft as it behoueth a man ſo to do, becauſe man was not made for the garmentes ſake, but the garment firſt inuented for the vſe, and commoditie of man. In lyke manner, meate is ordained for mans cauſe, and not man made for meates ſake. Wherfore it is lefull to eate all kyndes of meate when mans neceſſitie ſo requireth. For all theſe corporall thinges, wherin you put perfit righteouſneſſe, as your temple, ſacrifices, meate, clothing, holy dayes, faſtynges, vowes, and offered giftes, are ſtil be in any wiſe hurt or appaired. And againe they are well and holily kept, if charitie towardes your neighbour ſo requiring, you nothing regarde whatſoeuer is carnall, but truly perfourme in your hertes, that whiche ſuche corporall thinges be figures & ſignifications of. Of ſuch manier of conſtitucions, Moyſes was the miniſter, and not the auctour: the ſeruaunte, & not the maiſter. Suche as with a ſeruile minde cleue ſtill vnto him, do very ſuperſticiouſly keepe thoſe thynges, that are compriſed in the letter of the lawe. But they that ſticke vnto the ſonne of man (who is Lord ouer the whole lawe, and declareth howe all thinges whiche were figured by thoſe corporall shadowes and figures ought to bee obſerued after the ſpirituall ſence and meanyng) are free, and clene diſcharged in conſcience, from any longer obſeruing of ſuche Jewiſhe ceremonies.

The.iij.Chapter.

The texte. And he entred agayne into the Synagoge, and there was a man there, whiche had a withered hãde. And they watched him, whether he would heale him on the Sabboth day, that they myght accuse him. And he sayd vnto the man whiche had the withered hande, Aryse, and stande in the middes. And he sayth vnto them: Wherther is it lawfull to do good on the Sabboth dayes, or to do euill? to saue lyfe, or to spill? But they held their peace. And when he had looked rounde about on them with anger, mourning on the blindnesse of their hartes, he sayed to the man: Stretche forth thy hand: and he stretched it out. And his hande was restored euen as whole as the other.

With suche wordes the lord Jesus as he walked on the way in the fielde, both displeased the false reproofe of the Pharisees, and also defended his innocẽt disciples. But to the intent we should plainly learne that none are more geuen to pieke quarrelles, then suche as haue conceyued a wrong opinion of their owne holinesse, after Jesus was entred into the Synagoge, there to teache the people accordyng vnto his accustomed maner, occasion was ministred, bothe to hym to doo a good, and a charitable deede, and also to the Pharisees to surmyse sum matter agaynst him. For there was one there present among the people, who had (whiche was a pytifull syghte to beholde) a withered and a lame hande, and therfore carryed about with hym, a dead member that dyd hym no fede: and so muche the more miserable was he, because he was wonte with his hand labor, to fynde both himselfe and also all his poore houshold. But oh malicious and wicked Pharisees, quicke syghted to deprayue, and finde faute with Christes benefites, but blynde to vnderstand the heauenly doctrine. By those thinges that they sawe with their corporall yes, they knewe that he was a naturall man, and yet by his deedes and miracles that he wrought, they perceyued not his diuine power. They sawe howe the sely felowe was in a miserable case, & knew eyght well that Jesus was mercifull, and straight wayes gessed what would cum of it. And nowe are they about to seke a quarell, not agaynste the disciples, as they dyd before for pluckyng the eares of corne, but againste the Maister himselfe, who defended them. They marke whether he beeyng of nature ready to helpe all that are in distres and misery, dare in the presence and syght of the Synagoge, heale a man vpon the sabboth daye, because that yf he so do, they may accuse him of breakyng the Sabboth, for as muche as they shall haue the people to beare witnesse with them what is doe.

That pitifull creature desyred not Jesus to helpe hym, but yet to saye the truth, it was a kynde of desyre for hym to cum in to the syght of mercyfull Jesu. The Lord, because he would haue them all to take good heede vnto the miracle that he entended to worke, called forth the man with the lame hande, and sayed: aryse, and stande in the myddes of the people. And with that he arose, and conceyued good hope that he should be made wholle.

Then Jesus turned hym to the Pharisees, whose secrete thoughtes he was priuey vnto, and sayed vnto them: What is your opinion whiche take vpon you to knowe the lawe? Howe, and with what thynges is the Sabboth daye daye broken: Wolth doing of good dedes, or of euill: by preseruyng of a mans lyfe, or destroying thesame: They knewe right well for what purpose he moued this capcious question. If they had answered that it had been better for the reuerence and solemnitie of the Sabboth, to suffer their neighbour to perisshe, then without scruple of conscience to helpe him in perill and necessitie, they people coulde not haue suffered so vnreasonable an answere, cleane repugnaunt to the lawe of nature. Agayne yf they had sayed he might lawfully haue doone it, then had they brought themselues in case that they coulde not haue charged him with any false surmise as they entente and purpose was to do. Therfore they thought good to holde theyr peace, and saye neuer a worde. And yet whiles they so dyd, they plainely declared vnto the people, theyr malicious willnes, for that beyng prouoked by this question to amendement of lyfe, they of an obstinate mynde were still desyrous to picke quarels.

Nowe to the intent that this question shoulde the earlier be assoyled and answered to, he put furth another lyke question, asking whether there were any among them that kept the sabboth daye so hygh and holy, that if a shepe of his chaunced to fall into a dyche on that daye, woulde suffre it to perysshe, and in no wyse be so hardye as to drawe it out. There was none so blynde in that assembly, but he knewe ryght well howe muche the helth of manne ought to be regarded, before the helth and preseruacion of a shepe. Truly he killeth, who so maye saue that thing whiche he suffereth to perysshe.

Wherfore after the Lorde had loked for an answere, and perceyued howe all the Phariseis lyke confederates, not because they were ignorannte of the trueth, but of an obstinate malice helde theyr peace: he loked rounde about, and beheilde them, sherwyng out wardly with his countennaunce howe wrothe and sorye he was. for theyr vncurable wickednes, who when they toke vpon them to be gydes of the blynde, had themselues hearted so blynded with worldely lustes, that they willyngly refused to see the moste radiant, and cleare light of veritie. For there is no blindnes more vncurable, then when a manne is bothe wittingly, a willyngly blynde. They sawe that the dumme beast might lawfully be drawen out of the hole, lest it shoulde perysshe, without anye violacion or breache of the sabboth, and woulde in no wyse see, that it was lyke lawfull to prouyde for mannes helth vpon thesame daye. Therfore, the most gracious Lorde to teache vs that we ought not to withdrawe our selfes from helping of our neyghboure, for the vncurable frowardnes of the euill (the Phariseis contemned) turned him to the manne with the withered hande, and in the audience of the people, who were desyrous to see the ende of this matter, sayd vnto him: Stretche out thy hande. That voyce was scarcely heard: But he stretched it out so dainly chaunged, and serued him as well to do euery thing withall, as the other whiche was neuer lame. Whome would not these reasones haue conuerted, and brought from his errour: whom would not so euident a miracle haue moued to glorifie God: But the Phariseis infected with the leuen of enuie, were therby prouoked to imagine more mischiefe.

Certes, these are those same corrupt, and alwayes vnryght iudgementes of the Phariseis. They passe more vpon a dumme beastle, then vpon a manne: more vpon the apparell, then the body: more vpon meate, then lyfe: more vpon the bodye, then the soule: more vpon worldly thinges, then heauenly thinges: more vpon the flesche, then the spirite: more vpon menne, then God. So true is it that there is no greater mischiefe in the worlde, then is peruerse and auebeward holynes. Among men it is counted to cum of a wonderfull vertue, with worde onely to restore a mans lame hande, and make it whole agayne. But it is a much greater vertue, and benefite, to restore the dead, and laime powers of the soule. What a pitifull lame hande hath he: how dead: how bolde of all pitie and compassion: who when he seeth his neyghbour in necessitie, doeth not geue him his almes: when he seeth him erre and stray out of the right waye, doeth not teache and reforme him: when he seeth him oppressed with iniuries, doeth not helpe hym: when he seeth him yll, doeth not exyte hym to good woorkes.

Suche handes had the Pharisees, who would rather enuy the Lord, then be restored by him, vnto the helth of theyr soules. Such feble, and weake persones hath the Synagoge. But the churche of Christ receiueth neither deafe, dumme, blynde, feble, halte, nor laime. Who so is diseased, and vexed with any euils, let him cum into the syght of Jesu, and he shalbe cured. He will inspire vs with his holy spirite, and that whiche was before lame and without lyfe, shal then be made quicke, and alyue agayne. They that with true faithe wholy committe themselues vnto the Lorde, do returne home cured of theyr diseases. Contrariwise, such as trust to theyr owne righteousnesse, are made worse by other mennes benefites and good dedes. They that are puffed vp with a Pharisaicall spirite, wylleth well to none, but to themselues. Agayne suche as haue receyued the spirite of Jesu, goe about nothing els but to doo good to all men.

Luce vi. ¶ And the Pharisees departed, and strayght wayes gathered a counsell (with theym that belonged to Herode) against him, that they myght destroye hym. But Jesus auoyded with his disciples to the sea. And a great multitude folowed him from Galile, and from Jewry and from Jrusalem, and Idumea, & from beyond Jordane, and they that dwelled about Tyre and Sydon, a great multitude of menne, whiche (when they had hearde what thinges he dyd) came vnto him.

For assone as the Pharisees were departed out of the temple, albeit in the presence of the people, they durst not speake one worde against Jesu, yet now after they had sent for suche as belonged to Herode, to theintente theyr conspiracy should be the stronger (for none knewe better the feate howe to worke mischiefe then the Herodians) they all layed theyr heades together, & secretly debated the matter betwene themselues, howe they myght destroye Jesus, whom as they sawe ferre to excell them in myghtie dedes, so they perceyued that it was not possible for them to dispyte him with woordes. The Pharisees, and suche as were of Herodes retinue, were not louers and frendes together, and yet for to destroy the author of helth, they agreed all in one. O mischeuous conceyte. O blyndnes, muche in dede to be lamented. What shall the prince trayines of worldly deceite preuayle against him, vnto whome nothyng is vnknowen. The Lorde teaching vs by his ensample, that we ought many tymes to gyue place for a season to the vnreuerable obstinacie of the euill, lest through farther prouocation they bemyn more mischieuous, conueyed hymselfe thence, and wente asyde agayne vnto the sea. The goyng asyde of Jesu, is no hinderaunce to the ghospell, but an encreasyng, and furtheraunce of the same. For yf so be that the Pharisees had not driuen hym away, he would woulde not haue cum to the multitude of the gentiles. Therfore after thes Jesus had forsaken the enuious and narrowe synagoge, and was gone vnto the sea, there came vnto hym out of euery quarter a great numbre of people, not onely out of Galile but also out of Jewry, yea and from Jerusalem selfe, from Idumea, and all the countreys lying beyond Jordane, and moreouer from suche places as bordered on the cities of Tyre and Sydon. For here was made a forethewe of the churche, that shoulde be gathered together of the Gentiles, because the synagoge did throughe her vnbeliefe, repell ꝑ Gospel. Out of all these places there came a great multitude of people, whiche moued by the bruite that was spred abrode of the marueylouse doctrine, and mighty dedes of Jesu, drewe the selues together, & assembled at the sea syde. The lorde, who is bothe bounteous, and riche towardes all men, secluded no man, neyther from his doctrine, nor fro receyuing the benefite of healthe. The people were so eagre and hasty, by reason of the great desyre they had to becured of their sycknesses: that one of them thruste another out of place, & by force preased in where Jesus was, to the intente they might at the leaste wayes but touche hym, because that by the onely touchyng of his garmente, diseases were also cured and put away. There was no difference neyther betwene disease, nor person, with this mightie and liberall physytian. For whosoeuer they were that were troubled with any maner of euils, or infirmities, the same were furthwith deliuered therof, yf it chaunced the to go to Jesu. And the selfesame thing were se spiritually done, euen in these dayes. How many be there out of all the nacions of the whole worlde, & what detestable vices are they subdued vnto, whiche flye vnto him for succour, & by touche of faythe are healed. Furthermore the vncleane spirites after they had sene Jesus, coulde not abide his puissaunt vertue, but fel downe at his knees and cried out, saying: Thou art cum that selfesame soune of God, whiche was promised to cum. Jesus, who in no wise woulde suffre the wicked spirites to disclose him, strayghtly comaunded them to kepe silence, and in no case to discry hym before the tyme were cum. His will was to be knowen vnto the world, by humble and poore persons, vnto whom he said: He that heareth you, heareth me. He willeth vs to gene no credence at all to wicked spirites, no not so muche as then, when they speake the trueth. For this busynes was not done at all aduentures, but God by his high wisedom, ordered euery thing with certaine degrees, and proceedinges, for our saluacion.

¶ And Jesus commaunded his disciples that a ship should wayte on him, because of the people, lest they should throng him. For he had healed manye: in so muche that they preased vpon hym for to touche hym, as manye as had plages: and whan the vncleane spirites sawe him, they fel downe before him, and cryed, saying: thou arte the soune of God. And he straytly charged them that they should not make him knowen. The texte.

Wherfore when Jesus was thrust with the prease of people, anon he commaunded his disciples to prepare hym a ship, because he woulde not be disquieted with the disordered, & clamorous multitude, which rather despysed bodely healthe, than the healthe of their soules, and thronged hym rather then touched hym. Suche as confessing their disease, go to Jesu with a syncere faythe, do touche hym, and are made whole. Againe they whiche troubled as yet with worldly lustes and desyres, cum rushing in with noyse & hurly burly, do greue and greatlye disquiete hym: Therfore the disciples who were wonte to be familiarly conuersaunt with the Lorde, prepared hym a ship of a moze pure congregacion. Jesus is better pleased with a fewe cleane, and quiet persones, then with a great many that are troublesome and vnquiet. But yet he so gat him away, that he neuertheles taught the multitude out of the ship. Whenthou seest Jesus teaching oute of the shippe, vnderstand hereby a bishop, preaching to a multitude of all sortes, whiche contayneth christian nouices, and suche as hauenot as yet the spirite cast out by baptisme, both of the Jewes and Gentiles. Happy and blessed are they that do spiritually touch Christ. None toucheth him so, but those whome he first toucheth. For whomsoeuer he toucheth, the same are healed of all theyr sinnes: and nowe being of vnquiet persons, made quiet, they shall be receyued into the ship of the Churche, there to haue the continuall fruicion of his companie, and alwayes to sit at his table. The shippe wherin Jesus preacheth, is very narrowe and roumles to vncleane and sinfull persons, and contrarily moste wide and large, vnto suche as are in cleane life, and purged of theyr sinnes. The Lord refused the publicacion of deuils, and auoyded the sinfull and vnquiet multitude of people. And yet these thinges euidently shewed that the kingdome of God was cum, into the whiche both worthy persons and vnworthy, were about violently to enter. Therfore he prepared himselfe certaine capitaines, whiche shoulde ayde hym in clayming this heauenly kingdome: so many in numbre, as should be sufficient to teache so many nacions, as anon after shoulde come full and whole oute of all partes of the world, to professe the Philosophie and doctrine of the ghospell: So haue the princes of this worlde bene wont to chose them certaine head rulers and capitaines, to clayme, wynne, enlarge, gouerne and defend theyr empiers & kingdomes by. It is requisite that the sayde rulers be vpright trusty, wyse, politique, and diligent, and in especiall that they knowe the king theyr maisters will and pleasure.

The texte. ¶ And he wente vp into a mountayne, and called vnto hym whome he wolde, and they came vnto him. And he ordayned twelue, that they should be with him, & that he might send them furthe to preache, and that they might haue power to heale sycknesses, and to cast out deuils. And he gaue vnto Symon to name Peter. And he called James the sonne of Zebedee, and John James his brother, & gaue them to name Bonarges, which is to say: the sonnes of thunder. And Andrewe, and Philip, and Bartholmewe, and Mathewe, and Thomas, and James the sonne of Alphe, and Thaddeus, and Simon, of Canaan, and Judas Iscariot which also betrayed hym.

Therfore Jesus (who had oftimes before, because to allure manye vnto this doctrine, humbled himselfe, euen to the basenes of the common people, shewing therby that the teachers of the ghospell ought to do the lyke) Jesus, I say, now calling furth to the highnes of euangelike perfection, wente vp into a mountaine, and called vnto hym, not euery rascal of the multitude, but suche as it pleased hym, and those that he had specially chosen and sorted out before for this office and ministery. For he called not men of greate substaunce, head rulers & greate estates, not priestes, Pharisees, or Scribes but poore men, vnlearned persons, & suche as were of lowe degree. For these were mete to folowe him, & to go vp to the mountayne, from whence whatsoeuer this presente worlde hathe in it worthy admiracion, is contemned: from whence as oute of a nighe place, the voyce of the father of heauen, is heard: and to be thozt, from whence the glozy of immoztalitie, and euerlasting lyfe is beholden. They that were called, obeyed, and came to Jesus beyng on high. No man can mounte vp to this hill, except Jesus call him. For himselfe is the mountaine, vnto whome no man cummeth vnles he drawe hym. This that king of kynges, and Lozd of rulers, did chost out twelue head officers and deputies, the whiche as loyall and faythfull garders of his personage, shoulde neuer depart from his person, to the intent, that when the affayres of the ghospell so required, he might sende them out as legates for the body, to preache suche thinges, as they had learned of him theyr kyng, and publish abzode theyr princes commaundement throughout the whole world. Now for as muche as they were vyle fithers, vnlearned persons, poozemen, and suche as in outwarde apparaunce, the word no poynte of kinglines, notwithstanding they promysed the kyngdome of God, our sauiour, leste theyr auctozitie shoulde haue ben nothing regarded, gaue them a power, that no princes of this world can geue theyr ambassadoures, the whiche power was, that they shoulde in the name of Jesu, heale all maner of diseases, and also put to flight vncleane spirites. The first of these legates oz messingers was Simon, whose name he chaunged, and called him Cephas, the which worde implieth as muche as this latine name Petrus, that is to say a rocke oz a stone, to the intent that we should learne by the name selfe, how the chiefe ground warke and foundation of the doctrine of the ghospell, is an vnmouable stedfastnes of fayth. The second was James the sonne of zebede, with his bzother John. To these he gaue also newe names; and they bothe were called Boanarges, whiche is as muche to saye in the Syrian tongue, as the sonnes of thundze: so that theyr name was a very prophecye to declare that they shoulde in tyme to cum, send out of that euangelike hill into all the worlde, the thunder of the preaching of the ghospell, whiche shoulde moue and styre vp all mens mindes to the desyre of heauenlye thinges. For lyke as thunder sounderth from an high: so the preacher of the ghospell sounderth, and preacheth nothing that is low and earnall, but all that he speaketh, is high and heauenly. Be you penitent, the kingdome of heauen is at hande. This saying is a thunder clap. For allone as this word is spoken, euery man feareth the daunger of lightninge: but there folowethe a shower, and that is: Beleue ye the gospell, and you shalbe safe. The fourth legate and messinger was Andrew, bzother vnto Peter, the fifth Philip, the sixte Barthelmewe, the seuenthe Mathew, the eyght Thomas surnamed Didimus, the ninth James the sonne of Alphe, the tenth Thaddeus, the eleuenth Symon of Canaan, the twelfth Judas Iscariothe, the whiche betrayed the Lord. By these few basely borne, vnlearned, and weake persons, it pleased the Lozde to renewe the whole worlde, leste that mannes wisedome oz power, shoulde chalenge any prayse in this heauenly busynes.

And he gaue vnto Symon to name Petrus.

¶ And they came into the house, and the people assembled thither agayne, so that they had no leasure, so muche as to eate bread: and when they that belonged vnto him heard of it, they went out to laye handes vpon him, for they sayde: he is mad. And the Scribes which came downe from Jerusalem sayed: he hath Beelzebub, and by the chiefe deuill casteth he out deuils: and he called them vnto him, and sayd vnto them in parables. The texte.

These thinges thus doen in the mountayne, to monisshe vs that in chosyng the ministres of the ghospell we ought in no wise to be moued ne led with low and priuate affections, Jesus came downe with his elect head officers and they all together came into a house, as nowe the familiar frendes, and of ſhoulde with God. This exaumple was ſhewed to teache vs howe the teachers of Gods word ſhould not grutche to deſcend from theyr highnes or perfection, and abaſe them ſelues euen to the lowne of the wrake, therby to winne very many to theyr Lorde. Let vs alſo folow Jeſus into the houſe, for this intent, that we may perfectly know what they ought to hope after, and wherunto to prepare theyr myndes, who take vpon them ſyncerely to preach the heauenly goſpell. The multitude went not vp to the mountayne. For that thing pertayneth to them only, whom the lorde hath choſen out for that purpoſe. But aſſone as Chriſt and his diſciples were cum downe lower, al the whole rablement of people reſorted vnto hym again, ſo importunately crying and calling vpon him, partly for to heare his doctrine, and partly to be deliuered of theyr diſeaſes, that thy Apoſtles had no leaſure ſo muche as to eate theyr meate. There can beno pleſaunter ſyghte vnto the teachers of the ghoſpell, then when the people being deſyrous to learne, do diſquiet the prieſtes, then when a great multitude of chriſten nouices ſytteth round about the churche dooze, then when there is not roume enough in the Churches to receyue all maner of folkes, that reſorteth vnto the biſhopes ſermon. After that all theſe dedes were throughy the great bruite therof, brought to his kinſefolkes and coſens eares, who knew right well thinfirmitie of his fleſhe, wheras for groſſeneſſe of vnderſtanding they could not ſuppoſe any thyng of his godly might and power: after, I ſay, they heard tell how he wandred vp and downe with a ſort of raſcall flouens, and vile felowes folowing him at the heles, and heard ſay alſo howe he cauſed muche people to folowe him, taughte newe learninges, and ſuche as had not bene heard de before, put away diſeaſes, and caſte out deuils, they aſcribed all to fury and madneſſe: becauſe being offended with the weakeneſſe of his body they could in no wiſe referre theſe thinges vnto his godly power. They knew his father and mother, they knew his houſe, and all his family: they knewe that in all other thynges he differed nothyng from other, and perceyued alſo howe all that was reported of hym, farre exceded the compaſſe of mannes power.

Wherfore for aſmuch as they were his kinſfolkes, they thought it accordyng to mannes lawe, to be theyr parte and duetie to binde hym with cheynes, as one diſtraughte of his wittes and poſſeſſed with ſum euill ſpirite. For they ſayde: he is becum furious or madde. Truely they whiche contemnyng all erthly thynges, yea and life it ſelfe, embrace with all theyr hartes the heauenly Philoſophie and doctrine, do appeare to be beſyde themſelues to thoſe perſons, vnto whome nothing ſauoureth but that whiche is earthly, and tranſitory. He that ſpendeth his liuelode to helpe the poore at theyr nede, ſemeth mad vnto hym who hath repoſed the ayde of this preſente lyfe in worldlye ryches. He that willingly for the ghoſpels ſake vpon hope to be rewarded with euerlaſting bleſſulneſſe, byngeth hymſelfe to banishmente, pouertie, empriſonment, tormentes, and death, is ſtarcke mad in his opinion, who beleueth not that there is a more bleſſull lyfe after this preſente lyfe, ordayned for thoſe whiche are good liuers & vertuous perſons. He that ſetteth naught by honours geuen of princes, and the people, to thende he may purchaſſe himſelfe glory with god in heauen, ſemeth out of his witte vnto ſuche as be mad in very dede, whiles that by bribes gyuing, by craft and deceyte, by hoke or by croke, by right or by wrong, they deſyre lordſhip, ſoueraygne rule, and dignities nities: the whiche anon after, they muſte nedes forgoe. And the Lorde ſuffered his kinſfolke to haue this wicked opinion of him, leſte that his diſciples ſhould be offended if it chaunced them at any time afterward to heare lyke wordes of theirs. Howbeit the wickednes of the Phariſeis was more manifeſt, who were themſelues witneſſes of theſe ſo great myracles that he wrought. For his kinſfolkes erred rather of a certaine groſſenelle of vnderſtanding, naturally giuen vnto the common ſorte, then of any obſtinate malice, and wickednelſe. But the Phariſeis whiche came from Ieruſalem (who becauſe of the knowleage they had in the prophetes, oughte to haue knowen by ſuch dedes and miracles as they ſaw hym worke, that the thing was already cum and preſent, whiche was promiſed of the ſame prophetes: and alſo for the ſoueraignetie of theyr religion, by reaſon wherof they highlye eſteamed themſelues, ought to haue honoured goddes power, whiche all men proued helping and holſome) the Phariſeis, I ſay, blaſphemouſly ſpake againſt Ieſus, ſaying: Theſe dedes that he doeth, he farre aboue mannes power: howbeit he doth them not by the vertue and power of god, but hath ſum mightie and notable diuell, by whoſe ayde he worketh the ſame. For he hath vndoubtedlye the ſpirite of Beelzebub, the maiſter diuell of all, & through his helpe, putteth other diuels to flight whiche are not ſo ſtong and mightie. This chameleſſe and blind blaſphemy becauſe it was not onely ſpoken againſte Ieſus (whome they reckened to be nothing els but a man) but againſt god hymſelfe, whoſe glory they enuying at, aſcribed the miracles that were wrought by his diuine power, vnto the vncleane ſpirite the diuel, the Lorde earneſtly reproueth: and vſeth alſo certaine parables, to thintent that all men ſhoulde clearly perceiue the mattier.

¶ How can Sathan driue out Sathan? And if a Realme be deuyded agaynſt it ſelfe, that Realme can not endure. And yf a houſe be deuided againſt it ſelfe, that houſe cannot continue. And yf Sathan make inſurrection againſt himſelfe, and be deuided, he cannot continue, but hath an end. No man can enter into a ſtrong mannes houſe and take awaye his goodes, except he firſte binde the ſtrong man and then ſpoyle his houſe. Verely I ſaye vnto you, all ſynnes ſhalbe forgeuen vnto mens children, and blaſphemies, wherwith ſoeuer they haue blaſphemed: But he that ſpeaketh blaſphemy againſte the holy goſte, hathe neuer forgeuenelſe, but is in daunger of eternall damnation. For they ſayd he hath an vncleane ſpirite. The texte.

Sith that the whole kyngdome of diuels, ſaith he, is againſt the kyngdome of god, how maye it then be that Sathan caſteth out Sathan: except peraduenture the fiendes make battayle, and go together by the eares among themſelues: as though it were like to be true, that they whiche ſerue one prince in his warres, do violently put one another out of his holde or fortreſſe. If that among mortall men, that Realme whiche is deuided through ſedicion and inward diſcorde very ſhortly cummeth to ruine, becauſe like as vnitie and concorde is the chiefe keper and patronelſe of a Realme, euen ſo diſcorde bringeth anye thyng to deſtruccion beſt neuer ſo ſtrong, and well fortified: How then ſhall the kingdome of Beelzebub endure, yf one diuell caſt out an other? What ſpeake I of a Realme? Whereas ſedicion raygneth, there euery thyng is ſo vnſtable, that not ſo muche as a priuate houſe can long proſper and continewe, yf thinhabitauntes therof be at ſquare, and one of them hate an other. Wherfore if I caſt oute diuels by the helpe of Beelzebub (as you falſly report, and ſaye vnto my charge) then is it a ſure proofe that his kyngdome ſhall ſhortly cum to ruyne and deſolation: And the kyngdome of de- And if a realme be deuided againſt it ſelfe: &c. And yf Sathan make inſurrection againſt Sathan. &c.

villes once destroyed, what than remayneth but that it becumme goddes kingdome? But yf I (whiche thing is mooste true) doe chase awaye deuilles, enemies to God, and mankinde, by goddes vertue and power, then is it euident that the kingdome of God is presente, whose power the fiendes are compelled maugry of theyr heades, to geue place vnto. For they geue not place willingly, or because they haue couenaunted so to do. There can be no leage or couenaunt betwene god and the deuils. They warre continually together, and can in no wyse be reconciled, as it fareth when there chaunceth battayle betwixt two very doutye, and courageous Capitaines, whiche be mostall enemies, and at vtter defiance one with another. Neyther of them suffereth himselfe to be taken of the other, vnlesse it be by strength, and when he is ouerthrowen in batayle. For what courageous and bolde Capitayne will suffer his enemy to enter forcibly into his house, being righte strong, and well fortified, vnlesse his sayde enemy win the same by violent assault, and then caste him, now ouercum and banquished, into prison, By this meanes shall he rifle his house, and carye awaye with hym the spoyle and prayе. If ye see the deuils crye out, and make a greate noyse when they are caste out and expelled, yf you see also many forsake theyr synnes wherewith they serued the deuill, and cum to the feedome of innocencye, and good lyuyng, why do you then take all the glory from God the conquerour, and geue it vnto Beelzebub who is conquered and ouercome? Doeth Beelzebub the enemye of mankinde chaunge his olde condicions, and now prouide for the healthe and preseruacion of manne? is not this a manifeste blasphemye agaynste God? Be you righte well assured of this: there is no kinde of blasphemye, but it may be pardoned of God, because that in all other blasphemies eyther ignorаunce or els the weakenesse and fraylтie of mans nature, leaueth a place for the obtaynyng of forgeuenesse. But he that blasphemously hath spoken agaynst the holy goste, shall neuer obtayne pardon. That man speaketh blasphemy agaynst the holy goste, who being hardened and obstinate through malice, attributeth those workes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub, which he seeth plainlye cannot otherwyse be done, then by the spirite of God. Errours and ignorаunce are pardonable. But howe is it possible that a purposed malice againste the goodnesse of almightye God prouoking hys to saluation, shall get anye pardon at all? The weakenesse of mans bodye shall excuse suche blasphemy as is committed against the sonne of man. But to ascribe goddes power (the whiche plainelye apppeareth in my dedes, to the healthe and saluation of mankinde,) vnto Beelzebub the enemy of God, is a kynde of blasphemye, for the whiche no amendes or satisfaction can be made.

These wordes spake Jesus vnto them, defending the fathers glorie, and nothing in the meane whyle passyng vpon his owne. He meant that theyr offence myght be better excused and borne withall, whiche had an euill opinion of hym, as his kynnesfolkes and cosens had, who sayed: He is becum furious, and prepared cheynes to binde him withall: then the wickednesse of the Pharisеis, who of a certaine vncurable malyce ascribed those woorkes vnto the spirite of Beelzebub whiche they coulde in no wyse fynde faulte with, nor say but they were worthye to proceede of God.

They yet perceyued not the diuine nature that was in Christ. For he would not as yet haue it vttered and knowen. Certes God hath oftimes by vertue me of his holy ſpirite, and the miniſtery of good liuers, wzought miracles, willing therfoze to be glozifyed among men. Now yf any man not by reaſon of ignozaunce, but of very malyce, do aſcribe ſuche miracles vnto the ſpirite of Beelzebub, then is his peruerſe and malicious naughtines paſt all hope of amendement. Wherfoze they might haue bene excuſed yf they had ſayde that Chriſte had bene nothing els but a man, or that he had beneths kyng, not Meſſias. But in that they depraued and ſpake yll of his wozkes, they offended God and his holy ſpirite, in aſmuche as the ſpirite of god can worke by whome ſoeuer it lyſteth. Nowe when they ſawe ſo manye myracles merueylouſely wzought, the people glozify God, ſo manye holpen of theyr infirmities, ſo many deliuered of vncleane ſpirites, ſo many turne from viciouſly liuing, to a godly deſyre, to lyue well and vertuouſly after the gholpell, and that by the preaching of Chriſt: yet they obſtinately ſayde, he hath a deuill, and not the ſpirite of god.

For they ſayed: he hath an vncleane ſpi-rite.

¶ There came alſo his mother, and his brethren, and ſtode without, and ſent vnto him to call hym out, and the people ſate about hym, and ſayed vnto him: Beholde thy mother and thy brethren ſtande for the without. And he anſwered them ſaying: Who is my mother and my brethren? and when he had loked roupde about on his diſciples, whiche ſate in compaſſe about him, he ſayd: Beholde my mother and my brethren. For whoſoeuer doth the will of God, the ſame is my brother, and my ſyſter, and mother.

The texte.

After the Lorde Jeſus had with theſe, and many other wozdes defended the glozy of the heauenly father againſt the wicked blaſphemy of the Phariſeis, and imbrayded the Jewes with theyr obſtinate, and incozrigible vnbeliefe, which they perſeuered in notwithſtanding that thozow faith alonly alſyunes are lewſed and fozgeuen: in the meane time there befell occaſion for him alſo to declare that in the high miniſtration of the gholpel, there ought no regarde at all to be had to hymanyne affections, the whiche in other matters to be muche moued by, is counted a thing prayſe wozthie, and right commendable. For there came vnto hym his kynſfolkes in companye with his mother, who becauſe there was no way for them to entre in for preaſe of people, ſtoode without: and they voyce paſſing from man to man, came vnto them that ſate aboute Jeſus, who ſhewed him howe his mother and brethren were com, and deſyred to ſpeake with hym. There were ſum, euen among his nere kinſemen, whiche had an euill opinion of him, yea and many of them ſuppoſed he had bene out of his witte. Yet they thought by reaſon of kinred, they might lawfully at any tyme when they wouldē, call hym oute to ſpeake with them. The Lozde, to teache vs that the buſynes of the gholpell, whiche was done by the ſpirite of the father for mans ſaluacion, and goddes glozy, ought not to be left for any affections humayne, aunkowred as thoughe he had bene angrye, and in a great fume ſaying: who is my mother, and who are my brethren, and kynſfolkes? In thy buſynes whiche I haue nowe in hande, I knowe ledge no flethlye kynred. The gholpell hath a ſpiritual kinred of fr owne, the whiche ioyneth togethet mens mindes with ſtreighter bendes then doth the other theyr bodyes. And when he had loked round about on his diſciples, who ſate in compaſſe nerre hym, as he was teaching, he ſayde: Beholde theſe are my brethren, and my mother. As the gholpell maketh a new birth, ſo doth it alſo a new kinred. For whoſo beleueth the gholpel, and therein obeyeth the will of my heauenly father, although he be not onlye farre off frō me, as touching kinred of ſtocke or familie, but alſo ꝑ ſtrangeſt alyaunce that is, to all oure nacion, the same is my brother, the same is my sister, the same is my mother. For this kynred is not estemed after the degrees of bloud, but by degrees of ỹ spirite. I acknowledge none to be of my kinred, except he be borne afresh of the heauenly father through fayth, and then as a very naturall sonne, doe obeye his father when he calleth hym to euerlasting thinges. As euery man will in moste perfecte wise perfourme this, so shall I take him for my nerest kinseman.

The. iiij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he began againe to teache by the sea syde. And there gathered together vnto him, muche people: so greatly, that he entred into a ship, and sate in the sea, and all the people was by the sea syde, on the lande.

Herefore Jesus forsoke the house which bare the figure of the Synagoge, wherin he was blaspheamed of the Pharisees, and interrupted throughe the thimportunacie of his kinsfolkes: and eftsones went vnto the water, as one that despyzed the large roume of the Gentiles. He is oftetimes expelled of the Jewes: he maketh oftetimes a forsigne that the gospell shalbe translated from the Jewes vnto the Gentiles. For as longe as he was in the house, that is to saye, in Jewry, very few did sticke vnto hym, none but those onely whome he calleth his brethren, his systers and his mothers.

Many muttered against hym, many layed vpon hym, very many lay in wayte for him, & his nerest kinsfolkes of all interrupted him in his teachyng. Jesus loueth no suche houses. He loueth a multitude, not ỹ standeth in theyr owne conceyte, as the Pharisees did, not that vseth to backebite, and make yll report of theyr neyghbour, as did his kinsfolkes (who being grosse of capacitie through fleshly wisedom, interpreted his heauenly wisedom to be nothing els but fury and madnes) not that moued by worldly affections doe cause man to leaue of any godly enterpryse or busynesse as his mother, and kinsfolkes did. He loueth a multitude whiche is desyrous to heare ỹ ghospell, and word of God, & wholy hangeth vpon the beliefe therof. Wherfore when the Lord Jesus was cum vnto the sea, and there taught as he did before, thither assembled again a great numbre of people, insomuch that he was constrayned through the noyse & hurly burly they made, thrusting one another out of place, to take aboate: out of the whiche, as it had bene out of a pulpet, he taught them syting thicke together on the shore, as if it had bene in a round stage or place ordeyned for men to behold sightes & shewes in. Learne here thou that art a preacher & teacher of the gospell, what is meant by this figure. Inuoyde thou so the rablement of clamorous, & vnquiet people, that yet thou cease not to do thy duetie in preachyng & teachyng of goddes word. When there is any ieopardy leste thou be thrust downe, and ouerwhelmed with ỹ trouble of worldly busynesse so that thou canst not now teache, get the into the ship of the gospell, whiche knoweth no maner of earthly ruffelyng, and out of that pulpit, thou shalte quietly teache the weake, and rude multitude. So not farre from the shore: be nigh vnto the same, alwayes attēperyng thy speache as much as thou canst, vnto ỹ capacitie of the people. For they are not as yet able to folow the. Fyrst of all thou must attempte thy doctrine, accordyng as they̓r rude and ignorannt myndes can awaye withall, tyll suche tyme that they haue well profited therin. For whom dyd Iesus teache out of the boate, but a rude and an vnlearned multitude of all sortes of people.

The texte. ¶And he taught them many thinges by parables, and sayed vnto them in his doctrine: Herken to, beneth there went out a sower to sow. And it fortuned as he sowed, that sum fell by the waye syde, and the fowles of the ayre came and deuoured it vp. Sum fell on stony ground, where it had not mucke earth, and immediatly sprang vp because it had not depth of earth: but assone as the Sunne was vp, it caught heate, and because it had not rooting, it withred awaye. And sum fell among thornes, and the thornes grewe vp, & choked, and it gaue no fruite. And summe fell vpon good grounde, and did yelde fruite that sprang vp, and grewe, and brought forth, sum thyrtie folde, and sum sixtie folde, and sum an hundred folde. And he sayed vnto them: he that hath eares to heare, let him heare.

He put furth vnto them parables, that is to saye, similitudes of thinges moste knowen to all menne. For this is the playnest manour of teachyng and moste conuenable for the rude, in so muche that it appeareth at the firste syght to the wyse of this worlde, a childishe thing, and to be laughed at.

But yet this manoure of teachyng, pleased the euerlastyng wisedome. The Philosophers made all thinges darke vnto they̓r hearers, with argumentes fourmed by great arte and subtelte. The Rhethoricians enfolded menne̓s myndes, with a meruaylous plentifulnesse of eloquent spreche. The Pharisees gathered together certaine hyd misteryes, farre exceedyng the capacite of the bulgar people. But the Lorde chose vnto hym this kynde of doctrine as plainest, and farre from all manour of playerlike ostentation, to the intent that all the glorie gotten by renewing of the worlde through the ghospell, shoulde wholy appertaine, and be ascribed to the might and power of God. Wherefore he moued them by many parables to receyue with sincere belicfe a cleane myndes, the doctrine of the ghospell: from whence the begynning of our saluation proceedeth. And because it behoued to haue this thing fast serled and printed in all they̓r myndes, before he began to teache them, he commaunded them diligently to attende and heare what he would saye.

Harken (sp he) yf anye haue eares to harken withall. It is a fable, and not a parable, except a man geue eare therunto. Neyther hath euerye manne eares to heare the parables of the ghospell, whiche are subtelly plaine, wyselye foolishe, and darkely manifest. For they hyde heauenly wisdome vnderneth a vyle and folyshe conueyng. Neyther thought Iesus it sufficient yf they gaue diligent eare: he woulde also they shoulde beholde and see with they̓r iyes those thinges that he purposed to saye. Blessed are they that haue both pourged eares, and cleare iyes, when Iesus speaketh. Beholde, sayeth he, there wente out into the fielde a certaine sowier to sowe his sede, the whiche he had bey pure, and good. And whiles that desyrous of plentifull increase, he sadly sowed it euery where, it chaunced that sum of it fell by the hye waye syde, whiche ioyned vnto the fyelde. And that sede, because it remained still abque groundе, by reason the way was harde and feere, the fowles that thither came men after picked vp, and deuoured. Agayne an other porcion therof, fell vpon a stonye grounde, whiche because there laye manye stones vnderneth, couered with a litle moulde or dustе, sprang vp to tymely. For the warmenesse of the weather, brought it out of the grounde. And anon as the heate of the Sunne waxed once feruente, the cozne that thus sprang vp before due season, season, was hurte, and partched therwith. And because it coulde not for stones take rootyng but lacked rootes to drawe moysture out of the deapth of the earthe, therwith to nourishe, and defende it againste the heate of the sunne, it widdered awaye before it came to eating. Against an other portion of this sede fell vpon a grounde, the whiche in dede was ranke and fertyle, but yet ouergrowen with thornes, & briers. Nowe when these thornes were once grouen very thick in heigth and bredth, it came to passe that the yong corne, whiche sprang therof, was smothered before it appeared in syght, not for wat of moysture, but for lacke of ayer. And for this cause neyther had the sowier any profit hereof at all. But yet for all this, the labour of the same sowier was not vtterly frustrate, and in vaine. For there was summe of the sede that light vpon a good grounde, and therof sprang grasse, the which grewe, and waxed vntill it came to it full ripenesse. And of this sede there was not one vnfruitfull grayne, notwithstanding that al yelded not like increase: For there were many eares whiche of one grayne, yelded thirtie, summe other thre skore, and a great sorte and hundred.

And sum fell among thornes.

¶ And when he was alone, they that were about him with the twelue, asked him of the parable, and he sayed vnto them: to you it is geuen to knowe the misteries of the kingdom of God. But vnto them that are without, all thinges happen by parables, that when they see, they may see, and not discerne, and when they heare, they maye heare, and not vnderstand, lest at any tyme they should tourne, & their synnes should be forgeuen them. And he sayd vnto the: knowe ye not this parable? And how then will ye know all other parables?

The texte.

When the Lorde had spoken these wordes, then to the intent they should not be forgotten, but that euery man should searche out with himselfe the meaning of the parable, he sayed moreouer: He that hath eares to heare, let him heare: declaring vndoubtedly hereby, that they all heard not that thing whiche they heard. Nowe when not those twelue specially chosen disciples themselues vnderstode well (by reason they were as yet raw and ignorant) what this similitude meant: yet durst they not openlye aske hym any question. But after they had once gotten him alone, then were they bolde to desyre hym that he would vouchesafe the expounde them the misterie, and secrete meaning therof.

To you is it geuen to knowe the misteries of &c.

Then Jesus putting vs in remembraunce how all thinges are not to be disclosed to all persons, but that the doctrine of the ghospell ought to be dispensed according as time serueth, & the capacitie of the hearers can away with: all, sayed vnto his disciples: The princes of this world make few priuie vnto their secretes, none but suche as are pycked fellowes, & tryed persones, whome they maye safely make of their counsayle. If they haue any secrete thyng, that kepe they from the knowleage of the comminaltie. It is geuen vnto you (whom I sorted and piked out from among the commune people) to knowe the misterie of the kyngdome of heauen, because you are familiarlye conuersaunt with me. But vnto the commune sorte, and suche as are not familiar companions of my courte, whether I doe, or speake anye thyng, all is in parables. For they neyther haue meete eares, nor meete eyes.

But vnto the that are without, al thinges. &c.

What they heare, they beleue not: what they see they depraue, and fynde faute with. And so is verified in them that the prophete sayed before shoulde cum to passe, that when they see best, yet see they not, and when they heare best, yet they heare not: because they vnderstand not. Truly he vnderstandeth not, whoso beleueth not. Nowe sinnes are not released, but to suche as beleue that sinnes are freely released by vertue of the ghospell. Therfore through their vnbeliefe, vnbeleefe, it cummeth to paſſe that they are not turned to God, becauſe they tourne themſelues away from God, nor are deliuered from theyr ſynnes, becauſe they refuſe the medicine where with all ſynnes are healed. By theſe wordes Jeſus ſignified thoſe perſons, whome a litle before he vnderſtoode by the grounde that for ſundrye cauſes is barrayne & vnfruitfull. And to make hys diſciples more apt to receyue his doctrine, he chideth them a litle for theyr dulneſſe. Doe you not yet, ſayeth he, geſſe what is meante by this parable, ſith the ſenſe therof is eaſie to be coniectured? And howe then will you boulte out the true meaning of all the reſt, ſince that I neyther ſpeake, nor do any thyng that hath not in it a ſignification of ſum ſecrete matier? I wyll expounde vnto you this parable to the intente that you maye lykewyſe accuſtome your ſelfes to ſearche out the ſecrete meanyng that lyeth hyd in other.

And he ſaid vnto them: knowe ye not this, &c.

¶ The ſowier ſoweth the worde, and they whereof ſum be rehearſed to be by the way ſyde, are thoſe where the worde is ſowen: and when they heare, Sathan cummeth immediatly, and taketh awaye the worde that was ſowen in theyr hartes: and likewiſe the other that receiue ſede into the ſtony grounde, are they, whiche when they heare the worde, at once receyue it with gladneſſe, yet haue no roote in themſelues, and ſo endure but a tyme. Anon when trouble, and perſecution ariſeth for the wordes ſake, they falle immediatly. There be other alſo that receyue ſede into thornes, and thoſe are ſuche as heare the worde: & the cares of this world, and the deceitfulneſſe of riches, and the luſtes of other thinges, entre in, and choke the worde: and it is made vnfruitfull. And other there be that haue receyued ſede into a good grounde, they are ſuche that here the worde, and receyue it, ſo that one cõme doth bryng forth thirtie, ſum ſixtie, ſum a hundreth.

The texte.

The fielde is the worlde, wherein are very many vnmete hearers of the doctrine of the goſpell. The ſowier is the ſonne of man, who came downe frõ heauen into earth. The ſede is the woorde or doctrine of the ghoſpell, by the whiche the will of God is declared vnto the worlde. His will is this, that all men diſtruſting their owne ſtrength, do truſt with all their harte & minde the promiſes of the ghoſpell: that is to ſaye, that through fayth all mens ſynnes are forgeuen: if after the trueth once knowen they geue themſelues to the ſtudie of true bertue, and godlineſſe. Therfore by the ſede whiche, as I ſaid, fell by the hie way ſide, they are vnderſtand, & ſignified, who ſlightly, and as mẽ otherwiſe occupied, heare the ghoſpell, like as they would heare anye fable or phantaſie of mans inuenciõ. And amõg all, none heareth goddes worde with leſſe profit then they do. For anon as they haue heard it, cummeth Satan, and putteth other thoughtes, & imaginacions in their mindes, and by that meanes plucketh out the ſede before it haue gotten roote, & be faſtened therin, ſo ỹ they do not ſo muche as remembre what they haue hearde. Nowe the ſede that is receiued into a ſtony ground, betokeneth thoſe perſones who gredely enough heare the ghoſpel, & gladly deuoure the ſame, perceyuing it to be both true, and holſum: but becauſe they ley it not vp in theyr hartes by deye cogitacion, (for they are letted ſo to do by other affeccions, which wholy poſſeſſing theyr mindes, will in no wiſe geue place vnto ỹ worde of God) they continue not in that they frewently & courageouſly began: neyther do they bring forth any fruite of euangelike or chriſtian godlineſſe, but ſuche fruite alonely as laſteth but for a ſeaſon: and all is, becauſe they haue no rootes. And ſo cummeth it to paſſe, that in profeſſyng they beleue the goſpell, & as graſſe newly ſpryng vp, cauſe men to haue a good opinion of theym, that they wil proue well. But aſſone as anye aduerſitie or perſecucion for the profeſſion of goddes worde doeth ariſe, and aſſaulte assaulte them, by anby they offended ther with, do vtterly forsake their former purpose. The sede that fell vpon the thornie grounde, signifieth those that diligently heare, and beare in mynde the wordes of the ghospell: But the loue of deceitfull riches, and the inordinate desyres of other thinges whiche allure and tolle men vnto them, with a false apparaunce of vertue, do enter into their myndes, and there daily (as theyr property is) encreasyng, at the length ouergrowe the sede, so that it can neuer spring vp, and cum to be corne. Finally the sede that light vpon a good ground, betokeneth those that gene good eare vnto the Doctrine of the ghospell, and beleue all that they heare, and conuey it into the moste inwarde corners of theyr hartes, vntill that it spring vp, & bryng forth the worthie fruites of the ghospell, not euery where a lyke, but diuersely, according to the diuersytie of the soyle, and disposicion of the heauenly spirite: so that this man bringeth forth fruite meanely, that man more plentifully, an other greatest aboundaunce therof: lyke as if one grayne bryng forthe thirtie, an other three score, and the thirde an hundred. He that bringeth forth greate plentifulnelle of fruite hath cause to rendre thankes vnto God almightie: there is no cause why he should stande in his owne conceipt. He that bringeth forth meane store, hath no cause to repyne at him whiche is muche happier, and bringeth forth more aboundaunce then he. For God, who is bounde and debtour to no man, doeth of his most bounteous liberalitie, geue euerye man his giftes, as it liketh him. What encrease soeuer cummeth, thesame is due vnto hym that firste sowed the grounde, and by whome what fruite soeuer is brought forth, dayle encreaseth. My desyre is to haue all the corne grounde of the whole worlde sowen when the tyme shall cum, with this sede: and that this doctrine, whiche I nowe secretely teache you a fewe persones, may thorough your diligēt ministerie, be enlarged and spredde abrode, asmuch as may be, to ỹ intent that you also may shewe your selues, like a good groūd, yf you distribute that you haue receiued of me, to as many as ye can possible. For there is no fruite where with God is better pleased. Ye must therfore bee well ware, that the sede sowen in your myndes, perysshe not thorough forgetfulnelle, or negligence. Ye ought diligently to laye it vp in memorie that it may spring vp in due season, and bring forth fruite moste plentifully.

The texte.

¶ And he sayed vnto them: is the candell lighted to be put vnder a Bushell, or vnder the table? is it not lighted to be put on a candlesticke? for there is nothyng so priuye that shall not be openede: neyther hath it been so secrete, but that it shall cum abrode. If any manne haue eares to heere let him heare. And he sayed vnto them: take hede what ye heare. With what measure ye meate, with the same shall other men measure vnto you againe. And vnto you that heare, shall more be geuen. For vnto him that hath, shall it bee geuen: and from him that hath not, shall be taken awaye euen that whiche he hath.

And because this monicion should the deper sinke in theyr myndes, he added a parable. Thinke you not, sayed he, ỹ I will haue this thing which I doe nowe secretely commit vnto you, alwayes kept secrete. Doth a manne light a candell because to hyde thesame when it is lighted, vnder neath a bushell, or vnder the table: or elles doth he rather light it to the intent it may bee set in a candlesticke, and geue light to all that be in the house? The ghospell is the sede, whiche is therfore committed vnto you, because it maye bryng forth fruite with great encrease. I haue light the candell in you, that through your ministerie, it maye put awaye the darkenesse of the whole worlde. At this present I hyde many thinges from the multitude, because they are not as yet apt to receiue them: and though they were, the tyme is not yet cum. But assone as the tyme shall once cum, there is nothyng so hid amongst vs that then must not be discouered, nor anythyng so secrete, that then muste not be openly preached to all men. For there must nothyng keare you frō spreading abrode, or preachinge of the gospell: but all other thinges set apart, this thing onely muste you go about both the day and night. For wo be to that man, who hath not multiplied þ good sede beraken vnto him: who hath hidden the light that was geuen hym. Therefore if any of you haue eares to heare, let hym heare these wordes: and when he hath heard the them, let hym beare them well in memorie. Againe lest the wordes that he spake, shoulde be forgotten, he said moreouer: Marke wel what thyng you heare, and take hede that you heare not in vaine. For you heare not vaine fables and phantasies of mans inuencion, but heauenly doctrine: whiche by your ministerie, muste be spread abrode throughout all the whole worlde. Preache you truelye the doctrine which you haue receyued, and teache nothing that is delagreable therunto. It shall auayle you muche to heare these thinges, if you retayne them well in memorie and diligently distribute to other what you heare of me. Again you heare thē to your greate perill, yf you strike either with feare humaine, or els delited with the commodities and pleasures of this present worlde, do suppresse and kepe in, that you haue receiued. Be not ye niggish, and slouthfull distributours of the doctrine that I giue you, but put it forth lauishly. For your liberalitie shal nothing diminishe, but rather encrease that, that you haue, and make it more. The treasure of gold and siluer is at the length wasted by liberalitie: but the more liberally you distribute this heauenly treasure, the greater shall the heape therof be. Neither foloweth it that he þt he is the poorer that giueth away his goodes vnto the needie, so in like manour is he the wurse learned whiche distributeth the doctrine of the gospell to as manye as he can possible: but as he that carrieth light before manye, hath not therfore any whit the lesse light him selfe: euen so he that by preachynge the doctrine of the gospell, openethe a waye for all menne to cum to the knowleage of the trueth, doeth not onely not loose that light whiche he alreadye hath, but also hath a greate deale more gyuen him, to thentent he maye profite, and doo good vnto moo. The treasure that you haue, is none of youres, but his who gaue it you to distribute. And if you distribute it to other with large measure, he that gaue you the stocke and principall parte, will also with like measure grue you encrease therof. God loueth to haue his giftes prodigallye layed out: and here cleane contrarie to the manoure of worldlye ryches, he waxeth richest, whosō is lauishest in laying out.

And vnto you þ haue shall more be geue. &c.

For such is the beneficiall goodnesse of god, that he whyche gaue vs muche before, doeth in moste ample wise augmente his giftes, because he righte well perceiueth, that whatsoeuer was geuen, the same is distributed and bestowed to the great vtilitie of manye. Therfore let hym whiche hath the gifte, bountiouslye distribute it, to thentente that he maye haue aboundaunce. No manne doeth well to geue goodes to hym that aboundeth with riches: but suche as be liberall in very dede, are wonte to geue vnto the poore, and needie. Here it is cleane contrarye. For vnto hym that hathe, and hathe not that thynge whyche he hath to his owne vse and commoditie alone, but liberallye departeth there with to other, to hym. I saye, as to a trustie distributour, shall more be gyuen: because he maye abounde, and haue muche plentye. Yet that hath not suche a one is he that hydeth his treasure, and kepeth it to himselfe) the same shal not alonely be neuer a whit the richer therfore, but also that thing whiche he thought he had for his owne vse, and no mans els, shall be quite taken from him. Neither let this make you euer the slacker or worse willynge to distribute the gyftes of faythe, vnto the people be vnkynde, and not answerable to your diligent endeuour. Your wages shall be sake for you with God, who the more that euery one of you hath trauayled in settyng forth the ghospell, the more bountiously will he rewarde hym in the worlde to cumme. Neither neither shall you in the meane tyme be vtterly defeated of your rewarde, whiche are dayly more and more enriched with the riches of the ghospell.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde: so is the kyngdome of God, euen as yf a man shoulde sowe sede in the grounde, and shoulde slepe, and rise vp nyght and daye, and the sede should spring, and growe vp while he is not aware. For the earth bringeth forth fruite of her selfe, first the blade, then the eare, after that the full corne in the eare. But when the fruite is brought forth anon he putteth in the sickle, because the harueste is cumme.

Moreouer the Lorde added another parable, whereby he taught his disciples that they should care for nothing els, but onely go about with al that they might, to haue the gospell spred abrode and preached thorowe out all the whole worlde, telling them that harueste time shoulde once cum, whē it should please the Lorde. The kingdome of the gospel, sayeth he, is after this manour, as yf a manne shoulde sowe his sede, and caste it vpon the grounde in the daye tyme, anon after that the sede is putte into the earth, he that sowed it, sleepeth careles, and taketh his reste. And in the meane while that he is thus a slepe, the sede groweth neuertheles both nyght and daye, with secrete encreasynges without mennes laboure, and nowe springeth vp corne, and shooteth vp, hasting vndoubtedlie of the owne accorde, and by a certaine priuie operacion of nature to bring forth fruite.

Certes nature hath her degrees, the whyche she alwayes after the sede be once sowen, kepeth of course without the husbandmannes laboure. For firste of all the sede, after it is putrified in the grounde, springeth vp into grasse. That is the firste hope of encrease. Then when the blade is shot vp, thervnto groweth an eare, but suche a one as hathe as yet no corne in it. At the lengthe the huskes of the eare are fylled full of wheat cornes. And these thinges are so secretely wrought by the procurement of nature, that a man can not perceiue when they growe, and yet inuisibly perceiue that they haue growen and encreased.

Therefore when the corne is ripe, he that sowed the sede, thrusteth in his sickell to reape that is come vp, because he knoweth that harueste tyme is already come. By this darke parable, the Lorde couertly taught his disciples the begynnyng, goyng forwarde, and consummacion or perfit ende of al the whole gospell: of the whiche three partes, himself would openly performe bothe the firste, and the laste, with his visible bodie: and the other, that is to saye, the goyng forwarde, or die with the inuisible grace of the holy ghoste. For that same prince sowed abrode the sede of the gospell, thorowe out all Jewry. Anon as he had so done, he slepte, firste dyinge, and then afterwarde risinge againe into euerlasting quietnesse. And thus farre foorthe springeth the sede of the gospell, whiles he that firste sowed it, is as it were a slepe: a secretely encreasethe bothe daye and nyght, that is to saye, both in prosperitie, and in aduersitie, what occaſſion ſoeuer be miniſtred eyther on theyr behalfe that promote and aduaunce it or els of ſuche as reſiſte the ſame.

For it cannot be choſen but that ſeede muſte nedes cumme vp , whiche he ſowed, whoſe will no man reſiſteth. Moreouer, where as there is nothinge in this worlde vnknowen vnto hym , yet in that he ſuffreth the worlde to make buſineſſe agaynſte the ghoſpell, and his apoſtles to be perſecuted , and ſlayne, he ſemethe vnto the fayntheſſe not to knowe what is here done, and to be in maner aſlepe , whereas in very dede, he doeth euen now by the inuiſible power of his holy ſpirite, more effectually worke all thinges in all . He will not in viſible forme returne into the worlde, vntyll the tyme that (the ghoſpell beynge firſte ſo muche enlarged, and ſpreade abrode, as he hath determined before , and one- lye knowethe it ſhalbe) all men ſhall ſee hym cum agayne vnder the ſelfe ſame forme and lykenes, that he had when he aſcended vp into heauen : to deuide the godly and good people from the wicked: and to laye vp the godly as good corne in the barne of euerlaſtyng quietneſſe . Moreouer howe ſmall begynnynges the kyngdome of the goſpell is ſprongen of , yf a manne eſteme the thynge as it ap- pereth vnto the worlde. This was, as a manne woulde ſaye , the graſſe that ſprange of the ſede of the goſpell, whiche the Phariſeis, Scribes , Prieſtes, El- ders, Rulers , Princes, Kynges , and Philoſophiers , dyd what they couldе to oppreſſe and bepe vnder, that it ſhould neuer cum vp . But whiles they ſtrou- agaynſte the ſtreame, this ſede began to be ſowen in all partes of the worlde, and will not ceaſe to growe before the worldes ende , vntill the corne be all ripe. Then the ſickell of indgemente that can not be anoyded, ſhall be thruſte in, to the entente that when all are cut downe, it maie deliuer the cockel vnto the fire, and ſafely lay vp the pure wheate.

This parable althoughe it do ſpecially pertayne vnto Jeſu, the auctour, promotour, and finiſher of the kyngdome of the goſpell , yet doeth it alſo touche both his Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſoures , whom he willeth wholy to bende themſelues hereunto, that Goddes worde maye be ſowen a brode, and preached as muche as maye be. For this ſede tyne laſteth euen tyl the worldes ende : and they alſo as helpers of Jeſu Chriſte , be ſowers , ſaue alonelye that they ſowe not their owne ſede, but ſuche as Chriſte deliuered vnto them. And becauſe that ſede is celeſtiall, it can in no wyſe be ouerlayed or oppreſſed. The Phariſeis alſo, and Philoſophiers had ſede of their owne, but thoſe ſedes couldе by no meanes (no not when the world fauoured them) growe and proſper , where as the ſeede of the heauenly doctrine, wareth euery daye more ſtronger then other, euen when the worlde with all the puiſſaunce and aydes that it hathe, aſſaulteth it. There- faze the Apoſtles do lykewyſe ſowe after their faſhion, and for that purpoſe they are ſente out, who by oft remouing from place to place, go aboute nothing els, but to haue the goſpell as muche dilated and ſpred abrode as is poſſyble to be. God geueth the encreaſe when they be aſleape . That foreſayde ſede hath in euerye one, euen of the Chriſtians, his graſſe, his eare, and his harueſt . In hym that is a Chriſtian nouice, the corne is yet vnperfite, & lacketh his naturall ſhape.

In them that be lately borne a gayne in Chriſte through baptiſme, the ſede is ſtrongen into graſſe, whiche by ỹ greenes of innocencie, puttethe euery manne in a hopefull hope that it wyll proue well, and come to good. Nowe when they are growen vp higher, by goyng forewarde in Chriſtian vertue and godlynelſe, then be they eared.

And when eche of them is ripe after his manoure, then is he cutte downe with the sickle. This sickle is deathe, after whiche the wheate neyther waxeth more ne lesse: neyther is made worse, nor better. The barne signifieth the life celestiall.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde: whereunto shall we lyken the kyngdome of God? or with what comparison shall we compace it? It is lyke a graine of mustarde seede, whiche when it is sowen in the earthe, is lesse than all seedes that be in the earth. When it is sowen, it groweth vp, and is greater than all herbes, and draweth greater braunches, so that the fowles of the ayre may make their nestes vnder the shadowe of it. And with many suche parables spake he vnto them the worde vnto them, after as they might heare it, but without parables spake he nothing vnto them. But when they were alone, he expounded all thinges to his disciples. And the same daye, when euen was comme, he sayed vnto them: let vs passe ouer vnto the other syde. And they lefte the people, and toke hym euen as he was in the shyp. And there were also with hym other shippes.

Furthermore, the Lorde Jesus shewed them by another parable, a figure of the succesle and prosperous going forwarde of the Gospell, to the entente that they, who as then vnderstoode not his sayinges, shoulde afterwarde knowe by the ende and proffe of the matter that these thynges were not doone at all aduentures, nor by worldlye policie, but by the prouidence of Goddes wysedome. And because he woulde make his hearers to take better hede vnto his wordes, he lette ynge as thoughe he had stande in doubte vnto what thynge he myght beste compare the kyngdome of heauen, sayed: Vnto what thinge shall we saye that the kyngdome of heauen is lyke? or what comparison shall I vse, wherby I maye expresse the nature and vertue therof, vnto the that perceiue no thynge saue alonely what they see with theyr eyes? It is lyke (sayeth he) a graine, or corne of mustarde seede, whiche, when it is sowen, is lesse than all other seedes of herbes that are sowen in the earthe: in so muche that yf a man marke the quantitie or forme therof, he lokethe not that any greate thynge shoulde come of it. But as soone as the same is once sprynge vp, and gotten out of the grounde, then draweth it to the nature of a tree, waxyng harde from the stemme or stalke, and spreadyng abrode his braunches beyonde the quantitie and measure of al other herbes, in so muche that it geueth shadowe vnto the fowles, and also conuenient places for them to buylde and make their nestes in. With these and many other like parables, the Lorde Jesus shewed the rude and grosse people, a figure of the succesle that the Gospell shulde haue, attemperynge his wordes vnto their capacities. He spake nothyng vnto them at that tyme but in darke parables, because they were not as then tenyeueable of playne communication. For yf he had sayed, that he shoulde shortely haue beene slayne of the Jewes, but woulde anon after reliue, and spreade abrode his glorye throughoute all the worlde, so that he, who then seemed loweste, and moste abiecte of all persons, shoulde be righte well knowen to be the soueraygne gouernoure of the whole worlde, and that no manne, were he neuer so hyghe in dignitie, shoulde lyue any quietnesse, or sure harborowe, vnlesse he fledde for succoure vnder the holy boughes or braunches: yf he had, I saye, spoken thus plainelye vnto them, not one of them all woulde haue abyden his wordes, nor geuen anye credence therevnto. And yet was it verye expediente for them, as it were by a dreame, to remember these thynges: because afterwarde the thynge selfe shoulde teache them what was meante by the same parables. He shewed them in secrete communication, the secrete vnderstandynge of euerye parable

It is lyke a graine of mustarde seede.

And yet many such parables, &c.

that

that he spake vnto them. Thus was that daye spente. When it was nowe almoste nyghte, he commaunded his disciples to rowe hym ouer to the other syde of the water.

Because faythe towardes Christe, and by Christe to Godwarde, is the o- riginall cause of the encrease of the gospell: the Lorde perceiuing that his disciples (who were as yet but rude, and weaklynges,) dyd geue no credence vnto his doctrine, attempted many wayes to bryng forth in them, and stablishe this fayth. Whensoeuer nyght, that is to saye, the storme of worldlye trouble, or aduersities cummeth vpon vs, then haue we chiefelye nede of a stronge and stedfaste faith towardes Christe. Therefore the disciples obeyed his commaundemente, and so after the people, (who could not folowe him) were sente awaye, they, accompanyed with certayne other boates, beganne to rowe hym ouer to the farther syde, in the same shippe that he then taughte and preached in. The Apostles carye ouer Jesus, whensoeuer they goe from place to place, to sette forthe and preache the Ghospell. He knewe righte well that against suche as so do, and be ministers of Goddes worde, there shoulde in tyme to cum be much sore businesse and trouble stirred vp, by them that loue better the vanities of this worlde, the those thynges that appertayne to euerlastinge saluacion.

But why they went alone &c.

The texte.

And there arose a greate storme of wynde, and the waues dashed into the shyp, so that it was nowe full, and he was in the sterne a slepe on a pillowe, and they awaked hym, and said vnto hym: master, carest thou not that we perishe: and he rose vp, and rebuked the wynde, and sayde vnto the sea: peace, be still: and the wind ceased, and there followed a great calme. And he sayde vnto them: why are ye so fearefull: how happeneth it that ye haue no fayth? and they feared exceadyngly, and sayde one to another, who is this? For bothe wynde, and sea obey hym.

Wherfore to harden, and strengthen his disciples agaynste suche persecutours, and to teache them also, that no power, be it neuer so cruel and terrible, ought to be feared of those that with full harte and mynde put theyr affiaunce in the lorde Jesu, he suffered them to bein daunger, euen to desperacion. For after they had sayled farre from the shore, there sodainely arose a greate storme of wyndes, whiche set the water in suche a rage, that the waues enforced by the violence of the tempeste, dashed into the shyppe, so that they were then in great daunger, leste the shyppe alreadye filled with the great sourges of the sea, woulde haue soncken. In the meane whyle Jesus layed his heade vpon a pillowe, and slept in the shyp. This was no fayned slepe: he slepte in verye dede, beyng werayed with trauayle, and watchynges, as one that had a very naturall bodye of man, subiecte to all suche passions as oures are subiect vnto. But he was not ignorannt what would betyde. He wyste well there would a tempest aryse. He knewe that the Apostles would be sore afrayed, and waken him out of his slepe. He could not more effectually teache them, that nothyng is to be dread of those that stedfastly beleue in him. The disciples therefore pinched hym as he slepte, and when they had awakened hym, sayde: Maister slepeste thou so soundely whyle we perishe: and thynkest thou that it maketh no matter to the, yf we be drowned? It was an argumente of faythe, that when they were in daunger of death, they fled vnto Jesu for succour: But of an vnperfite faythe, for as muche as they beleued that they were not in sufficiente safegarde, as long as the Lord was aslepe. When Jesus was wakened, because he wolde by dede declare that he was the Lorde of all the elementes, he rebuked the wyndes, and commaunded them to cease. Then he saide vnto the sea:

peace, be still. These two elementes whiche are obedyente to no mortall man, knewe the power of theyr maker. And by and by the wynde stayed, the waues and sourges of the water left their ragyng, and fell downe, and there folowed a greate calme. Then the Lorde tourned hym vnto hys disciples, and rebuked them for their vnbeleefe. Why (quod he) are ye so afrayed: haue you not yet, after ý you haue seene me worke so many miracles, confydence in me? Nowe when the disciples, and the other that were wyth hym in the shyppe, sawe thys straunge wonder, how the sea beyng a dumme, and an vnruly element, and the wynde lykewyse a violente elemente, forthwith as he had rebuked thē, ceased from further ragyng, and were still: perceiuyng what it was a thinge passynge the state, and condicion of manne, sayde one of them to another. Who is this whose comaundementes not onely diseases, and the diuels, but also the dumme elementes obey vnto?

He that was ý sone of man (as touchynge the naturall appetites of men) had not in this worlde where to reste his head. For euē dying on the crosse wt he hadde nothynge to laye his head on, he caste it downe, and so yelded vp the Ghoste: But here in the shyp he dyd not onelye take his reste, but also layed a pilowe vnder neth his heade, and slepte therein: and anon a storme arose, bes cause we shoulde knowe what great daunger hangeth the ouer the churche, so oft as Christ sleapeth in vs. He sleepeth verily, when the shepeheardes & pastours of Christes flocke, delited wyth the cōmodities, and pleasures of this worlde, are in a sounde slepe, so that yf a man pynche them, or eyre vpon them neuer so muche, yet can they not be wakened. Howe fast asleepe are those Bysshops, who bestynge altogether geuen vnto sensualitie, dronken wyth an vnlefull delyte to rule and playe the lordes, and wholy set to heape vp money, neyther take anye care for the flocke to them committed, nor haue anye remembraunce of theyr owne soule healthe, nor yet are moued any whit at all with the cōmon perill, to awake out of theyr slepe, and thinke thus with themselues: Woo that do I mad ly muste I come to ý iudgyng seate of ý euerlastyng iudge, who shed his pre-ous bloud for these shepe, whiche he put me in truste withall. Woo what answere shall I than make hym? I shoulde with ensample of good liuyng haue caryed lighte before them to euerlastynge saluacion: and by my naughtye sinnefull lyfe, I haue bene theyr guyde to hell, and damnation. I shoulde haue fedde them with the doctrine of ý gospel, and dyd not feede them a whit, but plucked of their woolle by the rootes: but spoyled them of that they hadde, but slewe them. In stede of a father, I behaued my selfe lyke a tirauut, for a Bysshope, I was a wolfe and a robber. And in the meane whyle the tempest disordereth all thynges, and maketh a greate confusion. Jesus, who is the true heardman of the churches and congregacions, slepeth dissemblynge the matter, and suffe-ryng the storme to aryse: but he sleepeth so, that he streighte wayes awaketh at the crye, and calling of his. The shyppe that Christe (as pertaynynge to the body) is caried in, is one: but the hath mo accompanyinge her. There is one catholike or vniuersall churche, and agayne there be manye churches. Christ is lykewyse in them all: And as manye as do cleaue vnto the same heade, be the congre-

congregacion. No shyp is drouned that followeth Christe: Be they neuer so muche tossed with ỹ waues of the water, neuer so much in ieopardie of drowning, yet haue they at the lengthe good arriuall, and cum safe vnto the hauen. But all this while, the tempeste and nyghte do plainly teache vs that we can haue no maner of ayde and succour of our owne strengthe, and that all hope of saluacion is in Christ onely, if a man with full hart and minde put his trust in him. The deuel causeth oftetymes suche tempestes priuately to aryse in euery mannes soule. For after that the nighte doth once darken our myndes with errours: after the light of faith doth faile, and the strength of the vnangelike spirite, be (as ye would saye) a slepe, & laid to rest in vs: then do the windes of naughtye lustes arise, and greatly disturbe the calme of the mynde. The soule selfe is now in great hasarde: there is no helpe, neyther in rowing nor in sayles. There is no remedie, but it muste nedes perishe and go to wracke, yf Christe be not wakened out of his slepe by feruente and importune prayers. If he heare not streight waies when he is called on, yet ceasse thou not, but pricke, and pinche hym tyll he be awake. By him onely the calme and quietnes of the mynd, shall in continent be restored.

¶ The.v. Chapter.

¶ And they came ouer to the other side of the sea, into the countrey of the Gadarites. And when he was cum out of the shippe, immediatly there mette hym out of the graues a man possessed of an vncleane spirite, which had his abidyng amõg ỹ graues, & no man could bynde hym: no not with chaines, because that when he was often bounde with fetters, and chaynes, he plucked the chaynes a sunder, and brake the fetters in pieces, neyther could any man tame hym. And alwayes nyght and daye he was in the mountaynes and in the graues, crying, and beating hymselfe with stones. But when he had spyed Iesus a far of, he ranne and worshypped hym, and cryed with a loude voyce, and sayed: what haue I to do with the Iesus thou sonne of the moste hyghest God? I require the in the name of God, that thou tourmente me not. For he sayed vnto hym: come oute of the man thou foule spirite. And he asked hym, what is thy name? And he answered, and sayed vnto hym: my name is Legion, for we are many. And he prayed hym instauntly that he would not sende them awaye oute of the countrey.

The texte.

SO this tempest hath taughte vs that all trouble and busynesse whatsoeuer the worlde woulde stirre vp agaynst the gospell, oughte by the ayde of Christe to be suffered with constãt courage of mynde: and that such trouble should at one tyme or another, be turned into greatest tranquillitie and quietnes: So followeth there in cõtinent a figure, whereby was signified ỹ there should be in summe partes of the worlde so bylandishe and cruell people, that they woulde at the hyrste bruute by reason of their naturall crueltie, refuse and abhorre the doctrine of the gospell: and yet should it cum to passe in processe of tyme, that they also shoulde ware tame or cyuille, and louingly receiue the swete yoke of the lorde after they once knewe it. Wherefore assone as this storme was alayed, whyche figured the storme of persecucion that princes should stirre vp raging against the gospell, Iesus, and suche as accompanied hym, arriued on the other side of the water.

That countrey was called the countrey of the Gerasites of a famous towne of Arabie, named Gerasa, ioynynge vnto mounte Galaad, in the tribe of Ma-nesse, not farre fro the lache or sea of Tiberias. For nowe the Lorde Jesus maketh a forethew of the brutishe, and cruell barbarousnesse of certayne nacions,

And when he was cum out of the ship &c. of whome it maye be doubted, whether they deserue to haue the name of men, or no: yet is there none so fierse and saluage cruelitie that we ought to despaire of. Wherfore after that Jesus was cummen out of the shyppe, and entred into his countrey, by and by he sawe a sight, whiche playnly declared the maners, and naturall disposicion of that nacion. For when he was heardecummyng, there starte out a certayne felowe, vexed with a spirite of passinge wickednesse, and cruelitie. This wretched creature wolde not come wythin as any resorte of people was, but lined in solitarye places, lurkynge, and hydynge hymselfe in dead mennes tumbes that were by the highe waye syde. Neyther was there any that assayed any more to bynde hym, because he had bene ofte tymes bounde before, and alwayes plucked the cheines asunder, and brake the fetters in peces.

Neyther was there anye violence that could so reclaime hym, but that he beyng in case not able to rule himselfe, would gad abrode at libertie, whithersoeuer the wicked finde enforced him to go. For this cause he was vnbound, and wandered vp and downe both night and daye among dead mens tumbes, and in wylde mountaynes, cryyng and beatyng himself with stones. Nowe yf anye reden this to be (as it is in verye dede) a miserable, and a terrible sighte, lette him consider with hymselfe, howe muche more miserable a sighte em the eyes of almighty god, is he that hath nothyng els of a man, but the name onelye: he, I say, that is marde and caste awaye through riotous liuinge, woode vpon harlottes, madde vpon the dise, and beside himselfe by reason of dronkennes, a brauler, a robber or prayre taker, a breaker of the peace, a violent felowe, suche a one as can neyther be restrayned by Goddes lawe, ne manner: neyther let, and brideled from his sensuall wilfulnes by any shame, reuerence, or feare: bolde to doo what hym lyketh: who for small wages is hired to go to what warfare soeuer it be, to slee and murder suche as he knowethe not and neuer dyd hym harme, to burne bilages and good townes, to rifle churches, and finally to destroye all that euer holy is, or not holy. Put hereunto periuries, blasphemyes, and incestes, with the whiche vices suche leude ruffians as are of this sorte, be well acquainted. Put hereto treasons and poysonynges, with the practise of arte Magike or Sorcerye, and then shalte thou eudenly perceiue howe muche lesse was the furye of the man tyus vexed with the deuill, then of this wretched and vnhappie captiue. But what? Ought we to despayre of suche a one? No truely, yf it maye chaunce him at anye tyme to see Jesu. He is sene by faith. For when the same wretched felowe at the noyse that the straungers made, was come out of his denn, violently to assault them according vnto his accustomed maner, anon as he had afarre of espyed Jesu, he drawen with an heauenly power, and sodaynly chasinged, ranne vnto hym, and worshypped him. And straight wayes the fiende began to cry with a loude voyce by the mannes mouth, and saye: What hast thou to do with me Jesu the sonne of the highest God? I require thee by the name of God, that thou tourmente me not. For Jesus voyce was vnto that deuill, a tourmente, because he sayde: Thou foule spirite departe out of the man. So greate was the malice of the deuill, that it was the greatest tourmente to him that might be, if he nowe might no lenger be suffered to vexe and tourment the silly wretche. He fele Je-

ſaid boyce effectuall, and almyghty, the whyche he was conſtrayned to obeye vnto, whether he would or no.

Nowe I repoſe me to you, whether there be not lyke affection of mynde in theſe as be extremely malicious perſones, who haue a great delyght to do other menne harme, yea, thoughe it be to their owne diſpleaſure. And yf they be reſtrayned from theyr wilfull deſyre, ſo that they can not be ſuffered to doo what miſchief they woulde, then are they ſore vexed in mynde. Jeſus demaunded of the foule ſpirite what was his name. The ſpirite made aunſwere, my name is Legion, becauſe we be manye. Thou knoweſt (good reader) that thys worde Legion, is a worde or terme of warre, whiche impieth a foule rable-ment of ruffians confedered together, to deſtroye me. But no power of a multitude preuayleth agayn ſt the might of Jeſus. Hys eaſelye putteth a Legion to flight, as one man. Then that capitayne deuill who ſpake for all the reſte, greatly beſought Jeſus, whome he acknowledged to be his conquerour, that he woulde not cleane exile hym out of that countreye. O peruerſe malice of the deuil. He deſyreth not forgeuenes, nor any other benefite, whereby he maye be in better caſe. He counterhit a pleaſure and benefite if he maye be ſuffered there to continewe, whereas moſte occaſion is for hym to do harme: Euen as thoughe a ſorte of mapthaunſes ſet all on miſchiefe, enforced by a greater power of the prince, and commaunded to breake garniſon, or forſake theyr hold and fortreſſe, would make this petition: We deſire no wages, but only that your grace will ſuffer vs to raunge abrode in the countrey, and to robbe and reaue at our owne peryll.

But ther was there nigh vnto the mountaynes, a great heard of ſwyne feedyng. And al the deuilles beſought hym, ſaying: Sende vs into the heardes of ſwyne, that we maye enter into them. And anon Jeſus gaue them leaue, and the vncleane ſpirites went out, and entred into the ſwyne. And the heard was caryed headlong into the ſea. They were almoſte two. And were drowned in the ſea. And the ſwine-heardes fled, and tolde it in the cite, and in the townes. And they went out for to ſee what had happened and came to Jeſus, and ſawe him that was vexed with the fynd, and had the Legion, ſit both clothed and in his right mynde and they were afrayed: and they that ſawe it told them howe it happened to hym that was poſſeſſed with the deuill, and alſo of the ſwine. And they began to praye hym that he would depart out of theyr coaſt. The texte.

When that vnto this requeſte and peticion of the deuill, Jeſus made no aunſwere, there was not farre of a great heardе of ſwine, nyghe vnto the mountayne feedyng in the fieldes. Thou knoweſte here good reader, the beaſte that was abhorred of all the righte Jewes, and wherewith the Gentiles, a people geuen to Idolatrye, were chefly delyted. Therefore the deuils deſyred that they myghte be ſuffred at the leaſte wyſe to enter into the ſwyne: And yf we maye not, ſaye they, deſtroy the man whom thou delyureſt from vs, yet geue vs leaue ſumwhat to wreake oure malice by deſtroyinge of the vncleane beaſtes. That Jeſus graunted them without any ſtycking, who cared not for the ſafegard and preſeruation of ſwyne, but of men; teaching vs herby that for to ſaue euen but one man, we ought not to paſſe vpon the loſſe of other worldly thynges, be it neuer ſo greate. The Legion of the vncleane ſpirites, forſoke the man, who remayned to be purified with the ſpirite of Chriſte, and went into the heard of ſwyne, whiche were forthwith caryed headlong with greate violence, downe the ſtepe hill into the lake or ſea, and there drowned. The ſwyne were almoſte twoo thouſande in number. Lette menne be ware that they be not founde like vnto swyne. For into suche soules the diuels are ryght glad to enter. Nowe the swyneheardes after they had sene this wonderfull facte, dyd not helpe theyr swyne, but fled awaye for feare into the nexte citie, and into the countrey there aboute, and shewed euery body what they had sene. That good shepehearde helpethe hys flocke being in ieopardye. But when the pastoures or shepeheardes are themselues as bad as theyr naughty flocke that is paste all grace and goodnes, then both the flocke goeth to wracke and vtterly perisheth: and the shepeheardes do nothyng els but flye awaye for feare. Assone as this thynge was noysed abrode, the people came runnyng thicke and threfolde oute of the toune and countrey, desyrous to see with theyr eyes, what they had hearde before with theyr eares. For all semed vnto them incredible that the swyneheardes had tolde them. Wherfore they came themselues vnto Iesu, and sawe the manne whome they all knewe, before vexed with a spirite of exceding cruelnes, and wone by reason of his great fury and madnes, to braste al his chaynes and fetters in pieces, to rent and teare a soundre his clothes, to beate hymselfe with stones, violentlye to assaulte those that passed by, and to make all the places there aboute to ryng with his furious crying, and roring: sawe him. I say, then sit quietly at Iesus feete both clothed, and in his right mynde. Nowe they whiche were presente, and sawe what was doue, recounted to suche as came thyther, the whole history of all that befel, euen from the beginning, both howe the Legion of diuels was caste out of the man, and also how the hogges were drowned in the water. Wherfore when they (the matter now diligently examined and tried out) were throughlye persuaded that all was of truthe which had bene tolde them of the swyne heardes, then were they afraied, and beganne to desyre Iesu to departe out of theyr quarters. This wicked, and grosse nacion, knewe not Iesu throughly. They perceyued his power, but they marked not his goodnes, manifestlye declared in that he restored this man to his ryght mynde: and they were a greate deale more moued in theyr myndes for the losse of theyr swyne, then glad of the mannes healthy and recouery. They feared their Oxen, theyr Asses, and theyr hogges, and toke great care for the beiy, and none at al for the soule. And yet for al that, it is a certayne begynnyng of saluacion, sum what to stande in dreade of Gods power.

The texte. And when he was come into the shyp, he that had the deuyll, prayed hym that he might be with hym, howbeit Iesus would not suffer him, but sayde vnto hym: go to thyne owne howse and to thy frendes, and shewe them how greate thynges the lorde hathe done for the and how he hath compassion on the. And he departed, and beganne to publyshe in the .x. Cyties, howe great thynges Iesus had done for him, and all men dyd meruayle.

The Lorde, teachyng vs by dede, that the roses of Goddes worde and the gospell oughte not in anye wyse to be caste vnto hogges, recuied vnto the water syde and toke shyppe. In the meane whyle the felowe whyche was deliuered from the deuil, perceiuing the authour of his healthy to departe, beganne to desyre hym that he might be one of his traynе. The Lordes pleasure was that he shoulde rather be a publisher of his mercie, and goodnes, then one that should accompany him in his iourneys, because it was expediente for the soule healthy of many that he should so be. Get the hence rather (q he) vnto thy house and to thy kynsfolkes and acquayntaunce, and shewe them howe muche god hathe done for the, and howe he toke compassion vpon the when all manne pitied the, but yet demed the paste all remedye. That countreye conteyned in ten cyties, cities, and therfore was called in the Greke lenguage, Decapolis. The man obeying the commaundemente of Jesu, departed, and told in all those cities bothe what case he was once in, and in what case he was nowe made againe throughe the benefite of Jesus. Every man beleued that his wordes were true, by reason very many of the same countrey knewe hym before, and also because he shewed by his outwarde behauiour, that he was by the power of Jesu, perfitely restored vnto his ryght mindt. He was not ashamed to speake of his olde calamities, whyles he wente aboute to set furth Gods glory.

Heare these thinges thou worshypper of Idols, thou whoremongeryshon byser: thou ryotous folowe, thou waster, thou extortioner, thou robber, thou house burner, thou warryer, thou poysoner, thou marthereer: dispayre not: onlye runne vnto Jesus. Consider not the multitude & greuousnes of thine offences: only regarde that Jesus is he that came to saue all men, and is able to doo all thynges with a becke. When the legion of deuiles hathe forsaken the, when thou arte restored to thy ryght mynde againe, then blase, especially amonge thy feendes, and acquaintaunce, the great mercy of God towardes the. Be not ashamed to confesse thy former lyfe. For this also shall make greately for the aduauncyng and setteyng furth of the mercy of Jesu, if it be knowen to as many as maye be possible, howe abominably thou lyuedest before. knowledge and confesse what thou hast bene: And where as thou arte nowe sodainly chaunged and become another manne, ascribe it not vnto thyne owne deseruinges, but vnto the free mercye of God: who taketh mercy and compassion vpon whom soeuer it pleaseth him, for as muche as he is debtour and bounde to no manne.

¶ And when Jesus was cum ouer againe by thyppe vnto the other syde, muche people gathered vnto him, and he was nighe vnto the sea: and beholde there came one of the rulers of the Synagoge, whose name was Jairus: and when he sawe hym, he fell downe at his fete, and besought hym greatly, saying: my daughter lieth at pointe of deathe. I praye the cum and laye thy hande on her, that she maye be safe, and liue. And he wente with him, and muche people folowed hym, and thronged him. The texte.

When this feede (as a man maye call it) was sowen among the Gerasites, ỹ Lord Jesus passed ouer sones ỹ water. That he so oftetimes chaūgeth place maketh for the aduauncyng of the gospell: and the varietie of miracles monisheth vs how the teacher of the gospell ought busyly to do his deuoure whesoeuer occasion serueth, to bryng whosoeuer he can to saluation. Nowe when he was brought ouer to ỹ other side, thither resorted a fre the, a great multitude of people. For like as the lodestone draweth vnto it yron, so dothe beneficence & well doing allure all men vnto her. Whyles the Lorde was by the water side, there came vnto hym one of ỹ rulers of ỹ Synagoge, called Jairus. This Jairus moued by the fame of Jesu, came thither wt the reste of the multitude. For there was a thing which greued his heart very sore, wherein he muche desyred ỹ presence of Jesu. Therefore whē he sawe ỹ Jesus was brought againe vnto ỹ shore, & set a lād, he was right ioyous, & (as they are euer lowly & crouchinge whiche greatly desyre any thyng) although he were a ruler of the Synagoge, that is, a primate among stately felowes, yet fell he downe at the fete of Jesu, and besought hym saying: Lorde, my daughter a mayden of twelue yere olde, in whome I reposed the chiefeste solace of myne olde age, is in as greate perill of lyfe as may be, & lyeth now at the mercy of God: cumme, and laye thy hāde vpon her, that she maye be safe, and liue. My daughter lieth at pointe of deathe.

upon her, that thorough thy touchyng the mayde be safe, and lyue. Jesus perceyuing well by his wordes how weake his fayth was as yet, in asmuch as he made mencion of the extreme ieoperdye that she was in, as thoughe he had not bene able to relieue her, if she had bene deade in deede: and in that he required his presence, and also the touching of his hande, as thoughe he couilde not beeynge absente, yea, and wyth a becke make whole whomsoeuer hym liste: Jesus, I saye, promised hym to come, and so folowed hym goynge homewarde a good pace: geuynge thereby an ensample howe readye the pastour of Christes flocke ought to be in procuryng soule healthe to al men, bothe to Grekes, and to barbarous nacions, to them whiche are descended of noble parentage, and of base linage, to riche, and to poore, to learned and to vnlearned. And as he wente, there was occasion geuen him whereby to reforme the vnperfite faithe of the sayde ruler of the synagoge, & that by the ensample of a woman, whiche the lesse that she knewe Christe by the lawe, the more was she to be borne with all, and excused of her vnbeleefe. There folowed Jesus as he wente to the ruler of the synagoges house, a meruelious greate multitude of people, partlye because it was not possible to disseuer them from him, and partly to beholde the miracle whiche shoulde be wrought. The nobilitie of the supter made them more delirous to beholde. Whereforе as eche of them praised to be nerte Jesu, so was he payned with the throngyng of the people.

The texte. ¶ And there was a certayne woman whiche had bene diseased of an yssue of blonde, xii. yeares, and had suffered many thynges of many physicians, and had spente all that she had, and felte none amendement at all, but rather was worse and worse. When she had hearde of Jesus, she came in the presse behynde hym and touched his garmente. For she sayde: If I may but touche his clothes, I shalbe hole. And strayght way the fountayne of her blond was dried vp, & she felte in her body that she was healed of that plage.

In this praise was there a woman that had a filthy, a shamefull, and also an vncurable disease, and had bene sycke thereof, the space of xii. yere (for it was the bluddye flyxe) whiche was in so muche the worse takynge, because whyles she put great hope of recouery in Physycians, that made her many faire promises, & whyles disapoynted of one, she wente vnto another for boote that put her in more assurauuce of healthe, and from hym agayne to another, beyng continually fed with good hope, and comfortable wordes, she spente all that euer she had vpon them: and yet for all this so lytle was she holpen by Physike, that she was in muche worse case then she shoulde haue bene if it had not chaunced her to medle with the Phisicians at all, who whyles they made many large promises, and payned the poore wretche with their remediable diligence, bothe encreased her olde griefe, and also added thereunto a newe, that is to saye, vnto her bloudy flyxe, pouertie. Suche vndoubtedly are the commune sorte of those that profesle humaine medicine. But it is oft tymes seene that healthe is gotten by vtter despairing of healthe. After she began once to distruste the Physicians, and they perceiuinge that she had nothynge lefte to geue them, had now at the lengthe geuen sentence that there was no hope of her recouery, than began she to bethynke vnto health, then she was before. For God helpeth the none more wyllyngly then suche a one as is cleane destitute and forsaken of all worldly succours. This woman hearde but tell of Jesu, and furthwith she conceyued a wonderful greate confydence of hym, and praised him among the thyckest of the multitude. The bashefulnes of woman hode, and the kythynes of her diſeaſe, wouldbe not ſuffer her to dooe as the ruler of the ſynagoge dyd, but ſhe came behynde Jeſu, and at the lengthe when ſhe had wyth muche a do wounde her ſelfe out of the preaſe of people, whiche thruſte, and thronged one another, then touched ſhe hys garmente. For ſhe had ſuche confydence in hym, that ſhe ſayde ſecretelye to her ſelfe in this wiſe.

If I maye touche but the onelye hemme of hys garmente, I ſhalbe delyuered of my diſeaſe. When all the Phiſicians whiche toke muche moneye to put her to payne had geuen her ouer, ſhe happened to mete with an other Phyſician, who ſodaynelye reſtored her to perfit health, and that for naughte. She was not deceyued in her truſte. For aſſone as ſhe touched the Lordes garmente, the yſſue of bloude ſtaunched, the humor beynge ſodaynlye corrected, wherbe ſhe was wonte to yſſue, and well out, as it hadde bene out of a quicke ſpringe. Moreouer ſhe felte nowe agayne the ſelfe ſame ſtrengthe and luſtines in all her bodye, that ſhe was wonte to haue before, or euer ſhe began to be ſycke of this diſeaſe.

Lette ſuche as be effeminate perſones, and made woman lyke through exceſſe, and worldely delicacies or pleaſures, haue recourſe no whitherrels for ſuccoure, ſaue vnto Jeſu. If they truſte to Philoſophyers, lawyers, arte Magike, or Phariſaicall ceremonies, then ſhall they, after bothe tyme and wytte conſumed here in, dooe nothynge els but encreaſe theyr diſeaſe, and wynne powertie: except peraduenture ſuche powertie be leſſe grieuous vnto them by reaſon that age is nowe ſpente, and wytte cleane decayed and gone.

The woman highly reioyced when ſhe had, as it were, ſtollen this benefite of Chriſte, whom ſhe thoughte mighte (as a man) be deceyued, and departe from the knowledge of the thynge that was done: or els yf he could not ſo be, then truſted ſhe perdye that he wolde of his goodnes, pardon the ſhamefaſtines of womanhood.

¶ And Jeſus immediately feleyng in hymſelfe that vertue proceded from hym, turned hym aboute in the preaſe, and ſayd: who touched my clothes? And his diſciples ſayde vnto hym: thou ſeeſt the people thruſte the, and aſkeſt thou, who dyd touche me? And he loked rounde about for to ſee her that had doen this thyng: but the woman fearing, and trembling (knowynge what was done within her) came, and fell downe before hym, and tolde hym all the truthe, and he ſayed vnto her, daughter thy faith hathe ſaued the, go in peace, and be whole of thy plage. The texte.

The Lorde hauyng more regarde to Gods glory, and the healthe of a greate manye, than to the ſhamefaſtnes of one woman, knowynge right well that he was touched, and that the woman had receyued the benefite of healthe therby, turned hym to the multetude preaſynge behynde hym, and ſayed: who touched my clothes? The diſciples thynkynge nothyng vpon this that befell, anſwerede the lorde agayne, and ſayde: Thou ſeeſt a greate preaſe of people thruſting and thongyng the on euery ſyde, and yet aſkeſt thou who toucheth the? They that tradde the goſpell do touche Chriſte. Suche as be conſecrate or receyue hys holy bodye do the ſame: but al ar not healed whiche do touche hym. The woman alone that touched hym with a ſtronge faythe was healed. Jeſus requireth no other reward for his benefite, but onelye a confeſſion of the diſeaſe, and a knowledge of Gods mercy. Therfore when the woman conſtrayned by ſhamefaſtnes, helde her peace, truſtynge that ſhe mighte ſtyl haue bene vneſpyed, he loked rounde aboute on the people, as thoughe he had bene deſirous to know her that had touched hym. This lokyng about of Jeſus, was a geſture of hym that courteously requyred a confession of the benefite receiued. He wolde not bet ter her by name, leste he shoulde haue semed to haue hit her in the teethe, wyth the good turne he dyd her. The woman, of a womanlye shamefastenesse, and not of any vnthankfullnesse, held her peace. Then was there a pryncke or prouocacion geuen, to make her to put awaye that vnprofitable shamefastenes, and to wrynge out of her an holsome confession. For what is not the loke of Iesu able to doo? In this wyse he beheld Peter, and furth with he came vnto hymselfe agayne. The woman knowyng in what case she came vnto Iesu, and what greate benefite she had receyued of hym, durste not dissemble the matter, but all womanlye bashefulnes layde aparte, came fearynge, and tremblinge before hym. For she stode in greate dreade, leste he wolde haue rebuked her for her lewdnes.

Then fell she downe at his knees, and in the audience of them all, shewed the whole matter as it was in euery poynte without anye dissimulacion or colorynge: howe longe the disease had hanged vpon her, howe physicke had bene practysed in vayne, howe she touched his garmente priuily, and what a greate truste she had conceyued of him. The lorde Iesus louyth suche a confession as causeth the synner to knowe hymselfe, and to geue all the glorye vnto God for the restitucion of his healthe, and spyrytually that maketh him to prouoke many mo to haue like fayth: puttyng vs in remembraunce, that of him onelye cummeth free health and saluacion, and that it maketh no matter howe manye, and howe abominable manner enormities be, but howe muche confidence one hath, either in the power, or els in the goodnes of almightie God. If the disease of thy mynde be secrete and vnknowen, yet confesse it vnto Iesu, who neyther vttereth it agayne, nor vpbraydeth p therwith, but maketh the whole. If thou haue openly offended, then make thou open confession, that like as thou haste entised manye by thy naughtye ensample, to vice and spyrytuall hypocrysye, so contrarye wyse beyng turned from synne, thou mayste prouoke many to amende theyr lyues. That shamefastnes is vtterly to be putte awaye, which bothe enuyeth God hys glorye, and our neyghbours hys soule healthe. Assuredly thou shalt be well apayed that thou art rid therof, when thou once feleste thy selfe more quiet in cõscience through thy confession, then thou waste before, as though thou haddest heard the selfe same wordes of the Lord Iesu that the woman heard. What hearde the? Daughter, thy fayth thou haddest in me, hathe restored the vnto healthe, whiche physicke was not able to geue the. Departe wyth a ioyfull, and a quiete mynde. I wyll that thou enioye this my benefite continually. O thou ruler of the synagoge, seest thou not? Hearest thou not these wordes? For all this was done to instructe the, and suche as thou art. The woman was sicke of an vncurable disease, she waxed dayelye worse and worse, and yet for the notable fayth she had in Iesu, she was healed by the onelye touchynge of his garmente. And thou callest, as one wolde saye, the Physician home to thy house: thou commaundeste hym to laye hys hande vpon the paciente, and requirest haste.

The texte. ¶ While he yet spake, there came from the ruler of the Synagoges house, certayne whiche sayde, thy doughter is deade: why diseasest thou the master any further? And assone as Iesus hearde the worde that was spoken, he sayde vnto the ruler of the Synagoge: Be not afrayde, onely beleue. And he suffered no man to folowe him saue Peter, and Iames, and Iohn the brother of Iames, and he came vnto the house of the ruler of the Synagoge, and saw lawe the wundring,and them that wept,and wayled greatly,and went in,and layde vnto them:why make ye this a do,and wepe? The damosell is not dead but sleepeth : and they laughed him to scorne. But he put them all out,and taketh the father and the mother of the damosell,and them that were with him,and entreth in where the damosell laye,and taketh the damosell by the hande,and sayth vnto her. Tabitha cumi,which is(if one do enterprete it)damosell,I saye vnto the,arise. And straight waye the damosell arose,and walked. For she was of the age of twelue yeres. And they were astoned out of measure,and he charged them straightely that no man shoulde knowe of it,and commaunded to geue her meate.

Whyles Jesus was aunswerynge the woman, there came messengers from the ruler of the Synagoges house,which saide vnto him: Thy doughter is deade. Why doest thou put the mayster to further paynes in bayne? These wordes spoken,the ruler of the Synagoge,who had before a doubtfull hope mengled with muche feare,beeyng nowe as a manne in despayre,durst make no farther suite vnto the Lorde. The messangers put hym in despaire,sayynge: She is deade. So manye are wonte to speake by those persons whiche haue fallen to the committing of some haynous enormitie: as for an ensample, of aduouterie,inceste,theefte,or manslaughter,sayynge: he is at a poynte: he is paste all goodnesse. Surely Jesus sufferethe none to fall into desperacion, but suche a one as refuseth to beleue in hym. It is the propertie of Jewes to despaire. The good Chyistian who knoweth the goodnesse of the Lorde to beeryll with his power,neuer despaireth. Chyiste therefore holpe and lyfted vp the fayntyng hope of the ruler of the Synagoge, with swete and conforteable wordes,sayynge: be not afrayed although he be so that thy doughter be deade in dede. Onelye haue beleefe. Je sayllieth not in howe euell case she be, but howe stronge and stedfaste is thy fayethe. When he had thus spoken, he came vnto the ruler of the Synagoges house, and entred in, but leauyng all the rablemente of people without doores, sufferyng not so muche as his disciples, to goe in with hym,saue alonely Simon Peter, James, and John, who was James his brother. These solo wunge hym,he entred into the ruler of the Synagoges house. there founde he all thinges ryght gorgiously, and with greate pompe prepared for the buryall of the mayden, and beside this manye of her kynsmen, and kynswomen lamentably bewaylyng her vnetymely deathe. For the common sorte are wounte to take the death of young folkes much greuously ouer them of olde, wher as in dede nothyng is more to be desyred of god, then in that age to dye, when it is moste pleasure to lyue, or euer the soule be blemished with the manifolde euyls of this present lyfe. For it litle foreeth howe longe a man liue, but howe well, and vertuously.

Jesus therfore teaching vs that we oughte not to bewayle the deade with bayne funerall songes, caused the mourners to cease their noyse. Why, sayethe he, make you such a clamoure and noyse in the house with your weppynge, and waylynge? The mayde is not deade, but a slepe. Truly vnto hym the dyd but slepe, who could much easlyer wake, & reuyue her with a worde of his mouthe then one of vs can wake another oute of his slepe. And slepe is in euery point a resemblaunce and meditacion of death. For it bryngeth to reste the powers of the sowle, and taketh away sence, so that if it were continuall, it were verye deathe in dede. But suche as rose by when she died, not perceyuing what Jesus meante by these wordes, laughed hym to scorne because he beleued she was yet alyue, sithe it euidently appeared that she was deade. Jesus droue all these folkes out a doores, whiche fylled the house full of noyse and dynne with

they: bayne wepyng, and waylyng, and dyd not onelye nothyng at all profyte the deade bodye therwith, but also encreaced the wefefullneſſe of her parentes, and laughed hym, the auctheur of healthe, to skorne. There nedethe not the preſence of ſuche people, where the ſoule beeyng dead throughe ſynne, is to bee called agayne to the lyfe of innocencie, and bertuous lyuyng.

This thyng dyd Jeſus then in a nother mannes ſeuerall houſe. What wouldſe he nowe doe, yf he ſawe the great pompe that ſome vſe in funerals euen to very madneſſe? There are certayne perſones hyered to fayne mournynge and weeping, to crye out, to teare the heare that manye tymes is none of theyrs, to knocke themſelues on the breſte, to ſcratche theyr faces, to caſte out wordes that no frantycke manne wouldſe ſpeake the lyke, full of diſtruſte and vnbeleefe. They ſet mylke by the deade barkes, therewyth to allure the ſoule, ſtrayinge and wandryng abrode, into the body agayne. They ofter tymes crye and call vpon the dead body by name: Philip cum again: Come agayne to vs good Phylip. They chyde and braule with him ſaying: Why haſt thou for ſake thy frendes? Why wouldeſt thou kyll vs with mourning? Thou lackeddeſt nothyng to liue all at pleaſure, neyther ryches, nobilitie, honorable aduaunceme-tes, beautie, nor age. O thou cruel felowe: O wretches that we be. &c.

Nowe put me hereunto trumpetters that ſounde vnto the deafe, the ſyngyng menne that ſyng bayne funerall ſonges vnto the deade bodie, whiche heare the them not: and dooe not therby take awaye the ſorowe of the lyuinge, but encreaſe it. Furthermore, put hereto the long rowes of torch-bearers, and the raye of thoſe that are clad all in blacke, and mournyng appa-rell: yea, there be ſumme alſo whiche cauſe horſes trapped in blacke to bee brought into this pompous ſhewe, to carry the deade manes flagge and coote-armoure, and with theyr downe lokyng, (for theyr neckes are faſt bounde vn-to theyr legges) to make as though they ſought for their maiſter that is de-ſcended and gone downe to hell. What ſhall I rehearſe the great feaſtes, and ſo-lemne baſkettes that they are wonte to make? The magnificke, and coſtlye buil-dynges of tombes, as thoughe there were litle pompes, and ſuperfluite vſed in life, excepte dead folkes dyd alſo declare themſelues to be attached wyth theſe vices. Nowe ſythes euen thoſe that are of the wyſeſt ſorte of the heathen, ſup-poſe theſe to be mad and fonde cuſtomes: howe muche more then oughte they not to be had in vſe amonge chriſten menne, whiche dooe all ſlepe rather then dye, and ſhal awake agayne the laſt daye at the ſowndyng of the Aungels trum-pet. Therefore, to retourne to the order, and proceſſe of thyſtorye, when Jeſu had put all theſe folkes out a doores, he toke the parentes of the mayden, and wente into the ſecrete chambre whereas the coarſe laye.

For this pleaſure was that they ſhoulde be witneſſes of the miracle whiche he entended to worke. Here the Lord toke the mayden by the hand, and as though he woulde haue wakened her out of her ſlepe, ſayde vnto her: Tabitha cumy, the whiche in the Syrian language is as muche to ſaye, as howe mayden, aryſe. Suche as are in a depe or ſounde ſlepe cannot many tymes be wakened, although a manne call them ofte tymes with a loude voyce, and pinche them neuer ſo muche: and when they be called vp, yet doe they not byanby awake, but beeyng a good while halfe a ſlepe or drouſy, gape, ſtretch theyr armes, nod with theyr heades, that many tymes the chynne ſtryketh the breſt: and if a man call not ſtyll vpon them, they fall aſlepe agayne. This deade mayden a-roſe roſe furthwith, and walked at the boyce of Jeſu, beyng not only relyued, but alſo very mery, and iocunde. For the ſoule which thzoughe thenforcement of diſeaſe had forſaken the bodye, knewe the boyce of hys maker, and without delaye returned againe into the houſe that it went out of.

And they were aſtoniſhed out of meaſure, &c

The more ſure to full that her death was by reaſon of her yeng age, (for ſhe was but twelue yeare olde) the greater was the myzthe and ioye which was made for her relyuyng. Her father and mother were greatly amaſed with this ſtraunge, a wonderfull ſyght. Jeſus who neyther required reward nor mede of them nor yet thankes for his laboure, onely commaunded them to gyue her meate, bycauſe it myght thereby more certainely appeare how ſhe was reſtored to life. For eatyng is not onely a ſure token of lyfe, but alſo of welfare, and good healthe. He lykewyſe charged them that they ſhoulde not blaſe this thyng abzode whiche was priuely done, and in the preſence of a few perſons, eyther becauſe he would haue it rather publiſhed by ſuche as he putte out a doozes, then by the ruler of the Synagoge (who ſhould haue bene more enuyed, but leſſe beleued if he had bene the publicher hereof) eyther becauſe, in that he commaunded them to kepe the thyng ſecrete, whiche he knew ryght well they would not do, his will was to teache vs how that in all the good dedes we dooe, we ought vtterely to eſchewe all vayne glozy, and worldly prayſe. If a man wade deper herein, and ſerche what ſecret learning lyeth hid in this miracle, (for euen the very domages of Jeſu be parables) it ſhall appeare that this dead mayden of twelue yeare olde, and ſcarcely yet matiable, ſygnifieth a man, whiche by frayeltye of nature hathe fyrſte fallen to the committing of ſome prime eryme or ſynne, and therfore, becauſe he is not yet paſt regarde of honeſtye, nor by long cuſtome rooted in ſynne, maye with the medicine of ſhame, eaſlye be holpen, and cured therof. Wt̄ when any ſuche offendeth, it becōmeth the Curates and paſtours to folow the gentle demeanour of Jeſu, who without makyng any great a doe, rayſed the mayden at home in the preſence of a fewe witneſſes. It ſhall be ſufficient to rebuke ſuche as haue thus offended and done amiſſe, ſecretly: leſte theyr faulte beyng once diſcloſed, they eyther ſette all ſhame aparte, or elſe pyne awaye thzoughe ouermuche ſozowe and heauineſſe.

The fyrſt offence if it happen thzoughe frayltie and weakneſſe, is very ſone amended. It is muche harder to cure hym whoſe wicke dneſſe is once com to the knowledge of the people: and hardeſt of all to heale ſuche a one as is hardened and rooted in ſynne by long cuſtome of ſynnyng. And therfore he rayſeth the mayden by vertue of his bare wozde in her fathers ſeuerall houſe, ſufferyng fewe to be preſent thereat. But he maketh more a doe when the young ſyngalte, whiche was bozne out vpon mennes ſhoulders to be buryed, is reſtozed to lyfe agayne. Hys mother and all the people that go with her, make great mone and lamentacion. The yong man is had out to burying, and fyrſt his mother heareth Chriſt ſaye: wepe not. Then Chriſt toucheth the coffin, and cauſeth the porters to ſtaye. Anon he calleth the dead man, with a loude boyce ſaying: Yong, I ſay to the, aryſe. Then fyrſt he rayſeth himſelfe, and ſteeth in the coffin: after ward he begynneth to ſpeake, at the length he whippeth out of the coffyn, and is deliuered vnto his mother.

But Chriſt commaundeth Lazarus graue to be ſhewed hym, as thoughe he knew not where it were: he wepeth once, or twyſe. He is troubled, and gro-nethin spirite. He commaũdeth the graue stone to be removed and calleth out Lazarus with a loude voyce. The dead man cummeth out, but bounde: At the length he is vnbound, and talketh to his meate.

It was no more maisterie for Christ to rayse vp the karkas whiche had layne fower daies deade, then the bodie newly deade, who at the daye of dome, will by the voyce of thaungell, rayse and call to lyfe agayne, all menues bodies that haue bene buryed in so many thouland yeares before: but by thys figure his wyll was to shewe vs howe muche a doe it is for them to turne from sinful lyuing, who of long tyme haue bene accustomed to vices, not to the ende that we should despayre of suche persons, but because we should endeuoure to amende oure lyues in season, and more earnestly goe about to bryng all that are in suche case to amendement. Moreouer I thynke it also here worthye to be noted, that where as Jesus wouldе haue hys benefyte publyshed of the Geralyte possessed of the deuyll, yet commaunded he the ruler of the Synagoge to kepe sylence. For the enuyous Synagoge went aboute by al meanes, to ouerwhelme and oppresse the glorye of the Lorde Jesu, the whiche Synagoge did also afterward beate the Apostles, and charged thẽ that they should not be so hardy as once to speake of his name. But they: enuye preuayled nothyng at all. The more they went aboute to oppresse his holsome name, the more was it preached amonge the Gentyles. The priestes holden theyr peace: The Phatiseis crye out, and speake agaynst him: The Scribes rayle vpon him, Herod laugheth him to skorne: but worshyppers of Idolles, theues, extorcioners, and such as are attached with the vyces of incestе and aduoutry, sodainly deliuered by the grace of the ghospell from theyr olde synnes as from most fell and cruell dyuels, doe magnifye and prayse hym.

The .vj. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he departed thence, and came into his owne countrey, and his disciples folowed him: and when the Sabboth day was cum he begã to teache in the synagoge. And many that heard him were astonied, and sayde: From whence hath he these thinges? And what wisdõ is this that is geuen vnto hym, and suche vertues as are wrought by his handes? Is not this the carpenter, Maries sonne, the brother of James, and Joses, and of Jude, and Symon: and are not his systers here with vs? And they were offended with hym. Jesus sayed vnto them: a Prophet is not despised but in his owne countrey, and among his owne kinne, and in his owne housholde. And he could there shewe no miracle, but layde his handes vpon a fewe sycke folke, and healed them, and mercueled because of theyr vnbeliefe.

What occasyon soeuer Christ haue to goe any whyther, he is alwayes after one fashyon, and lyke hymselfe: that is, he euer bryngeth healthe, to teache his disciples that accompany hym, how we christians ought neuer to cease to doe the busynesse of the ghospell, but still to goe aboute whensoeuer occasion serueth thereunto, to make of euell men good, and of good better, whether it happen vs to continew and leade our lyues at home in our owne houses, or els in forayne and straunge countreys: in publyke place, or in pryuate. Moreouer he that is vnfarnedly indewed with suche vertue and goodnesse as belongeth to christian profession, whether whether it chaunce hym to be in thyppe, or in wagan, or to haue familiar talke and communication, or els to be present at feaste or at banket, yea, to make shorte tale, euen when he bourdeth to, or maketh any game or passyme, he so demeaneth hymselfe, that euer some depart awaye from hym, muche amended in theyr maners and conuersacion, by reason of his companye.

Therfore Jesus, whoe attempted to go vnto the Geraseytes, forsoke the places nighe vnto the water side, and returned backe into his owne countrey, leste he shoulde haue semed readyer to doo straungers and forayners good, then his owne countrey men. For Nazareth deserued to haue this honorable name to be called his countrey, because he was fostred and continued there a long season. There went with hym his disciples, the whiche then folowed him euery where continually. Now when the sabboth was cum, vpon the whiche day the Jewes were wonte accordingly to an auncyent, and right laudable custome they had, to assemble together, not because they woulde passe the holye time, that is to saye, loseit, with the beholdyng of folyshe syghtes, tellyng of vayne and vnfruitfull tales, besyng of vnholy passyme, or syngyng of vdell baladdes and songes: but by holy communicacion eyther to learne goddes law themselues, or els to teach the same to other: Jesus entred into the Synagoge in lyke maner as other dyd, to gyue an ensample to his, wherby all men should perceyue what a great shame and dishonestie it shoulde be for vs christian menne, sithens the Jewes so earnestly labourd throughly to learne and know a carnall lawe, which neyther was perfite ne shoulde continewe for euer, and was written but of Moyses a mortal man, yf we woulde not with semblable or rather more diligence, study to know the Phylosophye and doctrine of the ghospell, whiche the very sonne of god his owne selfe taught and set forth vnto the worlde. Wherefore, when Jesus was teaching in the temple, his authoritie was therfore esteemed of many, because he was ryght well knowen vnto them, as pertayning vnto the flesche. They knewe his poore parentes, and the symple and homely house that he came out of. But they neuer supposed any thyng at all of his heauenly father, & euerlastyng house, from whence he came downe for our cause. They knewe his fathers occupacion, wherwith Joseph mayntayned and founde his house, the whiche science hymselfe also practysed in his fyrst yeares. He was a carpentoure, a conuenient occupacion for hym, by whom the heauenly father once made this whole worlde. By a carpentour mākynde was created and made, and by a carpentour mete it was that man should be repayred. Therfore when those that knew Jesus (who vntil he was almoste thyrtye yeares olde, lyued among his frendes, and neuer appeared to haue any knowleage in the Pharisees learning) heard hym teache with great authoritie, suche thynges as they neuer had heard before, of the excellently well learned Pharisees, they wondered greatly, saying one to another: how is this felow so sodainly chaunged, and becum another man: from whence hath he all these thynges: and what newe kynde of wisdome is this that is geuen hym: from whence hath he this mighty and effectuall power to worke miracles, so great as we neuer heard the like to haue bene in any of the prophetes: Sythe he hath bene from vs but a shorte whyle, how cummeth it to passe that he is cum againe sodainly altred, and cleane chaunged: Is not this the selfe same Jesus the carpētour, the sonne of Joseph the wright, and Mary a poore

And when the sabboth daye was come.

And many that heard hym were astonied. &c.

symple woman: Did not we know hym, and all his kynred, and progenye: Do not the nert of his kyn, that is to saye, his brethren and sisters, dwell here among vs? And so they had halfe disdayn at Jesu, that he, who not longe before was taken for an vnderlyng and a persone of no reputacion, was now so dailly exalted to highe estimacio, and authoritie. For they were offended with thimbecillitie, & weakues of his flesh, wherof they had ouer much knowleage:

Jesus saith vnto them. a prophete is not despysed. &c.

When the lorde Jesus perceyued this, he sayed vnto them: A prophete is no where more despysed then in his owne, countrey among his aliance, kinnesmen, and familiares. Ghostly busynesse yll agreeth with fleshlye affeccions, neither is it in anye wyse besemyng that a true prophete or preacher of ỹ ghospell, who teacheth vs to set nought by this worlde, who promyseth the ioyes of heauen, who teacheth that we muste be newly borne throughe baptysme in Christ Jesu, who teacheth also that we ought to mortify out membres which we haue vpon earthe, to thentent we maye lyue ghostlye in heauen: it is not besemyng, I saye, that suche a one here know either countrey, house, acquaintaunce, kynred or frendes. Neyther is it any maruayle yf earthly citizens know not hym agayne, synce he is nowe made denisen of an other countrey.

And he cauld there dewe no myracle. &c.

Wherfore Jesus, thoughe he were almyghtye, and desyrous to saue as many as myght be, yet could he not there among his countremen worke many myracles, for that he was letted so to doue by the vnbeleefe of his acquayntaunce and kynsfolkes. For where as being among alyauntes, he had easely cured very many of all kyndes of diseases, caste out dyuels, and healed leapers, here in his owne countrey, he onely healeth a fewe sicke folkes, and that with the laying of his handes vpon them.

The texte.

¶ And he went about by the townes that laye on euery syde, teaching: and he called the twelue, and began to sende them furth, two and two, and gaue them power agaynst vncleane spirites. And commaunded them that they shoulde take nothyng in their iourney, saue a rod only, no scrippe, no bread, no monye in their purse, but should be shood with sandales: And that they should not put on two coates.

For this cause he as one mercuelyng at so great vnbeleefe of his countreymen, departed from thence, and trauayled throughout all the townes and borowes there about, sowyng euery where as he went, the sede of the ghospell. Herebye were the disciples couertly monyshed, that in thynges concerning the preachyng and settyng forthe of the ghospell, they shoulde in no wyse truste vnto worldly affeccions (for the selfesame thing whiche ethen chaunced vnto Jesu in his countrey, shoulde afterwardes betyde them in Jewrye) but goe where soeuer they sawe any hope, and lykelyhode of plentyfull encreasle. There the preachyng of the ghospell bryngeth forth fruite most aboundantly where soeuer the hearers are enclined to beleue. Suche inclinacion to beleue, is there neyther among kynred, Pharisies, nor kynges. Kynred despiseth, the Pharisies haue disdayne and enuye, and kynges laugh to skorne the folyshnesse of the crosse. Nowe was it hyghe time that the Apostles whiche were by Christ apoynted to the ministracion of the ghospell, and had already a good whyle folowed hym continually, shoulde as it were, make a flourishe before they ent̄ye and ministerie, and geue they r captayne a saye of they r diligence, and loyaltye. Wherefore he called vnto hym those twelue, whome as moste worthye persons, he specially chose and pycked out to take this charge vpon them them: and beyng assembled before hym, he enstructed them all with one sermō or lesson, to thentent that they sent of one maister, and hauyng like commaundementes gyuen them, should not in any wyse disagree in theyr preachyng one from another. And because they should the more profite and edifie, he sent them out by two and two, puttyng vs in remembraunce by this coupling of them together, of brotherly charitie, without which there cummeth no profit of the ghospell. He lymited vnto euery couple, as it had bene to certaine deputies, or lieutenauntes, theyr prouince. For this was herye expedient to be done, for the enlargyng of the kyngdome of the ghospell. He sent them out weaponlesse, leste that many aydes shoulde chalenge any thing in this heauenly busynesse. Further leste theyr authozitie should haue been litle estemed, for as muche as they were but fyshers, vnderlinges, simple folkes, and vnlettered, he gaue the that power, wiche worldlye prynces are not able to geue to theyr ambassadours, and deputies. For he gaue them power to deliuer men of diseases, and to caste out diuels. And what like thing can ỹ Emperour geue? He can geue abōdaunce of golde, and syluer, hoostes of men, battayle arres, and all manoure of artyllarye, & engynes belongyng to warre, whereof he hath great stoze & plēty. But there is no heade officer, or deputie of his, who hathe so great vertue, that he can by calling vpon the emperours name, heale so much as mennes eyes when they be bleared. And he gaue this power vnto his disciples vnder condition that they should therewith, freely and without rewarde takyng, helpe all those that neded the same.

4. & gaue the power agaynst. &c.

Now to thentent they should be the better prepared to take in hande, and execute that office, whiche requireth suche a ministre as is quicke and spedy, and not a lustysshe loyterer or sluggarde, he charged them to carry no manoure of baggage, vitaile, or weapō with them in this iourneye, saue a rodde only, not a scrippe to put theyr vitayles in, not somuche as bzeade whiche maye be carryed about without a scrip, nor gyrdels laden with money, neyther weare any bootes vpon theyr legges, but only be shod with sādals, to kepe the soles of theyr feete, that neyther the stones should hurte, nor thornes pricke them: and fynally to content themselues euery manne with one garment. The entēte of Jesu who gaue these enstruccions was nothing els, but after a grosse maner, to inculke and beate into the heades of his disciples (who were as yet rawe and ignozaunt) howe suche a one as taketh on hym the ministracion of the gospell, ought to be disburdened, and free from all care of corporall thynges, leste any sodaine chaunce befall, that maye hynder the encrease and prospedyng of the heauenly doctrine. As this busynesse was farre diuerse from worldly affayres: euen so was this kynde of ambassade or legacion newe, and suche a one as had not bene vsed before. They receyued a fourme of doctrine, leste they shoulde presume to teache any thyng whiche theyr maister had not taught them before. And this thyng helde they commune with the legacions of manne, where it is death to passe the limites of the commaundementes, or commission. They are sent all of one sorte with lyke power, leste eny disdaine or priuye malice shoulde aryse among them.

They are sent by two and two together because they shoulde remember brotherly charitie and one brother ayde another. They are sent to sundry places and countreyes, to thende that no should take profite of the gospell.

They haue power geuen them to heale diseases, but in the name of Jesu:

because that lyke as they receyued another mannes lerning to dispence and teache faithfully, and not theyr owne, so should they know that it was goddes power, and not theyrs, wherwith they cured diseases.

He forbad them to carry about eyther scrippe, bread, money, or two coates, because they should with full affiaunce hang vpon the promise of theyr maister, and haue sure confidence to be safe from all the force and violence of theyr enemyes through his helpe: and perfitlye knowe that by his prouidence they shoulde want nothyng pertayning to the temporall necessitie of the bodye. For where as nothyng is able to suffice sensualite and pleasure, so the leaste thing that maye be, sufficeth the necessitie of nature. Neyther dyd the Lorde speake these wordes meaning therby as thoughte it shoulde neuer be lefull for those that be ministers and preachers of the ghospell to carry about with the any necessary litle fardell, or money, sithe the Apostles, and bysshops are not in our tyme afrayed so to do: (yea paraduenture it is more prayse worthy yf a man woulde on his owne propre coste and charge, teache the ghospell) but by suche maniere of figuratiue speakynges called of the Grekes hyperbole, his entente was to plucke oute of his disciples myndes (who were as yet grosse and rude) all care fulnesse for those thynges that are wont to be an hinderaunce or let vnto the minde, whē it goeth about any heauenlye enterpryse: els wist he well that they would not forget to speake as foloweth: Thou sendest vs out to countreyes that we know not, and makest vs, who are naked and weaponlesse, to be many wayes in ieopardye of our liues. But who shall fede vs if hunger cum vpon vs? who shall defende vs if anye violence be vsed againste vs? who shall clothe vs if it chaunce to be colde weather? Thou wylt haue vs to teache frely. Thou wylt we cure men for naught. But he that liueth in a straunge countrey needeth many thynges.

This penfyue and filthie care fulnesse, because for the most parte, it springeth of distrustе, he earnestly went about to wede out of theyr myndes, as a thyng not beseemyng the greatnesse and weyghte of suche a busynesse as they were deputed vnto. Furthermore the figuratiue maniere of speakyng that he vseth, serueth hereunto, that suche thinges as he teacheth them, maie the depelier be fastened in theyr rude and ignoraunt myndes. For the teacher of the ghospell shoulde nothyng offende yf he ware shoes, or had two coates, being amōgest the barbarous people called Gentiles, or els yf he dyd take it gayle, and a good summe of money with him, beyng in gate to the landes of Affrike, or to summe nacion where as there is no ientle entertaynement, and receyuing of straūgers. But what thyng so euer hyndreth the procedyng of the gospell, the same is vtterlye to be renounced. Nowe consider me, with how great a burthen they goe charged to the ministracion of the ghospell. Who carrie about with them princely ryches, dignities, promocions, worldly pleasures, and a gredie desyre to be auenged yf any thyng happen to their grieue, and displeasure.

This fardell that Christ speaketh of here is rather in the mynde, then in carrying about of scrippes, and superfluous clothyng. Who so wyll not cast away all these fardelles (I meane of mynde) the same is not meete to be the messenger and ambassadour of Jesu Christ. Likewyse there is a figuratiue speakyng in the thinges whiche he licenceth them to vse. For he geueth them leaue to vse eche one a wande, and a payre of sandals. The lightest maniere of shooe that is, is the sandall: and it so sauyth the feete from takyng anye harme, that it letteth not a man to make quicke spede in his iourney. Therfore it is but one thyng that he monisheth, whiche permitteth them to vse sandals, and forbedeth to weare shooes. For he forbydeth nothyng els, but slacknesse in doyng of theyr Dutie, and therby teacheth them to vse spedinesse therin.

Agayne it is but one thyng that he warneth them of, whiche geueth them leaue to carie a wande, and taketh awaye from them the vse of staues. For a wande socoureth and stayeth the walkyng manne, and nothyng hyndreth him in his iourneye, but rather causeth him to make quicker spede. Nowe the staffe as it burtheneth a manne to beare it: so is it wont to be caried againste violence. Therfore he that permitteth them to vse no other weapon but a wãde only, and forbydeth them to carye a staffe, willeth vndoubtedlye that the preacher of the gospell be by no other ayde sikely fensed agaynst the assaultes of yuell menne, then by the onelye helpe of Christe. A wande is mete for a wayfairing man, and a staffe for a fighter. Moreouer he that hath the hãdelyng of the gospell, must alwayes goe forwarde to thinges of higher perfection, and be fardest from desyre of reuengement.

¶ And be sayde vnto them: wheresoeuer ye enter into an house, there abyde styll tyll ye departe thence. And wholoeuer shall not receyue you, nor heare you, when ye departe thence shake of the dust, that is vnder your feete, for a wytnes vnto thē. Verely I saye vnto you: it shall be easier for Sodome and Gomor in the daye of iudgement, then for that citie. And they went out and preached that men should repent. and they caste out many deuils, and annoynted many that were sycke with oyle, and healed them. The texte.

After that Christe hadde plucked this carefulnesse oute of the myndes of his Apostles, then went he about to shewe them a waye, howe it shoulde cum to passe that they shoulde neuer nede to be carefull for suche thynges. Take ye no thought, sayth he, neither for harbourough, ne sustenaunce: but after ye once be entred into a village, or citie, wheresoeuer it be your chaunce to be receyued, be the house neuer so poore and homely, there abyde you till suche tyme as you thynke it meete for you to departe sum whither els, moued thyrughe desyre to set forthe and aduãce the ghospell. And beyng but fewe in number, and contented with a litle, you shall not be chargeable geastes to anye man. It is in manoure impossible that there be any where any good towne or citie so farre And whosoeuer receiue you, nor heare you. &c. passe all grace and goodnesse, wherin there can not one manne be founde who wyll be glad to receiue suche geastes as ye are, synce there are inanye whiche will not sticke to wage a phisicia with a large salarie, and send for him a great waye of. Yf you chaunce to cum to any so vnkynde a citie, or house, that the inhabitauntes therof wyll not receyue you, notwithstandyng you bryng them of your owne accorde an heauenly gyft or present, wherwith both bodies and soules are healed, yet cease you not for a fewe harde harted persones, to do the busines you haue taken in hande: but yet departe you out of that citie for a season, to other cities: and or ere you go awaye, embrayde suche persones as would not receiue you, with theyr great folye, and madnesse. Gette you out into the stretes, and shake of the dust stycking on youre feete, that they maye call to remembraunce howe there came summe vnto them, who freely offered them health and sauetie, a brought them the ioyfullest message that coulde be: and maye further perceyue that lyke as so excellente a good thyng cannot by any manoure of rewarde be worthilye recompensed: euen so suche precious ware and marchandise oughte not to be thruste to anye whiche lotheth the same, and is not wyllyng to receiue it: and this do you to thintent they maye blame themselues for theyr owne damnacion, because they wolde rather perisshe, when they might haue been saued: and also know perfectlye howe you soughte for nothyng els among them, but onely the healthe and saluacion of your neyghbours, insomuche that you would not endamage them as muche as with the losse of a litle quantitie of dust. It becumeth well ynoughe my ambassadours to vse such manour of proude demeanure againste frowarde and disdainfull persons. At your departure speake vnto them this one thyng following, although they be not wyllyng to heare it: know you that whether you receyue vs, or receyue vs not, the kyngdome of God is cumme. If you receyue vs, it is cum to your greate wealth and commoditie. But yf you receyue vs not, yet shall the same cumme to your great euyll, and confusion. When Christes messengers were furnished with these necessaries for their tourneye, they toke their leaue of theyr maister, and as it was geuen them in commaundement, they moued and exhorted all men to be repentaunte for theyr former lyfe, shewyng them how the kyngdome of God was already presente, whiche through fayth of the gospell would bring vnto all men perfite ryghteousnesse. For the chiefe and principall parte of preachyng of the gospell, is for a man to geue faith vnto the doctrine that he heareth, and to beleue the promyses. Whē the lorde Jesus had with these, and many other lyke lessons, diligentlye instructed his disciples, then the same twelue headmen of the kyngdome of heauen toke theyr tourney, and the mattier went forward, and had good successe. They preached vnto all menne that they shoulde be penitent for their former sinnes, and that no man should truste vnto his owne dedes and merites, but onely haue sure belefe in the promises of the gohspell. And they founde sum that lystened and gaue diligent eare vnto theyr preachyng. There lacked not here a ready power to worke miracles, whiche made theyr wordes to be beleued, thoughe themselues were neuer so symple persons, and vnknowen. They anoynted the sycke people with oyle, and the same were healed. They commaunded the hurtfull spirites to go out in the name of Jesu, and they went out.

That oyle was not a medicine (for who heareth all manoure of diseases with one medicine) but a sacrament. The shynne was outwardly anoynted with visible oyle, and the body was made whole. But theyr soules whiche anon after shoulde be delyuered from the diseases of vice and synne, were to be anoynted with the oyle of grace inuisible, by our anoynted Jesus Christe. Wherfore it was not by vertue of suche prayers, and enchauntmēts as witches or magicians vse, that they cast out dyuels, but by wordes pithy and effectuall through an euangelike fayth.

This was vndoubtedly the very power of the kyngdom of heauen. What was more abiect, vile, and lesse regarded then the Apostles were? But the lesse that theyr power was the more manifestlye did it appeare that all that euer was done, came to passe by the might and power of God. They neyther had riches, learning, office, garde to defende them, nobilitie, fame nor authorite. To be shorte, they had nothyng els but a plaine and a symple fayth in Jesu, whome they as yet knewe not perfectlye.

And

¶ And kyng Herode heard of hym (for his name was ſpread abrode) & he ſayd: Iohn Baptiſt is riſen agayne from the dead, and therfore myracles are wrought by hym: other ſayde, that Helias, come ſayde it is a prophet, as one of the prophets. But when Herode heard of hym, he ſayde: it is Iohn, whome I beheaded, he is ryſen from death agayne. For Herode himſelfe had ſent forth & take hold vpon Iohn, and bounde hym, and caſte hym into priſon for Herodias ſake, his brothers Philippes wyfe (becauſe he had maried her.) For Iohn ſayde vnto Herode: It is not lawfull for the to haue the wife of thy brother. Herodias layed wayte for hym, and would haue ſlayne hym, but ſhe could not. For Herode feared Iohn, knowyng that he was a iuſt man, and an holy: and ſaue hym reuerence. And when he heard hym, he dyd many thynges: and heard hym gladly. The texte.

By theſe thynges, Ieſu waxed euery daye more famous then other, ſo that his name was nowe knowen euen vnto kyng Herode. For it is very late ere kynges knowe Ieſu, whome it behoueth firſte and chiefly to knowe hym: neyther are there any that know him worſe, and leſſe for theyr ſoule healthe, then they do. After that Ieſu had wrought ſo many, and ſo euident miracles that no man could cauill, and ſaye they were fayned thynges: and the ſame myracles had done ſo many menne good, that no manne couldſe ſclaunderoully reporte and ſay they were done by the power and operacion of euill ſpirites: And after diuerſe menne had diuerſly ſpoken theyr myndes, and conceites what they thought of hym, at the length Herode ſhewed alſo his opinion. Iohn, ſayeth he, is ryſen from death: and therfore now hath he power to worke myracles.

Agayne, other there were who taking coniecture of the prophecy of Malachy, ſayd howe Ieſu was Helye, whiche is promyſed in ſcripture to come againe before the great, and terrible daye of the lorde. There were other ſum, whiche denied hym to be Helye, who was of greateſt authoritie among the Iewes, auouchyng him to be one of the meane ſorte of prophetes reliued, and ryſen agayne. When Herode had heard all theyr opinions, yet ſtacke he ſtyll vnto his owne, and ſayd: Yea, this is the ſelfeſame Iohn, whoſe heade I cauſed to be ſtriken of. He is alyue agayne, and beyng nowe made a fayrete, worketh ſuche thynges as paſſeth mannes power. There was none of all thoſe whiche beleued not that the bodies ſhall reliue. And yet are there manye at this daye who beleue not that Chriſte roſe agayne from death to lyfe. And to thentent thou mayeſt here perceyue how vnright are the iudgementes of the wicked, they beleued that Iohn, who neuer hadde any name for worckyng of miracles, was alyue agayne: and moſte ſtifly denyed the reſurreccion of Ieſu, whoſe godly power was ſo many wayes declared. Conſydre alſo the fondneſſe of wicked kinges: Herode affirmeth Iohn to be alyue agayne, and confeſſeth he hath now greater power then he had, when he was firſte alyue: and yet for all that he in a manour maketh his vaunt howe he cauſed hym to be putte to death, redy to ſlea hym afreſhe yf it laye in his power.

Here it is expedient to heare what occaſion Herode hadde to committe ſo horrible a dede. For at the prouocacion of an vnchaſte woman, he commaunded Iohn to be taken, and layed in prions, not for anye offence committed on his behalfe: but to gratifie Herodias the daughter of kyng Areta, the whiche Herodias, notwithſtanding ſhe was maried before vnto Philyppe one of the lower rulers of the countreyes of Iturea and Trachonitis, the kyng her father, by reaſon of a certayne debate that befell betwixt them, toke awaye from his ſeruice in lawe Philippe (by whom ſhe had them a daughter) and maried her to this Herode brother vnto the sayde Philippe, but yet his enemie. Iohn, to thentent he might the better resemble Helye, who verye frankely rebuked Iehab and Iezabela, could not abyde this buchalle and filthye matrimonie, but sayde vnto kyng Herode: It is not lawfull for thee to kepe still in house with thy brothers wyfe, synce he is not barrayne, and is yet alyue.

It is not lawfull &c. Herodias, who was then diuorced from her former husbande, fearyng lest she should by Johns procurement be lykewyse diuorced from this, wer about to entrappe him, and sought occasion to make him awaye, but all that euer she went about, came to none effecte. For albeit Herode loued not Iohn hartely, yet did he feare hym. True vertue is of suche force, that kynges, and mightie princes feare it. Herode knewe right well he was a iuste manne, and an holy liuer, and therfore had hym in awe and reuerence, and folowed his counsayle in manye thynges, and gladlye heard he him speake.

These thynges letted the wicked womanne to destroye hym accordyng as she purposed to do. She entended mischiefe, but occasion wouldo not serue thereunto, whiche is the thing, that onely lacketh vnto yuell folkes to do harme.

The texte. ¶ And when a conuenient daye was cummo, that Herode on his birthe daye made a supper to the lordes, high capitaines, and chiefe estates of Galile, and when the daughter of the same Herodias came in, & daunced, and pleased Herode, and the that sate at borde also, the kyng sayde vnto the damsell: Aske of me what thou wylte, and I will geue it the, and he sware vnto her: Whatsoeuer thou shalte aske of me I wyll geue it the, euen to the one halfe of my kyngdome. And she went forth, and sayde vnto her mother, what shall I aske the sayed, Iohn Baptistes heade. And she came in streyghtwaye with haste vnto the kyng, and asked, saying: I will that thou gyue me by and by in a charger, the head of Iohn Baptiste, and the kyng was sorye: howbeit for his othe sake, and for theym sakes whiche sate at the supper also, he would not caste her of. And immediatly the kyng sent the hangman, and commaunded his head to be brought in: and he went and beheaded him in the prison, & brought his heade in a charger, and gaue it to the damsell, and the damsell gaue it to her mother. And when his disciples heard of it, they came and tooke vp his body, and layed it in a graue.

Nowe was Herodes birthe daye come, a tyme verye propise, and meete to worke this vngracious dede in. It was beseemyng that the natyue daye of a wicked kyng, shoulde be polluted with the death of a man of moste holye lyuyng and godly conuersation: and that the myddes of the excessiue banketting and courtlye delicacies, shoulde be distayned with the cruell murthering of an innocent, and giltlesse person. &c. Therfore when that in the honoure of his birth daye, he made a souper of gorgious, and excessiue furniture, to the princes, capitaines, and great estates of Galile, because there shoulde be the more present to beare witnesse of his crueltie, there came into the place where they feasted, a young damsell, daughter vnto Herodias and Philippe, to make the greatter myrth and pastime with her vncunly, and wāton daunsing. And the more vngoodly she daunced, the more she delited the greatter, and the kyng specially, who was now twise mad, because, besydes that he was in amours with the buchalle womanne Herodias, he was also distempred, and set in a furye with wyne.

&c. Therfore he sayed vnto the damsell ryghte magnifycentlye as became a kyng. Aske of me whatsoeuer thou wylt, thou shalte haue no denyall therof.

And

And to make her the bolder to desyre what she wouldе, he bounde his dyscyples with an othe. Whatsoeuer (sayeth he) thou shalte desyre of me, though it be thone halfe of my realme, I will geue it the. Aske of me whatsoeuer I will geue.

Oh fonde and folyshe saing, worthy to com oute of so folishe, and drōken a kynges mouthe. But the young damsell, as she began to playe this parte at the pronocacion and setting on of her mother (whiche diligently awayted the daye, place, and howre, and trymmed her daughter of purpose to daunce) so durste she not by and by tell the kyng what she wouldе demaunde, but departed out of the feasting chaumber, and asked her mother counsayle, saying: The kyng my father in lawe hath bounde it with an othe, that he will geue me whatsoeuer I will desyre of hym. What shall I therfore aske? Here was no doubte dyse a iuste occasion to doubte, and take good deliberacion, lest so great an opportunitie should haue ben loste. But the vnchaste woman her mother, vnto whome nothyng was so deare, as the death of the moste holye and innocent man, without further deliberacō takyng, answerred: Desyre of him John Baptistes heade. Oh wicked daughter, soone taught, & redy to obey for a mischiefe. She returned straythwayes into the kynges priuie chamber (for her mother priuily aduertised her to make haste, and speake with Herode before that great heate of his princely courage were coole dagaine.)

And then went she vnto the kynges presence, and desyred a rewarde for her wanton and lasciuious daunceyng, saying: I desyre but one messe alonely, I will thou geue me withoute farther delaye, John Baptistes heade in a charger.

Here marke me well the awkewarde conscience of the wicked kyng. Where as there is nothyng that suche kynges are ofterner wont to do, then to breake all bondes of leages, couenauntes, and religion: yet herehe thinketh hymselfe bound in conscience (which was a thyng agaynst all conscience) to perfourme his moste foolyshe othe, especially eyth it was made in the audyence of so many witnesses. Wherfore leste menne would haue thought hym to haue ben a manne of no credence, yf he had refused to perfourme what he promised by an othe to do, swearyng perchaunce eyther by his diademe, the spirite which had the gouernaunce of his body, or the heade of the damsel that daunced before hym: or els leste he shoulde haue seemed vnrighteous, and boyde of all good maners, yf he had eyther let thy mayde departe from hym all heauy and sad, or with some cloude of heauinesse abated the myrthe and solace of the gestes, whom she had pleased with her pastyme. (O worthy full fayth, and conscience: O good maner & curtesie worthye to be put in Chronicles) leste I saye, these thynges should haue chaunced, the hangman was forthwith sente out, and the holy head of the moste innocente person brought vnto the kyng, as it had ben a messe of meate in a charger. The kyng toke it vnto the damsell, and she to her mother, vnto whom it was a dearer present, then thone halfe of Herodes kyngdome. And immediatye the kyng sent a hangman &c.

With this deadly syght this folyshe dotyng and mad kyng, dyd gratify the vnchaste woman, and celebrate or worthyp his natiue daye. The kyng caused hym to be slayne, the hangman brought the head to the kyng, the damsell obtained it, and in conclusion the same deadly rewarde was geuen to her mother the worker, and well of all this mischiefe. Oh worthy geastes all this whyle, and mete for suche a feaste maker. And gaue it to the damsell. &c.

There

There was none of them also frendely to the king, that would go about tolet hym to do this mischieuous dede. And shall we hereafter mariuaile yf kynges other wyles be not a feardе to commit outragious enormities, yf they be of disposition lyke vnto Herode, that is to saye, enflamed with brichaste loue, and geuen to riot and sensualitie, and euer this, haue suche dayly companions, as be eyther fearfull persons, or els fauourers of theyr cruelitie.

And whan his disciples heарde of it. ℣. When the bruite of this hayneuse dede was cum to the eares of Johns disciples, they toke awaye the carkas, and buried it honorablye. Howbeit in these thynges lyeth hyd some mystery and secret meanyng. John although he bare the figure of the lawe, and sygnified the same, yet in as muche as he was a forcurrour of the Gospell, he was rewarded with the rewarde therof, that is, with a glorious death, but yet farre diuerse from the death of Christe. For Johns head was pryuily striken of after he hadde layne a whyle fast gyued in prysone. Christ was openly lyfted vp vpon the crosse. The darknes of the prison agreeth well with the shadowes and figures of the lawe. It was mete they shoulde geue place vnto the lyght of the gospell, whiche beganne to appeare and shyne abrode. It was conueniente that carnall ceremonies shoulde be diminished, to the entent that spirituall freedome should be encreased. And it was lykewyse nedeful that all, whiche proceded of feare, should be bounde, because the fayth and charitie of the gospell, should the farther be spred abrode and extended. Finally it was mete that mannes heade shoulde be striken of, least the churche shoulde acknowledge any other head saue alonely Jesus.

And to the lawe beyng in a maner slayne, and honourably buried, gaue place vnto the Lorde Jesu, when he began to preache his spirituall philosophie and doctrine. For in that we do beleue the ghospell we are muche bounden vnto the olde Testament, whiche so many yeares agoe dyewe out Jesus Christ vnto vs, with shadowes, and figures, and promysed and described him with the prophecies, and darke sayinges of the Prophetes.

The texte. ¶ And the apostles gathered themselues together vnto Jesus, and told hym all thynges bothe what they had done, and what they had taught. And he sayde vnto them: Se ye alone out of the waye into the wylderneſſe, and rest a while. For there were many comers and goers, and they had no leysure, so muche as to eate. And he went by ship out of the waye into a desert place, and the people spied them when they departed, and many knewe hym, and ranne a foote thyther out of all cities, and came thyther before them, and came together vnto hym. And Jesus went out, and sawe muche people, and had compassion on them, because they were like shepe, not hauyng a shepeherde, and he began to teache them many thinges.

While these thinges were done, the Apostles after they had finished their message, dyewe themselues together, and returned to Jesus the heade of the whole busynesse. All thynges procede from him, and to hym all thynges must be referred. From hym, after they had receyued their commission, they departed al of one mynde and accorde, to thentēt that whatsoeuer it should fortune them to doe, they should likewise do it in his name: and to hym they returned with semblable concord of mynde, desyrous to haue all that they had done, by him approued. And so at their returning they recouted vnto him ꝑ whole historye and procesſe of theyr legation, seuerally rehearsyng euery thyng that

And he said vnto thē. ℣. they hadde taught and done with greate ioye and gladnes, and the wyng also howe the matter had successe euen as themselues desyred. The Lorde after he had alowed theyr synere fayth, but yet restrayned them from glorying or reioyeing in their actes, toke them awaye with hym into a solitary place, which was the wildernesse of the towne of Bethsaida, to thentent that after theyr great trauaile and labour, they should there reste a whyle, and sumwhat refreth themselues. This goyng aparte into wyldernes was not for recreation and pastyme, but because they should quicken and renewe the strength of the spirite by secrete contemplacion, and prayer, ỽ they myghte bee the more able to sustayne suche trauayles and paynes as they should soone after be put vnto afreshe. For the teacher of the gospell must very little care for the body. Moreouer for as muche as he that exerciseth the office of an apostle or preacher of goddes worde, is compelled to haue to do both with weake & strong, with learned and vnlearned, with good and bad, it can not be chosen but he muste other whiles be greatly wrasted from that perfite quietnesse, and tranquillitie of mynde. And whensoeuer it so chaunceth, then must he seuer his mynde from worldly matters, and wholly geue hymselfe to secrete and most deuout prayers, and to purest contemplacion of heauenly thynges, that beyng made stronger in spirite therby, he maye soone after returne from this his godlye meditacion, to the helpe and comforte of his euen Christen. For vnto the place where as at that season they found the lorde Iesu, there resorted an vnmerable multitude of people, so that it semed as it had bene an ebbing and flowyng of cummers and goers, the whiche would suffer the Apostles beyng then weary by reason of theyr iourney, to take no reste: no not so muche as to eate their meat. Wherfore after the people were sent away, they toke shippe, and sayled to the syde nighe to Bethsaida, from thence went with the Lorde into a solitary place. But neyther chaunced it them here long to kepe themselues close and secrete. For the light of the euangelike veritie can in no wyse be hydde. This going aparte did nothyng els but make the people more gredy to folowe them. Some there were who diligently marked whyther they wēt, that is, how they toke their gate to the wyldernesse marchyng on the citie of Bethsaida: and byandby as it was noysed abrode that Christe would make hys abode there, a great multitude of all sortes of people resorted thyther a foote out of all the townes there aboutes, who made so good spede in their iourney, that many of them came thyther sonner a foote, then Christ and his disciples, whiche had the bauntage of the water. A manne would haue sayde that the tyme had bene alredy present, when the people would goe about forcibly to enter into the kyngdome of heauen. When Iesu perceyued howe an vnnumerable multitude of people was assembled together, whiche had with very muche payne and difficultie trauayled thyther a foote, so true is it that he gate him not out of the waye, nor commaunded them to departe for theyr importunacie, that he came out of the secrete place, wherehe was, in manoure to meete them, goyng about to teache his disciples by sundrye wayes and meanes, howe they should at alleymes be willing & ready to set forth the gospell. And so when the moste gracious Lorde Iesus came forth, a sawe a very great, but a confuse rablement of all sortes of people (for there were men, women, & children) he was moued with compassion, and shewed with eyes, countenaunce, & as we commonly say, euen with the verye forehead, an vnfayned fauowe of mynde, fashionyng thaffection that ought to be in him, who is a teacher of the gospell. The people thirsted after holsome doctrine. And that was plainlye declared both by the quicke spede they-made, and also by the paynes they toke in their iourney. Loue made them swifte of foote: But they were as it had ben a sort of sheepe wandring hither and thither, for lacke of a good shepheard. For the Priestes, Pharisies, and Scribes, nothing regarding theyr flocke, fed their owne belyes. Therfore Jesus takyng compassion on these simple, and disordered people, began to exercise the office of a faythfull shepheard. Firste of al he refreshed theyr myndes with great aboundaunce of the meate of holye doctrine, and then immediatly healed the sycke folkes, whom they brought with them.

¶ And when the day was nowe far spente, his disciples came vnto him, saying: this is a deserte place, and now the tyme is farre passed, let them departe, that they maye go into the countreye rounde about, and into the townes, and bye them bread, for they haue nothing to eate: he answered, and sayd vnto them: geue ye them to eate: And they sayd vnto him: shall we go and bye two hundreth pens worth of bread, and geue them to eate? He sayd vnto them: how many loaues haue ye? go and loke. And whē they had searched, they sayd: fiue, and two fyshes. And he commaunded them to make them all sitte doune by companies vpō the grene grasse. And they sate doune here a rowe, and there a rowe by hundredes, and by fiftyes. And when he had taken the fiue loaues and the two fishes, and loked vpto heauen, he blessed, and brake the loaues, and gaue them to his disciples, to set before them: and the two fishes deuided he among them all. And they all dyd eate, and were satisfyed, and they tooke vp twelue basketfull therof, and of the fyshes. And they that dyd eate, were about fyue thousand men.

After that muche tyme was spent herein, and now the thing it selfe gaue a watche worde that the multitude had lykewise nede to be fedde with corporall foode, the disciples folowing the mercy and pitifulnesse of their Maister, aduertised him therof, saying: Lorde thou seest how a very great nūmber of people is cum thus far without any vitayles and purueyance. And this is a deserte place, and meale tyme is past. They desyrous to heare thy doctrine, forget themselues, and can in no wise be seuered from the. Wherfore let them depart, to thentent they maye repayre into the countrey, and villages nexte here about, to bye them cates to eate. Then Jesus teachyng his disciples how a multitude should be fedde, made answere: yea do yera ther who shalbe shepheardes in tyme to cum, now accustome your selfes to play the shepheardes: geue them of your owne vitayles to eate. The disciples not perceyuing for what purpose he spake these wordes, answered agayne accordyng vnto their rude capacities, saying: Thou commaundest vs to doo a thing vnpossible. For thou knowest right well, how slenderly we be prouided of vitayles necessary for our iourney. Shal we go, and bye two hundred peny worth of breade for this multitude, the which will not be ynough to suffice them, insomuche that euery man shall scarcely haue a lyttle morsell to sauour his mouth? Then Jesus preparyng theyr myndes by little and little vnto the myracle, sayed: How many loaues haue you in store? and because they had not their answere ready: Go ye (sayed he) and loke how we ll ye be prouided of vitailes. They loked, & the wed hym ꝑ there were fiue loaues, & two fyshes. It was not vnknowen vnto ꝑ Lord what they had: but his will was, to haue ꝑ Apostles perfectly to know, how smal stoore of vitayles ther was, to thentēt they might ꝑ more acknowleage Goddes power in ꝑ miracle.

And he cōmaunded. &c.

And because they myght the better discerne what a great multitude and compaignie ther was, he commaunded them to bydde all the people to sitte doune vpon the greene grasse, so deuyded into compaignies, that in euery cōpaignie

ſhould ſitte an hundred perſons, or elſe fiftie together. The apoſtles did as the Lord bad them, and lyke wyſe the people were obedient vnto the Apoſtles: ſo greate was the confidence they had in theyr guyde, and ſhepeheard Jeſu. Then toke he the fiue loaues, and two fyſhes, and lifting vp his eyes, accordyng vnto his accuſtomed maner vnto heauen, gaue thankes vnto the father, thorough whoſe benefitiall goodneſſe, the buſyneſſe of the Goſpell dyd ſo well goe forward. That doen, he brake the loaues, and gaue them vnto his diſciples that they ſhoulde ſette them before the multitude. In like maner deuided he the fiſhes into ſundrye portions, and gaue them vnto his ſayd diſciples, to be likewyſe diſtributed among all the people. All were refreſched, and dyd eate theyr fyll: none of them all lacked, into muche that after the feaſt was done, the Apoſtles, by the Lordes commaundement, gathered together the reuerſion, and therwith fylled twelue baſkettes. Furthermore the number of the people (whiche myght eaſely be knowen, by reaſon they were thus deuyded into compaignies, and ſattein rowes) was fyue thouſand men, beſydes children, and wemen. By thys myracle Jeſus bothe preſcribed vnto his diſciples a fourme or rule howe to feede a multitude with the foode of the Goſpell, & alſo pulled oute of theyr myndes all penſyue carefulneſſe to prouide for corporall ſuſtenaunce. Therfore whoſoeuer thou be that arte a Biſhop, Curate, or paſtour of Chriſtes flocke, thynke not thus with thy ſelfe: I am a Doctoure of diuinitie: I am an excellent eluquyng expounder of holye ſcripture: I haue great ſtore of learning wherwith to inſtruct the people, and may take inough out of my riche ſtore houſe ſtuffed with cunning, to feede them with al, be they neuer ſo hungry. Yea rather loke, and acknowledge how ſmall ſtore of victayles thou haſt at home, for the whiche, whatſoeuer it be, thou arte a debtoure vnto the Lorde. But bryng ſuche ſtore as thou haſte vnto the handes of Jeſu. Deſyre hym to vouchſafe to handell, and breake it. That done, what he hath deliuered thee, the ſame dooe thou, euen as he toke it the, miniſter vnto the people as the Lordes meate, and not thine: and miniſter it not miſtruſting, not putting difference betwyxt this meat & that, not truſting to thine owne ſtrength: and ſo in concluſion ſhalt it be a very euangelyke banket, and the myndes of the faithfull ſhalbe moze refreſched, and filled with thys holſome foode, thus miniſtred by a ſimple perſon, then if the ſuperſticiouſe Phariſey, the arrogent Philoſophier, or eloquent Rhethoritian, would for the aduaunceyng and fettyng forthe of them ſelfes make vnto the people an artificiall oracion or ſermon, whiche they had diligently ſtudied, and long tyme prouided for afore hand.

And they that did

Now for as much as he cõmaũded his diſciples before to eum vnto the miniſtery of the goſpell, without any prouiſion of corporall foode, here hath he declared by very dede, howe thoſe ſhall wante nothing, who whiles their myndes be wholly ſet vpon the kyngdome of God, and the righteouſnes therof, do not paſſe vpon theſe temporall thinges, for the which the common ſorte of people taketh great thought and care, yf ſo be there lacke not in them a ſyncere, and true faith in the Lorde Jeſu.

¶ And ſtrayghtway he cauſed his diſciples to go into the ſhip and to go ouer the Sea before vnto Bethſaida, while he ſent away the people. And as ſoone as he had ſent them away he departed into a mountain to praye. And when euen was cum, the ſhippe was in the middeſt of the Sea, and he alone on the lande, and he ſaw them troubled in rowing, for the wynde was contrarye vnto them. And about the fourth watche of the night he came vnto them walking vpon the Sea and would haue paſſed by them. But when they ſawe them walking vpon the Sea and would haue paſſed by them. But when they ſawe them walkyng vpon the Sea, they ſuppoſed it had bene a ſpirite, and cried out, for they all ſawe sawe hym, and were afraide. And anon he talked with them, and sayed vnto them: Be of good cheare, it is I: be not afrayed. And he went vp vnto them into the shippe, and the winde ceassed, and they were sore amased in themselues beyond measure, and maruayled, for they remembred not the loaues because their hartes were blinded.

It was but a small benefite that he filled their hungry belies, in respecte of those benefites whiche they daylye receiued of his most bountreous goodnesse. It procedeth of a greater liberalitie to fede the myndе or soule, then the bellie. And yet for all this the grosse common sorte of people are wonte (suche is their vnright, and aukeward iudgement) to set most store of all by that whiche is of leaste price and value. Therfore Jesus knowyng it would cumme to passe that they would nowe after their bellyes were fylled, imagine hewe to make him a kyng, compelled his disciples (for it was muche a doo to sunder them from so lucky, and amiable a Lorde) to take ship, and go ouer the water before him vnto Bethsaida, whyles he in the meane whyle sent awaye the people, whō beyng dismissed, he conueyed himselfe priuily to a mountayne there to pray alone, and make petition vnto the father, that lyke as the affaires of the ghospell had begun well, and properously, so might they with lyke successe go forward. In the meane time the night approched, and the disciples sayled in the myddes of the sea without their maister: and as they were saying there arose a tempest. How can it be chosen but there must nedes be night, where that Sunne and light of the world Jesu, is not present? How can it be chosen but that ship must nedes be in ieopardie, wherin Christ lacketh? How can it be chosen but the Apostles must nedes be troubled, when the comforter of all men, Jesus is awaye? how can it be chosen but contrary wyndes must nedes staye and hynder the successe of mans diligence, if Jesus helpe not forward? he is many times awaye: but yet doeth he not forsake sucke as be his vnto thende. He semeth sumtymes to forsake them for a season, because to exercise them in aduersyties, and to learne them to haue sure beliefe and confidence in hym. For now was he cum downe from the mountayne: now stode he on the sea banke, but alone without any company.

He departed into a mountayne to praye.

The disciples sawe hym not: neuertheles he sawe them. Wherfore we muste not despayre, what trouble or distresse soeuer we be in: but in oure hartes conceyue this stedfaste beleefe that the Lorde (although he no where appeare, and shewe hymselfe vysyblye) wyll not fayle to helpe hys when tyme requireth. Nowe standeth he on the shore, and seeth what laboure and payne they take in rowing. For the wynde was against them. When therfore they had thus striuen a prety whyle with the wawes and boysterous wyndes of this worlde, and were at the nert doore to desperacion, about the fourth watche of the nyght, that is, a litle before the dawnyng of the daye, Jesus came vnto them, not in a shippe, but quietlye walkyng on the water (for the element knewe it maker) and made semblaunt as thoughe he wouldе haue passed by them. For so doeth he other whiles suffer his to continue in aduersytie and tribulacion, as thoughe he passed not vpon them at all, whereas in dede he neuer stynteth to care for them.

He came vnto them walking on the sea.

The Apostles after they had spyed him in the darke walking vpon the water, forgetting so many miracles as they had sene hym worke before, and beleuing it to be impossible for the liquid element to beare the massy bodye of a man, supposed he had been sum spirite or ghost, whiche had deceyued they theyr eye sight with a payne and phantasticall illusion. Wherefore they were sore afrayed, and for feare cried oute. For they all sawe the verye shape and likenes of Jesu, and yet beleued not it was he. The Lord is euer terrible vnto those that beleue he is an auenger, and know him not to be a sauiour. Neyther is it possible for him to be knowen in the great darkenes of this worlde, vnlesse he bringe himselfe into our knowledge. Wherefore he suffered not his disciples to be any lenger dismaide with feare, but straigth waies spake vnto them with the voyce whyche they knewe right well, and sayd: Be of good chere, it is I, feare ye not. And then came he vnto them into the shippe, and furthwith the tempest ceased. Nowe after their feare was past and gone, then beganne they to maruayle howe a mannes body might walke vpon the water. They were so dull, so rude, and forgetfull, that they remembred not so muche as the miracle whyche they sawe hym worke a litle before, when he filled so manye thousand folkes belies with fiue loaues, and two fishes. And theyr hartes were so blynded, that they thought it a thyng muche to bee wondred at, to see Jesus walke vpon the water: whereas in deede it was a muche more wonderfull facte, to suffice so muche people with so litle meate. The Lord suffered this brutishe dulnesse to continue in his disciples, to the entent they also should enure themselues to beare with the dulnes, and simplicitie of weaklynges, till they were cum to more perfection.

And anon he talked. &c.

The texte.

¶ And when they were ouer the water, they came into the land of Genazareth, & drew by into the hauen. And assone as they wer cum out of the ship, straight waye they knewe him, and ranne furth throughout all the region round about, and began to cary about in beddes, those that were sicke, when they heard that he was there. And whither soeuer he entred, into townes, cities, or villages, they layed the sicke folkes in the streates, and prayed him that they might touche and it were but the hemme of his vesture: and as manye as touched hym, were safe.

In the daunyng of the daye, they came vnto the shore, and arriued at the hauen where they appointed to arriue, in the lande called Genazareth. Jesus was scarcely entred the lande, but thither were cum diuers of the inhabitaunces that knew him. For now was the sunne disclosed, & the night gone, whiche had darkened the myndes of the disciples: and manye there were who marked him, whither soeuer he went. Beside this he was now knowen vnto very many, euen by the phisnamye: but a great mayny mo knewe hym by the fame of his doctrine, and miracles. Now those that sawe him, and knew who he was, ranby as though they had cum as spyes, departed awaye from hym, and wente throughe all the region, and shewed howe Jesus was landed. As sone as this rumour was once noysed abrode, very many beganne to cary aboute sicke folkes in beddes.

And began to carye about i beddes. &c.

And whithersoeuer Jesus went, whether it were to the countrey, townes, or cities, there was euer present a greate number of impostume and vnquiet people, more carefull to be delyuered of theyr bodily diseases, then to be cured of the diseases and maladies of theyr soules: whiche layed out in the streetes pitifull sightes of sicke folkes, diseased with diuerse sickenesses: and besoughte Jesus as he passed by, that they might touche euen but the hem of his garmente. For there was suche a busines, and hurly burly amonge them, that harde and scarce any one could be suffred so to do. It came not of any daungerousnes, or difficultie on his behalfe, that they couldе not touche him, who grutched not to touche, and handle the Leper: but the ensample of theyr fayth highly pleased him, the whiche his pleasure was to haue set forth and commended to all men: and good cause why it should so be. As many as touched him were healed, what diseases soeuer they were payned withall. They with perfite beliefe touched the hemme of his garment, whiche afterward those persons chaūced to haue, who crucified him, and put him to death: and by touching therof, were eased of theyr cozp ozall diseases. How muche moze then ought all men to endeuour themselues to touche Jesus himselfe with harte and minde, to the intent they maye be healed of the infirmities of their soules? Touchynge auaylethe nothyng without faith. The cruell Jewes that buffeted him, that bounde him, that scourged him, that nayled him on the crosse, touched his bare bodye: but that they so touched him did nothing profite any of them at all. Thou readeste the ghospell, and in so doynge thou touchestе Jesu: but thou readeste it to this ende, to dispzoue it, oz els thou readeste it negligentlye, and takest no heede therevnto, and therefoze thou touchest Jesus in vayne. Reade it with a pure and a syncere fayth, and then shalt thou anon be healed. But thou must sue vnto Jesus by prayer and petition, that thou maiest touche him. That manis neuer the better foz touchyng hym, whome he hath not fozetouched. If thou be not able to attayne that secrete wysdome, whiche S. Paul speaketh of amoonge such as are perfite, then the hem of his garment touched, so that thy fayth be perfite wall, shall reskoze the to health. The hemmes of the Pharisees garmentes, be they neuer so bzode, are not of power and vertue to do the lyke. There is nothyng so lowe in the Lozde Jesu, that through fayth geueth not healthe.

¶ The. vii. Chapiter.

THus went the ghospell forward among the simple and lightly beleuyng people. But it had not lyke successe amoonge the Scribes, and Pharisees, who thought in theyr owne conceiptes, that they had in theyr keapynge the castle of all pure religion, and true doctrine: and saintly esteined the vnlearned, and ignezaunt sozte of the commō people, foz men. Foz of the priestes there is scarcely any where any mencio made, but when Jesus should be put to deathe. Therefoze lyke as in Comedies oz playes there are diuerse scenes, and pageauntes, to the intent that by the comparing together of sundry persons and matters, euery thing maye the playnlyer appeare: so in thys euangelyke busines, the Lozde Jesus so ozdred all thynges that were doen from tyme to tyme, that it shoulde playnlye appeare to all men, after they sawe howe ready the simple people, and Gentyles were to beleue, howe vncurable was theyr froward obstinacy, who of congruence, ought to haue reformed other, if they had been hard of beliefe. To the vnlearned and common sozte it was sufficient foz the recouerynge of theyr health, that they touched but the hem of Christes garment. But the Pharisees were neuer the better, neyther foz that they vnderstode the prophecies and fozesayinges of the Prophetes, neither because they had so ofterymes heard Jesu preache vnto them the heauenly doctryne, noz foz so many miracles, as they had sene him woorke before.

The texte. ¶ And the Pharisees came together vnto him, & diuers of the Scribes, whiche came from Jerusalem. And when they sawe certayne of his disciples eate bread with cōmon, that is to say to saye with vnwashen handes they complayned. For the Pharisees, and all the Iewes, except they washe their handes ofte, eate not: obseruing the traditions of the elders. And when they com from the market, except they washe, they eate not. And many other thinges there be, whiche they haue taken vpon them to obserue, as the washyng of cuppes, and cruses, and brasen vessels, and of the tables.

Nowe after all this was doen, thither came certayne of the Pharisees and Scribes in companye together, forsoth a worshypfull sorte of gentlemen, and worthy to be had in greate reuerence: and the more a greate deale because they came from Ierusalem, where they bare men in hande that the well of godlynes and holy doctrine was: whereas in deede there was the verye well springe and head of all ambicion, all hipocrisie, and all vngodlynes. These felowes, because they thought themselues ryghteous men, and well learned, came not hither to learne any thing of Christ, neither to be healed, but to picke quarels. And loe, byanby was there a ready occasion for them so to doe. This occasion (beyng much desirous therof) they toke of the superstitious obseruacion of ceremonies, whereof rysen almost all quarrelinges, and wrongfull accusacions amonge christian men. The Iewes call that common whiche is vncleane and vnholy, abhorryng all impuritie, and endeuouryng in no wyse to seme to haue any where any maner of vncleane or filthye thyng. And this cleanelye they measured, not by puritie of mynde (the whiche is the onely, and true puritie before God) but by corporall ceremonies. And of these ceremonies a fewe were commaunded by Moyses lawe, not to this ende that they shoulde be earnestly obserued for euer, but partly to the entent the ignorannte, and disobediente people should by this meanes accustome theselues to obey Gods commaundementes, and partely because they should by suche mauer (as a manne would say) of shadowes, and rudimentes, be by litle and litle enstructed to those thinges that belong vnto true godlynes, which is in the soule of man. Nowe sum of them not contented with the ceremonies commaunded by the lawe, added thereunto constitucions of their owne makyng, out of numbre, whiche the Pharisees more rigorously compelled the people to kepe, then suche thynges as were commaunded by God, alwayes, and euery where to be obserued. And for suche folishe trifles, they chalenged the prayse of holines, and brought the people in a fonde beliefe, that they were made holy therby, and finally (the whiche was a muche wickeder deede) they wente aboute to forge a matter of vngodlines, or heresy against their neighbour, for the breache of suche ceremonies, tho obseruacion wherof conteined nothing at all vnto true godlynes.

For when they saw certayne of his disciples eate meate with vnwashed handes, that is, as they vse to speake, with commune, and vncleane handes, they rebuked them as wicked persons, and theyr maister too, who had naughtely instructed them. They condemned not this facte because it was either of it owne proper nature vicious, or els forbidden by almightye God, but because it disagreed with their vse and custome. Assuredly the wurst rule that can be to iudge by, is to disalowe any thyng, because thou vsest not to do the same.

And when they same certayne of his disciples, &c.

For it chaunceth many tymes that the folichest thinges of all, growe to a commune custome, whiche ought not in any wyse to be made the rule of godlines, in asmuche as puritie is to be esteemed, not by custome, but by those thynges whiche are true, and commaunded by God. But the Scribes, Pharisees, yea, and almoste all the whole packe of the Iewes, most folichely iudgeing puritie of mynde to stande in corporall thynges, dyd contracte to this, superstitiously obserue the maner taught them, not of God, but of their forefathers, and elders, in suche wyse, that yf they had been in daunger to sterue for hunger, they would haue eaten no meate, vnlesse they had first washed their handes. And yf they be compelled to take their repaste ofte tymes a daye, then washe they ofte tymes, and therfore suppose that they cumme cleane vnto the table. Further, yf they retourne home from the market, then do they (as though they had gathered sum filthe by touching of the people) washe their whole bodies afreshe before they eate any meate: where as all this while hauyng their soules moste polluted with hatred, enuy, ambicion, couetousnes, hypocrisye, and manye other detestable vyces, they neuer haue anye myndе of washyng at all. These, and suche other like traditions, were taught them of their forefathers, besydes the constitucions of the law, whereas the law expressly forbedeth that anye thynge be eyther added, or taken awaye from Gods commaundementes. Neyther thought they it sufficient ofte tymes to washe their bodies, therby to appere the cleaner: They washed also their cruses, their brasen vessels, and their tables.

The texte. Then asked hym the Pharisees and Scribes: why walke not thy disciples according to the custome of them of old? but eate bread with vnwashen handes? He answered, and sayed vnto them: well prophecied Esay of you hypocrites, as it is written: This people honoreth me with their lyppes, but their harte is far from me. Howbeit, in vayne do they serue me, teaching the doctrines, and commaundementes of men: for ye laye the commaundement of God apart, and obserue the constitucions of men, as the washing of cruses, and of cuppes, and many other suche like thinges ye do.

Nowe coulde they no lenger kepe in this foule scabbe of false reportyng, yet quarelled not they with the disciples, but allayled the maister himself, as though he had committed sum haynous enormitie. Why, say they, do not thy disciples who folowe the, and hang vpon thyne instruccion and teachyng, kepe the custome begon of our elders, but eate their meate with vnwashen and vncleane handes? Jesus intending to teache vs that there is no more noysom or mischeuous kinde of quarrelling, then when a man vnder pretence of godlynes, fynderh faute with the well doynges of his neyghboure, sharpely reprouyng eyther their malice, and coloured righteousnes: By your deedes, sayeth he, you playnely declare, that the Prophete Esay prophecied of you hypocrites, full well, and worthely, whyche make an outwarde shewe of holynes, whereas inwardly ye are replenished with all sinne & wickednes. Iustly his Prophete, God complaynethe in this wyse: This people honoreth me with their lyppes, but their heart is far from me. And as thesselues do liue, so do they enstructe other. I passe nothing vpon this cleanes of their bodies, and houshold stuffe, but require of them inward puritie & cleanes of soule. They serue me in vayne wyth this coloured kynde of godlynes, auauntyng and magnifying it, as thoughe it were a thyng of great worthynes, and wherein perfite godlynes did standе, teaching mans traditions, whiche make no man commendable, and prayse worthy before God: and of a superstitious myndе they haue to obserue these same traditions, not hynge passynge vpon Gods commaundementes. Loоke howe muche differēce there is betwene God and manne, so muche differēce oughte there to be betwene mens constitucions, and Gods commaundementes. God is a spirite, and that whiche is spirituall and ghostly continueth for euer, and oughte neuer to bee neglected. Agayne, what thynge soeuer is corporall, the same lasteth but for a season. If it be lawfull to passe litle vpon the ceremoceremonies whiche god himselfe hathe commaunded to be kepte, whensoeuer charitie towardes the neyghboure exhorteth so to doe: howe muche lesse then is it meete to breake the commaundementes of God, for kepyng of mans traditions? It is a wrong shapen godlines, and an unholy holines, to bee superstitious in kepyng of suche ceremonies as your forefathers instituted and taught you of theyr owne mynde, and in the meane while litle to regard those thinges which God himselfe hath commaunded you to obserue. Or you thinke it to be one of the chiefeste poinctes of godlines to washe your handes, your cuppes, your cruces, and to obserue manye other like thinges, the whiche your bodyes, by reason they haue a certayne counterfayte apparaunce or vysure of holines, doe highly set you furth and make you seeme prayse worthy vnto the worlde: and this prayse so gotten by coloured holynes, you set more by then by Goddes auctoritie. For you loue your selues: and neyther seke Goddes glorye, nor the soule health of the people, whose guydes, and teachers you profesle your selfes to be.

The texte. And he sayed vnto them: wel, ye cast aside the commaundement of god, to maynteyne your owne constitucions. For Moyses sayd: Honour thy father and thy mother, and whoso curseth father or mother, let him dye the death. But ye saye, a man shall say to father or mother, Corban: which is, what gifte soeuer cummeth from me, shalbe for thy profite. And so ye suffer him no more to do ought for his father or his mother, and make the worde of God of none effect through your owne constitucion, whiche ye haue ordayned, and manye such thinges do ye.

But ye saye a man shall say to fa- ther, &c.

Therfore it is no maruayle yf ye disanull, and cleane take awaye that God hath commaunded to be obserued of all men for euer, to thentent that mannes traditions, whiche procure you great gaynes, and authorite, maye still continue. Doth not all the worlde see that you thus do? And not god gaue this law by Moyses: Honour thy father, and mother: And he that curseth his father or mother, shall dye the death. This God commaundeth not in one place, but doth oft times repete it, and put euerye man in remembraunce thereof, because that children shoulde to theyr power, helpe theyr parentes when they be olde, impotent, or fallen into pouertie, or other wise, so ofte as they are oppressed with any maner of necessitie, and by this meanes paye them home agayne, the benefyte of theyr nourishing. The same thing the lawe of nature commaundethe, whiche is likewise emplanted in manye brute beastes, as in Storkes: But you haunge an eye to your owne peculiar hauntage, doe with your fayned doctrine, make Gods commaundemente of none effect: and require that this lawe (whiche God woulde so fayne haue euery body to kepe) shoulde geue place vnto your fayned coloured doctrine. God himselfe crye the: honour thy father and thy mother: & ye are bolde to saye the contrary: Honour not thy father and thy mother. You crye not so with wordes, but you do it in very dede. So muche the more detestable is your wickednes, because you doke the same with an ymage or colour of godlynes. For to the intente your treasury (where with all your excesse and pride is maynteyned) maye be filled, you craftely allure whomsoeuer you can, to bringe very many giftes vnto the temple, by defeatinge euen of theyr owne parentes, whom they shoulde accordyng to Gods commaundemēt, succour at theyr nede: perswading them that by this meanes the commaundement is fulfilled, as thoughe the thynge whiche is dedicated vnto the temple, were geuen to God, and that God were the very naturall father of all menne. Wherfore vnto him who hath caste anye moneye into the treasurye, you saye, that he nowe nedethe not to geue anye thynge

to the relefe of his poore parentes, because the commaundemente is other-wyse fulfilled: and in the meane while you so feare the parentes with vayne superstition, that they dare not require of theyr children anye thinge, whiche semethe once dedicated vnto God, lest in so doynge they thoulde dynge themselues in daunger to be accused of sacrilege. Doubtles God hath no nede of your moneye, neyther is the same employed to his glorie, but turned to your owne priuate commoditie: and thoughe it were bestowed vpon the buildynge of the temple, yet with God there is no temple so holy that for the mayntenaunce therof, he would haue the children forsake theyr parentes at theyr nede. Do not you, when that by suche fayned doctrines, ye both so deceyue the children, that they refuse to helpe theyr parentes, and also so feare the parentes that they dare not touche anye thynge once consecrated vnto the temple: doe not you, I saye, whiles you thus stablishe and vpholde your owne commaundementes, dyspanull and put out of place goddes commaundementes? This thinge haue I broughte you for the for an ensample, whiche ye cannot denye. But you offend not herein alonely. For in many other thynges you doe lyke, as in that you nowe doe. Goddes commaundemente is: thou shalte love thy neighbour as thy selfe. And you for trifling washynges taughte you of men, goe a boute to surmyse mattiers bothe agaynst me, and my disciples, not hyrynge regardynge goddes commaundement in thys behalfe.

The texte. ¶ And when he had called all the people vnto him, he sayde vnto them: Heerken vnto me every one of you, and vnderstande: there is nothyng without a man that can defile hym when it entereth into hym: but the thinges which procede out of a man, those are they that defile the man. If any man haue eares to heare, let him heare. And when he came into the house away from the people, hys disciples asked his of the similitude. And he sayd vnto them: are ye also so greatly without vnderstandynge? Do ye not yet perceyue that whatsoeuer thing from without entereth into a man, it cannot defile him, because it entereth not into his hart, but into the belly, and goeth out into the draught, purginge out all meates.

After the Pharisees were with these wordes vnto them priuately spoken, rather put to silence then cured of theyr malicioulnesse, he exhortes called all ỹ people vnto him. For his pleasure was to haue them all mouthed of the premisses, lest they shoulde at anye time afterwarde, haue bene by Pharisaicall tradicios, withdrawen from the puritie of the gospell. Heare you all (saith he) and vnderstande my wordes. You sawe howe I was accused of heresie or vngodlynesse, for that some of my disciples dyd eate breade with vnwashen handes, as who saye, he that so eateth, were by suche meate polluted and made vncleane before God. The cleanes, and vncleanesse of manne, standethe not in outwarde, but in inwarde thynges. Neyther canne the soule of manne bee defiled with corporall thinges. Therefore nothynge that is without man, and entred into the bodie, can make him vncleane before god. But suche thynges as be within man, and cummeth out of hym, declarethe him to be vncleane. By this darcke saying, the Lorde Jesus gaue the people occasion diligentely to enserche what was the meanyng of his wordes, and to make them more diligent, he sayd moreouer: whoso hath mete eares to heare, let hym heare: meanyng that the forsayed songe was songen in vaine to the deafe Pharisees. But after the multetude was sent awaye, and he gone into a house, then the disciples desyred hym aparte, to expounde them the parable of the difference betwene the thinges entring in & cumming out of man. Jesus here lolo winge the ensample of a faythfull, and diligent scholemaister, after he had had geuen them a litle checke, and by that meanes made them to take better hede vnto his wordes, then did he teache them the misterye, and secrete meaninge thereof. Wo hat, sayeth he, are you also, whome I haue specially chosen out to teache other, so voyde of vnderstanding? Truelye ye your selues oughte to haue gessed what was meant by this parable, by so manye as I expounded to you hereto fore. Perceyue you not that mans cleanesse and vncleanesse can neuer be knowen by those externall thinges whiche enter into hym? For what soeuer entreth in by the mouthe is not conueyed into the harte, but into the stomacke, and anon after into the belye: from thence, yf there be anye thynge that is vncleane and filthy, it is auoyded out into the priuie: so that to the eater euery meate is cleane, because nature purgeth whatsoeuer is here vncleane, and filthy.

What soeuer entreth in by the mouthe.

And he sayed: that whiche cummeth out of a man, defileth the man. For from within euen from the heart of men, procede euell thoughtes, aduoutry, fornication, murther, theft, couetousnesse, fraude, deceypte, vncleanes, a wicked ye, blasphemies, pryde, folishnesse: all these euel thinges cum from within, and defile a man.

The texte.

But those thinges that cum out from the most inward partes of man, be the that both make and declare him to bee vncleane. The seate of the soule or minde, is in the heart, and in the soule is true cleanesse and vncleanes. For this cause he is not forthwith cleane whoso hath washed his handes, but whoso hath a washen, and a cleane harte. Therefore all that cummeth from thence doethe verely declare manne to be cleane, or vncleane. For out of the moste secrete corners of the harte, do pisue euel thoughtes, aduoutry, fornication, manslaughter, theftes, couetousnesse, gyle, falsehode, vnchast lyuinge, a naughty and an enuyous ye, raylyng wordes, pryde, and folishnesse. The meate whiche is eaten with vnwashen handes, bringeth in none of all these enormites, but they spryng euen of the man himselfe, that is to saye, of the harte: and when they once cum out, then doe they playnly declare him to bee vncleane in dede, whose harte is defiled with so manye folthy vices. Yf they be kept in and hid, yet is the man neuertheleste vncleane, in the sight and yes of almighty God, who throughly seeth the entrayles and bowles of the harte. But yf they fortune to come out eyther by wordes or dedes, then do they not onely testifye that the persons from whome they procede are vncleane, but also many times do defile other mo, whiles that by the eyes, and eares, they enter and creepe into the myndes of the hearers and seers. Wherfore let your chiefe care be, to kepe your harte cleane, and then shall it not skill, whether you eate your meate with washen handes, or vnwashen.

¶ And from thence he rose, and went into the borders of Tyre and Sydon, and entred into an house, and would that no man should haue knowen. But he could not be hid. For a certayne woman (whose doughter had a foule spirite) anone as she heard of him, came & fell at his feete. The woman was a Greke, out of the nation of Syrophenicia. And she besought him that he would caste out the deuill from her daughter. But Jesus sayde vnto her: Let the children first be fed. For it is not mete to take the childrens bread and to caste it vnto whelpes. She answered, & sayd vnto him: euen so lorde, neuertheleste the whelpes also eate vnder the table, of the childrens crummes. And he sayd vnto her: for this sayinge goe thy waye, the deuill is gone out of thy daughter. And when she was cum home to her house, she found that the deuill was departed, and her doughter lying on the bed.

After these thynges were thus doen, Jesus signifying euen by the very chaungeing of place, how were they he was of the Jewish honouring and seruice, whiche was almoste altogether esteemed by the obseruacion of folthe corp of all ceremonies, and coarcted within the very narrowe limites of Jewry: signifi-

yng also how much he desyred to be at large among the Gentiles (where he should be honoured in spirit, and truth) gat himselfe thence and went into the borders of Tyre, and Sydon, but as a priuie geste because of the enuious Iewes, who by reason they counted the Tyrias and Sidonians for dogges, and abhominable people, wolde not haue suffered him to haue translated and had awaye the doctrine of the ghospell vnto them. Wherfore beyng there, he vsed not to be conuersaunt in open and common places, as he was wont to be among the Iewes, but went into a house, as though he had bene desyrous to kepe himselfe secrete, and vnknowen. Albeit he coulde nowise so do. So greatly had the fame of his wordes, and dedes spred abrode, and stretched forth it selfe, euen beyonde the bondes and lymites of Iewrye, as though it had then deuised to ouercumme the whole worlde. In this wise is the glorye and prayse gotten by leadyng a godlye lyfe after the ghospell, best of all spred abrode, when that of it owne accorde it followeth hym, who erchueth and shunneth the same. For a certain woman of Canaan, as this rumour was bruted, and noysed abrode of Iesu, came out of the coastes of her countrey, and anon conceiuing a greate confidence of hym, hasted her to the place where he was: and being with muche a doe let into the house, fell downe at his feete. This womanne was not of the Iewishe, but of the heathen religion: not a Iewesse borne, but a Syrophenisse. Here thou seest a figure of the churche whiche anon after should be assembled and gathered together of the gentiles. The Iewes dryue Iesu out of theyr countrey: but they Syrophenisse forsoke her countrey, and wente to mete him. It is but lost labour to cum to Iesu, vnlesse thou haue first forsaken thyne olde vices beyng now familiar, and of houshold with the. Thou must flitte out of thyne owne house, to thentent thou mayest cum vnto the house where Iesus abydeth. This woman had a daughter at home vexed with an euell spirite, by the whiche daughter are vnderstand the people geuen to ydolatrie. Wherfore she desyred Iesu that he wolde vouchsafe to delyuer her from the spirit. How muche perfyter was the fayth of this heathen woman, then of the ruler of the synagoge: Iesus because he wolde make the faythe of this woman more apparaunt to all men, shaped her an answere as though he had bene of a Iewish minde, saying: suffre the children, first to be filled. It is not beseeming that I take the breade of the children, and caste it to dogges. For the Iewes do glory, and make theyr vaunte that they alone be the children of God, and esteme the gentiles, who are of a contrarye relygion to theyrs, for dogges. He calleth the vertue of the ghospell bread, whiche by the heauenly doctrine, and pure faythe, healeth all diseases, and expelleth all kynde of diuels out of mennes sowles. The woman nothing offended with this rebuke, tourned his wordes into an argumente to obtayne her peticion, the whiche he spake (as it semed) because to shake her of that she shoulde make no further suyte and requeste vnto him herein. Thou sayeste very well, sayeth she, Lorde. We heathen people haue not disdain at the Iewes, that they (as children) doe honorably sit at the table of theyr tretding rythe father and eate theyr fyll of the holye loaues. But yet dogges are permitted to eate the crummes whiche fall downe vnder feete from the childrens table. Iesus, as though he had bene ouercum with so great faith, pacience, humblenesse of minde, and constancy of the woman, answered, and sayd: By reason of this answere thou obteynedst that perfoyre, whiche it was not yet tyme for me to geue the.

Get

Get the home, thy daughter is nowe deliuered of the spirite. The woman gaue credence vnto his wordes, and so departed thence with greate ioye and gladnesse, and proued all thinges true, that Jesu tolde her. For the founde her daughter at reste in her bedde, no we cleane deliuered from any further vexation of the fiende. Assuredly the faythe of the mother enforced Jesu to heale the daughter. Assone as the euill spirite is once put to flighte, then foloweth there incontinent, quiet of minde and conscience. For that euer foloweth innocency & cleane life. So at this daye the congregation of godly folkes, resorteth vnto Jesus, and maketh intercession for suche as are no lesse vexed with Idolatrye, ambicion, wrathe, couetousnesse, and a furious desire to make warre, then yf they were vnder the tyrannie of some foule spirite. The Jewes thoughte it not beseming that they whiche a litle before were enforced to doe all mischiefe at the will and pleasure of diuels, shoulde so dayrely thoughte the grace of the gospell, be receyued to the dignitie, and felowship of the children of God: and the cause why, was by reason they perceyued not howe this high preeminence oughte not to bee estemed by consanguinitie or kinred, but by feruentnesse, and constancye of faythe, towardes the Lorde Jesu. Christe was promised vnto the children of Israel, and to the posteritie or succeslours of Abraham: But they are the posteritie of Abraham which folowe the fayth of Abraham. They are the children of Israel which require not heauen gates to be opened vnto them for theyr merites sake, but goe aboute violently to entre in by force of an euangelike faith. For Israel is as muche to saye in the Hebrue tongue, as a man strong or valiaunte against the god. For when the Gentiles (who before tyme were blemished with all kindes of vices, and had no good dedes at all, whereby they might make anye iuste title or clayme vnto the kingdome of heauen) were by the iustice of God cleane excluded and shut out: then brake they in by the windowe of mercye, and made themselues a waye in by constaunte faythe, as it had been with some toole or weapon, violentlye breakynge by the walles of the same kingdome. The time was not yet come that they shoulde be openly called to the felowship of the kingdome of heauen: but yet the Lorde maketh many forelignes of theyr vocation, as one desirous to preuente the thing, whiche he chiefly desireth.

¶ And he departed agayne from the coastes of Tyre and Sydon, and came vnto the sea of Galile, thorow the middes of the coastes of the ten cities. And they brought vnto him, one that was deafe & had an impediment in his speache. And they prayed him to put his hande vpon him. And when he had taken him aside from the people, he put his fingers into his eares, and bit spit and touched his tongue, and loked vp to heauen, and sighed and sayde vnto him: Ephata, that is to saye, be opened. And straightwaye his eares were opened, & the string of his tongue was lewsed, & he spake playne. And he commaunded them that they should tell no man. But the more he forbad them, so muche the more a great deale they published, saying: He hath done al thinges well, he hath made both the deafe to heare and the dumme to speake. The texte.

After this sede was priuely, and as a man would saye, by stealth, so wen amonges the Tyrians, Sydonians, and Cananites, the Lorde reculed, and wente agayne vnto þ lake of Galile: leauinge Sydon, and passinge alonge by the countrey of Decapolie or ten cities, wherag before he healed a man vexed with a spirite. And when he was hither cummen, they brought him a pitifull sight, that is to wete, a manne bothe deafe, and dumme. For he muste nedes be dumme, whoso is of nature deafe: But more miserable is his deafenesse, which lacketh meete eares to heare þ worde of god. He is worse dume, who hath no tongue to confesse his owne filthie liuing and gods mercye. By the hearing of fayth, beginneth our saluacion: and by confession of mouth, is the perfection of soule healthe. The Iewes albeit they dayely hearde Iesus speakinge, yet they hearinge heardе him not, because folowinge thensample of a serpente called an Aspide, whyche stoppethe her eares against the voyce of the wise enchaunter, they wouldе geue no credence vnto suche thinges as they heardе. And therefore had they a tongue to backbyte, and make yll reporte: but none at all to profesſe the holsome faythe of Christ. But what shall this sely poore wretche doe, who hath neyther tongue to desire the Lord to geue him healeth, nor eares to heare that voyce of Iesus, whiche reysethe to life euen the deade? Other that had bothe tongue and eares holpe him. They brought him vnto Iesus: they besought him of his gracious goodnesse, to vouchesafe to laye his handе vpon him. So pleasethe it the moste mercifull lorde to helpe sinners, euen at the contemplacion of other mennes faythe. The christian novice is broughte vnto Iesu. He hath made an ende bothe of yll doinge, and naughtye speakynge: but yet hathe he not learned to dooe well: yet hath he not learned to confesse the goodnesse of the gholpell. For how we can he so doe vnleſſe Iesu laye his handе vpon him? When he but laboure in vayne yf Iesu put not to his secrete power and vertue. The lorde couldе euen with the bare worde of his mouthe, haue easlye healed this deafe and dumme felowe: but this fourme of healing was set out for our enstruction. For like as ꝑ wordes of Iesus are moste commonlye parables or misteries: euen so be many times his doinges too. He toke him by the handе & led him aside from the multitude of people. Safe is he whomsoeuer Iesus hath taken, and seuered from the rushing of this troublous, and vnquiet worlde. Then put he his fingers into his eares, and touched his tongue with his spittell. Nowe is healthe verye nere when Iesus by vertue of his spirite (whiche is the finger of god) vouchsafeth to touche the eares of our minde, when the spettell of heauenlye wisedome (whiche is himselfe) cummynge out of the mouthe of the highеste father, dayneth to touche the tongue of our soule, to thentente that all godly thynges maye vnlisse and sauiour vnto vs. For without this humour, there is no tast: and if mannes spettell be sautie, then maketh it a wrong iudgement in tasting. This spettell dothe not onelye leuse the tongue, but also open the yes of the blinde borne person, as often as it is mingled with earth, and the yes are therewithall anoynted: whereas the spettell of the Philosophers, and the Pharisеis, doethe rather put out the yes altogether. As Christe did, so in manour doe the teachers of the gospel. They take men and leade them away from the multitude, when they call them backe from the brode waye (by the which very many walke vnto damnacion) to the felowship of the litle flocke of true Christians. They put their fingers, into theyr eares, when perswadinge them to put no trust in thinges transitorie, they skyrre and exhorte them to embrace the heauenly doctrine. They laye spettel vpon their tonges, when they exhorte men to profesſe the Euangelike and Christian fayth.

They lay on their handes, when they geue the holy goſt to them that be baptised: by whome theyr sinnes are taken awaye, and innocencye is conferred. But the teacher doethe all this in vaine outwardlye, excepte Christe worke within and sende downe his godly vertue from heauen. Iesus willing to shewe vs as it were a certayne figure hereof, when he had taken the man and firste put his fingers into his eares, and then spitte on his tongue, helifted vp his iyes to heauen, and sighed. This sighing came not of anye mistrust to cure the manne, but was a passion or poynte of him that greuously bewayled mannes calamitie.

For what thinge is more miserable and wretched then they, whose inwarde eares are so occupied and encumbred with worldly lustes, that they cannot heare the worde of God: whose tongue is so entangled, and infected wyth naughty affections, that they sauour not of heauenly thinges, but are altogether dumme to confesse theyr owne sinfulnes, and dumme to set out the mercy of God. Therefore the sighinge of Jesu, putteth vs in remembraunce in what case we were: but his losing vp into heauen, taketh away desperacion therby ing vs from whence cummeth our redy succoure, and also whom we ought to recken our selues bounden vnto, that we, whiche had before open eares to heare detraccions, ribaudry, fond tales, Pharisaicall doctryne, opinions of Philosophers, and the suggestions of the diuell, haue now the same opened, to heare the heauenly doctrine of the ghospell: and that, we whiche had before our tongue so infected with the spettell of the flesshe, that we lothed the delicate foode of the heauenly Philosophie: so tied with the diuels bondes that we coulde neyther knowledge our offences, nor serue our goddes glorye: Do now confesse howe we nothynge is due vnto vs for our deserues but onelye hell: and howe it cummeth wholye of the bounteous goodnes of God, that we be chosen bothe to the name, and also to thinheritaunce of the children of God. Wherefore let the prieste in lyke maneur rather mourne, then rage againste other mennes sinnes: rather sorowe, than be angrye. Neyther lette hym chalenge vnto hymselfe the power to geue absolucion: but loke vp to heauen, confesslinge, and testifyinge thereby, that all that euer is doen through sacramentall rites, and ceremonies, is done by goddes power alone, and not by mannes. Jesus sayed vnto the man: Ephata, whiche woorde signifieth in the Hebrewe tongue, be opened: And by and by of his worde there ensued a vertue. For anon his eares were opened, and the bande of his tongue was lowsed, and he spake redily. They had open eares, who after the lorde sayed vnto them (come after me) forsoke all that euer they had and folowed him. They had a readye tongue, which after they had receyued the holy goste, spake with sundrie languages the wonders of god, and aunswered the rulers charging them that they shoulde not from thencefoorthe be so hardye, as to preache the name of Jesu, on this wise: whether we oughte rather to obey god then men, iudge you. These thinges were doen aside from the people. For we muste not make a wicked multitude witnesse bearers of our firste professing of the gospell, lest they haue in derision, that they as yet beleue not. And sayed vnto him: Ephata.

Therefore Jesus charged them they shoulde tell nobodye herof, not for that he wouldenot haue his miracle disclosed and knowen, but because the thinge selfe dothe beter declare the power of god, then any publycacion, or setting forth of man. They all knewe this deafe & dum person. Now we he hearde, & had his tonge at will. And so did he blase, euen when he spake neuer a woorde of the mattier, the greate benefite receyued of Jesu. Further, Jesus was in this world conuersaunte vnder the shape & likenes of man, because he wouldo instructe menne, and teache them what they shoulde doe. What thinge soeuer And he commaunded openly.

a manne dothe that is excellente, and prayse worthye, lette him coueté to haue no wordes made thereof, to thentente that mannes glorye maye be vtterlye suppressed, and onely goddes glory aduaunced. It is ieopardy to magnifye and extoll manne, but the power, and goodnesse of God, is euermore moste worthely praysed. Albeit neyther is the glorye and prayse of man (if anye be due vnto him) cleane suppressed: yea oftetimes the more it is auoyded, the more it folowethe. But a christian teacher muste be of this mynde, to desyre, as muche as in him lyeth, to be knowen to god alone: and in so doing, he is the more worthy to be praysed to euery body.

For whoso desirethe glory and prayse among men, the same in that he is so desirous therof, deserueth to haue none at all. Wherfore in that Iesu forbadde them whiche broughte the dumme manne vnto him, to tell anye bodye what was done, he thereby more prouoked them to publish, and tell it abrode to all menne. And so muche the more had they his greatnesse, and excellencie in admiracion, because that he, who bothe was able to doe, and wrought in dede suche feates among them, did not onely not require of them anye mede or rewarde for his labourr, but also wouldne not so much as take the fruicion of that glorye and prayse, which he moste worthely deserued, for so notable a miracle. But as it is the properrie of him who is beneficiall in dede, to require no prayse for his benefite: so is it agayn the part of a thankfull perso, so much the more earnestly to render hartie thankes, because the authourr of the benefite loketh for none at all. Therfore those felowes reported euery where of Iesu, saying: He hath done all thinges well, and hath restored to the deafe theyr hearing: and to the dumme, theyr tongue, and speache. This prayse is agreable to none, but to god alone. No earthly manne doeth all thinges aright. All the miracles that Iesu wrought, were bidoubtedly our benefites: whiche miracles if a man wey and pondre after the outward apparaunce of corporall thynges, in dede there were many of them, that farre passed this, wherewith he made the deafe to here, and the dumme to speake. But according to the spiritual meaning hereof, the fume of a christen mannes felicitie standeth in this poynte, that with his eares he may heare the wordes of the gospel, and then with his tongue, vttre, & speake what he hath learned, and geuen credence vnto.

He hathe done al thinges wel, &c.

The texte

¶ In thole dayes when there was a very greate companye, and had nothyng to eate, Iesus called his disciples to him, and sayde vnto them: I haue compassion on the people because they haue nowe bene with me thre dayes, and haue nothing to eate, and if I sende them away fasting to theyr owne houses, they shall faynte by the way. For diuers of them came from farre. And his disciples answered him: where shoulde a man haue bread here in the wildernesse to satisfie these? And he answered the: Howe many loaues haue ye? They sayde, seuen. And he cõmaunded the people to sitte downe on the grounde: And he toke the seuen loaues. And when he had geuen thankes, he brake them and gaue to his disciples to set before them. And they did set them before the people. And they had a few small fishes and when he had blessed, he commaunded them also to be set before them. And they did eate and were satisfied, and they toke vp of the broken meate that was left, seuen basketfes full. And they that did eate were about fower thousand. And he sente them away.

The

He Lord Jesus erhoyteth his disciples by diuerse ensamples, to continuall beneficence and well doyng, the chiefeste parte wherof is to feede the ignorannte people wyth the doctrine of the gholpell. Therefore he repeteth thensample of feadyng, because the thyng so ofte tymes pynted in theyr myndes, should in no case out of memorie. For it forturned on a certayne seafon, that a greate multitude of people, came vnto hym to wyldernes, bryngyng with them many sicke folkes, payned with diuerse diseases. The moste gracious Lorde cured all theyr corporall sicknesses, and fedde theyr soules with the heauenlye doctrine. And by reason he was so readie to do good, he so wan the hartes of the multitude, that they could by no meanes be seuered from hym.

And whiles theyr myndes were wholelye fired vpon the kyngdome of God, they remembred not to make prouision for vitayles, in somuche that when theyr bodies were healed, and their soules fed, they were in great daunger to sterue for hunger.

Assuredly hunger is a sore thing, especially when it chaunceth among a multitude. Jesus mindyng to teache the apostles by dede selfe that suche shall want nothing, as cleaue vnto hym by sincere fayth, sayed vnto them: I haue compassion vpon this multitude. For lo, they haue been with me nowe this three dayes, and haue nothyng to eate. If I sende them awaye fasting as they be, it is to parde leste they faynte, and tyre by the waye, before they gette home. For sum of them came a greate waye hence. By these wordes Jesus prouoked hys disciples to attend vnto the miracle, whiche he purposed to worke. Howebeit they being yet rude, and ignorannt, had cleane forgotten howe that before he had fedde a greate numbre of people with fiue loaues, and two fishes: and therefore answered in this wyse: Where shoulde a man haue breade here in wildernesse to satisfie so great a multitude, and so houngrye withall by reason of two dayes fastinge, although there lacked not money ynough to bye it? Here thou hearest an answere of forgetfulnesse, and distrust. And his disciples answered &c.

Jesus asked them agayne: howe manye loaues haue you? They loked vpon theyr vitayles, and answered, seuē. Doubtlesse this was the true Euangelike breade, not of barly, but of wheate, like as were the loaues before mencioned, wher with the chyldren are fedde, whiche is not caste to dogges. Barlie hath in it his proper floure, but couered with a rough huske, or couering. The fiue bokes of Moyses called the Pentateuche, haue also in them a spirituall vnderstanding, but the same is wrapped and couered with darcke figures. Thenūbre of the loaues was multiplied, but the couering was taken awaye, token that grace was encreased, and ceremonies diminished.

Nowe whereas the disciples thought that these vitayles would not haue been sufficient for so greate a multitude of people, Jesus, that notwithstāding, commaunded them all to sitte downe vpon the grounde. It is a blessed feaste where the hungrye multitude sitteth downe at Jesus commaundemente. That is doen, when soeuer the people desirous to heare goddes woorde, cum to the temple, there to heare Jesu speaking by the mouth of a good preacher. For many do cum with no more deuocion to the sermon, then the common sorte be wonte to goe vnto the stage, there to beholde a playe or enterlude, of sum baghostly mattier. He that will haue his belye filled with the loaues of Jesu, muste must sitte downe, and that vpon the grounde. He muste cum hither with quiet affections. They deserue not to be fed with this meate, whiche lye all at pleasure in the beddes of the Pharisees, and Philosophiers doctrine. O thou that arte but yearth, and ashes, why art thou proude? why art thou puffed vp with vayne glory, by reason of thy vayne philosophy? why puttest thou confidence in these thinges, wherin is no saferie? know ye thy selfe: Humble and caste downe thyselfe vnto the grounde from whence thou camste. Let all fleshely lustes bee settled, and quiet in the: and then shalt thou be filled with Christes meate. All this that I speake of was doen. The whole multitude sate downe vpon the grounde. Beholde now, and marke me well what Jesus doeth. He toke the seuen loaues, and to shewe that all cummeth of God, what soeuer conduceth vnto mannes saluacion, he lifted vp his iyes to heauen, for there dwelleth the father, of whom he commaunded this breade dayly to be craued, and gaue hym thankes: not takynge vpon him as of himselfe, the authoritie of this ministerie, leste pure manne shoulde take ought vpon him. For he might iustly haue taken vpon him this authoritie, as equal with the father (albeit concerning also his diuine nature what soeuer he is, or hathe, he is debtour for the same, vnto the father) but thensample that he shewed, was more expediente for our enstruccion.

And he toke the seuen loaues &c.

After he had geuen thankes, he brake the loaues, and being broken, deliuered them vnto his disciples: that euen as they receiued them, so shoulde they sette them before the people. Mannes wordes are not pythy and effectuall, excepte they be handeled before, with Christes handes. Thou hast eloquence: Thou hast knowleage in philosophie: Thou hast a good witte: thou hast knowleage in holy scripture, in the lawes ciuill, and canon: whatsoeuer thou hast, firste deliuer it vnto Christes handes: let him bresse, and halowe it: lette hym breake it: and then do thou minister the same vnto the people: not as thyne owne, but as receyued, and deliuered of him. For there are some, whyche breake the bread of holy scripture not as they ought to do, writhing and wrestling it to the lustes of man, and not to the wyll and pleasure of Jesu. For Jesus doethe so breake it, that the hungry multitude maye be filled, and not that the ambicion, and couetousnesse of prynces maye be therewith bolstred, and maynteyned. Whoso teacheth the ghospell for gayne, or for to get glorye, and prayse of mā, or els for any other worldly affeccions, the same receyueth not loaues broken of Christ. Therfore in preaching the worde of God, and Christes ghospell, let vs folowe his disciples. As Christ commaunded them, so did they set the loaues ready broken to theyr handes, before the multitude.

Here some manne will saye: what, is there no meate? Is it onely a breade feaste? There must not be muche added vnto the loaues of the ghospell. There is nothyng of more bertue and efficacie: nothyng more swete and pleasaunte in tasting then they are: And yet through the bounteous liberalitie of the feast maker, there are added vnto the same a fewe small filches. Paraduenture the apostles will put hereto certayne epistles, howbeit theyr puttinge to will not be muche, for but a very small matier or trifle, in respecte of the euangelike prouision. This addicion was permitted for the lothsomnesse of certayne persones: but we must require it no more. We oughte to contente our selues with the meate alreadie prepared, leste yf any would styll put to of his owne prouision whatsoeuer hym lusteth, it shoulde then become the feaste of mennes, and not of

And they had a fewe smal filches &c.

Jesu

Jesu Christ. For Jesus did lykewyse halow these litle liches, albeit they were but few, and small, and commaunded them to be set downe before the people, whiche thing yf he had not doen, they should not haue been set before them at all. Do not here complayne of the frugalitie, and slender prouision of meate: ds if thou wilt permit the knackes and tunchettes of the Rhethoricians, the royall dishes of the Philosophers, and the vnsauerie potage of the Pharisees, to be serued in, then shall it be leopardie, leste the bread of the gospell sauer not vnto the mouthe that is infected & brought out of taste with so many sortes of diuerse meates. Now that we may depart with full bellies from this euangelike feaste, let the teachers do as the apostles did, and likewise the people, as did that multitude. What did the apostles? Is they receiued this meate of ỹ lorde, so did they set it downe before the people without any doubting, or reasoning. The multitude was also quiet, and receiued it without murmuryng & grudgeing against theyr ministers, and toke well a worth whatsoeuer was geuen them. And so in conclusion, besides that euery one of them had ynoughe, there were also seuen basketes fylled with the meate that remayned when euerye man had eaten his fill. Moreouer the people (whiche a manne may more meruayle at) that were satisfied and filled here with, doue almost to the number of fower thousand persons. Certes this was the largest of goddes worde and the ghospell. Whensoeuer there cummeth a proud teacher fournished with no small prouision and furniture, as well of liberal sciences, as of other good learning, lawes, and constitucions, so that he hath in all thynges exceedyng greate skill and knowleage, crying ofter that he shall not haue tyme ynough to prosecute his matter, that his audience is not receyuable of so high misteries, that he is drowned with copie of matier, and standeth in doubte where he maye best begin: Do not we see it cum to passe that his audience departeth away hungrymuche lesse then remayneth there ought, when the feast is ended. But of this frugall, and sparing feast of Jesu, there are lefte seuen basketes full of broken meate, vnspent. The aboundaunce and plenty of the euangelike feast, standeth not in the multitude of sciences, as it were in sundry kyndes of meates so many in number, that the sight of them will take away a mannes appetite, and prouoke hym to lothsomnesse, nor in sauces made of the mengling together of all maner of humayne and secular learnynges, but in the vertue of the worde deliuered vs of god, and truly ministred without any fraude, or couine. When Jesus had thus fed the people, then he sent them away. This is also sumwhat, happely to depart from the feast or banket of Jesu. So are they sent away, who render him hartie thankes: who laye vp his benefites in theyr soules, and there digeste the meate whiche they haue receyued: who after they be cum home (their bodies beyng now, as it were well fedde) do by good workes doing, practise suche thynges as they haue learned.

And they that eate, &c.

And he sent them away &c.

The texte.

CAnon he entred into a ship with his disciples, and came into the partes of Dalmanutha. And the Pharisees came forth, and began to dispute with him, seking of him a signe from heauen, tempting him. And when he had sighed in his spirite, he sayethe: why doth this generacion seke a signe: Verely I saye vnto you, there shall no signe be giuen vnto this generacion. And he left them, and went into the shippe agayne. And departed ouer the water.

These thynges so doen, Jesus forthwith departed thence, and hasted an other waye. The heardman muste neuer be conuersaunt with his flocke, but when it is to be holpen. He hath healed the sicke, taughte the people, and fedde those that were in leopardy to perishe for hungre. After all these benefites [illegible] to tarrie with them, semeth to bee a poynte of suche a one as loketh for summe thankes or gramercies. The necessitie of the multitude, whether it be bodily, or ghostly, is by all manour of meanes to be holpen: but the nature of ỳ people is suche, that for the least good tourues of all, they are wonte to geue moste hartie thankes. It is the smallest benefyte that canne be, to feede and nourishe the body: it is a greater to heale it, and the greatest of all to heale and feede the soule, with holy doctrine. Of one of them made him a kyng for the doctrine that he preached, & the diseases he cured: But for meate, they gaue him a kyngdome.

And ỳ pharisees came forth, &c. And leste they wouldenowe haue done the like agayne, he departed straighte wayes from them, and takyng with him his disciples (whom he chose because they shoulde alwayes accompanye him) he toke ship, and so came vnto the coastes and borders of Dalmanutha or Magedan. And that the vnbeliefe of the Pharisees may the ofterner appeare, they came likewyse hither out of theyr countrey, not to be healed, but to pike quarels. For they had enuy at his miracles, and enuied also the people whiche were holpen with so manye of his benefytes. For this cause they began to reason the mattier with him, as though the miracles which he shewed, had not been wrought by the heauenly power, because they were (as they sayed) but base, and after a common cast. Wherfore in case he would haue them, being men far aboue the commune sorte, and as you would saye, heauenlike fellowes, to beleue in hym, they required hym to shewe some signe from heauen, as Moyses obteyned Manna from thence: and beside brought to passe by his prayers, that fyre sodaynlye discended from the same place, and consumed both the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and to be shorte, al the water that was in the trenches or cesternes by the altare.

And began to dispute with hym. &c.

The Lorde knowing right well that what soeuer he had done, they would haue had a quarell to him therfore, for if there had been any wonderfull signe or token shewed the from aboue whereas the princes of darkenesse do raigne, they might with much more apparaunce of trueth, haue ascribed it vnto Beelzebub, then those thynges whiche they saw with theyr yes, hearde with theyr eares, and handled with theyr handes, chiefly because it is a commune practise among the experte in arte Magike, to cause sodayne showers, and dasshes of rayne, thunder, lightnyng, hayle, and tempest: the Lorde, I saye, perceyuing this, sighed in his spirite, shewyng thereby how wofull he was for theyr so obstinate vnbelieffe. And as though he had been in a fume, and chafed with anger, spake vnto himselfe on this wise: What a frowarde nacion is this, whiche after so manye miracles seue, yet neuertheleste requireth a signe, as though she had neuer sene none before. Then he tourned him to the Pharisees, and sayed: Of this one thing, I assure you: there shall no signe be nowe geuen vnto this nacion, the whiche onely to tempte me, she requireth from heauen. But she shall haue a signe geuen her that she loketh not for, from beneath. And it shall bee the signe of Jonas. For this Jonas after he was swalowed vp the space of thre dayes, and beleued to haue been dead, was deliuered againe out of the whales belye, when no man thought it: euen so the sonne of man after he hath been hid about thre dayes space in the belly of the earth, shall rise vp alyue agayne, contrary to all your expectacion and wening.

And when he had sighed. &c.

Verily I saye vnto you. &c.

And he left them. &c. When the Pharisees vnderstode not these wordes, Jesus departed from them, as from desperate persons, and retourned vnto the shippe, and so passed ouer the water: Thus the Lorde Jesus desirous of mannes helthe, ofte times chaunchaungeth place, not seking for sacrifices, wherof he had long agoe his fyl, but true faith. This scarcely found he in the worlde, but yet euery where rather then among the pryestes, Scribes, Pharisies, and head men of the people. So yll doth the faith of the gospel agre with the, that haue the world at will.

¶ And they had forgotten to take bread with them, neyther had they in the shippe with them more then one loafe. And he charged them, saying: take hede, beware of the leuen of the Pharisies, and of the leuen of Herode. And they reasoned among them selues, saying: We haue no bread: And Jesus knewe it, and sayth vnto them: why take ye thought because ye haue no bread? perceyue ye not yet neyther vnderstande? haue ye your hertes yet blynded? haue ye eyes and se not? And haue ye eares and heare not? Do ye not also remember? when I brake fyue loaues, among fyue thousande men? How many basketes full of broken meat toke ye vp? They sayde vnto hym, twelue. When I brake seuen among foure thousand, how many basketes of the leauing of the broken meate toke ye vp? They said, seuen. And he sayde vnto them: howe happeneth it that ye do not vnderstand? The texte.

Here as they sailed, the disciples called not to remembraunce how they had forgotten to prouide themselues of breade. For they hadde but one loafe with them in the shippe. Jesus perceiuing howe they were careles by reason of forgetfulnesse, and not for the faith they had in him, gaue them warning therof, and by that meanes caused them to be carefull afreshe: Albeit this their carefulnesse came not so muche of distrust, as it did of an humaine negligence, and forgetfulnesse.

For hauing their myndes wholy fixed vpon the woordes and deedes of Jesu, they hadde no remembraunce of breade: and it was expedient for vs that they so oft tymes forgatte howe a greate numbre of people was fulfilled with fiue loaues, to thentent it shoulde the deplier be fastened in oure myndes howe those personnes shall wante nothyng, who with pure harte and mynde, continually se cleaue vnto Christe. That shippe is sufficiently prouided for, that hathe in it that one loafe, which is Christe Jesus. Wherfore his pleasure was to sturre vp this carefulnes in them, because he woulde heale them therof. And for this purpose, he gaue them a charge saying: Loke diligently that you beware of the leuen of the Pharisees, and of Herode. This woorde leuen (which thei heard, but wiste not what he meant therby) caused the nowe when it was to late, to be carefull, & take thought afreshe, howe they shoulde make prouision for vitailes. Therfore they began to whysper, & saye softely: we haue no bread. For one thyng brought another into memorye. After they heard him once make mencion of leuen, straightwayes it came to their remembraūce that they had forgotte to bye them selues bread. Of this matter they talked softely one to another, as though thei had made a faute through forgetfulnes, because they bought no breade. Howbeit this forgetfulnes pleaseth Jesu very well, whensoeuer through the great desire we haue of heauenly thinges, we forget corporall & worldly matters. They feared leste they shoulde haue bene checked for their negligēce: but thei were rebuked for their haine & superfluous carpe & care. Wherfore, saieth the lorde, doe you thus reason the matter amōg youre selues, beyng carefull because you haue no breade? Haue you as yet, after I haue instructed you with so many precepte, taught you with so many ensamples, & so ofte warned you, no perceueraūce & vnderstanding at all? Are your hartes yet blynded? and be you in case, that you haue eyes and se not? eares, & heare not? Do you not at the leaste wyse remember the thing whiche

was twise done, of late before your iyes: you sawe, not long ago, howe fiue loaues broken with my handes, and dealte of you, suffised fyue thousand people, in suche wyse that euery body had his fyll. And howe many basshettes full of broken meate dyd you then take vp? They sayd, twelue. Afterwarde, whan seuen loaues lykewise suffised fower thousande persones, howe many basshettes fylled you with the reuersion, and meate that was lefte? They answered, seuen. Then sayde Jesu: howe then chaunceth it that sithe you haue bene so oft and manye waies taughte, you do not perceyue howe this care for your foode and liuing is superfluous: and that the monicion whiche I gaue you of the auoydyng the phariseis and Herodes leuen, pertaineth nothinge at all to bread, but to thesche wyng of their doctrine, lest you be likewyse deceiued as they deceyue many a one. I bery small piece of leuen maketh all the dowe sower, or sauery. If the leuen be naught, then is all the dowe marde. They make a shew and semblant of godlynes, notwithstanding they be very farre from true godlines: and they dissent in opinions among theselues, whereas both of them dooe shamefully erre, and be out of the way. For the Herodias do many tymes erre by reason they be ignorannt in holy scripture, beleuing not that the bodies shall rise agayne: and all is because they beleue nothing, but what they se with their iyes: The Phariseis, although they haue the scriptures at their fingers ende, yet blinded with euill lustes and desyres, doe withstande true godlynes. You muste be chiefly ware of their doctrine, lest both youre selues be infected therwith, and also other mo hereafter, by the contagiousnesse of your infeccion. But embrace you the breade made sauery with the leuen of the Gospell, that you maye likewise distribute this pure bread to other.

The texte. ¶ And he came to Bethsaida. And they brought a blynde man vnto hym, and desyred hym to touche hym, and he caught the blynd manne by the hande, and led hym out of the towne, and when he had spitte in his iyes, and put his handes vpon hym he asked hym yf he sawe ought. And he loked vp, and sayde: I see the men. For I perceyue them walke as they were trees. After that, he put his handes againe vpon his iyes, and made him se, & he was restored, and sawe euery man clerely. And he sent hym home to his house, saying: neither go into the towne, nor tell it to any other.

In the meane while they arriued, and came to Bethsaida, and behold howe euery where is ready matter and occasion ministred to shew mercy. Here in a certayne streete, they brought hym a blynde manne, and desired him to touche him. This blynde body desyred nothing himselfe, but intercession was made for him, by other men. No man desyreth healthy of the Lorde Jesu, but suche a one as he toucheth. For the first touche bringeth a man to the knowlege of himselfe. This man was not pore blynde, or a litell appayred, and decayed in sight, but as bylome as was possible to be. They ỳ be so blynd, haue neede to be ledde to Jesu by other men, whiche by prayer maye procure them effectuall touche of his holy hande. Jesus, who coulde with a becke haue healed what blynd manne soeuer hym liste, restored hym not byandby to his sight, because he woulde vnder a figure, shewe his disciples howe muche a do it is, en suche persons can be brought to the knowledge of the truethe as of long tyme haue continued in their errours. Suche a blyndnesse was the blindnesse of the Paynims, and Gētiles, who so many hundred yeares, embraced the worshipyng of Idols, in steade of great godlynes. Suche a one also was the blindnes of the Jewes, whiche could not be made to forsake the superstition receiued of their elders whereunto they had so many yeares accustomed.

Therfore

Therfore when the Bishop and preacher of Gods worde, shall chaunce to mete with suche a blinde man, what muste he do: marke what Jesus dyd. Firste he toke the blind man by the hande. O blessed guide: but whyther dyd he leade hym: he lead him out of the towne. That manne setteth before his iyes the worste ensample or patarne that cā be, whoso folowyth the trace and steppes of the multitude. They fauour themselues to theyr owne perill, that saye thus: I do not this thyng alone. Euery man doeth so, as wellas I. I hadde leauer playe the bu wyse manne with the multitude, then be wyse with a fewe. Suche as are blynd, are diuerse wayes in ieopardy, so lōg as they be among company. They are laughed to scorne: they are runne vpon: they runne, and strike against other: they are thrust out of place, and haue manye a fall. Therfore firste of all the blind manne must be leade out of the place, wherras much company and resorte of people is. He walketh now safely that hath such a guide. What did the Lorde moreouer? he spit in his iyes, and then putte to his handes, and touched them. Neither were his iyes, yet opened: so great was his blindnesse. Then Jesus asked him whether he sawe ought. As he had spoken the worde, the blynd man lifted vp his iyes, conceiuing as it were sum lytle hope to be restored to his sight, and sayd: I see men walkyng like trees. They that haue not yet perfitely receiued the light of the Gospell, whatsoeuer they see in this worlde, seemeth muche greater then it is in dede. They see a tyche man, he semeth a plane tree. They see an heade officer or a prince: they thynke they see an Apple tree, or a Cypresse tree.

When he had spit in his iyes.

They see a stoicke philosopher, with a greate beарde, or a Pharisey trimmed with brode hemmes and phylacteries: they beleue he is a fygge tree. Now if their iyes were clensed, and thinges would shewe and appeare vnto them in their proper lykenes, and as they be in dede, then shoulde they perceyue what maner of trifles, and vanities, suche thinges were, as semeth so greate vnto hym, whiche is halfe blind. But the Lorde who quencheth not the smokyng flare, nor forsaketh him that hath but halfe a syght vntill he seperfitly, dyd effsones put his handes to the blynd mans iyes. and foorthwith he began to haue a clearer sight, and at the length attayned suche perfitenesse therof, that he sawe all thinges clearely.

After that he putte his handes agayne vpon his iyes.

Blessed is he who hauing the iyes of his harte lightned by Christe, seeth euery thyng plainlye. Vnto hym those thynges seame leaste, whiche vnto the worlde appeare greatest. Vnto hym those thynges seme fowle and filthye, that make the goodlyest shewe vnto the worlde. Vnto hym those thynges appeare greatest, whiche seme byle and nothyng worth vnto the same. Whosoeuer thou be that art a teacher of the Gospell, despyse not the weakenes of them whiche are newe beginners in learning the phylosophye and doctrine of the gospell. At the firste time it is ynoughe for them to be brought out of ỹ towne, that is to saye, to haue departed from their olde synnes. Then must the doctrine of the gospell be straight wayes put forth, and preached vnto them whereby their iyes maye be lightened: and firste of all the rudimentes, and firste principles of the euangelike perfection are to be taught, vpon the professing wherof, suche as entre into Christes religion, and be nouices of the same may receiue the sacrement of baptisme. Anone after, there muste be taught them a more secrete and pithy doctrine, whiche shall make them to see, and perceyue euery thyng clearly. These thinges shall the ministers of Jesus Christe doe.

But Jesus himselfe wyll bouchesafe to touche the blynde mans eyes, with an hyd and secrete vertue, that he maye receyue his sight agayne.

And he sent him vnto his house. After the Lorde had done this good dede, he dad the man retourne home to his house, forbydding hym to tell any body what was done. As ofte as he commaundeth any facte of his to be conceled, he teacheth the priestes thereby howe they ought not to seke for any prayse and glorye amonge menne, yf they haue done any thynge well, and prayse worthy, in the ministracion of the ghospell. Agayne eft at any tyme he commaunde his facte to be publyshed and tolde abrode, it is a monicion for hym that is healed of his synnes, bothe to knowledge his owne filthynes, and also to displaie and set out the goodnes of god, vnto whome onely he is a debtoure, for that he is chaunged, and made a newe man. Nowe to retourne into his owne house, is nothyng els, but after the time he hathe once receiued grace from heauen, not to forget what he was before, & to what inconuenience he shall fall agayne, yf he be not preserued thorough the grace and beneficiall goodnes of almightye God. If it chaunce him in his retournyng homeward to cum into any towne, that is to say, among a sinful and a wycked multitude of people, whiche will rather laughe Christes religion to scorne, then beleue in Christe, there ought he not vndiscretely to bable out the misteries of our fayth professyon.

Jesus sayde vnto hym: goe vnto thy house, and if thou enter into any towne, tell no body. He healed one before, whiche was both deafe, and dumme. The same felowe heard the worde of the Ghospell, and spake redily.

Nowe hathe he healed a blynde man, who not withstanding his sight be good and perfite, yet is he commaunded to kepe sylence amonge vngodly persons & synners, for asmuche as when he is cum home, the thynge it selfe shall open the myracle to suche as knewe hym blynde. For there is a tyme when it behoueth a man to profesle the mysteryes of the ghospell. Agayne there is a tyme when it is better to concele the same.

The texte. And Jesus went out, and his disciples, into townes that belong to the citie, called Cesarea Philippi. And by the waye, he asked his disciples, saying vnto them: whom doo men saye that I am? And they answered: some saye thou art John Baptiste, and some saye Helyas: agayne some saye that thou arte one of the numbre of the Prophetes. And he sayde vnto them: But whome saye ye that I am? Peter answereth and sayeth vnto him. Thou arte very Christ. And he charged them that they shoulde tell no manne of him. And he began to teache them howe that the sonne of manne muste suffer many thynges, and be reproued of the elders, and of the hye Prestes, and Scribes, and be killed, and after thre dayes, arise agayne. And he spake that saynge openly. And Peter toke him aside, and began to chide him. But he toutned about, and loked on his disciples, and rebuked Peter, saying: Go after me Satan, for thou sauorest not the thynges that be of God but the thynges that be of men.

Nowe maketh he a triall howe muche his disciples haue profyted ghostly, proouing whether suche thynges be done in them spiritually, as in other haue bene wrought corporallye, and by darke sygures. Therefore he departed from Bethsaida, & went in company with his sayd disciples to ꝑ litle townes belonging to the citie of Cesarea, surnamed Philippi. As he wente by the waie, he asked them what the people supposed of hym. For nowe after so manye myracles wroughte, euen the common sorte ought to haue conceyued some maruaylous great opynion of hym. Jesus was not ignorant what the common opynion was of hym: but his intente and purpose was, to shewe vnto whiche is whiche is the true euangelike faith, that saueth the faithfull: & howe muche it differeth from the inconstante, and variable opinion of the common people. whom (sayth he) do men saye that I am? The disciples answered plainly, as they had learde. Some men (they) suppose thou art John Baptist, who is reryued again. Other some take the to be Helye the Thesbite, whose cōming was promysed by Malachy the Prophete. And agayne other there are, whoe thinke not that thou art Helie, but some other of ỳ olde Prophetes risen againe from death to lyfe. These were the opinions of those men, who as then, had the greatest opinion of him. For being themselues but men, they could suppose nothing of him aboue the state & condicion of man. They supposed hym to be a man of great excellencie, but as yet they beleued not howe he was Messias, the very sonne of God, and sauiour of the worlde. yet was this a rudiment and first principle (suche as it was) of the euangelyke and christen profession, the mystery wherof, was not as yet to be disclosed to the common sorte. For it being once discouered, no man can be saued, saue he whiche beleueth that Jesus is the authour and originall cause of all healthe and saluacion. The well of ỳ euangelike saluacion, is a sure beleke on Jesus Christ, the sonne of God, inspired vs by the heauenly inspiracio. And to wyrng this beleke out of the Apostles, he sayd: The cōmon people, as I perceyue, are wauering in theyr fayth, hauing no constant opinion of me, and yet haue they a greater opinion of me, then such as sayed, I was nothing els but a Carpentours sonne: then such as said I was furious and madde, & sought me out to thentent to haue bounden me with chaines: thē suche as sayd, I had the spirite of Beelzebub. But what say you, who be of houshold, and of familiar acquaintaunce with me, & haue bene alwayes witnesses of all that euer I haue done, and taught: whom saye you that I am? Then Peter the chiefe professoure of the ghospell, made answere in all their names, and sayde: Thou arte that selfe same Messias long agoe promised of the Prophetes, the sonne of the lyuing God, by whō onely halthe & saluacion was promysed vnto the world. When the lord had greatly allowed this open cōfession of his, as inspired of God, and had geuen thereunto a worthy testimony of blyssfulnesse, and pronounced it to be the foundacion of the churche and euangelike Citie, whiche no puissaunce of the deuell shoulde euer be able to shake: Then charged he them straytghtly, that they shoulde in no wyse discouer what they knewe by thinspiracion of the father, before the time were cum. It behoued that the people should awaite for Messias and beleue that he should shortely cum: howbeit as yet, it was not expedient to be knowē that Jesus was Messias. For this was it necessary for our instruccion that glory should spring of base and humble estate. The disciples of an humain affectiō, abhorred the displeasures of theyr maister, muche desyrous to haue hym greatly esteemed and taken for a holy felowe of euery body. But it pleased the euerlasting wisedom to obserue the other order. Therfore Jesus began to teache them what he should suffer, before he would haue his greatnesse and excellencie knowen vnto the worlde. The sonne of manne (sayed he) of whome you haue conceiued so hyghe an opinion, muste suffer great reprochye, many paynes and tormentes, be condemned as a felon, of the Scribes, priestes, and head men of the people: and in conclusion, be putte to a shamefull deathe, as an euyll doer, in somuche that among worldly men, it is not possible for any manne to be counted more vile, abiecte and desperate

Whom the men saye that I am.

But whom say ye that I am.

then he. But for all this, there is no cause why ye shoulde despayre.

Kepe stedfastly in mynde youre confession, whiche ye haue made before me. After they haue persecuted me to deathe, I wyll ryse and be alyue agayne, on the thyrde daye. And where as he had nowe and then before, sumwhat darkely monyshed them of the premisses, at this present he spake his mynde playnly, because it appered they couldе nowe a waye with suche communycacyon, sith they had geuen so noble a verdicte and sentence of theyr maister.

But for all that they couldе not yet a byde to heare any mencion of his deathe, although they shoulde thoroughe hope of his resurrection haue taken comforte agayne. The loue wherwith they embraced Jesu, was great: but yet was the same a very worldely loue, and an humayne affection. For as yet they had not receyued the holye Ghoste, whiche should make perfyte in them, whatsoeuer was imperfyte. Wherfore when Peter hearde suche fell and cruell wordes of condemninge, tourmentinge, and slaing, he was not afeарde to take Jesus aside, as thoughe he would secretly monyshe hym of some thinge whyche shoulde be for his weale, and profyte.

For soth this is mans wisdome, whiche oftetimes studieth to go before the wysdome of god. Yea he was bolde to rebuke his lorde, as thoughe he had not bene well aduised for that he wouldе dye, sith he might auoyde deth. And albeit he beleeued he wouldе be alyue agayne on ỳ third day, yet he thought it muche better for hym not to dye at all, then after deathe to reliue. This lewde taсhe of Peter, although it proceded of a certayne hasty loue towardes Jesus, yet dyd Christe openly, and sharply reprоue, to thentente we shoulde learne in all thynges obediently to folowe the wyl of God, and not with our fonde iudgement, to go before his determinacions. It is not mans parte to take Jesus aside, and rebuke hym, for feare leste he doe, what he hath determyned to doe. But we ought reuerently to beseche hym, that he wyll vouchesafe to take and lead vs, whyther soeuer it please hym. Therefore because he wouldе cleane wede out of all theyr myndes, this naughty affection, he sylle rounned from Peter to his disciples, and then beholdyng them (whome he knewe right well dyd not dissente in opinion from theyr spokesman, though he bolder, and more presumptuous then the reste, was not afeарde to speake his mynde) he rebuked Peter agayne, of whom he was rebuked before, saying: Why lettest thou me Sarane? That worde in the Syrian tongue, signifieth an aduersary: as who saye: Why doeste thou that art but a disciple, assaye to goe before thy maister? Thou that art a man, attempt to go before god: folowe rather behynd. This is not mans busines whiche is now in hande. Thyne affeccion and loue is as yet a worldely affeccion: neyther saurest thou of those thynges whiche are of god. If thou wylte be my disciple, it becommeth the to folow my deathe, and in no wise to hinder it. And not the alone (albeit chiefely thee) but the other whom I haue specially chose) but also all ỳ will professe themselues to be my disciples.

¶ And when he had called the people vnto hym, with his disciples also, he sayed vnto them: whosoeuer will folowe me, let him forsake hymself, and take vp his crosse, and folowe me: for whosoeuer wyll saue his life, shall lese it. But whosoeuer shall lose his life for my sake and the Ghospels, the same shall saue it. For what shall it profite a man if he wynne all the worlde, and lese his owne soule? Or what shall a man geue to redeme his soule withall agayne? Whosoeuer therfore shall be ashamed of me, and of my wordes, in this aduouterous, and synfull generacion: of hym also shall the sonne of man be ashamed when he cummeth in the glory of his father, with the holy Angels.

The texte.

Then

When Iesus had thus spoken, he commaunded the whole multitude to be present with his disciples, leste any should suppose that those wordes pertayned onely to these specially chosen persons. And when they were nowe all together, Iesus spake vnto the with an audible voyce, on this wyse: Many there be which do folowe me rather with feete, then by imitation of lyfe. Neither do all men come to me for one cause or purpose. For some are enticed hither by the noueltie and straungenes of my miracles: some with the desire of bodely healthy, and other some by a greate desyre to heare my doctrine. But whoso will be a true folower of me, yf he intend to be associate with me in blisse & glory, let the same in the meane tyme dispose hymselfe to be my felowe or partener, in suffrynge afflictions, and death. Let hym vtterly renye himselfe, reseruing nothing vnto himselfe in thys worlde, but cleane renouncyng all thynges euen to contempt of lyfe: and finally let euery man take vp his crosse, and folowe me. Let not the disciple be ashamed to folowe his teacher, nor the seruaunt to folowe his maister. Neyther let any intende to come to glory by any other way or meane then that, by the whiche he shall se me goe thither before hym. Whoso thynketh that he hath in himselfe wherby he is able to attayne saluacion, shall perish. And contrarily, whoso distrustyng all his owne aydes, wholly putteth himselfe to my mercy, shall be saued. For it is not inough for my sake lytell to passe vpon landes, tenementes, parentes, wife, and childzen: but lyfe it selfe (for the preseruacion wherof manne forgoeth all that euer he hathe) must likewyse be forsaken.

We ye of good comforte: that neuer perysheth, whiche is geuen to me, no rather ye shall preserue that by losyng, whiche you shoulde otherwyse lose in dede by cuill kepyng. Through faythe of the gospell, to all men is geuen lyfe euerlastyng. Therfore he that setteth more by thys present lyfe, then by the grace of the Ghospell, although he leme for a tyme to wynne the same, yet doeth he in very dede lose it. For no manne can here prolong his lyfe beyonde the tyme appoynted. Albeit, to saye the truthe, neyther in the meane tyme, and before his deathe, liueth a manne in dede, excepte he liue well and vertuously. And after this lyfe (whiche to all men is very short and transytory) he shalbe condemned to euerlastyng deathe. Nowe, whoso for my sake, and for that he is a stedfast professour of the gospell, putteth his life in hasarde of death, shall preserue it by me, whiche els should verely perysshe. Therfore, yf there be nothyng so dearely beloued of manne in this worlde, but he wyll be content to raunsome temporall life with the losse thereof, debatyng the matter with him selfe in this wyse: what shall it auayle me to haue house, landes, goodes, precious stones, wyfe and chyldzē preserued, yf my selfe perysshe, and shall not enioye that I am owner of. Though all these thinges be in safety, yet do they perishe to me ward, yf I fortune to dye. For what thyng can be so dearely beloued and muche set by of man, yf is not to be contemned for the preseruacio of lyfe.

If one woulde offer another as great riches and treasure as euer had Midas, and Crœsus, the beautye of Absolone, the Monarchy and empyre of the whole worlde, and fynally all sortes and kyndes of pleasures and therewith say: take these thynges, and dye: wouldest not thou her by and by refuse this offre made hym with suche condicion, and answere againe: I loue my lyfe alone, better then all these thynges. Sythe, I saye, that euery manne doethe wysely consyder these thynges with him selfe, so ofte as there is any imminēt daunger of bodely lyfe, why do they not then more earnestly loke vpon, examyne, and waye the matter, whensoeuer it concerneth that lyfe inestemable. Nowe euerlasting lyfe is profered vnto thy soule: and wilte thou not exchaunge therfore the shorte, and wretched life of the body: especially sithe that euery manne shall another daye receiue his owne body agayne, restored to a more blessed life. All men must not of necessitie dye for the confession of the ghospel: but yet euery manne ought to be ready in wyll and mynde so to doe, to the intent, that yf the case requyre, they maye passe nothyng vpon corporall life, so that the lyfe of the soule may be saued. Whensoeuer the storme of persecution aryseth, then must this crosse be taken vp. Albeit neither, euen when all thynges be quyet, and persecution ceaseth, shall any manne be without his crosse, vnlesse it be counted an easy thing to renounce all naturall affections, with al worldly pleasures and inticemētes, to cut of the inordinate lustes of the flesh, to bridle excesse, to represse sensualytye and pleasure of the bodye, to subdue lustinges, and lette passe reuengement. For these thynges also muste euery manne doe, that wyll be my disciple, euen at that tyme, when the worlde is moste quiet, and without busynes. But treuth it is that the worlde shall with all maner of engynes ryse agaynste those whiche profesle my name, and threten them with reprochs, banyshement, imprisonment, tormentes, attayndour and deathe. For this is a naughtye nacyon, and shall euer haue in it moe reprouable, and naughty disposed persones, then good menne: among whom it shall be counted the greatest offence that maye be, to profesle my name. And if any manne, the worlde being thus set, and bent against me, wyll be ashamed to confesse himself to be my disciple in this vngracious, and contrefeite nation, where after shorte affliction folowth euerlastyng blysfulnes, hym the sonne of man wyll requyre, and be lyke wyse ashamed to take hym for hys disciple, when he shall ryse ones cum, not lowe, and contemned as he is now, but wonderfull and merueylous in the royaltye and glory of his father: not accompenyed with a fewe poore disciples, but enuironed with innumerable compenyes of holy Aungels.

The.ix. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he sayde vnto them: verely I saye vnto you: there be some among them that stande here, whiche shall not taste of death, tyll they haue sene the kyngdome of God cum with power.

THey shall not be partakers of this glory, who wyll not nowe suffre the infamy of my crosse. The Jewes loked for a merueilous kyngdome of the children of Israel which they supposed should begyn, assone as Messias was come, and therfore they coulde not beleue that Jesus was Messias, because he came so poorely, and lyke an outcaste of the worlde: and muche more were they offended with the mention of his passion and death. They vnderstode not how there were two cūminges of Messias, ꝑ fyrst which after the estimation of the worlde, was lowe and reprochfull, and another full of maiestie, and glorye, which shalbe in the ende of the worlde, to thentent he maye may ioyne vnto him his whole body, deliuered from all euils in the glory of the father: and thꝛowe downe Sathan with all his membꝛes, into the fyre of hell. He wouldeth that the daye of his latter cumming should be vncertaine to all menne: but yet wouldeth he haue euery man to be in a readynes against the same. Therfore for asmuche as there were some among the people whiche by inward imagination sayde thus to them selues: when shall this tyme of glory cum which he promiseth? And peraduenture many of them beleued not that it should euer cum at all: Jesus stablished their wauering myndes with suche wordes as here ensuethe. Be ye right well assured of the thyng I told you, that the sonne of manne (whome ye now see humble and lowe, and very shortly shall see more abiect then all other) shall appeare in the fathers maiestie, with all his holy Angels, and chosen disciples. Neyther is that tyme so farre off.

For there be some here in this company, whose ꝛe euer they dye, shall perceiue that the kyngdome of God is alreadye come with power. There be certayne among them that stande here.

Therfore let euery man make himselfe redy, to thentent he maye be founde worthy to be of the same kyngdome. These wordes that the Lorde spake, the Apostles themselues as then vnderstode not, because there was in them double vnderstanding. For after his death, resurrection, and ascencion, and after the sending downe of the holy ghoste from heauen, then that vertue of the come of musterdsede, that is to saye, of the Euangelike doctrine, began to shewe and putte furth eit selfe.

¶ And after sixe dayes, Jesus taketh Peter, and James, and John, and leadeth them vp into an hye mountayne out of the waye alone, and he was transfygured before them. The texte. and his rayment did shyne, and became very whyte, euen as snowe, so whyte as no fuller can make vpon the yearthe. And there appeꝛed vnto them Helyas with Moyses, & they talked with Jesus. And Peter answeꝛed, and sayd vnto Jesu: Master here is good beinge for vs. Let vs make also three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moyses, and one for Helyas, for he wyste not what he sayd. For they were afrayde. And there was a cloude that shadowed them, and a voyce came out of the cloude, saying: This is my beloued sonne, heare him. And sodaynly when they had loked rounde about, they sawe no man more then Jesus onely with them.

Nowe because the disciples should put no doubtes, but he wouldeone perfourme what he promysed concerning the maiestie of his seconde comming, his pleasure was to geue them some taste therof, and that before their death, so farre forthe as mannes nature was able to receiue or awaie withall. Wherfore after sixe dayes, Jesus toke vnto him three of his twelue specially chosen disciples, as the chiefe and worthyest persons: vnto whom his pleasure was to shewe this light, because thei would make no wordes therof, tyll the time were come that thei might lawfully disclose it. These were Peter, James, and John. Them onely he toke awaye with him into a very highe mountaine. For thei muste be farre from all carefulnes of lowe and yearthly thinges, whome Jesus vouchesafeth to shewe suche a syght vnto. He dayneth euen in these daies to geue by secrete inspiracion, vnto certaine elect persones enhaunced to the mountaine of pure contemplacion, some taste, and syght of the celestiall blisfulnes.

The people whiche abyde benethe in the plaine, know nothing therof, and if a manne tell them, they beleue not. When the Lorde, and his disciples were come to the toppe of the mountaine, fyrst of all they fell to theyr prayers. For prayer is the thynge whiche chiefly prepareth the eyes of the heart, and maketh them meete to beholde suche a light.

and

And he was transfigured .&c.

And loe, as Jesus was in his prayers, the shape of his body was sodaynly chaunged. For his face, whiche before semed not to differe from the common physnamy of other, shone as bright as the sunne. Then did his clothes glister with whytenes, surmountyng the whytenes of the snowe: suche as no fuller can by any crafte make the like vpon clothe. Neyther was Jesus sene thus alone, but with hym Hely, and Moyses talkyng together. It was Moyses office to talke with God. And we rede howe Hely, was taken vp and caryed into heauen with a fyery charyot. Doubtles theyr communication with Jesu, signifieth the agreement of the lawe and the Prophetes. For the lawe shadowed and dyde we out Christe with mistical fygures: and the prophetes shewed before by theyr prophecies, howe Christe shoulde come suche a one, and lyke in all poyntes as Jesus came: and yet the Jewes woulde not beleue. The matter whereupon they talked, was his glorious death & departing, whyche he shoulde in shorte space after fulfill at Jerusalem vpon the crosse, so that here the mencion of deathe dyd lykewise asswage that exceedynge greate pleasure, whereof mans mynde was in no wyse receyuable. Peter being rauished with this vnspeakable syght, and therfore not well able to rule his affectes, brake theyr communication begonne of deathe, saying: Maister speake no more of Jerusalem: Here is good beinge for vs. Therefore lette vs make iii. tabernacles in this place, one for thee, another for Moyses, and the thyrde for Hely.

And there appeared vnto them Hely as wel as Moyses.

And Peter answered .&c.

These wordes of Peter, partly proceded of the feare of death, whiche was depely soncken into his minde, & partly of the great pleasure he had in beholdyng of this light, wherewith he was, as it were dronken. For lyke a man dedyde hymselfe and rauyshed of his wyttes, he wyst not what he sayde.

So great was the feare wherewith these mortall menne, not yet receyuable of ꝑ diuine maiestie, were astonied. Therfore because they should not be ouercome with this passyng great bryghtnes, there arose a clonde whiche ouershadowed them, and tempred that vnsufferable light, so as they might awaite with it. This talke of the diuine maiestie, was geuen to theyr corporall eyes. There was also somewhat geuen vnto theyr eares. For there sounded out of the cloudes, the fathers voyce, being likewise full of maiestie, whiche sayde: This is my moste dearely beloued sonne, geue eare vnto hym.

And there was a clonde that shadowed them .&c.

And a voice came .&c.

Nowe, howe for very shame dooe the Jewes to this present daye, speake agaynst Christ, sith bothe Moyses, and Hely, whiche are of greatest authoritie among them, beare hym wytnesse: sith the father (whom they woulde bee seene deuoutly to serue and worshyp) gaue by hys voyce, the whole authoritie to his onely begotte sonne. The Apostles were delighted with this glory: but let hym that wyll come thervnto, heare Jesu whan he exhorteth to the imitacion of his crosse. O Peter, doe not thou from hens forthe reduke thy Lord: doe not thou go before Gods determinacio. Thou heardest the fathers voyce, which sayd: heare him who is my dearely beloued sonne, as who say: hitherto you haue heard Moyses, & the Prophetes prophecying of Christ, they haue nowe played theyr partes. He is already cum whom they promysed. Hereafter geue no eare vnto suche as promise thinges to cum: but heare you him that is present, and speaketh my wyll and pleasure. No man shall speake truer thinges. Whatsoeuer disagreeth with his wordes, that vtterly refuse you.

Anone

Anone as this voice of the father was heard, all thynges were lodenly chaunged agayne into another shape and lyknes: for when they loked rounde about them, like menne awakened out of theyr slepe, they sawe not one lefte of all that euer they sawe before, saue alone Jesus, whoe was present with them and lodaine- ly when they loked rounde about, &c.

againe, hauing the selfe same shape that he was wonte to haue. He shewed them his greatnes onelye through a cloude, and they were not able to behold it. What would they haue done, if he had shewed them his very hyghnes and maiestie, euen as it is in dede? Therfore Jesus efsones humbled himselfe to theyr lowenes, and forsakyng the toppe of the mountayne, came downe to the reste of his disciples, and the multitude. Here remember thou that art a preacher of the gholpell, howe muche more it becummeth the to humble and abase thyselfe to the capacitie of the weake, the whiche wast once lyke weake as they be: and yf thou haue any hygh or excellent qualitye in thee, the same is Christes, and none of thyne.

¶ And as they came downe from the hyll, he charged them that they shoulde tell no man those thynges that they had sene, tyll the sonne of manne were risen from deathe againe. And they kepte that saying with them, and demaunded one of another, what the rising fro death againe, shoulde meane. And they asked hym saying: why then say the Scribes that Helyas muste fyrst come? He answered, and sayd vnto them: Helias verely when he cummeth fyrst, restoreth all thynges. And the sonne of man (as it is wrytten of hym) shall suffre many thynges, & be sette at naught. But I saye vnto you that Helyas is come, and they haue done vnto hym, what soeuer they would, as it was wrytten of hym. The texte.

As they were cummyng downe from the hyll, ere they cammne to the multitude, the Lorde Jesus forbad those three to tell any bodye what they hadde sene, tyll after the tyme that the sonne of manne were rysen agayn from the dead. Other heretofore when they were lykewise commaunded to holde theire peace, did so much the more blase abrode those thinges whiche they were charged not to disclose. But these .iii. because they heard the fathers voyce saying heare hym, &c. did as they were commaũded, kepe secrete what they had sene, insomuch that they disclosed it not to the residue of the Apostles before the time appointed. They wyste not what the matter meante: but yet they supposed there was some earnest cause, why Jesus woulde not haue it published vnto the people before his resurrection were knowen. For what other good shoulde they haue done by tellyng it abrode, but made themselues a laughyng stocke vnto the faythles? Who woulde haue beleued it to haue bene matter in dede, that Jesu had appeared in such wyse, syth menne shoulde se hym sone after putte to so muche shame and villany, and in conclusion suffer death vpon the crosse? But the disciples (whoe durst not after they had once heardе the fathers voyce, distrust the wordes of Jesu) not vnderstandyng what he meante by these wordes ensuing: When the sonne of manne shall ryse from death, &c. fell to reasoning the matter among themselues, and supposed verely that incontinent after his resurrection, the glory of that kyngdome shoulde begynne, whereof they had nowe taken a saye: howbeit there was a certaine scruple or doubt whiche made muche against them, and that was, because his death was at hande, the whiche he had ofte tymes warned them of before, promisyng he would relyue on the thyrd daye after thesame.

But they had learned of the prophecy of Malachy, howe Hely should come before the great daye of the Lorde. And because they couldе not assoyle this dome of God. Therefore we beleue that after thy resurrection, thou wilt cum in semblable likenes, and suche a one as thou diddeste whylere appeare vnto our syght. But what is the cause that the Scryptes, takyng theyr authorityе of the prophecy of Malachy, doe saye, that the same daye shall not come, vnlesse Helye the Thesbite come before, to make the people in a readines agaynste the cumming therof, leste the Lord smyte all meune with cursyng. Certes Helye, whome we sawe with the in the mountayne, is not yet come. Neyther is there as yet anye thynge done by hym. Therefore, eyther the kyngdome of God shall not come by anyby after thy resurrection: or els there is an other sence and meanyng of the prophecy, then the Scribes doe teache. Vnto this question of the disciples, the Lorde Jesus made a doubtfull answere, for that they were not as yet receyuable of the whole mystery hereof.

For a horryng those thynges whiche pertayned a greate deale more vnto theyr saluacion, they dreamed onely vpon the glorye of that kyngdome, wherof they had taken a taste: perceyuinge not howe this is also the kyngdome of God, when the holy ghoste (the ghospell beeing spreade abrode and euery where preached) shuddueth all the puissaunce, bothe of this worlde and also of oure ghostlye enemy the deuyll. That kyngdome beganne to appeare, what tyme the lame walked, the blynde sawe, the dumme spake, the lepers were clensed, and the deuils caste out. Nowe whan this kyngdome shoulde come, whereof they had a litle before taken a taste, the Lord would not haue them to knowe: yet to thintente they should more parcyentely take his deathe, whom they loued out of measure, he suffred them to dreame for a whyle, that the bryghtnes of the same kyngdome shoulde shortelye cumme, whereof there was a saye geuen in the mountayne. Therefore he temperethe hys answere so discretelye, that he appryoueth the prophecye, and yet dothe not altogether condemne the interpretacyon of the Scrybes, but only reproueth theyr vngodlye argumentacyon, wherby they concluded that the kyngdome of God was not yet come, because that same Hely, whiche was promysed long agoe of the Prophete Malachy, had not as then appeared in the worlde. For nowe the spyrytuall kingdome of God (whiche thynge the proude Scrybes and Phariseis vnderstode not) began to come. Nowe was Hely after the mysticall vnderstandynge already come. Therefore Jesus sayde: bothe that whiche Malachy prophecyed of Hely, and also that whiche the Prophetes spake before of the sonne of man, shal come doubtles. You reade of Hely how he shall come before the great and dreadfull daye of the Lorde, to tourne the hartes of the fathers, to theyr children, and the hearctes of the children to theyr fathers, to thentent that the yonger sorte and posteritie, maye perceyue howe that is already come and performed, whiche theyr forefathers and elders awayted for. Therefore this Hely goynge before, restoreth all thynges, and amendeth what soeuer is not right, leste the Lorde come to the great mischief and vengeaunce of all men, if he fynde them vnprepared.

But like as the prophecie of Malachy speakyng of Hely the forecurrour is true: euen so are the prophecies of other Prophetes like true, whiche foretell howe it shall cumme to passe, that the sonne of manne or euer he shewe hys maiestie, shall suffer many thynges, shalbe serue at naught, be mocked, and in conclusion conclusion putte to death. Yea, to saye the truthe, whatsoeuer was prophesied of Helye to cumme, is already accomplished, and fulfylled: the whiche thyng beyng as yet vnknowen vnto the Scribes and Phariseis, I disclose vnto you my deare frendes. For Helye is already cumme, whoe shewed how the kyngdome of God was present, and moued all menne to be repentaunt for theyr former lyfe. And yet, this notwithstanding, they whiche boaste and crake vpon the perfite knowledge of the prophecye, knewe him not: And they whiche loued better theyr owne kyngdome then the kyngdome of God, deste by him, not as he deserued but as them lyked. For he cumme accordyng to the prophecies of Esaye, and Malachy, cryeng in wildernesse how the great and terrible daye of the Lorde, was present, howe the axe was alredy put to the rote of the tree, and that euery manne shoulde spedely endeuour him selfe to auoyde the vengeaunce of God cumming. But this Helye (who openly without regarde of person, rebuked euery mannes vices) they despised, and put to deathe. Neyther wyll they moze gently entreate Messias, then they haue done his forerunner. But I saye vnto you þ Helias is cumme.

Hereby Jesus declared howe John was Helye, not after the body, but after the similitude of spirite: who, whyles he neyther spared kynges, ne phariseis, was caste into prison, and beheaded. As they dyd by the forewalker, so wyll they doe by his Lorde: The same thyng wyll they lykewyse doe by those Apostles, that shall folowe hym. For whosoeuer hath sincerely preached that goddes kyngdome should cumme, the same hath suffred many afflictions of the vngodly. And whoso sincerely preacheth þ it is already come, must nedes suffre the lyke. With these wordes Jesus called backe his disciples frō þ dreame of glozye, to the remembraūce of the storme that was to cum, and hanged ouer theyr heades, that is to saye, from pleasaunt thynges to necessarye.

¶ And when he came to his disciples, he sawe much people about them, and the Scribes disputyng with them. And straightwaye, all the people (when they beheld hym) were amased, and ranne to him, and saluted hym. And he asked the Scribes, what disputacion among them? And one of the company answered, and sayed: Maister I haue brought vnto thy sonne, which hath a dumme spirite, and whensoeuer he taketh hym, he rendeth hym, and he foameth, and gnasheth with his teethe and pyneth away: And I spake to thy disciples that they should caste hym out, and they could not.

In the meane whyle that they had thus commoned together, they were come into the sight of the people, at what seasō a great multitude, were gathered about the disciples, whome Jesus left beneath in the playne. He sawe also the scribes reasonyng þ mattier, I wot not wherupon, with his disciples. Now when the people had espyed Jesus vnloked foz on theyr behalfe, foz asmuch as he had priuely conueyed himselfe away with a fewe of his disciples, they were astonyed, and met him cummyng full and whole, and saluted hym.

Jesus was not ignozaunt what the scribes disputed on, but yet he asked what the mattier was where vpon they reasoned, to thentent that euery body might knowe what was done. And when both þ disciples & the scribes helde their peace foz beey shame, the disciples foz that they assayed to cast oute a dyuell and couilde not bryng it to passe, and the other because that in the presence of the disciples they depzaued the name of Jesu, as a thyng vertuelesse, and of no efficacie: one of that multitude who ministred the occasion of the reasoning, shewed the whole matier euen as it was, vnto Jesu. Wayster, sayeth sayeth he, I brought hither my sonne vnto thee, who is vexed with a dumme spirite, of whome he is pitifully tourmented. For whensoeuer the spirite, teareth hym he dasheth hym agaynste the grounde, and then the childe foometh at the mouth, gnasheth with his teeth, and cryeth out, and all this whyle he pyneth and consumeth awaye, by reason he is thus vexed. Because thou wast not here I desyred thy disciples that they would chase awaye this spirite, and deliuer my sonne. They assayed to doe it, and couldenot.

The xxvi. Che answered him, and sayeth: O faythles nacion, howe longe shal I be with you? howe long shal I suffer you? Bryng him vnto me. And they brought him vnto him. And assone as the spirite sawe him, he tare him, and fell downe on the grounde wallowinge and fomynge. And he asketh his father, howe longe it is ago sence this happened him. And he sayed of a childe, and oftetymes it hath caste him into the fier, & into the water, to destroye him. But yf thou canst do any thing, haue mercy vpon vs and helpe vs. Jesus sayed vnto him yf thou couldest beleue, all thinges are possible to him that beleueth. And straight waye the father of the childe cryed with teares, saying: Lorde I beleue, helpe thou my vnbeliefe.

When the Lorde heard this, to shewe, that feblenes of fayth was the verye cause why the yonge man was not delyuered of the spirite, he makynge as thoughe he had been wrothe and in a fume, sayed: O faythlesse nacion whiche yet canst not by so many miracles ag I haue done, be brought to beleue. Howe longe shall I tyrynge here in earth, striue with your vnfaythfull obstaclenesse? howe long shall I beare with you? when wyll you come forwarde in those thynges that be of the spirite? when wyll you beleue those thynges that you see not, syth you beleue not the thynges whiche you see with your corporall eyes? bryng hym hyther to me. And they brought hym vnto hym. That sinne cleaueth fast, wherunto the sinner hath from his childehood accustomed. But after he was brought vnto Jesus, he was worse vexed then he was before, by reason of the conflicte which arose betwene the spirite desirous to amende, and sensualitie tollyng and allurynge hym agayne, to his accustomed synfull tyrynge. For anon as the fiende sawe Jesus, he feelyng a contrarye power to his, tooke the younge manne, and sore vexed hym, insomuche that beeyng dashed agaynste the grounde, and rolled to and fro, he foomed at the mouth. This was a pitifull syght, to all the people. But it is a muche more pitifull syght when the sinner possessed with greuous sinnes and of long continuaunce, is lykewyse vexed in soule. Howbeit there is no synne vncurable vnto Jesu.

The Lorde because the other shoulde also knowe in howe euyll case he was, asked his father howe long it was, since his sonne fyrste beganne to be thus vexed: he answered againe, of an infaunce. And the spirite doth not onely, sayeth he, thus vexe hym, as thou seest, but also casteth hym oftetymes headlong into the fyre, and many tymes into the water, because to destroy hym.

But if thou canst do any thing. &c. Here thou hearest a very sore and cruel malady tourned into nature: and therfore the father feared lesse it had been vncurable. For he sayed moreouer. But yf thou be able to doe any thyng haue mercye on vs and helpe vs. He did well to delyre the mercy of Jesu, who could alleage no merites: howbeit thou hearest a wauerynge fayethe, when he sayeth: But yf thou be able to doe any thyng. &c. That fayethe Jesus reproueth, saying: doubte thou not what I am able to doe. For yf thou couldest beleue, there is nothyng but strong and stedfast fayeth may obteyne it. Assone as Jesu had sayed so, the father had beer hope and comforte then he had before, and declaring the great desyre of his mindes with teares, and weping, sayed: I beleue lorde, and yf my beleefe be vn-perfite helpe thou my weakenesse.

The texte. When Jesus sawe that the people came runnyng together vnto him, he rebuked the foule spirite, sayeng vnto hym: Thou dumme and deafe spirite, I charge the cum oute of him, and entre nomore into hym. And the spirite (when he had cryed, and rent hym sore) came out of hym, and he was as one that had been deade, in somuche that many sayed, he is deade. But Jesus caught his hande, and lift hym vp, and he rose. And when he was cum in to the house, his disciples asked him secretly: why could not we caste him out? And he sayed vnto them: this kynde can cum forth by nothyng, but by prayer, and fastyng.

In the meane season, the people came runnyng together on euery syde, to see this sight. When Jesus sawe they were come (for his wyll was to haue them all to bee witnesses of the miracle) then putte he further that almyghtie power wherwith he calleth to life again when it pleaseth him, euen the dead. He threatned the foule spirite to handle hym accordyngly, vnlesse he would incontinente departe, saying: Thou deafe and dumme spirite, I charge the to gette the out of the man, and that thou neuer from henceforthe enter into him again. Jesus is in a fume with the spirite because he may shewe mercye vpon the man: geuyng vs a lesson what we ought to doe in healyng of sinners. A man must so rebuke vice, that he may seme to loue the soule health of the person. And because we should knowe that man laboureth & speaketh in vayne, vnlesse Jesus speake with hym by his secrete vertue and power, the disciples commaunded the spirite to go out, but all was in vayne, because Jesus was awaye. He is awaye so oft as our fayth is colde and wauering, by the which fayth, his wyll is that we obtayne all thynges. What was doen at the emperious voyce of Jesu? By and by the spirite went out.

But to the entent it should appeare that he went out agaynste his wyll, he cryed, and vexed the sely wretche very sore at his departure. For nowe laye he vpon the grounde for dead, in somuche that many sayed he was dead in dede. Thou seest here a figure of a penitent person, and him who turneth from great and accustomed synnes, to amendemente. Nowe harke the hatred of synne delyuered hym from synne: how beit he is at the next doore to desperation, whoso doth knowleageth his owne filthinesse, & also hath gods iustice in remembraunce. But yet lyeth he happily deade that is deade to synne. For then remaineth there nothyng elles, but that he begyn to lyue agayne to righteousenesse. And this benefyte geueth also our most bounteous sauioure Jesus without whome there is no saftetie. He caught the felowe by the hande, and lifted hym vp as he laye in this traunce, and furthwith the same, who before seemed deade, recouered hys former strengthe: and throughe the benefite of Christe rose vp stronge and lustie. But vnlesse Jesu had nowe geuen hym newe grace to leade a godlye lyfe, it had been to no purpose that he was deliuered from the dyuell at the contemplacion of his fathers fayth.

Nowe heareth this deafe manne, whiche before had his eares stopped with worldely lustes agaynst the doctryne and woorde of the gospell. Nowe speaketh this dumme felowe, who before was tongue tyed & speacheliesse by reason of the passions, and wilfull pangues of the flesche. Nowe is the same at rest and quiet, who before styred w the furious rages, sumtime of sensualitie, and pleasure of the body, sumtime of ambicion, & desire of worldly aduancement, others whiles of wrath, nowe of enuy, nowe then of couetousnesse, was as it had been rauished and caryed by the constraynte of sum vncleane and violente spirit. All theſe thinges saw the Apostles, and saied nere a worde, for that they durſt not interrupt the lorde. The Scribes alſo beide their peace being now aſſured by the thing selfe, howe it was not by reaſon the name of Jeſu was ineffectuall and vertuleſſe, that this felowe was no sooner ryd of the spirite, but for the weakenes of fayth. And as it chaunced vnto this yonge manne bodely, ſo chaunced it to the Phariſeis spiritually. They were not healed of their ſinnes bicauſe they beleued not the woorde, by the onelye vertue whereof, they might haue been healed. But when Jeſus was cum into the house, the diſciples now beyng with him alone, aſked him what was the cauſe why they could not caſt out the deuyl, ſyth they had afore caſt out ſo many in his name. For they were diſquieted in mynde, with a certaynte humayne carefulnes, leſte they had vnwares offended the Lorde, and by that meanes loſte the power, whiche he once gaue them to woorke miracles.

Jeſus who is not woont to take a waye agayne, what he hath once geuen, but to encreace the ſame, yet wyll not he haue his gyftes negligently kepte, and after a reckeleſſe ſorte: and nowe hath he ſufficiently declared, in the father of hym that was healed, how weaknelſe of fayth was the only impediſment why the deuyl wente not forthe, the whiche fayethe was not as yet ſo ſtrong in the diſciples, as it ought of congruence to haue been. Jeſus, I ſaye, anſwered, that there was a certayne ſpeciall kinde of deuels, whych couldе not otherwyſe be expelled, then by prayer, and faſtyng. For theſe be the two engynes whych are of moſte force againſt wicked ſpirites. For by prayer, the ſtrength of fayth is reuiued and quickned, as it chaunced vnto the yonge mannes father, who ſayed Lorde helpe my vnbeliefe: And by faſting, bycauſe it contayneth a certaine forbearyng of all carnall pleaſures, the rebellion of the fleſhe is ſubdued. He muſte haue a cleane ſpirite himſelfe whoſo goeth about to caſte out vncleane ſpirites of other. Jeſus and the three diſciples, were newly returned from prayer. The reſte of them kepte companyne with the multitude, and dyd neyther faſte, ne prayе, and for that cauſe were not able ynoughe, to caſte out a dyuell whiche had ſo faſte holde, and was ſo familiar. The more the truſt of our ſelues encreaſeth in vs, the more the power to woorke miracles decreaſeth: The more the power of the fleſhe is mortified in vs, the ſtronger is the holy goſte by whoſe onely power, foule ſpirites are expelled. We muſte therfore ofte tymes prayе that the ſtrength of fayth may in vs be encreaſed: we muſte alſo mortifie our fleſhe continually, to thentent that the ſpirite of Jeſu Chriſte may liue in vs. To be ſhorte, Chriſte doethe nowe prepare his diſciples againſte that houre when they ſhall be commaunded to watche, and prayе leſte they fal into temptacion. But becauſe they toke a nappe after ſupper, the weake fleſhe had the vpper hande.

The texte. And they departed thence, & toke their iourney thorowe Galile, and he would not that any man ſhould know it. For he taught his diſciples, & ſayed vnto them: the ſonne of man ſhalbe deliuered into the handes of men, and they ſhal kil hym, and after that he is kylled, he ſhal ariſe agayne the thyrd daye. But they wyſt not what he ſayed, and were afrayed to aſke him. And he came to Capernaum. And when he was cum into the houſe, he aſked them what was it that ye diſputed among youre ſelues by the waye? And they held theyr peace. For by the waye they had reaſoned amonges themſelues, who ſhoulde be the chiefeſt. And when he was ſet downe, he called the twelue to hym, and ſayed vnto them: yf any deſire to be firſte, the ſame ſhalbe laſte of all, and ſeruaunt to all. And he toke a chylde and ſet hym in the myddes of them. And when he had taken hym in his armes, he ſayed vnto vnto them: whosoeuer receiueth any suche chylde in my name, receiueth me. And whosoeuer receiueth me, receiueth not me but him that sent me.

These thinges doen in maner before rehearsed, Jesus beyng accompaigned with his disciples, began to take his iourney to Jewry warde, who pryuily, and as it were by stealth, passed through the countreye of Galile, not desirous the feared death (whiche in dede he moste feruentlye desyred) but leste he should haue semed to prouoke the priestes, and Pharisies to cõspyre his death before the tyme appointed. This outwarde appearaunce of feare shewed he, because he would cleane delyuer his disciples from all feare, and also declare the weakenesse and frayltie of the nature whiche he had taken vpon hym. As he went by the waye, he repeted vnto them thesame thing whyche they had diuerse tymes heard hym speake of before. For he sayed as followeth: That must nedes cum to passe, whiche I haue so oft tymes told you: the sonne of man shalbe delyuered into the handes of men to be taken, condemned, mocked, scourged, and slayne. Yon must make your selues readye in myndes against the cumming of these thinges, whiche vndoubtedly be at hande. But it is impossible for any of you so to doe, vnlesse thesame be free from all worldly affections, and be also stablished with the strength of the spirite. I know we that the mingyng of death troubleth you very sore. But you must be of good comfort, and take mennes hartes vnto you. I wyll not long forsake you. For I will be aliue agayne on the thirde daye. The disciples were so dull, and feble wytted, that they vnderstoode not these wordes (not withstandyng they were plainly spoken) supposyng there had been sum darke mysterie in them, because it came to theyr remembraunce, how they had been sumtymes before deceiued with suche figuratiue maners of speakynges, as when they were commaunded to beware of the Pharisees leuen. Neither could they yet conceiue in mynde the misterye of the crosse, nor gesse for what purpose he would be slayne, yf he would soone after his death reiyue agayne, seyth that he who cause reiyue when hym luste, can also yf it please hym, not dye at all.

Therfore albeit they were greatly offended with these wordes, yet durste they not aske hym any question. Feared with themsample of peter, who to his displeasure, questioned with the lord herein. For they heard Christe say vnto hym: Go after me Satan: They yet sauoured of the worlde: for goddes determination was to be reconciled to mankynde (pardoned of all his offences thorowe fayth) by the sacrifice of an vnspotted lambe. The disciples dreamed vpon a certaine worldly kingdom, and therfore as they trauayled by the waye, they fell a reasoning among themselues, who shoulde haue the preeminence, and hyer hande in the kyngdome of God, whiche they hoped should very shortly begyn. They sawe a litle before, howe the three disciples were preferred afore the reste in goynge vp to the Mountayne: they sawe howe Peter had the preeminence when the keyes of the kyngdome of heauen were deliuered, and yet sum of theym were his aumcientes, yea and besydes that kynne vnto the Lorde. And wer asshamed to aske hym.

When they were cum to Capernaum, the Lorde asked them aparte what was the matier whereupon they reasoned secretlye betweene themselues, as they went by the way. But they holding theyr peace, and ashamed to make hym an answere (for they knewe well that he being the authour of And he cam to Capernaum. etc.

all modestie and humblenesse of mynde, would disalowe this theyr ambicyousnesse) Jesus because he wouldе cleane wede oute of theyr myndes, this moste damnable and naughtie affection: sate him downe as one that wouldе teache sum earnestе mattier with authoritie, and commaunded theym all twelue to cum vnto hym, and then sayed: If any of you desyre to be the fyrst or chief man in the kyngdom of heauen, the same shalbe laste, and seruaute to all: so far wyde is it, that the kyngdome of heauen ought to be estemed after this worldly kyngdome. And anon, because he wouldе the depelyer fasten this doctrine in their myndes, he called vnto hym a litle childe, and sette hym in the myddes of them. And when he had embrazed hym, signifying therby howe muche he defyed proude persons, and loued suche as are humble and meke in spirite, then sayd he vnto them: Do you see this lytle babe? what is moze abiect and vile, after the estimacion of the worlde? yet they that are suche in humblenesse of minde, simplicitie, and godly lyuing, as this is in age, those doe I set moste stoze by. For reason wyl that I loue them best, whiche be lykest vnto my selfe. This prerogatiue is not estemed by riches, reuenues, power, stately nesse, and violence. For suche as haue these thinges, as they moste resemble heathen princes, euen so are they highliest estemed of theysame. Lyke as earthly kynges beleue that they are eyther honoured, or dishonoured in theyr great estates: so in this Euangelike kyngdome I thinke my selfe to be eyther honoured or dishonoured in suche lytle babes, whome the worlde setteth naught by because of their innocencie, simplicitie, and humblenesse of minde. If you know any to be moze humble and low then I am, hym counte ye for the chiefe mamme in the kyngdome of heauen. But yf ye fynde none, then take you me for the very soueraigne: And as euery man moste resembleth me in consenuing of those thinges, whiche great men sue for in princes courtes, so iudge you hym to be the moste soueraigne persone. Therfore whoso receyueth one of suche litle babes, in my name, the same receiueth me. For it receyueth me to be receyued in those, whom I loue as them that are lyke me. Agayne, whoso receyueth me beyng lowest of all men, after the estimacion of the worlde, receyueth not me, but hym that sent me. For as the maister is honoured or dishonoured in the scholers: so is the father lykewyse dishonoured or honoured in the sonne.

By these wordes, Jesu toke not awaye authoritie from suche as be prelates, and haue the charge or ouersyght of the Lordes flocke, but plucked out of the disciples myndes, all desyre of worldly auauncement. For the lowenesse of this sorte of lytle ones, is not estemed after the quantitie and strength of the bodie, but after the humblenesse of suche a mynde as claymeth nothyng in this worlde that is highe, nor trusteth anywhit to his owne strength, but with syncere fayth hangeth vpon Christe.

The texte. John answered hym, saying: Maister, we sawe one cast out deuels in thy name and he followeth not vs, & we forbad him because he followeth vs not. But Jesus sayed: forbyd him not. For there is no man which (yf he doe a miracle in my name) can lyghtlye speake euil of me: for he that is not against vs, is on our parte. Whosoeuer shall in my name geue you a cuppe of water to drinke, because ye belong to Christ, verely I say vnto you, he shall not leese his reward.

By occasion of these wordes, there arose an other doubt among the disciples, the whiche John propounded in this wyse: Mayster (sayd he) when thou sentest ſentreſt vs out to preache the kyngdome of God, we ſawe a certaine felowe caſte out diuels in thy name, and yet was the ſame neyther of the numbre of the twelue, nor of the ſeuentie, whome thou dyddeſt afterwarde choſe, and ſende out, nor none of all the diſciples, which ſe folowe vs. Wherfore we forbad hym, as one of an other ſecte, and none of thy felowſhip, we forbad: but whether we dyd well or no, we wot not. Jeſus anſwered: Forbyd ye none ſuche as are in any wyſe good to ſpede abrode, and preache the ghoſpell. For yet must not he diſdainfull in receyuing of thoſe, whiche goe aboute, by what endeuoure ſoeuer it be, to auaunce the worde of god. You muſt not conſydre whether he folowe me as a diſciple, but whether he preache my name. If he caſt out diuells by callyng vpon my name, he cannot lyghtlye ſpeake yuell of me. And yf he ſo doe, then will the thing it ſelfe reproue him. For it ſhall be ſaid vnto hym: howe dareſt thou for very ſhame backbyte that name, whiche thou haſt proued mightie, and effectuallin wozking of miracles? Therfore do ye not vpon light occaſion ſuppoſe him to wozke for a naughtie purpoſe, whoſo doeth a godly dede. He that reſiſteth not the ghoſpell, in this poynte further-eth it, becauſe he aydeth not them, whiche take part againſt the ſame. Whoſoeuer is not againſte you, maketh for you. This newe doctrine muſt bee ſet forth whenſoeuer occaſion ſerueth: but with what ſynceritie of mynde it be promoted, it is no mattier to you, ſo that the preacher doe by any maner of meanes further the buſyneſſe whiche you goe about. For not onely they ſhall be rewarded for furtheryng of the goſpell whiche ſhall caſte out diuels in my name, but they alſo who accozding to theyr abylitie, will put theyr helpyng handes neuer ſo litle to the aduaunceyng therof. For whoſo wyll geue you euen but a cuppe of colde water in my name, that is to ſay, in reſpect that ye are my diſciples, and doe my buſyneſſe, be you right well aſſured, theſame ſhall not lacke his rewarde.

¶ And whoſoeuer ſhall offende one of theſe litle ones that beleue in me, it were better for him yf a mylſtone were hanged about his necke, and he were caſt into the ſea. Where- The texte. fore yf thy hand proue the, cutte it of. It is better for the to enter into lyfe, maymed, then (hauing two handes) to go into hell, into fyre that neuer ſhalbe quenched, where theyr woime dyeth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And yf thy foote be a ſtoumbre to the, cut it of. It is better for the to go halte into lyfe, then (hauyng two feete) to be caſt into hell, into fyre that neuer ſhalbe quenched, where theyr woime dieth not, and the fyre goeth not out. And yf thyne eye hinder the, plucke it out. It is better for the to go into the kingdome of God with one eye, then (hauing two eyes) to be caſte into helle fyre, where their woime dieth not, and the fyre goeth not out.

Againe if any ſhall chaunce to let them, by whome the ghoſpell is aduaũced (truly it is aduaunced not by thoſe whom the worlde counteth great, but by litle ones, ſimple perſons, vnderlinges, and men of no reputacion) if anye, I ſay, offend any of theſe litle ones who haue reposed theyr affiaunce in me, ſo true is it that he ſhall not auoyde puniſhment, that he ſhoulde be muche eaſilier puniſhed, if there were a mylſtone tyed vnto his necke, and he caſt into the ſea. The princes of this worlde cruelly puniſhe ſuche, as let theyr deputies to put thoſe thynges in execucion, whiche they haue commaunded to be done. They hange them on a gebet, and alſo many tymes quarter them, or caſt them downe headlyng from ſum high rocke, or els drowne them in the ſea with a ſtone tyed vnto them, for cumming by agayne: ſo true is it that they will not haue theyr great men offended, whom they vſe as miniſters of their tyrannie, that is to say, to oppresse the people. But God wyll muche greuously punyshe suche as willfully hys lytle ones (whom he would to haue the handelyng of thassayres of the heauenlye kyngdom for all mennes saluation) that they cannot put theyr kynges commaundementes in execution. For albeit they shall seeme for a tyme so to doe vnpunished: yet at the leangth shall they not escape the punishment of hell. The tyrauntes of this worlde could inuent no kynde of deathe comparable to that punyshemente, whereby bothe bodye and soule shall seme to dye with continuall tourmentes, and yet neuer can dye. Therefore studye you not howe to be reuenged. Doe your businesse, and God shall punishe those that will let you.

Where fore yf thy hand offende thee &c.

No weif there arise anyelette and impediumente, not of any persecutoure, but on theyr behalfe, whiche appeare to be your frendes, there ought nothynge to be so deare vnto you, that the louether of maye cause you to leaue of the ministracion of the gospell. Admitte it be thy ryghte hande, that is to saye, thy father or beryenere frende, whome thou canste not spare: put case it be thy ryghte eye, that is to were thy welbeloued wyfe, and swete children: Admitte it be thy foote, that is to saye, thy seruaunt, or factour, whose seruice thou canst not lacke for theryploiture of suche affaires, as thou hast to doe in this worlde. Cut of thy hande, plucke out thyne eye, chop of thy foote that hyndreth thee to doe the busynesse of the ghospell. If thou canste bryngе with the to the euangelike saluacion thy father, thy mother, thy brethren, and thy systers, doe it. But yf the tender affeccion thou beareste towardes them, withdrawe the from the ministracion of the ghospell: and againe if it shoulde so come to passe that whiles they refuse to be saued by thee, thou shouldest also perishe, and be damned with them, then cast awaye naturall affeccion, and let the charitie of the gospell ouercumme the charitie of mãe: doe the same thing in perill of thy sowle, that thou wouldest doe in the ieoperdie of thy bodie. If thou were at suche an exigent, that thou shouldest eyther be slayne, or els thy life be saued with the losse of thy hande, thou wouldest not sticke in this case to choppe of thy hand and so with the losse of one membre, were it neuer so necessarie, to redeme thy lyfe. If were a thyng more to be wished to attayne saluacion with thy parentes, and frendes by the ghospell: but if that can not be brought to passe, then is it muche better for the to forsake thy parentes (who doe not onely refuse to be saued them selues, but also goe about to bring thee to lyke confusion) and so to enter into lyfe euerlasting, as a man would say, maymed, then with thy sayd parentes, and frendes to be cast into hell, that is to saye, into fyre whiche can neuer be quenched. There the worme repentaunce that gnaweth the consience of the wretched creatures, dieth not. For they liue onely to theyr tourmente and payne. There the fyre wherwith the damned soules are tourmented, is neuer put out. There shall bothe thy parentes and thou repent, but to late, and in vayne: thou, for that thou folowedst theyr vnlawfull affeccions to thine owne damnacion, and they because they would not be aduertised by the, when thou erhortedst them to saluacion. Neither shall their calamitie helpe the, nor thy torment any thyng release or diminishe theyr payne. Moreouer, the damnacion of the parent that would not be saued, shall not be layed vnto his charge who hastened to doe the busynesse of the gospell. Lyke wyse after this maner cut of thy foote, consydering with thy selfe that it is better for the to cume halt and lame to lyfe euerlasting, lasting, then with whole feete to be throwen into hell, where neyther the fyre cannne be quenched, nor the worme dyeth.

There is nothyng dearer to man then his eye, nothyng more pleasaunte, then wyfe and chyldren. But if thou be brought to this straite, that eyther thou must nedes for theyr pleasure forsake the ghospell, and be damned with the: or els forsake them, then whome (as touchyng worldly affeccion) there is nothyng more deare vnto the: in this case stycke not to pluche out thyne eye, and caste it away: reckening it to be muche better for the, to enter with one eye into the kyngdome of heauen, where there is lyfe eternall, then to haue both thyne eyes whole, and with them to be throwen into the fyre of hell. Lette not hele the wepyng, and waylyng of thy wyfe, nor the swete wordes of thy childzen, any whit moue the. They are fooles to wepe because they are forsaken, sith they myght haue folowed the if they had would. All worldly affeccions muste be set aside, when goddes commaundement compelleth it so to be. All losses of corporall thinges ought to be counted for gaynes, whensoeuer euerlastyng lyfe is to be purchased. It is no delicate and pleasaunt thing to profesle my name. Persecucions, and worldlye afflictions shall arise on euery syde which may withdraw you from your purpose. But suche as take in hand the ministracion of the gospell, muste banquilhe all these thynges. He that will be a mete minister or preacher of the euangelike doctrine, muste wholely yelde him selfe to the will of God, to thentent he maye in no wise, neyther for feare of persecucion, nor by reason he is corrupted with any enticementes of fleshely appetites, swarue from the pure veritie of gods worde, and the gospell.

And if thy foote be an hyndrcaunte &c.

¶ Euery man shall be salted with fyre, and euery sacrifice shall be seasoned with salte. Salte is good, but if the salte be vnsauery, what shall ye season therewith? Haue salte in your selues, and haue peace among your selues, one with an other.

For as no sacrifice after the lawe of Moyses is lawfull saue alonely that whiche is salted eyther with fyre or salte or els with both: euen so whosoeuer will professe the philosophie and doctrine of the ghospell, muste nedes be pourged with fyre from all worldly affeccions; and be also powdred with salte, that he maye in no wyse be corrupted with the infeccion or contagiousnesse of yuell mennne. Worldly wysdom is bertuelesse and vnsauoury, and neyther preserueth him that hath it from worldlye corrupcion, nor yet is of force to preserue other. Nowe must the teacher of the gospell, doo both: that is to saye, both fynde the meanes that he be without corrupcion hymselfe, and also take awaye thesame from other. This cannne neither be done by the philosophers wisedome, nor by the Phariseis doctrine, but only by the vertue of the euangelike philosophie: whiche with the tartenesse of truth byteth away, and consumeth what thing soeuer is in man in daunger of corrupcion. The same thyng doeth also that fyre of the spirite of God, whiche lykewyse consumeth all carnall affeccions, and purgeth mens soules therof, yea, and in maneur transformeth into God, what thing soeuer it hathe once caught, in so muche that they whoe were before tyme entangled with the cares of worldlye banities, are nowe (thesame vtterly contemned) all together rauished with the loue, and desyre of heauenly thynges. Who so is seasoned with this salte, can by no maneur of inticementes be corrupted, and fall from the puritie of the spirite of the ghospell. He that is pourged with this fyre, will despyse whatsoeuer the persecutoure can threaten him withall.

Salt is good.

There is nothing better then fyre yf a man wyll aright: nothyng more profitable then salte. But yf the fyre be colde, if the salte be made vnsauery, and vnprofytable, what then remaineth to reason the vnsauerie, and symple people withall? If they that professe the spirite of the gospell, frayed with the threateninges of menne, doe forsake theyr profession, and for feare of displeasure, feede and vpholde with theyr flattery the folye of princes, whome theyr dutye had been boldely to rebuke, what hope then remayneth? If suche as professe the salte of the gospell, doe not only not heale the corrupte affections of other with the tartenesse of truth, but also fall themselues for theyr parentes and frendes pleasures, and because to obtaine earthlye vanities, from the hope of the kyngdome of heauen, and winne hell, expounding and wrestyng the doctrine of the gospell (whiche is the greatest offence of all) after thaffections, and lustes of man: What then is there left to season mannes folye with all? Sithe that both they who ought to haue been the seasoners, are them selues corrupted, and the thyng is also tainted, whiche onely was left in the worlde to bryng it at one time or an other to amendement.

Haue ye salt in your selues.

Therfore to thintent you maye bothe auercum cruell persecutions, and also contemne all worldly affections for the gospels sake: and to thentent also you maye bothe prouide for your owne soule healthe, and bryng as many as maye be to saluation, lette eche of you haue in him the salte of the gospell. Lette there be peace, and mutuall amitie among you. Salte shall make you without corruption: and concorde, stronge and myghtye. Whereas variaunces do raygne, there is not the salte of the gospell. Where as the vice of ambition is, there is neyther peace, nor salte. Therfore the philosophers be at contencion and braule one with an other, because they haue not this salte. For this cause also the pharisees cannot agree with the Saduces, & the Herodias, because they all corrupted with naughtie affections, lacke the salte of the gospell. Your doctrine shall season the folye of the worlde, yf the people perceiue nothing in your affections, that is corrupted and rotten eyther by desyre of glorye, loue of money, gredinesse of reuengemente, feare of death, desyre of lyfe, or to be shorte, by any other worldely affection: And if they also perceyue that lyfe as your lyfe, and doctrine shall agree, so in semblable wise you wyll agree one with an other. Undoubtedly you shall agree, if you vtterly abandonyng all ambition (wherewith suche persones are attached as desyre to rule and play the lordes in this world) do synterely preache, and teache other, the heauenly doctrine whiche you haue receiued of me.

The.x. Chapter.

The texte.

¶ And when he rose from thence, he went in to the coastes of Jury, through the regio, that is beyond Jordan: and the people resorted vnto hym a fresche, & as he was wont, he taught them again. And the pharisees came, and asked him: Is it lawfull for a man to putte away his wife? to proue hym. And he answered, and said vnto them: What did Moyses bid you do? and they sayd: Moyses suffered to write a repudiumtall of diuorcement, and to putte her away. And Jesus answered, and said vnto them: for the hardnesse of your harte, he wrote this precepte vnto you: but at the first creacio God made them, man and woman. Therfore shall a man leaue his father and mother, and abide by his wyfe, and they twayne shall be one flesche. So then are they now not twayne, but one flesche. Therfore what God hath coupled together, let not man separate. And in the howse, his disciples asked him agayn of the same

Lawe matter. And he sayeth vnto them: whosoeuer putteth away his wife, and marieth an other breaketh wedlock, to her ward. And if a woman forsake her housband, and be married to an other, she committeth aduoutrie.

After the Lord Jesus had with suche lessons sufficiently prepared the myndes of his disciples against ỹ storme that was at hand, he departed oute of Galile, and went into that parte of Jewry which lyeth beyond Jordan, whyras John first taught. Now was Jesus so much renoumed in all places, that he could nowhere be hid. Therfore anon as he was cummen, the people came flocking hither in like manour as they were wõt to doe in other places. Neyther was he at any tyme wery of doing all men good, of curyng theyr bodyes, of instructing theyr sowles. There lacked not here the pharisees, euery where one maniour of menne, and like themselues. The multitude sought for health, and were desyrous to heare his doctrine: but the other desired more to take hym in a trip, then to be healed: to proue him, rather then to learne. And whiles they so did, they coloured their malicious nesse with a visure of holynesse, and cloked theyr disceitfulnesse with a pretensed desire to learne. Oh wisdom mete to receiue doctrine. They came to Jesus with bodie, whome they were farre from with mynde. They put for the vnto hym a captious question, saying: What is thyne opinion, our Maister? Is it lefull for the husbande to forsake his wife? This question deuised they among themselues, trusting thend would be, that answering therunto he should be driuen to graunt either one inconuenience, or an other. Before, he pronounced those blessed, who gelded themselues for the kingdom of God. Therfore if he being a fauourer of chastitie had now giuen sentence that it had bene lefull for a man to cast of his wife because to marry a new, as the Jewes vsed communely to doe: thē should he haue seemed to haue taught cõtrary doctrines. Againe yf he had answered that it had bene vnto wife lefull so to doe, then would they haue saye dagainst him how we he had made the law of none authoritie, whiche geueth the husband libertie to put away the wife: The lord because he would take these crafty fellowes in theyr owne craftinesse (for they prepared a snare for him out of the law) asked thē again: what nede you to aske me this question, synce yourselues do professe yknowleage of the lawe. What cõmaundement hath Moyses giuen you touching these matiers? They answered: Moyses suffered the husband, yf there were any thing in the wife ỹ offended him, by a by after a libel of diuorcement geuen vp, to put her away, and marry an other, if it pleased him so to doe. The pharisees did so interprete this sufferaunce of the lawe, as thoughe thoselues had very well, who for euery trifling cause, would be diuorced from theyr wiues, & marie agayne not vnderstãding the mind of the lawe maker, whiche they might haue perceiued by the beginning of the boke of Geneſis. Jesus therfore sayd vnto them: In that Moyses gaue you this libertie to forsake your wyues, he fauoured not diuorcement, but suffred the husbandes to doe, what carnall desyre and sensualitie moued them vnto, and would rather permit the lesse yuell, then open a wyndowe to more grieuous enormities. He would rather suffre vnlawfull separacion, then manslaughter, poysoning, or detestable murthering of wyues. For he knewe the hardnesse of your hartes: vnto the which vice, this thing was geuen as a remeadie, lest greater mischiefe shoulde haue ensued. But in paradise before the nature of man was fallen to this wicked nesse, matrimonie was not so instituted, ỹ diuorce should be made at the sensuall will and pleasure of the husband: but for euer to continue betwen man and wife, and neuer to be dissolued. For at the first time god ioyned one to one, that is to saye, man to woman: betwene whome he would haue so great loue and charitie to be, that no separacion might chaunce. For this cause, saith he, a man shall leaue his father, and his mother, and sticke vnto his wyfe, and they both shall becum one flesche, so that being now conioyned in bodie & soule, they are no lenger two persons, but one, to themtēt there maie be a mutual participacion of weale and woe, betwene them. These wordes plainly declare that God was not pleased with diuorce, els would he disanull his fyrst ordinaunce. But Moyses permitting diuorce besydes the will of God, prouided for a seasō for ỹ hardnesse of your hartes: supposing aduoutry to be a smaller offence then murthering of wiues. If this gentle permission of Moyses do please you, know you also the cause compelling hym to geue you this libertie. Therfore what god himselfe hath so conioyned at the begynning, ỹ it shoulde alwayes continue vndissolued, let not man parte asunder. But awaye the hardnesse of your harte, & then shall there be no nede of diuorce: then shall separacion of maune, and wyfe, haue no place. With suche a sobre, and a discrete answere Jesus defended goddes commaundement, and yet neyther condēned Moyses, nor minished the prayse of chastitie, nor finally e brought himselfe in daunger to be taken in the phariseis snare, but rather snarled the with theyr owne grinne, who came purposely to entrap him. But after he, & his apostles were cumme into the house, and they being with him alone had asked his opinion herein, then did he more plainly condemne diuorcement. Whosoeuer, saith he, putteth awaye his wife, and marieth an other, committeth aduoutrye toward. Agayne if the wyfe forsake the husband, and marye an other, she committeth aduoutrie to her former husband ward. For it is not mete for christen men to be so hard harted, that they neyther can awaye with theyr wiues condicions, nor wyll by faire meanes correct them when they doe amisse, but for euery tryflyng cause conceiue displeasure against them, and ymagine theyr death, except they departe, and get them awaye. This is a Jewishe minde, whiche my disciples must in nowise haue. The Jewe putteth awaye his wife for stenche of breth, for bleames of the yes, or for any such like fautes, where as among christen men, there is but one cause onely, whiche dissolueth wedlocke, and that is, the breache of the fayth, & promise of matrimony. For that wife whiche hath letten an other manne haue the vse of her body, is nowe no longer a wife, although she be not yet diuorced: and that husbande whiche hath letten an other woman haue the vse of his body, is nowe before any separacion be made, no more an husbande. As fyre is not fyre vnlesse it be hotte, so wedlocke is not wedlocke except that of two be made one. There cannot be one flesche made of thre, or fower.

Is it lefull for a man to put away his wife.

And Jesus answered & sayd, &c.

But at the first creacio God made them. &c.

The texte. ¶ And they brought chyldren vnto him, that he shoulde touche them. And his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus sawe it, he was displeased, and sayed vnto them: suffre the chyldren to cum vnto me, forbid them not: for of suche is the kyngdome of God. Verely I saye vnto you, whosoeuer doeth not receyue the kyngdom of god as a chylde, he shall not enter therein. And when he had taken them up in his armes, he put his handes upon them, and blessed them.

¶ When he had spoken these wordes, there were certaine persons cum thyther, who had brought vnto him yong children, to intente he shoulde lay his handes upon them, and bless them. They sawe howe disciples put away by vertue of his touching, and therfore beleued they that the same touching should also be good and holsome for sucking chyldren against manye suche inconueniences as this weake and tender age is wonte to be indaungered with. The disciples supposyng it not to be sitting that theyr Lorde, for somuche as he was occupied about waighties affaires, shoulde be wered with suche trifling matters, kept away the children that they coulde not approche hym, and further rebuked suche as brought them, as though they had disquieted him with their importunitie. Verilye a litle before he prayed lytle babes vnto them. Therfore when he perceiued howe they would not suffer the children to cum vnto hym, because it was out of theyr remembraunce what he had said before of suche litle ones, he put them vnto silence, saying: Suffre ye the chyldren to cum vnto me, and kepe them not away from my touchyng. For vnto suche belongeth the kyngdome of heauen. Those haue in them an ensample of innocencie and simplicitie, after the patarne wherof, proude malicious persons must be forged a newe, yf they desyre to be admitted into the kyngdome of heauen. Let no man thinke that these are to be set naught by, for theyr weakenes or symplicitie. This one thyng I assure you of: Vnlesse a man be borne agayne, and all wilynesse, couetousnes, ambicion, hatred, wrath, desyre of reuengement, and enuy, put awaye, becum suche a one in minde, as these are in age, he shall not be receyued into the kyngdome of heauen. And to thentent he might the more commend vnto all men simple innocencie, he toke eche of them in his armes, and layed his handes vpon them euerychone, and blessed them: teachyng hereby howe Bishops ought not to disdayne the simple vnlearned people, nor any other be they neuer so very vnderlinges, or abiect persons after the estimation of the worlde, but cherish the in euery behalfe til they cum forwarde to a better state of perfection. And aboue all thinges we ought to desyre the Lord Iesus, that he will vouchesafe to laye his holy handes vpon suche persons, and blesse the. He will vndoubtedly geue vnto litle ones wilinesse, whereby they may escape the diuels snares. He will geue them a tongue that goddes prayse maye be made perfite by the mouthe of infantes and sucklinges.

Suffre the children to cum vnto me. &c.

¶ And when he was gone forthe into the waye, there came one cumming and kneled to him: and asked him, good maister what shall I do, that I maye inherite eternall lyfe? Iesus sayed vnto hym, why callest thou me good? There is no man good but one whiche is God. Thou knowest the commaundementes: Breake not maryinge: Kyll not: Steale not: Beare no false witnes: Defraude no man: honour thy father and mother. He answered and sayd vnto him: maister al these I haue obserued from my youth. Iesus he held hym and fauoured hym, and sayd vnto hym: one thyng thou lackest. Go thy waye, sell that thou haste, and geue to the poore, and thou shalt haue treasure in heauen, and cum, and folow me, and take vp my crosse vpon thy shoulders. But he was discomforted because of that saying, and went awaye mourning. For he had great possessions.

The texte.

Nowe when these thinges were done in the house, and he gone forthe into the waye, then came there vnto hym a certaine yonge spryngalte, because that after childhode was commended, this age shoulde lykewyse be called be called from good beginninges, to thinges of hygher perfeccion. He fell doune at his feete, and sayed: Good maister, what shall I doe to purchase me eternall lyfe? The asking of this question, smelled sumwhat of that vice, wherwith all suche are attached, as stande in their owne conceipt.

But gentle teachers are wonte to wynke at this faute, yf it be meane and tolerable for the great hope and lykelyhode that is in this age to cum forwarde. For he desyreth not somuche to be taughte of the Lorde, what he ought to do, as to be praysed for the thinges he hath alrady done. And he calleth hym good, whom he beleueth to be nought els but a man, as who saye, that man had any good thing of hymself. Therfore Jesus, as though he were offended with this arrogant name, saith vnto him: why doest thou call me good? This name is farre aboue the state and condicion of man. For there is none verely good saue god alone. For this cause, as he is an arrogãt person, whoso taketh this name vpon hym: euen so he that geueth the same vnto man, geueth hym more then it becummeth hym to do. With this prophane Jesus discouraged the yong man whiche in his owne conceipt thought himselfe not muche vnworthy to haue this goodly title, or name geuen hym: & forthwith asked him this question: knowest thou the commaundementes? Then to hym demaunding what they were, he answered, reciting these common commaundementes folowyng, for keping wherof the Jewes chalenged the praise of goodnes and iustice. Thou shalt not commit aduoutry: thou shalt not kyll: thou shalt not steale: thou shalt not beare false witnesse: thou shalt not begile thy neighbour: honour thy father and thy mother. Here this yong man hoppyng to haue bene greatly commended, answered agayn with a glad and ioyfull hart: Maister I haue euer kept all these, since I was a litle child. Jesus beholding his great towardnes (for he cloked not the matter: nor dyd not, as the Pharisis, of a naughty mind, or proude stomacke stand in his owne conceipt) Jesus, I say, signified yͭ he was delited, euen with thonely endeuour of this age. Therfore he made semblãt that this godly affeccio of his, albeit it was imperfit, dyd neuertheles highly reioyse hym, who as it were, embraced yͤ great likelihode he espyed in hym to profit & cum forward in yͤ doctrine of yͤ gospel, (for as that age selde applyeth Godly lyuing, so is yͤ study therof right cõmendable in yͤ same) teaching vs hereby, how we ought not in any wise ouer charply to rebuke yong folkes, in whõ we see any inclinacio to theus gelike & chyefe godlines: and by that meanes cause the to withdraw the yͤ yong & tender mindes frõ the gospell, as sum ouer way ward scholemaisters are wont to doe, which by reason of their cruelte & roughnes, be wont to teache good wittes to hate learning: but with all gentlines to set them forward, and dying them to better thinges, commending their diligence, but yet neuertheles ferwing thē with all what they must endeuour themselues to attain vnto. Thē Jesus ẽpted yͤ gladnes of this yõg man, who criticed ouertimely, saying: That thou hast obserued these thinges, I cõmend the. But perfite righteousnes stãdeth not, as thou supposest, herin. Thou lackest yet one thing. Thē to him mercueiling, & asking what yͤ should be, the lord answered: returne home, & make sale of all that euer thou hast, and deale yͤ money which thou makest therof, among poore folkes. Thou shalt not lose such doles, but for earthly possessiõs, thou be vp great treasure in heaue. And being lighted of thy burden, & free from all encumbrances, cum & folow me. For then will I knowledge the to be a disciple of the gospell.

* why called thou me good? &c.

One thing thou lackest &c.

The yong man wanted many thinges: but Jesus entended to shewe by touchyng of this one soore, how we farre he was as yet from the perfection of the gholpell. After he had heard him say so, he went his waie mournyng, because he was disapointed of the prayse of righteousnesse, whiche he well hoped he should haue had. For he was a man of great substaunce, and therfore it semed vnto hym a very soore thing sodainly to forgoe thesame. Yet departed he not as one vttetly to be despaired of. For he was neyther wrothe, nor murmured against Christ, but went his waye with mournyng chere and silence. He was comended for his vertuous and godly endeuour: but that he mourneth cummeth of mans frailtie and weakenes. For he vnderstode not Jesus woordes, the meanyng wherof was not that a man would so much forsake his goodes, as his affections. Whoso is redy and willyng to leaue all that he hath, if the case so require, hath forsaken all thynges.

¶ And whē Jesus had loked rounde about, he saith vnto his disciples. How vneasy shal they The texte that haue money entre into the kingdō of god? And ye disciples were astonied at his wordes.
But Jesus answereth again, and saith vnto them: childre how hard is it for them that trust in money to enter into the kyngdō of god? It is easier for a Camell to go through the ye of a nedle, then for the riche to enter into the kyngdom of god. And they were astonyed out of measure, saying betwene themselues: who then can be saued? Jesus loked vpon them, and saide: with men it is vnpossible, but not with God. For with god all thinges are possible.

WIthy this ensample, Jesus prayed his disciples from couetousnesse. Therfore when the yong man was gone awaye all saddeand heauy, Jesus loked round about on his disciples (for all this was done for the yntruccion) and sayd: he his gone. How we much a doe shall it be for them that haue a boundaunce of money, to enter into the kyngdome of God. These woordes greatlye amazed the disciples, who supposed that whether any one could be founde, whiche woulde sodainly lashe out great riches for the kyngdome of God, although themselues had forsaken a fewe small thinges of little price or value. Therfore Jesus repeteth the thynges whiche he spake before, mitigating the sharpnes thereof with pleasant woordes, and expounding the darke saying, whiche they vnderstode not. My children, sayeth he, how hard is it for the that haue great substance, a trust vnto it, as the commous sort doe, to enter into the kyngdom of gode And leste this seme to sore a saying, I will yet speake much softer woordes the these, but moste true withal: It is easier, I say, for a camel to go thorow a nedles eye, the for a riche mā to enter into gods kingdome. The disciples after they had heard him say so, were inache disquieted in their myndes, a reasoned thus amōg themselues: If no man can be saued vnlesse he enter into the kyngdome of God, and if no manne can enter into Goddes kyngdome, excepte he haue forsaken his riches: then sithy we see all men so inordinately loue the same, that it seemeth they will in no case forgoe them: what riche man can there be saued? This carefulnes of the disciples, smelled of the godlye charitie of theyr Lord (for they were desyrous that as many as might possible, should entre into the kyngdom of god) but as yet they vnderstode not the nature & vertue of the christian profession, whiche commaundeth vs nothing to passe vpon wife, children, parentes, no nor life to, if the case so require. It is the easiest thing that may be, yf a man waye and ponder the hyng selfe, to contemne and set naught by richesse: and again it is the moste greuous thyng of all, if we re- With men gard the manours of the people. Therfore the Lord perceyuing his disciples it is vnposto be carefull, and heauy, by reason of the woordes he spake vnto the, and at the sible. &c.

nexte doore to desperacion, recomforteth them agayne. But fyrst he loketh vpon them as he is wonte to do, so ofte as he is about to speake any notable thing, or of great importaunce. Why despayre ye, sayth he, of the salvacion of riche men? The thynges whiche I requite, be of muche difficultie: but there are muche harder thynges to be performed. There is nothing harder, then to set naught by life for ỹ gospels sake. Herein you shal haue me your capitain. If there shall sum be founde, vnto whome the ghospell shall be more deare then life, will you then despayre, that there shalbe sum who will set lesse by their riches, then by the gospell. These thinges seme impossible to humaine affections: But al this is easily brought about by goddes helpe. God requireth hard thynges, and suche as be farre aboue the strengthe and power of man: but the same putteth to his helping hande, that man may be able to accomplishe his commaundementes. And so cummeth it to passe, that man can do that by god almightyes helpe, whiche of himselfe he is in no case able to do. Whosoeuer with all the harte of his body trusteth him, shalbe able to do all thynges by hym. Therfore he that falleth not vpon his goodes for the kyngdome of god, sustaineth no losse therby, but hath great profite and auauntage. And to know this, is a thing pertaining, not to mans wisdom, but to faith geuen vs from heauen. For whosoeuer he be that with harte and minde beleueth that for the goodes forsaken, whiche hindred vs from doyng the dueties of saluacion, a hundreth fold so much is geuen vs here in this world, and in the world to cum lyfe euerlasting, the same will with right good wyll make suche an exchaunge.

The texte. ¶ And Peter began to say vnto him: Loe, we haue forsaken all, and haue folowed the. Jesus answered, and said: verely I say vnto you, there is no man that hath forsaken house, or brethren, or systers, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or landes for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receiue an hundreth folde: nowe in this life, houses and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and landes with persecucions, and in the world to cum, eternall lyfe. But many that are first, shalbe last, and the last first. And they were in the way going vp to Jerusalem, & Jesus went before them, and they were amased, and folowed, and were afrayed.

Of these wordes wherby Jesus brought his disciples out of despaire, the same receyued more courage, and boldenesse, then they shoulde haue done. For nowe Peter by cõparyng himselfe to the yongman, who departed away all heauy and mourning, began to stand muche in his owne conceipt, saying: Loe, we haue forgõne all that euer we had for thy sake, and folowed the. We haue done what thou while ere requiredst of the yong man. To him thou promisedst treasure in heauen: what reward then ought we to hope after? If a man regarde the valuacion of the Apostles goodes, they forsoke not muche, especially Peter, who was a fyther man, & with muche a doe gate his lyuing, with his daily trauaile & labour. But vnto euery man, his owen propre substance is greatest. And he forgoeth very muche, whiche so forsaketh all his goodes and ryches, that he hathe no mynde, ne ryther to restore, nor to encreace the same agayn. He that hath cleane put away all affeccion and greedy desyre of riches, the same hath forsaken, not onely so muche as he was worthe, but also so muche as he myght haue desyred. The lorde after this rule esteemyng ỹ goodes forsaken of the Apostles (who with right good will did also for sake suche thynges as were muche dearer vnto them, as they parentes, they wyues, and they ỹ kynsfolkes) answered in this wyse: I tell you this for a

ſuretie: Not onely you ſhall not be defeated of your reward, but alſo there ſhall be none who for my ſake, & the loue of the goſpel, hath forſaken houſe brethre, or ſiſters, or father or mother, or children, or landes, but he ſhall receiue for euery of theſe thinges ſo forſaken, a hundredth folde ſo muche, and that euen in this preſente life, be the ſtormes of perſecution neuer ſo great. For muche more ſhall encreaſe through the charitie of the goſpell, then was taken awaye by the crueltie of perſecutours. For one carnal brother or ſiſter forſaken, he ſhall haue ſo many brethren, and ſyſters: as felowes in profeſſing of the ghoſpell. The affections of the ſpirite be more vehemēte, & pleaſanter withall, then are thaffectiōs of nature. For one father, and mother, he ſhall haue ſo many fathers, as teachers: for one houſe forſaken, he ſhall haue euery where a houſe, wherſoeuer theu angelike and chriſten charitie ſhall raigne, which doubtles maketh al thinges common. For a litle piece of land forſaken, he ſhalbe partaker of all the landes whiche the true profeſſours of the ghoſpell haue poſſeſſion of. And if theſe thinges came not to paſſe, yet the loſſe of temporall goodes ſhalbe ſufficiently recompenced with the ghoſtely giftes of the ſoule, ſo that a man had a hundredth times leuer haue the thinges receiued, then the thinges forſaken. There is no compariſon betwene ſuch thinges as be tranſitory, & will ſone periſh, although no mā take them away, and the riches of the ſoule, whiche no man can geue but god alone: no mā can take away, but he that geueth them. And if this ſeme but a ſmall gaine, there ſhalbe added therto the poſſeſſion of eternall life in the worlde to cum. With theſe ſayinges the lorde ſtayed the weake mindes of his diſciples, leſte they ſhould eyther forthynke that they had forſaken ſuche thinges as thy forſoke, or els fall againe in time to cum to the loue of worldly riches, & goyng about to be enriched with vile thinges, waxe miſerable poore as touchyng the goodes and riches of the ſoule. It is a naughtie chaūce whē a man falleth againe from the loue of the goodes of the ſoule, to the deſyre of the goodes of the body: from true riches, to payne and deceiuable riches: from euerlaſting commodities, to fading and tranſitory. Now leſte that by prayſyng of his diſciples for forſaking theyr goodes, and mailteryng e theyr affections he ſhould haue geuen them occaſion to be careles, he ſpake further a litle ſentence of lyke tenour as here enſueth: But many that nowe ſeme firſt, ſhall once be laſt. Neither are they to be deſpayred of, who be not yet able to performe what the vertue and ſtrength of chriſtian perfection requireth: neyther ought ſuche to truſte themſelfe, as haue profited to a certain degree therin. For there are ſum who haue done the like as you haue, and yet for all that, they ſhall fall againe to a more miſchieuous couetouſneſſe. And there be ſum who at this preſente, cannot contemne and ſet naught by their goodes (of the whiche ſorte that yong man was one) the whiche in tyme to cum ſhall excell ſuche as appeared to haue forſaken all the worlde. Finally it ſhalbe found that thoſe were pooreſt of all, who after the iudgement of the worlde, ſemed richeſt: and contrarily ſuche as appeared to contemne al worldly thinges were moſte gredy and deſyrous therof. For this prayſe and commendation ſtandeth not in thinges, but in affections. He is the poorer man of both, who poſſeſſeth ſuche goodes as fortune hath lente hym, as though he had them not, ready to departe therwith, ſo ofte as his neyghboure is to be holpen, not reioyeynge ouer muche yf anye encreaſe be, nor pynyng awaye for ſorowe, yf anye thing be taken from hym: then he that ſetteth great store by that litle he hath, and neuer maketh an ende to augment and encrease the same. Hereby he seemed to meane Iudas, who albeit that he forsoke all that euer he had, as the other dyd, and folowed Iesus, yet afterwarde was he perceiued to be a more naughtie couetous wretche, then those, which after the iudgement of the worlde be reyched.

And they were in the way goyng vp to Ierusalem.

With suche woordes Iesus feamed the myndes of his disciples, by lytle and litle against the most greuous storme of all that was at hand, the mencion wherof they vtterly abhorred. For nowe began he to goe vp to Ierusalem the whiche name the disciples hated, bycause they had heard saye, how theyr maister should there suffer muche shame, and vilanie. In other places of the ghospell it is oft tymes mencioned, howe they went before, as when beyng hungry they plucked the eares of corne. In this byage they couldе not so doe. For it is a painfull iourney to goe vp to Ierusalem. It is for them that be of valiant courage, and strong in spirite, and suche in whom this worlde hath naught that is his. Therfore Iesus nowe goeth before, and the disciples folowe after all heauy, and murmuring against hym, because he would willingly put himselfe in manifest daunger of lyfe. They both maruayled what minde he had so to do, and also feared their owne partes, lest he would bring them into lyke daunger. Suche disciples, so grosse, and weake withall suffered Iesus: and doth it greue vs sith we be weake our selues, to beare with the dulnesse of the weake? They gaped after a kyngdom, they desyred to be partakers of glory, and reasoned who should haue the chefe place or preeminence: but they vtterly abhorred that thing whiche was moste necessary for theyr saluacion.

¶ And Iesus toke the .xii. agayne, and began to tell them what thinges should happen vnto him. Behold we go vp to Ierusalem, and the sonne of manne shall be deliuered vnto the hie priestes: and vnto the Scribes, and they shall condemne hym to death, and shall deliuer hym to the Gentiles, and they shall mocke him, and scourge him, spitte vpon him, and kill him. And the thirde daye he shall ryse agayne.

The storie.

Iesus therfore to geue vs an ensample howe we ought in instructing of our neyghbour, to teache him rather necessary thinges then delectable, rather holsome thinges, then pleasant: After he had called vnto hym the .xii. whome his will was should not onely be witnesses, but also in some pointes partakers with him of this storme: Iesus, I say, painted in theyr myndes what he had first couertly, and anon after plainly foreshewed vnto them, saying: Loe, the tyme is nowe cum, that I haue so oftetold you of: nowe go vp to Ierusalē, to thentent you maye perceyue that I willingly, and wittingly ye, will suffer what tourmentes, and passion soeuer I shall be put vnto. For I must not flye, syth the tyme appointed of godis present: this sacrifice shalbe made at Ierusalem, bycause that place is appointed therunto. And the sonne of man shall be deliuered into the handes of the chiefe priestes, Scribes, Pharisies, and elders of the people. They shall condemne hym as a felon, and a wicked person, and at the length, after they haue accused hym of diuerse crimes, iudge hym to deathe. And then incontinent shall they deliuer hym as a notorious misdoer, to the heathen people, that they may mocke hym, and spitte vpon him. To be shorte, he shalbe scourged, and slayne: but on the thyrde day he shal arise again from death to lyfe. It is nedefull for you to knowe, & remembre these thynges, specially for twoe causes: partly lest ye thynke that the same beyng

For it is not mete you shoulde take it greuously, that I wyll willingly suffre for your cause, accrozding as my father hath determined I shall doe: neyther is it conuenient that you should be dismayed, as at a thyng whiche hath chaunced vnlooked for, sith I haue so ofte times warned you herrof before.

The text. And Iames, and Iohn the sonnes of Zebede, came vnto him, saying: Maister, we woulde that thou shouldest do for vs whatsoeuer we desyre. He said vnto thē: What would ye that I should do for you? They said vnto him, Graūt vnto vs that we maye syt, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory. But Iesus said vnto thē: ye wot not what ye aske. Can ye drinke of the cup that I drinke of, and be baptised with the baptisme that I am baptised with? And they said vnto him: That we can. Iesus said vnto them: ye shall in dede drinke of the cuppe that I drynke of, and with the baptisme that I am baptised withall, shal ye be baptised in. But to sit on my right hand and on my left hand, is not myne to geue, but it shall happen vnto them, for whome it is prepared.

Now when the Apostles were all in their duinpes, and like men amased by reason of these wordes, and durst not nowe counsayll hym to the cōtrary: two of them, that it is to were, Iohn, and Iames the sonnes of Zebede, came vnto hym alone. These ii. after they heard hym speake of his resurrection, conceiued good hope, that that same kyngdome which he had so oft tymes promysed to cumme, shoulde very shortly begyn. For as yet they had not cleane cast out of their mindes the desyre of worldly aduauncement. For they set their mother a worke, & by her desyred him to haue sūme preēminēce & soueraigne dignitie geuen thē in the same kingdom: but or euer they vttered theyr minde, they did what they coulde to get a sayth full promise of him before hade to haue theyr requeste graunted, because it should not thē be lawful for him to deny it them. The Lord makyng as though he wouldē deny thē nothing what soeuer they demaunded, bad thē tell on hardely what great thing it was that they sued for. For it semed that they would desyre some weyghty thyng, or hygh promocio. Lorde, saye they, oure petition and suite is, to haue this honourable preferment in thy kyngdome, that we may sit nexte thē, the one of hē on thy ryghte hand, and the other on thy lefte. Iesus by asking them a question, plainly bewrayed theyr ignorauunce and rudenes. For as yet they dreamed vpon a certayne corporall kyngdome: as yet theyr myndes were vpon the primacy.

They saith vnto him, &c.

Howbeit it was then no time to rebuke thē for theyr grosse ymaginacion: but yet bycause they hē agayne to ther remembraunce of death, the whiche they so muche abhorred. Wherfore, saieth he, ye perceiue not what maner a thyng the kyngdome of God is, therefore ye wotte not what ye desyre. You seke after vaynglory, and consydre not by what meanes the true glory of my kyngdom is attayned. I will open you the waye, and yf the same do lyke you, then truly ye verely to haue the glory that you desyre, saue alonely that it shall be a true glory, and not suche a one as you dreame vpon, and imagine it to be. Can you drinke of the cuppe I now make my selfe ready to drynke of?

Can ye drinke of the cuppe that I shall drynke of?

Can ye be baptysed with the baptisme that I shall ere it be long be baptised withall? They of a gredy desyre to haue theyr petition graunted, as they of hy cuppes lightly despysed this preēminence, euen so did they rashly promyse for theyr be. ter. halfe, and saye they could: notwithstanding as yet they knewe not the mischiefe wrighte. Neyther did the moste gracious Lord rebuke thē for this their great folye, holy, forasmuch as the tyme was not yet cum, that they shoulde be receiuable of these mysteries. As yet whatsoeuer they heard, they heard it as it were in a dreame: and yet did he with neuertheles diligently teache, & instruct them, euer attempering his wordes to their weakenesse, because they beyng afterwardes, as a man would say, wakened out of their sleepe, and manifestly perceyuing the truth by the holy ghoste, shoulde with more entire affection loue their Lord, who beyng suche a one as he was, would so tenderly beare with suche maner of disciples: & also because they being once growen to more perfection, should agayne followe his gentlenes in bearyng with the weaknesse of their euen christen, whom they should happen to instruct, hauyng alwayes in their remembraunce, how ignorannt, how forgetfull, and how dull they also themselues sometime were. This was an ambitious saying: Let vs sit nexte the in thy kyngdome. It was vnadusedly spoken when they sayd: we can doe it. For it was spoken of the, who would soone after deny their Lord & maister for feare. But suche error as springeth not of malice or obstinate cuylues, but of symplicitie, must either be cured, or els borne withall for a season. Therfore Iesus answered: Truely ye shal drinke of my cuppe, & shall be baptised with the baptisme that I am baptised with: but in tyme to cum. For as yet ye are not able to do the thyng, whiche ye beleue ye can do. Therfore prepare your mindes hereunto: but leaue all iudgement of your rewarde to god the father. Let your only endeuor be to counterfaite me, & folow my trace. He hath for euery mā his peculier rewardes already prepared, and will distribute the same as it shal please him. For this matter is not so ordred in the kingdome of heaue, as it is in princes courtes, wherein he is not alwayes chief in dignitie, whiche deserueth so to be: but he whome the prince or kyng chiefly fauoureth. Sumtimes he fauoureth the naughtyest person of all. But with my father there is no regarde of person. Neither is it your parte to regarde the measure or multitude of your merites and deserueinges, sith you are able to do nothyng of your selues: nor to considre how far ye passe other. You must only do your endeuor according to the power that God hath geuen you, to folowe me. Ye shall not be defrauded of your reward, although you thinke not theron at all. For he that fighteth for the rewardes sake, and wouldnot els fight vnlesse he thought he should be rewarded for his labour, cleane disapointeth himselfe of the reward. Let no man be his owne iudge, but do what he can: and then remitte the whole iudgement vnto god.

The texte. ¶ And when the ten heard it, they began to disdayne at Iames & Iohn. But Iesus, when he had called them to him, sayd vnto them: ye knowe that they which are seene to beare rule among the people, rayngne as lordes ouer them. And they that be greate among them, exercise auctoritie vpon them: neuertheles so shall it not be among you. But whosoeuer of you will be greate amōg you, shall be your minister. And whosoeuer of you will be chief, shall be seruaunt of all. For the sonne of man also came not to be ministred vnto, but to minister, and to geue his life for the redemption of many.

And lot, howe one euill sprang of another. The symplicitie of these two disciples, bewrayed a greater rudenes and ignorannce of the rest. For after it was cum to the others knowledge what the two brethren, although they requeste was not graunted them, had desyred of the Lorde, they all in maner disdayning her great, were angry with them and in their toppe, because not regarding their simplenes and meane estate, they presumed to desyre the first & chief place which was rather due vnto them. There was none of them all but he-

If any man aſke the queſtion why the Lozd ſuffered ſo great ignozaunce ſo long while to continue in his diſciples, by whoſe miniſterye he purpoſed to haue the doctrine of the goſpell preached, & taught thzoughout all the whole wozlde: truely, the chiefe cauſe was, becauſe he would by lytle and lytle cleane wrede out of theyr mindes, this and ſuche other naughty affections, and ther-foze doeth he ſuffre them ſo oft to fall againe into the ſame affection, that is to

Therfore Jeſus perceiuing that the fonde petition of ỹ two, and the t ildaynfull wzathe of the other, yſſued bothe out of one well, called them all vnto him, becauſe he would miniſtre phyſicke vnto them all with one medicine. As oft, ſayth he, as ye heare me ſpeake of the kyngdome of heauen (whiche hereby is a ſpirituall kyngdome & differeth no leſſe from this wozldly kyngdom, then the yerthe differeth from heauen) do not you by ſayne and phantaſticall ymagination, fayne ſuch a likenes & an appearance of thinges, as you ſee here in yearthlye kyngdomes. Foz ye knowe that thoſe whiche ſeeme to be chiefe rulers among the heathen people of this wozld, play the lozdes ouer ſuche as be vnder their obeyſaunce, and ſubiection. And they whiche are great men among the heathen do exercyſe their power and authozitie ouer them, that they haue rule and gouernaūce of. Beware there be no ſuche thyng among you. Here a deſyre to helpe the neyghbour, maketh a man greater, and not ỹ deſyre of wozldly prefermēt. Therfore as I haue alſo taught you before tyme, whoſo deſyreth to bee great in very dede among you, let ỹ ſame be your miniſter: let him, I ſay, not exalte himſelfe to beare rule, but humble himſelfe to do all men good. Of a truthe this is the very Euangelyke and chrystian soueraignetye, whiche whoso will desyre, let hym desyre it as I doe, and loke for a rewarde, not suche a one as he appoynteth vnto himselfe, but suche as it shall please the father to geue hym: lyke as I without condicion obey my fathers commaundementes euen to the crosse, wholy referryng the rewarde of myne obedience vnto his wyll, and godly arbitrement. It shalbe a great shame for you to desyre dignities as you see worldly princes doe, and to seke for a rewarde of the father of heauen. Eyther desyre you the kyngdome of heauen, and loke after an heauenly rewarde: or els if you desyre this worldly kyngdome, then require ye not the rewarde of the kyngdome of heauen.

With suche lessons and monicions they were before hande instructed and taught, who went with Christ to Jerusalem. For the cleuer that euery man is from all affections, the better appointed is he to go to ỹ battayle of the crosse.

The texte. ¶ And they came to Hierico. And as he went out of the cittie of Hierico with his disciples, and a great nombre of people, blynd Bartymeus the sonne of Timeus, sat by the hye waie syde beggyng. And when he herde that it was Jesus of Nazareth, he began to crie, and saye: Jesus thou sonne of Dauid, haue mercy on me. And many rebuked him that he should hold his peace. But he cryed the more a great deale: thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy on me. And Jesus stode still, and commaunded hym to be called: And they called the blynd, saying vnto hym: Be of good comforte, ryse, he calleth the. And he threwe awaye his clothe, and rose & came to Jesus. And Jesus answered, and saide vnto him what wilte thou that I doe vnto the? The blynd saide vnto hym: master, that I might see. Jesus saide vnto hym: go thy waye thy faythe hath saued the, and immediatly he receyued his syght, and followed Jesus in the waye.

Nowe were they cum to the Citie of Hierico whiche is not farre from Jerusalem. Hierico in the Syrian tong signifieth the Mone. By the Mone is figured this present life, whiche is nothyng els but the common course of the worlde, where some be hoye and some dye: some be sycke and some be whole: some growe towarde mans state, and some drawe in age: sometymes chaunceth glad thynges, and sometymes heauy. For our cause Jesus came downe from that heauenly tranquilitie, yet wyll he not tarry here, but hasteth to Jerusalem, being very desyrous of mannes saluacion. And hitherto his disciples, and with them a great multitude of people, folowed hym. Marke well howe Jesus is euery where as he is called. Eyther he teacheth, or healeth, or els resteth to lyue agayne. What his death shoulde cause through the beliefe of the ghospell that was preached, he shewed nowe plainly by a corporall figure. Manynde was blinde through ignorance of the truethe, & poore and beggerly for lacke of all vertues. Vnlesse Jesus had passed by hs, there had bene no hope of lyght.

Blind Bartymeus the sonne of Tymeus. For a certaine blynde begger well knowen of the people, called Bartymeus, the sonne of one Timeus, sate by the hyghe wayes syde, who when he perceyued hym to cum, began to crye, and saye: Jesu the sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. First the bruite, or preaching of the Ghospell, the weth hs that Jesus passeth by: then the great confidence whiche we straight waies conceiue of hym, will not suffre vs to holde our peace when he goeth by. For the synner knowledging and confessyng his wretched lyuing, creyeth vpon the mercyfull sauiour, and desyreth hym to take mercy and compassion vpon hym. He is at the nexte doze to lyght, whoso knowleageth his owne great blyndnes. To saye, Lorde haue mercy vpon me, is not a saying of the Pharisees, who thought themselues to be men of a perfite syght, but an euāgelike and a

christian saying. Neither vse the Pharisees to saye: O thou sonne of Dauid. For they say: is not this the carpenters sonne? That blynd man sawe a great deale more in the darke, then the Iewes do at this present day, whiche boast & bragge vpon the knowledge of the lawe, & professe themselues to be guydes of the blynde. But the multitude of people is an impediment and hynderaunce to the sely wretche. thus crying and calling for mercy. For what other thyng can they do but disturbe and trouble? His conscience also cryeth out against hym, not with one voyce, but with as many as are the offences that he knoweth hymselfe giltie of, saying: what hast thou to doe with Jesus, whiche art defyled with so many synnes? The lawe cryeth and barketh against hym saying: thou cryest in vaine: God is iust: loke after punishement for thyne offences. The rulers of the Synagoge crye out against hym, commaundyng that no man preache, no nor be so hardy as once to name this name Jesu, saying: there is no healthe and saluation in Jesu, but in Moyses. To be shorte, the same thyng doe the Philosophers and heathen princes. But that a man may knowe a very euangelike and christen faithe in this blynde man, he gaue not ouer when the people thus cried against hym, insomuche that being rebuked, and commaunded to holde his peace, he cryed louder then he did before, saying: Thou sonne of Dauid haue mercy vpon me. The people were offended with his crying: Jesus alone was nothing offended herewith, but store styll, and commaunded hym to be called vnto hym. He hearde hym crye as he passed by: but he made as though he had not heard hym. This came not of any daunger ousnes on Jesus behalfe: but was the acte of him, who went about to wyng out of the man a notable faythe, for the ensample of other: and his pleasure was to teache all men by this blinde man, howe & by what meanes light maie be extorted or gotten perforce of Jesu. The fyrst hope to obtaine light, is to haue Jesus to stand still at our crying: The seconde, to be called vnto him, eyther by the teachers of the ghospell, or els by the secrete inspiracions of the holy ghost. For the blynde man could not go vnto hym, vnlesse he had bene led and guided by holy scripture, which we ought in no wise to despise, although it be ministred by mã. The Apostles, and preachers of the ghospell, do happily call a blynde mã, when they call him at the cõmaundemẽt of Jesu. But nowe adayes they call without this cõmaundement, not vnto him, but to the ayders of humaine Philosophie, or Heathen learning, to the obseruacion of Moyses lawe, & to ꝓ cõmodities & pleasures of this preset lyfe. Assuredly these callers make the blinde, more blinde then he was before. But the Apostles obeying their maisters cõmaundement, called this man vnto Jesus, and so true is it, ꝓ they dyd not cease, & bable against him, as the people did, that they put him (hauing good hope already) in more hope and comforte, saying: Be of good chere, aryse, Jesus calleth thee. The blinde man conceyued so great hope herewith, that he cast away his cloke whiche defended hym against the cold weather, and skypped out of the place where he sate, and ranne to Jesus. Here will I staye the a lytle while, good reader, because thou mayest marke the greate readinesse of mynde, and feruent courage of this blynde begger. Howe ofte arte thou called vnto Jesus? & doest neither caste away thy cloke or wastell, nor skyp out of thy dēne of misery, nor run vnto hym ꝓ calleth thee, but tournest thy backe, but lingrest from day to day, but castest doubtes, but findest cauillacions and fayned excuses, but waxest lusky the in thy fythe, and darkenesse, & haddest rather aske an almes of ỳ worlde in a foule beggerly cloke then receiue light of Iesus, wherein is conteyned the summe of all felicitie. What a goodly and faire besture is the garment of innocencie, and cleane lyfe: What a foule mantell hath he ỳ is clothed with lechery, with couetousnesse, with excesse and ambicion. Howe vile and wretched a begger is he, whoe for a small and corporall commoditie croucheth and kneleth vnto this world. Howe miserablye blynde is he, that neyther knoweth himselfe, nor almightye God his maker. As ofte as thou arte called from this miserable wretchednesse vnto Iesus, either when thou readest the ghospell, or heareste the same preached, or els whan thou art drawen by a certaine secrete inspiracion of the holy ghoste, why doeste thou not then (all thynges layde aparte, that are wonte to let and hinder a man to attaine so great felicitie) leape vp vnto the hope of a better life? Why runnest thou not with moste sure fayethe vnto Iesus, whiche onelye is able to geue the light, and will geue it to all men? Iesus cometh vnto the: he calleth the: and doest thou againe for thy part grutche to mete hym? Thou pynest and wyddest away euen tyll thy dying day in the darkenesse: but thou shalt not euer haue Iesus passing by the. Certes after death he calleth no manne to saluacion, but to iudgement. Whyen he passeth by herein this worlde, he heareth him that cryeth, haue mercy vpon me: here he standeth still, here he calleth, here he giueth light. This begger hath made the ashamed of thy slouthfulnesse, vnto whom the Lord, when he was comen vnto him sayd: What ayleth the to crye? what wilt thou haue me to do vnto the? what: knewe not Iesus why he cryed? knewe not he what he shoulde doe? That is not so: but all this was done for our instruccion. Many beleued that this blynde man loked for an almes of the lorde, because he was a begger. For so nowe a daies many crye vnto Iesus: Lorde haue mercy vpon me. And beyng demaunded what they sue for, what they desyre to haue, one sayth, graunt that I maye be riche: an other, that I maye gette an office: this man, that I maie haue a wyfe with a good dowrie: an other geue me bodilye strength: geue me long lyfe: or graunt that I may be auenged on my enemy. But these thinges Iesus many times taketh away from his frendes, because it so behoueth for their saluacion. The euangelike begger desyred none of all these thinges. For he knewe right well what ought to be desyred of Iesu. Therfore let vs both heare and folowe hym: Rabbone sayeth he, (that is as muche to saye, as my maister) make me to see. For being careles for all other thynges, he desyred nothing els but light, whereby he might see God and his sonne Iesus, whom to knowe is euerlasting lyfe. For in scripture to knowe God, is nothing els but to see God. O very Euangelike and christis praier, How fewe wordes hath it: but how great faith? Doubtles this is that short prayer whiche pearceth the heauens. Therfore, Iesus answered: Go thy way, thy faith hath purchased the helth. He is not brandy a man vndoen, and cast away, whiche seeth not awhit with bodelye ỳes: but whoso seeth nothing at all with the ỳes of his soule, the same cannot be saued. To haue recouered these ỳes, is life euerlasting. Heare this saying thou phariseicall felow whosoeuer thou be that sayest: I ascribe my safety to myne oft fastinges, to my long prayers, to mine almesdedes and my sacrifices: and for that cause thou crieste not with the begger, haue mercy on me: but sayest, geue me the reward due vnto my deseruinges. Now Iesus doth contrarily ascribe saluacion vnto faith, and not vnto woorkes.

And they called the blynd, saying.

And threwe away his cloke.

The blind sayd vnto hym. &c.

The

The blinde man ſtreyght wayes recouered his ſighte, not becauſe he deſerued it, but for that he beleued. And being commaunded to go his waye, he folowed Jeſus. Lighte is geuen the freely: thy blindneſs is taken awaye for naught. Afterward thou art left to thyne owne arbitrement whether thou wilt vſe the gift of god aright or no. Thou art not compelled to folow: thou haſt onely power geuen the to ſee Jeſus: go now whither thou wilt, but at thyne owne auenture. And what did that bleſſed blinde mane? He retourned not backe agayne to his beggerly cloke, or mantel: he retourned not to his olde beggerye, but forgote all theſe thinges, and folowed Jeſus in the waye. It auaileth but litle to haue knowen Jeſus, vnleſſe thou do thy deuoire to folowe him whom thou ſeeſt. Jeſus goeth ſtraight to the croſſe, hither muſte thou folow hym, after thou haſt once retouered thy ſyght a gain. As long as thou art blynd, thou maieſt crye: Jeſu haue mercye vpon me: but thou canſt not folow him this way, before thine eye ſyght be reſtored. For who would folow him that wilingly geueth his ſoule to death, onleſſe he ſaw by fayth, that worldly reproche were the waye to euerlaſting glory: that bodily tourmentes, and afflictions, were the waye to euerlaſting ioyes: that death were the way to lyfe eternall. Theſe thinges the quicke ſyghted of this worlde, ſee not perfitely, who do not onely with all theyr eyen loke after rule, riches, honoures, pleaſures, and long life: but alſo endeuoyre themſelues to get theſame by vnlefull meanes, as by counſayling before with Aſtronomiers, Soothſayers, Inchaunters, or Necromanciers. Theſe thinges, I ſaye, they onely ſee whiche beleue the doctrine of the goſpell, and haue ſure truſte that they ſhall receyue and enioye the reward promiſed in theſame.

The. xi. Chapter.

¶ And when they came nie to Jeruſalem vnto Bethphage, and Bethany, beſides mounte Oliuete, he ſendeth forthe two of his diſciples, and ſayeth vnto them: Go your waye into the towne that is ouer againſt you, and allone as ye be entred into yt, ye ſhall finde a Colte bounde, whereon neuer man ſate, lowſe him, and bring him hither. And yf any man ſaye vnto you, why doe ye ſo? ſaye ye, that the lord hath nede of him, and ſtreyght waye he will ſende him hither. And they went their waye, and found the Colte tyed vp the doore without in a place where two wayes meete. And ſome of them ſtode there, ſayde vnto them, what do ye lowſing the Colte? And they ſayde vnto them euen as Jeſus had commaunded. And they let them go. And they broughte the Colte to Jeſus, and caſt their garmētes on him. And he ſat vpon him. And many ſpred their garmētes in the waye, other cut downe braunches of the trees and ſtrawed them in the waie. And they that went before, and they that folowed, cryed ſaying: Hoſanna. Bleſſed is he that cummeth in the name of the lorde. Bleſſed be the kingdome, that cummeth in the name of our father Dauid: Hoſanna in the higheſt. The texte.

What thing was not yet wrought in the mindes of the diſciples, whiche Jeſus expreſſed and ſet out by a figure, in ꝑ blind man. They yet ſawe not perfitly with their inward eyes, how happy is the death of thoſe ꝑ folow Chriſtes deathe. They yet dreamed vpon this worldly kyngdom. The lord therfore, becauſe he wolde the better taſte this in their mindes, how ſuch as will folow him, ought in no wiſe to deſyre the kingdom of this worlde, ſhewed them a ſpectacle, wherby he derided and laughed to ſcorne all worldly pompe & glo-tyt, as a thing that lasteth but for a seasō, and soone shall perish: yet by the same he plainely declared, that he could haue commaunded whomsoeuer he wouldē, to do what it had pleased hym, saue that his will and pleasure was rather to obey the wil of the heauenly father. Finally he wouldē haue all menne to know howe he was the selfesame persone, whome the Iewes awayted for, to cummē so many hundred yeares before, (according to the prophecies and foresayinges of the Prophetes) for the saluacion of the whole worlde.

When therefore he approched, and was nye vnto Hierusalem (for he was by Bethphage, and Bethany, whiche are two litle townes in the mountaine called mounte Oliuete, from whence a manne might haue sene Ierusalem) he sente oute from thence two of his disciples, geuing them in commaundement to do as followeth: Go ye, saith he, into that towne whiche you see yondre directly against you, and by and by as ye be entred in, you shall finde an Asses foale tied at the gate, the whiche is not yet broken: and whereupon no man hath ridden vnto this day: lowse it, and bring it hither vnto me. And if any man aske you the question why you vntie it, say again: the lord hath nede of this, and straight waies he shall send it hither to me. The disciples went their way as they were bidden, and so came, and found an Asses foale tyed before the gate, in a place whereas two wayes met, and lowsed it. In the meane while some of those that stode by, when they sawe strainge ment vntie the foale, saide vnto them: Syrs what meane you? Why vntie you the foale? The disciples made no other answere, then the lorde commaunded them to make, saying: the Lorde hath nede herof. The other notwithstanding it was vnknowen vnto them whom they called theyr Lorde, did yet let the foale goe without anye further questioning, or reasoning the matter with them. The disciples after they had vntied it, broughte it vnto Iesus. Here I wouldē haue the earnestly monished, good reader, that not onely the wordes whiche Iesus Christ spake, but also whatsoeuer he did all his lyfelong, was not doen at all auentures, but by the counsayle and wisedome of god, for manners erudicion. For there is nothing that hath not in it, either an ensample set out to thentent to moue and stirre vs to vertue, and godly liuyng, or a representacion of the olde prophecies, or a fulfilling of the figures, wherwith the lawe dyd as it had bene, with certaine darke misteries or riddles, signifie Christe: or els a signification of thinges that afterwardes shoulde happen and cum to passe. And whereas the mysticall sence of euery thing is diligently to be searched out, yet the more he approched vnto the tyme of his death, when the businesse of oure saluacion shoulde chiefly be wrought, the more holyer mysteries were all thynges full of. For nowe was that tyme at hand, the whiche he greatly thirsting, and desyring all mennes saluacion, spake of before, saying: when I shalbe lifted by from the earth, I will draw all thynges vnto me. For there was not rounne ynoughe in Iewry for his charitie: And there the fruite of the ghospell dyd not counteruayle the labour, and diligence of the tiller. For this cause Christe sent for the wilde, and vnbroken asses foale, wherupon no man had sytten before. This foale signifieth the Gentiles, who neyther obeyed the lawe of nature, nor were vnder Moses lawes. For vpon the Asses, that is to saye, the Synagoges backe, both Moses, and the prophetes had ridden. Certaine of the newe disciples are nowe sent out to call the Gentiles, who call them not to Moses, but to Iesus.

So yeare they went into the towne, &c.

And they brought the Coalte to Iesus.

Here

here woulde there not lacke some whiche woulde braule and speake against them, and saye: What do you why vnlie you the foale? For this foale had both many, and also vncertaine Maysters, and was tyed, and stode where two wayes met. Who so is not obedient vnto goddes commaundementes, hath as manye maisters, as he hath vices that he serueth and is subdued vnto: and is so tyed, that he hath no house, but standeth in sight where two wayes mete, readie for euerye manne that wyll take hym. But when Iesu calleth, no man hathe power to resiste. The Iewes cryed, and sayde: This saluacion is ours by promyse. Why then are the Heathen Idolatours ioyned with vs? Vnto them aunswere was made: he that is the Lorde of all, hath nede of suche foales. He is nowe werye with labouring in bayne among the Iewes, and desyreth to reste hym vpon the vnbroken foale. That this foale is vnbroken, doeth not displease hym, so there lacke not obedience of fayth. A newe ryder hath nede of a newe beaste to ryde vpon.

The disciples, who as yet wot not what the matter meaneth, do neuertheless with their diligent ministerie, helpe forthe & further the matter. They couer the foale with their mantels, because he should not ride vpon his bare backe. O, whosoeuer thou be that art a preacher, and teacher of the gospel, follow this diligence of ỹ disciples. Whersoeuer thou shalt see an vnbroken Asses foale tyed where two wayes mete, ignorannt of the law of the ghospell, and subiect to many vices, but for foly, and simplicitie, rather then of any malice or obstinate euchnesse: and suche a one as will obey yf a man leade it away, loke thou vnlie it and bryng it vnto Iesu. Caste vpon it the mantell of holsome doctrine: and then Iesus the Lorde of all, will vouchesafe to ryde vpon his backe. Folow thou also the diligence of the other, who against that Christe shoulde ryde forth, couered the way with their garmentes, that is, with ensample of theu ãgelike and Christian godynesse. Many there were also whiche decked the way with boughes, cut down from trees, especially from the Palme trees whiche beare the figure of virgins, and Martyrs. Iesus the Lorde of all thought it a royall thyng to ryde through suche a waye vpon suche a beaste. And caste their garmẽtes on him.

Nowe staye a lytle whyle, good reader, and compare me with this spectacle, or sight, one of those that were chiefe amonges the Iewish priestes: and fyrst of all regarde what manoder of personage is he, and howe great, whiche ryderth vpon the Asses foale. It is the sonne of God, vnto whome the father hath geuen all power in heaue, and in earth. It is the sauiour and gouernour of the whole worlde. It is the authour, Lorde, and kyng, of all thynges that are created and made: a priest for euer after the order of Melchisedech, who with a becke was able to do whatsoeuer he would: whose maieslie all the orders of Aungels do adore and worship: who sitteth on the right hande of the father almightie. Wyth his dignitie compare me a bishop of one tẽple, whiche hath bought ỹ prie shode or prelacie lasting but for one yeare, of a wicked and heathe kyng, for a filthy summe of money. Compare the bare heade of Iesu, with his tyare or myter, all glysteryng and shining with golde, and precious stones. Compare that sobre, and mylde countenaunce of Iesu, with his face puffed vp with pryde: with his grym forheade, with his frowning browes, with his stately loke, with his contencious or vncharitable mouth. Compare the bare handes of Iesu, with his fyngers laden with ringes, and precious stones. Compare the course, and homly garment of Iesu with his tragi-

call or maskyng apparayle, who weareth nothing courser the clothe of golde, or purple sylke. Compare the disciples mantels, with his golden sadles, with his couering clothes of crymasyne sylke, with his syluer stropes, but ouer gylte. Compare this commune Asses foale that caried Jesu, with so many Mules trapped with sylke, and clothe of golde, with so many royall coursers and great hosses, with so many Palfrayes of great payce, with so many wagons, with so many chariottes, with so many chaires of estate prepared to carry one man. Compare me the fewe, and poore simple disciples of Jesu, with the solemne pompe, passyng the pompe of any worldly prince, of suche as go before the Bishop, of his henchmen, of Trumpetters of sundry etune, of suche as muiron and garde his personage, of the bende of horsemen, and footemenne: amonge whome as euery of them is moste proude, hye mynded and stately, so is the same next the bysshoppes owne proper persone, and in greatest fauoure and conceipte with hym. Compare theioyfull cryinges of the children that went before, and folowed Jesu, who inspired with the holye ghoste, song this sayinge taken out of the prophecie of Dauid: Hosanna, that is to say, make by safe. Blessed is he that cummeth in the name of the Lorde: Blessed be the kyngdome of our father Dauid that cummeth. Hosanna in the highest. Compare, I saye, these ioyfull cryinges with the vnghostlye acclamacions, wher with the multitude of flatterers crye vpon an vngracious Jewische bysshop, saying: God sende the moste holy father in God, long lyfe. God graunt hys hyghnesse victorye. I praye god that the moste blessed and chiefe prelate of religion may raigne in prosperitie. Howe much Jesus defieth suche bysshops, this one thing plainly declareth, because he commaunded all that coloured and stately priesthode, with the temple therof, vtterly to be abolished & destroyed. For yf these be they by whome euen nowe in our dayes, Jesus (who wyll be the onely head of priesthode) is slayn in his membres. He seketh for those ministers that maye bryng vnto hym the Asse, that maye couer the foale with their mantels, that maie strowe the waye with Palme boughes, and with godly acclamacions and cryinges, and wleage that the kingdome of the ghospell promised of the prophetes is come and presente. Neither greueth he any care to the Phariseis muttering against him, and not contented with these ioyfull cryinges of the people: but sayth that the very stones shall sooner crye out, then goddes glory be conceled.

This Bysshop of Romes pompe is cleerly descried.

The texte. ¶ And the lorde entred into Hierusalem, and into the temple. And when he had loked round about vpon all thynges, and nowe euentyde was come, he wente out vnto Bethanie with the twelue. And on the morowe when they were come oute from Bethanie, he hungered. And when he had spied a sygge tree a farre of hauyng leaues, he came to see yf he might fynde any thyng theron. And when he came to it, he founde nothyng but leaues, for the time of sygges was not yet. And Jesus answered, and saide vnto the sigge tree: neuer man eate fruit of thee hereafter whyle y worlde standeth. And his disciples heard it.

With suche a pompe the kyng Jesus entred into the royall citie of Hierusalem: the heauenlye priest entred into the temple, and there as it was beseming for a kyng, and priest, taught the people, healed the sycke, made strong the weake and feble, as one vsurping violent rule in another mannes kyngdome. In the meane whyle the wycked priestes, Phariseis, and headmen of the people freated at the mattier, but the symple people ceasye to be instructed cryed ioyfully vpon hym.

Jesus

Jesus as thoughe he woulde haue restored the decayed religion of the temple, whiche the pharisees thought that tyme chiefely to flouriche, beheldeeuery parte therof, diligently bewyng and marking yf anye thyng were done therin, not beleuyng the house of god: not because he passed so muche what were done in that temple, whiche he knewe very well shoulde within shorte space after be destroyed: but his pleasure was to declare by a certaine corporall fygure what maner a churche he woulde haue his to be, whiche he buylded of lyuely stones. Among these stones it is mete that the christian bysshop be conuersaunt and walke, hauing alwaye a diligent eye, and seyng that there be nothing among them, whiche maye defyle the temple dedicated vnto god. The thynges that defile it are ambicion, filthie gayne, couetousnesse, and falsehede. These abhominacions the Lord Jesus doth not suffer in his temple.

And nowe that in so riche, and royall a citie, he coulde fynde no place to be harboured in. O flower of religion, whiche cannot alwaye with the chiefe prelate of all religion. Oh misnamed Hierusalem, whiche blynded with worldely lustes, knoweth not her pacifier. O happye Bethany whiche without the wourkes of the lawe, thzough the onely obedience of faith, deserued to haue Jesus to be her geast. When on the nexte daye in the morning earlye, he returned from Bethany to Hierusalem, as he trauayled by the waye, he began to wax hungrye, whom very dede hungred mannes saluacion: and the sweetest bread vnto hym that coulde be was to redeme mankynde, accordyng vnto the fathers wyll and determinacion, albeit he was also, touchyng the nature of manne whiche he had taken vpon hym, breryly pangued with bodely hunger, and felte the griefe therof as other menne do, by reason of the dzieth of his bodye.

Nowe when the euening dze we nighe, he returned into Bethanie, because

Therfore when he sawe a farre of a figge tree, whiche because it was full of grene leaues, appeared to haue had some fruite: he ranne thereuto to se whether it had any thing to asswage his hunger withall. It is a sore payne when a man is very hungrye, and hath nothing to eate. But it is a muche greater griefe for one to se those miserye thzough their vnbeleefe, whome he is very desyzous to saue. And when he came vnto the figge tree, and deceyued with the allurement of the leaues, found no fruite thereon, he cursed it, saying: Neuer man eate fruite of the hereafter whyle the worlde endureth. The disciples secretly mernailed betwene themselues why he thus cursed the tree, especially sithe the time was not yet cum, whē this kynde of tree is wonte to haue fruite. Corporall honger hath her proper angre: But theuangelyke and spirituall honger, hath a more sharpe & bytyng tesnesse. Christ thought euery tarying ouer long where by mannes saluacion was prolonged. And trees haue due tymes appointed them of nature, when to bryng foorth their fruite, so that he male appeare vnreasonable to pray that it might bee ermore baraine, because it brought not furthe fruite before due season. furthermore, for what purpose ranne Jesus to the figge tree to shake downe he fruite yf there had bene anye, sythe he knewe right well there was none? But this atte whiche in our warde apparaunce semed fonde, and vnreasonable, occasioned the disciples not onely to be more attent and take better hede, but also to enserche the mistery therof. The Lorde Jesus moste hungry and desyzous of mannes saluacion, foude frute in the barrayne trees, where there was no hope of fruite, that is to sate, in common women, in Publicans, in sinners, in heathen folkes, in the womanne of Canaan, and in the Samaritanes. Onely in the priestes, Scribes, and Pharisees, of whome all menne had conceiued greatest hope that in them shoulde be the sweatest fruit of the Ghospell, founde he none at all. They kepte the fortresse of religion: they were continually in the temples: they had knowlege of the lawe, and prophetes: they loked pale with fastinges: they vsed long prayers: they gaue great almes: and besydes this, they: robes and brode Phylacteries made a wonderfull shewe, as thoughe they had ben altogether giuen to the studie of vertuousenesse and godly lyuing. Truly these were the leaues whiche promised the worlde tymely ripe fruite, euen before due season. But the Lordes entent was to shewe that there is nothing farther paste all grace, and goodnes, then is vngodlynesse couloured with a counterfaite shewe, or visure of holynes.

And nowe the cursed dede was cum.

This fygge tree deserueth to bee cursed of Iesu, leste any manne deceyued with the goodly shew of her leaues, would from hence forth hope to haue of this sorte of people, any sweate fruite of theuangelyke, & Christian charite.

The texte. ¶ And they came to Ierusalem: and Iesus went into the temple, and began to caste out them that solde and bought in the temple, and ouerthrew the tables of the money chaungers, and the stooles of them that solde doues, and would not suffer that any man shoulde carry a vessell thorow the temple. And he taught, saying vnto them. Is it not written? my house shall be called the house of prayer vnto all nations. But ye haue made it a denne of theues.

And Iesus went into the temple &c. Therefore he departed from the fygge tree whiche deserued no yll, and came to Ierusalem, wherein was the moral figge tree that had bene so long time nourished, and dunged in vaine, and yet brought forth nothing els but leaues. And when he was entred into the tẽple, he shewed againe another figure, whereby to declare what puritie besemeth the churche of the ghospell, and also what cleanesse becommeth an hart dedicated vnto the spirite of Christe.

And he taught the saying, &c. For with a scourge or whippe of cordes, he draue, and whipped out of the tẽple, the rablement of biers, and sellers, and also ouerthrewe the tables of the money chaungers, and the stooles of the doue sellers, and suffred none to carrie any prophane or vncleane vessell thorowe the temple. And lest he shoulde haue semed to haue bene angry with them causelesse, he alleaged the testimonie of the prophete Esaye: Is it not, sayth he, wrytten? My house shall be called a house of prayer vnto all nacions, but ye haue made it a denne of theaues, deceitfully doing the same thyng therein vnder couloure and pretence of the honoure and seruice of god that theaues do to waypfaryng men in their iourneys. The Lord cared not greatly for the puritie of that temple, whiche his will was shoulde be destroyed with the rites and ceremonies therof: but he set forthe vnto vs the notable puritie of the new temple, whereof himselfe would be the chief workman and builder, courtly sygnifying with all, how the priestes, scribes, and pharisees, shoulde be worthely deposed from the principalitie of religion, who had so defiled, euen that auncient, and figuratiue religion, with their couetousnesse, falshod, hipocrisie, and all kyndes of filthynesse. We neuer reade that euer Iesus was so moued: neuer that he vsed like cruelte. What woulde he nowe do if he sawe his spouselle the churche (whiche he washed with his owne precious bloude, to make her cleane vnto hymselfe, without any spot, or wrynckle) so to be arayed, polluted, and defiled with all manour of fylthynesse, and that by the very bishops the rulers of the same? who haue haue not onely catell, and pigyons to sell, but also all holy thinges, whiche in bery bede, can neither be bought, nor sold for money. He seeth it undoubtedly although he winke therat for a season. Neyther shall suche persones therfore escape unpunished, because god of his great lenitie and gentlenesse suffereth them, to thend they should repent, and cū to amendmēt. The day, the daye shal cum, when that terrible scourge shall be made, to whippe all those into the fyre of hell that be defilers of the holy temple.

¶ And the scribes and the priestes heard it, and sought howe to destroy him, for they feared him because all the people mervayled at his doctrine. And when euen was cum, Jesus went out of the citie. And in the morning as they passed by, they sawe the figge tree, dryed up by the roores: and Peter remembred, & sayd unto him: Master beholde the figge tree whiche thou cursedst is withered awaye. And Jesus answered, and sayd unto them: Haue confidence in God. The texte

And that it maye appeare what a great mischiefe the couetousnesse of priestes and pharisees is: when the chief of the priestes and scribes, who had the greatest pozcō of the gaynes, saw these thinges, they sought a meane how they might destroy Jesus. Oh figge tree barayne, and cursed in dede. They boast and aduaunt themselues for the chiefe prelates of pure religion, and yet, in the name of God, be they sore displeased, that the defilers of the temple are driuen out a doores. There lacked not in them a wicked minde ready to commit haynous murdre: but they sought occasion how they might safely accomplyshe theyr desyre. They alone coulde not fynde in theyr hartes to loue that louely and amiable Jesus, who hurt no body, but did all men good. They feared him, onely because the people mervayled at his doctrine, and conceiued an high opinion of him for the miracles they had seen him worke before. Oh wrong shapen holinesse in them that were professours of holinesse. After they had purposed to do so wicked a dede, they were not afrayed leste God (unto whome nothing is unknowen) would beauenged: and yet stode they in dreade of the people. Why did they not at the leaste wise feare Jesus himselfe? They had bothe seen, and hearde tell of the greate numbre of miracles that he wrought, which were an euident testimony that goddes power was presently with hym, so oft as he would hymselfe. He that is able to chase away diuels and put them to flighte, can muche easlyer put them in. He that with the bare worde of his mouthe, rayseth the dead, and calleth them to life againe, can with muche lesse difficultie, take awaye the lyfe. If they beleue he is so gracious and mercifull, that though he be able, yet wyll he hurt no body: why then go they about to put suche a one to death? If they beleue that he will also do, what he is able to do: why do they not, euen for verye feare of punishment and vengeaunce, refrayne from so wicked a purpose? Doubteleese this was that uncurable blindde nesse of them, who thought in their owne conceytes none had eyes, and could haue seene but they. Now when the nighte effsones approched, Jesus, who had bene all the dayein the temple fasting and without meate, departed from Jerusalem. For they feared him, because all the people mervayled at his doctrine.

So ofte forsaketh he the citie, offended with the obstinate unbeleefe of the inhabitauntes: so oft cummeth he thyther, to find sum fruite, if it would be in so goodly a shew of leaues. But would to god this cursed figtre had bene nothing els but barain, and not brought foorth deadly poyson. Jesus, the time of his death and passion being now at hand, suffered no time to passe away fruitelesse. He spent all the day in the temple, and bestowed the night in prayer, and priuatelye animating and encouraging of his disciples. Agayne whan early in the mourning they retourned from Bethany to Hierusalem, and passed by the figge tree, the disciples perceiued how it was withered, euen from the very rootes, to the highest top.

Peter called to remembraunce what Jesus had done the day before, and knewe righte well howe he had cursed the tree, and yet meruayling that it was sodainly withered in all partes from the very rootes, sayd to the lord: Maister: Loe the figge tree that thou cursedst is now withered. Peter meruayled here at, not withstanding he had oftetymes before seen hym do farre greater thinges than this. Surely he had forgotten this lesson, howe there is nothing so harde, that faith is not able to bring to passe. Of fayth springeth all the fruite of the gospell. And because the Synagoge wanted this faith, we see howe she is cleane withered. The churche of the Gentiles blossometh & brauncheth out with many crownes of Martirs, with many precious stones of virgins, with many ensamples of vertue. On the other side, what is further passe all grace and goodnesse, more abiect, vile, and barayne, then the Jewes are. Where is the auctoritie of the law becum? where is the meruelous shewe of religion or holynesse? where is the temple? where are the stately Scribes, & Pharisies? Is not the figge tree all withered? Therfore, sayth he, yf ye will blossome and bring foorth fruite, put confidence, not in your owne strength, but in God.

The texte. C Verely I say vnto you, that whosoeuer shall say vnto this mountaine, remoue and cast thy selfe into the sea, & shall not doubte in his harte but shall beleue that those thynges which he sayeth, shall cum to passe, whatsoeuer he saieth, he shall haue. Therfore I say vnto you, what thinges soeuer ye desyre when ye pray, beleue that ye receyue them, & ye shall haue them. And when ye stand and pray, forgeue yf ye haue oughte against anye manne, that your father also whiche is in heauen, maie forgeue you your trespaces.

I assure you of this one thing, yf a man hauing a sure belefe in god, commaunde this figge tree to wither (whiche thing you meruayle at, now it is done) not onely that shall foorth with cum to passe, but also yf he saye vnto this mountayne: Auoyd out of thy place, and cast thy selfe into the sea, albeit it seme a thing very impossible, yet yf he speake the worde nothyng doubting or mistrusting in his hart, but haue conceyued a sure belefe of mind, that whatsoeuer he say shall in very dede cum to passe, then vndoubtedlye whatsoeuer he commaundeth, shall be done. This belefe towardes god, shall cause that ye shall desyre nothyng of him in vayne. Therfore truste ye on my warrandise, that whatsoeuer ye demaunde of the father not mistrusting but he will graunt you your requeste, you shall obtain it, so that your mindes be free from desyre of reuengement: and on condicion, ye desyre but what shall be expedient for your soule healeth. He that distrusteth, obtaineth nothing. For such a one beleueth that the father either cannot accomplish his desyre (whereas in dede he his able to do all thinges with a becke) or at the least wise will not let him haue what he lawfully asketh: that man also obtaineth not his requeste, and if he beleue his faith is a naughty shamlesse fayth, whoso desireth the father to pardon the trespaces that he hath committed againste his maiestie, whereas he will not againe for his parte release vnto his christian brother, suche offences as his sayd brother had committed againste hym. Wherefore fore when ye ſtande your ſelues to prayer, forgeue with all your hertes, if any body haue ought offended you. For vnder this condicion ſhall your father in heauen releaſe you your treſpaces: If you will not forgeue youre neighboure the fault whiche he hath committed againſte you, neyther will the father of heauen pardon the offences, wherby ye haue treſpaced his goodneſſe.

¶ And they came againe to Ieruſalem. And as he walked in the temple, there came to him the hye prieſtes, and the Scribes, and elders, and ſayde vnto hym: by what auctorite doest thou theſe thinges? And who gaue the the auctorite to do theſe thinges? Ieſus answered and ſayd vnto them: I will alſo aſke of you a certayne thing, and anſwere ye me, and I will tell you by what auctorite I do theſe thinges. The baptiſme of Iohn, whether was it from heauen, or of men? anſwere me. And they thought in themſelues, ſaying: yf we ſaye from heauen, he will ſaye: why then did ye not beleue hym? But yf we ſaye of men, they feared the people. For all men counted Iohn that he was a very prophete. And they answered and ſayd vnto Ieſus: we can not tell. And Ieſus anſwered, and ſayde vnto them: neyther tell I you, by what auctorite I do theſe thinges. The tēple.

Theſe thinges done on the waye, they came againe to Ieruſalem, and Ieſus, according to his accuſtomed maneure, went vnto the temple. The preſence of Ieſus in the temple, is ſoule healthy in the churche. Neyther beſemeth it ſuche as are in Chriſtes ſtede, to be any where offener, then in the temple. They be in the temple, whiche entermeddle with thoſe thinges that pertayne to god, and not vnto this worlde.

What maketh a biſhop in a cāpe amōg warriers: what hath he to do in theatres, yͤ is to ſaye, in ſtages, & places ordayned for the people to behold ſightes and enterludes in: what maketh he in princes courtes: The phariſeis, Scribes, prieſtes, and elders were by bodily preſence often in the temple: but as touching yͤ ſpirite, they were a great waye of. Therfore when the hye prieſtes ioyning vnto them the Scribes, and headmen of the people, becauſe the matter ſhoulde ſeme to be done by a lawfull counſaile, ſawe howe Ieſus had all the multitude in the temple, diligently harkening and liſtening vnto his doctrine, and alſo howe, by reaſon of his miracles, he raygned and played the kyng, as it had ben in another princes kyngdom (for he drove out marchantmen, and ſuche as carried veſſels through the temple) they went and interrupted hym in his preachyng, renuing their olde maneure of falſe reproving, and ſaying: by what authoritie doeſt thou theſe thynges? And who hath gyuen the licence thus to do? They were not able to diſproue his doctrine: neyther coulde they denie his miracles, being ſo many, and ſo euident with all: nor fynde faute with them, ſithe he wrought them all for mannes preſeruacion, and that freely. They ſought occaſion of authoritie, whereby they might haue ſome quarell againſt him. For they would not in any wiſe that this glory ſhould haue ben geuen vnto God: but all their whole dyſyre was, to haue their owne authoritie euery where highlieſt eſtemed. If Ieſus (whome they beleued to be nothing els but a man) had taken vpon hym goddes authoritie, then would thei byandby haue made a matier of blaſphemy of it. If not, then had there not ben to ſeke, a forged matter of ſedicion to laye againſte hym, for that by his owne priuate authoritie, without leaue and licence of the prieſtes and elders, he preſumed to do ſuche a thing in the temple. What nede they then to moue this queſtion of authoritie: ſith his very dedes declared that all that was done, was done by the might and power of God: ſithe the thyng it ſelfe plainlye ſhewed, how this was he whom God by his Prophetes promiſed long ago to cumme: ſithe the father after his baptiſme, declared with his owne voyce, And as he walked in that this was his singularlye beloued sonne, whome they should obeye. Nowe the authoritie of the priestes, whiche they misused was good for nothing els but to lette gods glorye. Howbeit their frowarde wilfulnesse, dyd also make muche for the aduauncyng and setting forth of his power, and goodnesse.

Jesus therfore, because he was not ignorannt where about they went (for what aunswere soeuer he had made, they would haue found faute therwith: and as yet the time was not cum for him to disclose and confesse who he was) Jesus, I saye, auoyded this deceitfull question with another wise demaunde. On this condition, sayth he, will I make aunswer vnto your question, yf you will aunswer me firste vnto mine. The baptisme of John, whether was it from heauen or of men? Soyle me this question. Marke howe easlye goddes wysdome snarleth mannes wylinesse, whiche vseth all the crafte and policie that maye be against it. They hadde hartes replenished with all worldlye subtiltie: they deuised all the gyle full wayes that could be inuented: And yet whyles they made traines to entrap hym, they perceiued that there were snares prepared and layed for themselues.

And they thought in themselues &c.

For they thought thus in their mindes: If we saye, from heauen, then will he replie: Why dyd you not then beleue him, when he bare witnesse of me: If we saye of men, we stande in ieopardie to be assaulted of the people. For John was of very great authoritie among the people, and the memorie of him was reputed blessed and holy, because no man doubted but he was a prophet in dede. And for this cause, albeit they were proud felowes and of an haut courage, yet thought they it better to be a litle ashamed, then openly to be reproued, or stoned to death.

Therfore vnto Jesu, who required an aunswere, they sayde: We cannot tell. Then Jesus paying them home againe with a lyke aunswere, sayd vnto them: If you know not to me warde that ye know, neither will I shew you by what authoritie I do these thinges that I do. Compare my dedes with Johns, and then waye and ponder with your selues whether is be mete, if ye doubted not of his authoritie, to doubte of mine.

The. xij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ And he began to speake vnto them by parables. A certaine man planted a vynyarde & compassed it about with an hedge, & ordened a wynepresse, and builded a tourr, and lette out to hier vnto husbandmen, and went into a straunge countrey. And when the time was cum, he sent to the husbandmen a seruaunt that he might receyue of the husbandmen some of the fruite of the vynearde. And they caught him, and beat him, and sent him away again emptie, and moreouer he sent vnto them another seruaunt, and at him they cast stones, and brake his heed, and sent him awaye againe all to rewiled: and againe he sent another, and hym they killed, and many other, beatyng sum, and killyng sum. And so when he hadde yet but one beloued sonne, he sent hym also at the laste vnto them, saying: they will feare my sonne. But the husbandemen sayde among themselues: this is the heyre, cum let vs kyll hym, and the inheritaunce shall be ours. And they toke him, and killed hym and cast hym out of the vynearde.

After

After the prieſtes, Scribes and head menne hadde by reaſon they perceiued the traine that was made for them annoyded, as well as it wouldbe, the inconuenience of this queſtion, the lorde Jeſus put forth vnto them another queſtion by waye of a riole or darke parable, whereunto whiles they vnaduiſedly anſwered; they bothe condemned theyr owne wickednelle; and alſo graunted that the authoritie (whiche they had hytherto ſomuche bragged and boaſted on) ought worthily to be taken awaye from them, and geuen vnto other. The parable was ſuche. A certaine man planted a vyneyarde, and hedged it rounde about, leſt it ſhould be open for man and beaſt to runne into: & digged therin a ceſterne to receiue the newe wyne, and buylded alſo a tower to defende it with all: when it was in this wyſe ſufficiently furniſhed with all neceſſaries therunto belongyng, he let it out to hier to huſbandmen, and anon as he had ſo done he went into a ſtraunge countrey. And when grape time was cum, he ſent his ſeruaunt to the ſame huſbandmen vnto whome he had ſet it out, to receiue of them the fruite therof. But they being in a conſpiracie, toke the ſeruaunt, and all to beat hym, and ſent hym home agayne emptie. This notwithſtanding ỹ gentle landlorde ſent againe another of his ſeruaunts. But they now made worſe throughe his lenitie and gentlenes, caſt ſtones at hym, and brake his head, and ſent hym like wyſe awaye agayne all to reuiled, without anye fruite, but laden with iniuries. Yet for all that the ſame moſte gentle lorde wet not about in all haſte to be auenged, but now the thyrde tyme ſente another ſeruaunt, and him alſo they ſlew. Agayne after he had ſente diuerſe of his ſeruauntes, one after another, the ende and concluſion was, that eyther they bet them all, or elſe ſlew them. He had then left his onely ſonne whom he loued tenderly. Therfore becauſe that of his wonderfull gentlenelle, he wouldeprone all the wayes and meanes that myght be to reconcyle them, laſte of all he ſent hym alſo vnto them, thynchyng thus with himſelfe: Although they haue deſpiſed my ſeruauntes, yet at the leaſt wyſe they wyll reuerence this my ſonne. But the malice of the huſbandmen conquered all the lordes clemency & goodneſſe. When they ſawe howe his ſonne was cum, then fell they in a conſpiracie together, for a more miſchieuous purpoſe. Here now, ſayd they, is the heire: cum let vs kill hym, and by this meanes the whole heritage ſhall be ours. Then layde they handes on him, and caſt him out of the vineyard, & ſlew him.

And again he ſent an other. &c.

And ſo whe he had yet but one beloued ſonne. &c.

But ỹ huſbandmen ſayd emong themſelues &c.

¶ What ſhall therfore the Lorde of the vyneyard do? He ſhall cumme and deſtroie the huſbandmen and let out the vyneyard vnto other. Haue ye not red this Scripture? The ſtone whiche the builders byd refuſe, is become the chiefe ſtone of the corner. This is the lordes doing, and it is maruaylous in our eyes. They went about alſo to take hym, and feared the people, for they knew that he had ſpoken the parable againſt them. And they lefte hym, and went theyr waye.

The texte.

When the lorde had made an ende of this parable, he aſked the prieſtes, and Scribes: What ſhall therfore the loade of the vineyarde do vnto ſuche huſbandmen? They not markyng whereunto the parable or ſimilitude tended, ſo anſwered the lorde that they gaue ſentence directly againſt themſelfes. He ſhall, ſay they, and puniſche the huſbandmen, and ſet out the vineyard vnto other moze faythfull and truſtie perſones.

When

Whē Jesus had alowed this answer, he added a testimony out of ꝑ Psalme, seekyng for an interpretacion of them who profelled the knowlege of the lawe. Haue ye not read, saythe he, this scripture folowyng: The same stone whiche the buylders refused, is made the head stone of the corner. This was the lordes doing, and it is meruailous in our eyes. Here awakened they and perceiued how theyr mischeuous purposes were not vnowē vnto Jesus, and vnderstood also that theyr vncurable malyce was plainly detected by this darke parable. God committed vnto them his people, as a vineyarde diligently fournished with all thinges belonging to the discipline of godlynes to be well husbanded. Then he, as though he had benem a straunge countrey suffered them to doe ther with what them liked. But they husbanded it to ther owne profit and commoditie, and nothyng for the lordes behoofe, who ought of ryght to haue receiued the fruite therof. Whē they were slacke and negligent in doing of their duetie, he warned them therof by diuerse prophetes: but for all that they ware dayly worse and worse, and at the length were redy to expulse Jesus his only sonne out of Jerusalē, and put hym to death perswadyng themselues that he being once slayne, they should be the onely lordes and proprietaries of the vineyarde. But contrary wyse it was them to cum to passe, that by the moste iuste vengeaunce and punishment of God (whom thei had so many times and ofte despised) the temple, and soueraignte of religion should be taken quite from them, and geuen to the apostles. For afterwarde Jesus (who was by thē as a naughty stone, cast out of the building of the Synagoge) was contrary to theyr expectacion chosen by the wyll of God, to be the head corner stone, in the building of the church, that should be builded bothe of the Jewes, and Gentiles: to thentent that he beyng the middle, and vnmoueable stone, should hold together those two peoples, as it were bothe the walles of the same churche, in one euangelike and christian fayethe.

They went about also to take him.

They vnderstoode the Parable, they knewe the Propheteye, and yet blinded with obstynate malyce would not tourne from their wickednesse, but for feare of the people that stode rounde about them, went theyr wayes from Jesu, entendyng to bryng about by pryuye trayuys, and subtyltie, what they could not openly doe. Surely there is none so mischeuous a kynde of manslaughter, as that whiche is cloked with a colour of iustice and holynesse.

The texte.

And they sent vnto hym certayne of the Pharisees, and Herodes seruauntes to take hym in his wordes. And allone as they were cumme, they sayde vnto hym: Maister, we knowe that thou art true, and carest for no man, for thou considerest not the outwarde apparaile of men, but teachest the waye of God truely. Is it lawful to pay tribute to Cesar or not, ought we to geue, or ought we not to geue? Wt he vnderstode theyr simulacion, and sayd vnto them: why tempte ye me? Bryng me a peny that I maye see it. And they brought it. And he sayeth vnto them: whose is this Image, and superscripcion? And they sayd vnto hym: Cesars: And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Geue to Cesar the thynges that belong to Cesar: and to God the thynges whiche pertaine to God. And they maruayled at hym.

Wherfore makyng as though themselues had been quiet, and no medlers, they set a worke certayne notable wicked personnes of the Pharisees, and the Herodians whiche dissented in doctrine among themselues, but in hatyng of Jesus agreed all in on. Oh folysh wysdome of this worlde. They that haue been so ofte tymes put to the worse, doo ofte tymes cumme again, and assayle hym, hym, to thentent it may appeare that they are at all sayes banquished, and in conclusion depart their waye as vnequal matches to cope or encounter with Goddes wysdom. For nowe was it tyme that Satan (who of late assayled the Lorde, but went away with losse of victorie) should by his garde, and ministers bring forth all his artyllary and engins against him.

Therfore they that are set vp to playe this parte, goe vnto Jesus, and propone vnto him a captious question, because to seke some occasion of his wordes, and answeres therevnto wherby they maye haue hym condemned before themperours deputie. They begin with a very flatering prohemie, as though he could be deceiued with faire wordes, who so ofte times declared howe there is nothyng that he knoweth not. Maister, say they, we knowe right well that thou art a teller of trouthe, and feareste no man, but frankely speakeste the truthe without regarde of persone. Neyther art thou any whyt moued with the dignitie, or hygh auctoritie of any manne (as many other by, that flatter and coure fauoure with potentates and great menne) but (menne contemned) thou trewly teacheste what god hathe commaunded. Therefore tell vs also we praie the: Is it lawfull for vs to pay tribute vnto themperour or is it not lawfull? The phariseis helde stiffy that the Jewes, beyng a people dedicated vnto god, ought not to be tributaries vnto Heathen Emperours, and worshyppers of Idolles. For thou confidereſt not.

On the other syde, the herodians defended themperous right. This deceitfull prohemie tended hereunto, that yf he had geuen sentence for the phariseis, then should he haue been accused of the herodians for an authour of rebellyon, or insurrection againste themperour. Jesus, vnto whom theyr craft and wylines was not vnknowen, beyng not contented with them, for that they came not to learne, but to tempt him, answered: Why doe you tempte me, bring me forthe a peny that I maye see it. And byanby it was brought him. Theyr scrutes was not to seke in making of the traine, whiche came purposely to take him in a trippe. Then loked he on the peny, and sayd: whose is this Image, and superscription? They answered: themperours. What is this? knewe not Jesus (vnto whome nothyng is vnknowen) the Image or title of themperoure: and did the Phariseis and Herodians knowe it? Yes verily he knewe it well ynoughe, and that before he loked thereon. But he sought an occasion to make a conuenient answere vnto theyr deceitfull question. But he beyng tempted sharpely answered, and sayde vnto them.

Here was an ensample geuen to declare howe they ought to knowe nothyng of princes affaires, whose duetie it is, for asmuche as they profesſe themselues to be Christes vicars in earthe, to preache, and teache heauenly matters. Now heare an answer worthy to cum out of Christes mouthe. Yelde ye, saith he, those thinges that pertaine to themperour, to themperour: and those thinges that belong to god, vnto god. He disaloweth not, if suche as are dedicated vnto god, giue vnto themperour, be he neuer so vngodly and wicked a prince, that, whiche is due vnto him for gouerning of the common weale, or what other wise violently exacteth (because that losse of money doth not make men vngodlye) but he monisheth vs, occasion serning him, of a thyng whiche is more to the purpose, that is, howe all ought to be yelden to god, that is due vnto god. A vile piece of coyne had grauen in it a title, and ymage of themperoure. If thou knowest this title, and art content to geue vnto him his due, howe muche more then oughteste thou to yelde vnto almighty god (whose Image euery manne beareth) what he ought of duetie to haue. When thou receyuedst Baptysme, Goddes image was printed and grauen in thy soule. Why doest thou then geue it vnto the deuell? Thou glorifyest in the name, and tytle of a Chrystian manne: Why yeldest thou not vnto Chriſte, that thou owest hym by reason of thy profession? All that were there present mauayled at this discrete and wyse aunswere. Two sectes of the Iewes were now put to sylence with one saying.

The .iiij. secte.

¶ There came also vnto hym the Saduceis, whiche say that there is no resurrection. And they asked hym, saying: Maystre, Moyses wrote vnto vs, yf any mannes brother dye, and leaue his wyfe behynde hym, and leaue no chyldren, that his brother shoulde take his wyfe, and rayse vp seed to his brother. There were seuen brethren, and the first toke a wife and when he dyed, left no seede behynde hym: And the seconde tooke her, and dyed, neyther lefte he any seede. And the thirde in lykewyse. And seuen had her, and lefte no seede behynde them: Laste of all the wife dyed also. In the resurrection therefore, when they shall ryse again, whose wife shall she be of them? for seuen had her to wife. And Iesus answered, and sayde vnto them: Doe ye not therfore erre because ye vnderstande not the Scriptures, neyther the power of God? For when they shall ryse agayne from death, they neither marrye, nor are marryed, but are as the angels whiche are in heauen As touchyng the deade, that they ryse agayne haue ye not redde in the booke of Moyses, howe in the bushe God spake vnto hym, saying: I am the god of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Iacob, he is no god of the dead, but the god of lyuing. Ye are therfore greatly deceyued.

Then came the secte of Saduceis, who denied the resurrection of bodyes, auouchyng manne wholy to perysshe after deathe. Neyther beleued they that there was any spirite or Aungell, wherein they dissented in opinion from the Phariseis. These grosse felowes had also a captious question wherwith to tempte Goddes wisdome. Iesus did then take vpon him the person of an vnlearned and ignoraunte person: but that thyng whiche in hym was lowest, was hyghest, and of more excellencye then that whiche in menne is hyghest. They allayled hym on this wise: Maystre, Moyses in the booke entitled deuteronomium, hath lefte vs this lawe, that yf any maried manne dye without issue, his next brother in age should marry the wydow, and of her beget children to beare the dead mans name. And yf he deceasse without chyldren to, then the next vnto hym should succede in his place or roume.

Howe wer seuen brethren.

Yt chaunced that of seuen brethren the eldest maried a wyfe: he dyed without issue: Then came the nexte brother in age, according to the prescription of the lawe, and maried the widow: and he beyng lykewyse departed without children, the thyrde brother succeded: and after hym all the other by course, vnto the seuenthe, and last manne. Eche of them one after another, marryed her, and eche of them deceassed without issue. At the length the woman also dyed herselfe. Therefore when the tyme of resurrection shall cumme, and the seuen brethren, and the woman shall reuiue, which of them all shall chalenge her for his wyfe: for in her lyfe tyme she was like wyse maryed vnto them all seuen. The Saduces thought they wouldbe by thyncouenience that they inferred of this case, make the resurrection of the dead to apeare a very fonde thyng, and disagreable to reason: specyally yf there shoulde then ryse strife and debate among the brethren for the wyfe, whiche was common vnto them all.

Iesus gruntched not to teache those grosse felowes, saying: Doethe not thys question playnly declare that you be in a wrong beleke, and altogether out of the waye, for asmuche as ye neyther vnderstand the Scriptures, nor yet perceiue the power of almighty God. The Scripture is spirituall: for God who made made manne of naught,canne ryse hym agayne at his pleasure,from death to lyfe.He wyll not onelymake the deade alyue agayne,but also rewarde them with lyfe euerlastyng.

Nowe wedlocke was inuented among menne for this purpose,because the thyng(I meane mankynde)whiche of it selfe,and owne proper nature corrupteth not for euer,myght by procreacion and encreasyng of the worlde, be multiplied, preserued and contynued. But whereas menne neyther dye, nor be borne after the common course of the worlde,what nedeth there any matrimonye? for after the resurrection of the dead,neyther shall any manne marry, nor any manne geue his daughter in marryage to an other:but as the angels of god in heauen,because there is among them no mortalitie, knowe not the vse of matrimony:so shall they that shall be reuyued in the generall resurrection,be made lyke vnto the aungells,theyr bodies beynge all spyrytuall and immortal. Furthermore why do you thinke it discagreable to reason to beleue that the dead shall ryse agayne? Haue ye not redde in holy scripture(the auctorytie wherof is counted among you holy , and inuiolable)what god sayed when he spake vnto Moyses out of the bushe? I am,sayed he,the god of Abraham , the god of Isaac,and the god of Jacob , they were then dead , and yet doth he call himselfe theyr god. Therfore euen the dead do verily lyue because their soules remayne styll alyue.

For when they that ryse agayne &c.

And if it be so that theyr soules remayne,what great mayster is it then for God to call them agayne into theyr olde bodyes,wherein they dwelt before? But yf the dead be vtterly perished,so that nether bodye nor soule remayneth alyue,then standeth it not with reason,that he is called the God of the deade. As no man gloryeth that he is a king of thole that are not,so is God the God of the lyuyng,and not of the deade. Wherefore you Sadduceis are farre deceyued,imagynyng that there shall be nothyng in the lyfe to cum,other wise then you see in this present life. Thole thinges no doubt haue a more true and blessed beyng whiche are not vnder mans corporall sight,then thole whiche are seene with bodelye eyes. There is nothyng that more truly is,then god , and yet he is not seene,but felte or perceyued.

Ye are therefore greatelye deceiued.

¶ And when there came one of the Scrybes,and hearde them disputyng together , and perceyued that he had answered them well,he asked hym : whiche is the fyrste of all the commaundementes? Jesus answered hym . The fyrste of all the commaundementes is: Heare o Jsraell: The Lorde oure God is lorde onely , and thou shalt loue the lorde thy God,with all thy harte,and with all thy soule , and with all thy mynde, and with all thy strength. This is the fyrste commaundement. And the second is like vnto this: Thou shalt loue thy neyboure as thy self There is none other commaundement greater then these. And the Scribe sayd vnto hym well Master,thou hast sayde the trueth . for there is one God, and there is none out he. And to loue hym with all the harte , and with all the mynde , and with all the soule,and with all the strength,and to loue a man as his neyghbour as hym selfe, is greater thynge,then all burnte offerynges,and sacrifices. And when Jesus sawe that he answered discreetely, he sayde vnto hym: Thou art not farre from the kyngdome of God. And no man after that durst aske hym any question.

The texte.

Yet for all this these wicked felowes made not an ende to tempte Christ. After the Sadduceis came the Pharyseis,and the Scrybes,who were encouraged to take hym in hand,because he hit the Sadduceis in the teethe with ignorance of the law. For the Scribes and the Pharyseis auaunt them selues more then other,for the great knowledge they pretende to haue in the same: and dissentyng in opinion from the Sadduceis, do beleue there are angeles , and spirites: and that mens soules remayne alyue after the bodyes be dead: and finally that the dead shall ryse agayne. These folowes beyng right glad that the Sadduceis were put to a foyle & blanched, and that Jesus had answered to their mindes, dyd lyke learned men, propoune and putte forthe vnto hym by one of the scribes, set vp for the nones to playe this parte, a notable question out of the moste inward misteries of the law. They asked hym what was the chief, and greatest commaundement in the whole lawe. Jesus straight wayes answered them out of the boke entyled Deuteronomium, where as it is written on this wyse: Heare O Israell, the lorde thy God is one god, and thou shalt loue the lorde thy God with all thy harte, and with all thy soule, and with all thy mynde, and with all thy strength. This is the chiefe and greatest commaundement: nert vnto this, is that that foloweth: Thou shalt loue thy neyboure none other wise then thyselfe. There is no other commaundement greater then these two, because they comprise the summe and effect of the whole law. Whē the Scribe heard him saye so, he sayde againe: Thou hast wel & truly answered how there is one God, and none other but he, and that to loue him with all the harte, and with all the vnderstandyng, and with all the soule, and with all the strength, is a thing whiche palleth all burnt offrynges, and other sacrifices. Jesus perceyuyng that he had ryght discretly answered, sayd vnto him: Thou arte not far from the kyngdom of God. For the euangelyke godlynes standeth not in sacrifices of beastes, but in cleannes of spirite. He is not farre from this meaning, whoso preferreth that commaundement whiche is spirituall simple or plaine, before all other preceptes, whiche be rather figures and tokens of true godlines, then the hyng selfe. But the comon sorte of the Jewes beleue verely that the chiefest parte of vertue and godly lyuing, standeth in visible thinges, as in washinges, in kepyng of the sabboth daye, in choyce of meates, in offred giftes, in sacrifices, in holy dayes, in fastinges, and in long prayers. Whoso with all his harte loueth god, for gods self (the whiche can neuer be loued enoughe) and his neybour for goddes sake: the same hath made sufficient sacrifice. After that Jesu had thus with his wisdome euery where confounded and ouercum them, than cessed they to tempt hym, lest they should haue departed with greater shame, if they had bē styll repzoued in the presence of the people. They counted Jesus for an ignozaunt person, and auaunted and set out themselues among the simple & vnlearned people, what with their magnifike and hye titles, and what with theyr tragical and mas kyngap parell, as thoughe they had been almost god almighties peres. How bet the euangelike and godly wysdom, stādeth not in the multitude of sciences but in purenesse of spirite. As Jesus was reputed among the scribes, Pharisies, priestes, and head mē of the people, so afterwarde were the apostles taken for rude and ignozaunt persons among the phylosophers, rulers, and princes.

He asked him whiche is the first.

And no man after that durst aske hym any question.

The texte. ¶ And Jesus answered, and sayde, teachyng in the temple: Howe saye the Scribes that Christ is the sonne of Dauid? For Dauid himselfe inspired with the holy ghost, sayed: The lorde sayde to my lorde, syt on my right hande, tyll I make thyne enemyes thy foote stole. Dauid himselfe called hym lorde, and howe is he then his sonne? and muche people heard hym gladly.

But although the Scribes and Pharisies ceased to tempte Jesus, yet ceased not he to teache them. For when he had propouned vnto them being assembled altogether, a question, and asked whose sonne was Messias whome they wayted for, and they had answered against out of the Prophetes, the sone of Dauid: he moued a doubte that none of them all could assoyle, saying: how standeth it that Hellias is the sonne of Dauid, since Dauid himselfe inspired with the holy ghost, speaketh in the Psalme as followeth. The lord sayde vnto my lorde, sitte on my right hand, till I make thyne enemyes thy footestole. Sith thauctorite of the progenitoures is greater then is thauctorite of the of spring and newewes, by what reason then dothe Dauid call hym, who shal be borne of his seede, his lord. It is a lyke thing, as thoughe the father would call the sonne Lorde. The Scribes, and the Phareseis, who had in them the spirite of the flesh, as yet understode not this misterie. Dauid inspired with ỹ holy ghost, sawe in Christ, whoe was not then borne, a thing farre aboue the nature of manne, where as himselfe was nothing els but a man. Nowe when the Scribes, and Phariseis helde theyr peace, and couldo make no answere hereunto, the moste parte of the people fauoured Iesu, and had a great delite to heare him dispute and reason the matter.

Dowe saye the Scribes of Christ, &c.

¶ And he sayed vnto them in his doctrine: beware of the Scribes whiche loue to goe in long clothing, and loue salutations in the market place, and the chiefe seates in the congregacions, and the vppermoste rowmes at feastes, whiche deuoure wydowes houses, and vnder a pretence, make long prayers. These shall receyue greater damnacion.

The texte.

Wherefore Iesus perceiuing them to be curable, and knowing also how the priestes, Scribes and Phariseis of a purpensed malyce perseuered in their vngracious purpose, began openly to disclose theyr naughtynes in thaudyence of the people, not because to backbyte and slaunder them: but he toke from thē the visure of counterfaite vertue and holynes, lest they shoulde frō thencefoorth any more deceyue the people. For nowe the tyme required that he should so do. Therfore putting forthe and preaching vnto them his owne doctrine, that is to say, a franche doctrine, and suche a one as flattereth and coureth fauour with no manne, he sayed: beware leste the royall chew of the Scribes, & Phariseis deceiue you. They studye not your soule healthe, but theyr owne glorye. For they couet to go in long roabes doune to the ancle, to thentent they maye appeare to be men of geat perfection: and they seke after salutations in ỹ market place, and the preferment of the chiefe seate in assemblies: and in all feastes, and bankets the first place or vppermost rowme of the table. They vse also long prayers, bycause they maye seeme holyer then other. And by reason of couche coloured holynesse, they crepe into the fauoure of blessed and godlye wydowes, but symple withall: whiche for diuers causes are apte to be deceyued, eyther bycause of the weaknes of theyr sexe and kynde, or for that they be wydowes, and lacke husbandes to defende them, or els bycause they be ryche and wealthy. To the cum they of their owne swinge, vnder pretece to be their patrones, and defendours, and with theyr counterfayte holynesse deuour vp their houses. But so litle shall this their hipocrisy profite them, that they shall be moze greuously damned of god, for so muche as they couered their naughtynes with a colour of holy and vertuous lyuing. Therfore take ye good hede of those, leste ye be deceyued.

And he sayd vnto them

Whiche deuour wydowes houses, &c.

These shall receiue greater damnacion.

And when Iesus sate ouer against the treasury, he behelde howe the people put money into the treasury, and many that were riche, caste in muche. And there came a certaine poore wydowe, and she threwe in two mites, whiche make a farthyng. And he called vnto him his disciples, and sayed vnto them: Verily I say vnto you, that this poore wydowe hath caste more in, then all they whiche haue caste in to the treasurye: for they all dyd caste in of their superfluite, but she of her pouertie dyd caste in all that euer she hadde, euen all her liuyng.

The texte.

And many that were riche cast in muche.

Theſe thinges done, Jeſus went into that parte of ỹ tẽple where the treaſury was, wherin the offered gyftes were kepte, and ſytting directly againſt it, behelde thoſe that made their oblation, and caſte in giftes. And many riche folkes caſte in great giftes, whom the prieſtes wouldе therefore ſhoulde be counted as it were more holier then other, meaſuring their godlynes, after the rate and meaſure of the gifte that they offered.

In the meane ſeaſon there came alſo a certaine poore wydowe, and thyewe in two litle pieces of coyne, whiche made a ferthing. There was none among them all that preferred not thoſe ryche folkes before this poore woman. But Jeſus iudgement farre differeth from the iudgemẽt of the Scribes, and Phariſeis, the whiche thyng he woulde not haue his diſciples ignorannt of. I tell you, ſayeth he, for a certaintie, this widowe, be ſhe neuer ſo poore, hathe geuen more to the treaſury, then all the other, whiche ſeeme to haue geuen moofte lauiſchely. For the other gaue of their abundaunt ſuperfluitie. They gaue muche, howbeit they reſerued more to themſelfes. But this woman of her lyttle poore ſubſtance, hath geuen all together, reſeruing nothing vnto her ſelfe. For God doeth not eſteme the gifte after the meaſure and value of the thyng that is geuen, but after thaffection & minde of the geuer. Jeſus is pleaſed with ſuche a wydowe, and dayneth to beeher houſe and conforter. The Synagoge like a proude houſewyfe boaſteth and crabbeth vpon the riches of herceightcouſines: the boaſteth vpõ her ryche ornamẽtes of good workes. She gloryeth in her houſebãde Moyſes, vnto whom ſhe was neuer obedient: She auaunteth herſelfe, becauſe the prophetes were her ſonnes, whome ſhe eyther ſlewe with wicked murther, or at the leaſt wyſe perſecuted. She hath euer in her mouth, the lordes tẽple, the lawe of God, the Patriarches, Abrahã, Iſaac, Jacob, and Iſrael. She goeth with her garde of prieſtes, Scribes, and Phariſeis. But the churche like a poore wydowe hath nothyng to boaſt vpon. She knowledgeth lacke of good workes: and yet that litle that ſhe hath, ſhe wholy dedicateth and offereth vnto God. Nowe what can be poorer then ſuche a wydowe, as leaueth herſelfe nothyng at all? She knoweledgeth not Moyſes to be her huſband, becauſe ſhe knowethe not circumciſion: becauſe ſhe abhorrethe the ſacryfices of beaſtes, beeyng contented wholely to haue offered vp her ſelfe vnto almyghtie God. The Lorde her ſpouſe, inaſmuche as he hath forſaken the yearthe, and is returned into heauen, ſemethe to haue forſaken his wydowe: whiche nowe like a woman deſtitute of all ſuccoure, is ſpoyled, baniſhed, impriſoned, afflicted, and oppreſſed bothe of the Jewes and Gentyles. She heareth dayly: where is thy ſpouſe? It ſemethe that ſhe wyll ſtarue for hunger, whiche hauinge ſo ſmall ſubſtaunce, hath cleane forgone that lyttle ſhe had, and lefte herſelfe nothynge. It ſemethe ſhe wyll dye ſhortly to reproche of baraines, whiche hath loſt her houſband. But this widow which after the iudgement of the worlde is paſt all healthe, & vtterlye vndone, the prophete Eſaie comforteth on this wyſe: Be thou glad thou barayne that bryngeſt furth no kruit: breake furth and cry thou ỹ trauaileſt not: for the deſolate hath many mo chyldren then ſhe that hath an huſbande. Doe not we ſe that this prophecy is fulfilled? The ſynagoge is hongry, and dyethe. The churche is encreaced and ſpred abrode, triumphyng in Martyrs, florifhing in Virgins, and reioyſynge in ſo many thouſandes of Confeſſours. She hath not one farthing of her owne proper richys: but of her spouses richys, the hath tried golde, fine and pure: the hath precious stones inestimable. For throughe sincere and pure fayth to wardes her riche spouse, whatsoeuer he hath, she hath the same. The synagoge, albeit she semed to geue much vnto God, yet dyd she reserue more vnto her selfe then was sufficient. Wylt thou see the Synagoge geuing her giftes: heare the Phariley prayeng: I thanke the Lord, saith he, that I am not lyke as one as other men be. Nowe marke me how much he reserueth vnto himselfe when he saith: I fast twyse in the weke. I geue the tenthe part of all my goodes vnto poore people. On the other syde, marke me the fashion of the wydow. She knocketh her brest, she dareth not once lift vp her eyes to heauen warde, she doth nothing but crye: God be mercifull vnto me a sinner. The Synagoge, whiles she craketh vpon her owne iustice hath neyther any of her owne, nor yet gods iustice. The churche whiles she renounceth and putteth away from her all glory of righteousnes and knowledgeth her owne vnrighteousnes, is enriched with the iustice and righteousnes of her spouse.

AND as he went out of the temple, one of the disciples sayed vnto him: o mayster, see what stones and what buyldinges are here. And Jesus answered, and sayed vnto hym: Seest thou these great buildinges? There shal not be left one stone vpon an other, that shal not be throwen downe. And as he sate on mounte Oliuete ouer against the temple, Peter, and James, and John, and Andrewe, asked him secretly: tell vs, when shall these thinges be? And what is the signe when all these thinges shalbe fulfilled? And Jesus answered them, and began to saye: take hede lest any man deceyue you. For many shall cumme in my name, saying: I am Christ, and shall deceyue many.

Here was nothyng in the temple that pleased Jesus, saue the poore wydowe only, in the whiche temple there was nothyng els, but counterfayte deuocion, and fayned holines. Let vs also, who professe our selues to be the disciples of Jesu, departe out of the Jewish temple. Let vs sette asyde all truste of carnall workes, and embrace the ryghteousnes of the euangelike and christian fayth.

Therfore our sauiour departed thence to builde an other temple, whiche should be holy and spirituall in dede: and of buyldyng so substancial, sure, and strong, that the very gates of hell shoulde neuer be able to preuayle agaynste it. When he was gone out, one of his disciples sayed vnto him: Mayster, beholde how we greate and houge are the stones of this temple, and what a strong buildinge is here: couertly meaninge that it was a stronger piece of worke, then that it coulde by processe of tyme fall in decaye or ruyne. Oh Jewishe eyes. They outwardly marueyled at stones couched and heaped together by mans handes, as thoughe Jesus had bene delited with suche a buyldyng. Jesus answered againe: Seeste thou this greate and curious edifice? There shall a time cum when there shall not one stone remayne vpon another but shalbe throwen downe: muche lesse then shall the same buyldyng continue for euer. Nowe Jesus lotheth, and contemneth the all that euer is seene with bodily eyes, for the greate desyre he hath of his ghostly and spyritual temple. As he sate in that part of mount Oliuete (where he chose his lodging for that nyght) from whence the temple of Jerusalem myght be sene, the disciples called againe to theyr remembraunce his wordes, wherby he had tolde before howe it shoulde cumme to passe, that the sayd temple shoulde bee destroyed bothe stycke and stone, euen from the very foundacion. For they supposed that the kyngdome of god, whereon they ceased not as yet to dreame, shoulde cum immediatlye after the destruccion thereof. Therfore fower of them, that is to wete, Peter, James, John, and Andrewe, went priuilye vnto him as he there sate, to the entent that lyke as he had shewed vnto a fewe persones apart, the misterie of his transfiguracion, so should he lykewyse disclose vnto the, beeyng but a fewe, all the secretes concerning the time when his kingdome should cumme and begin: whiche thing he woulde not perhappes open vnto all the other. And for this cause they sayed vnto hym: Tell vs when these thinges shall cum to passe, and by what token we maye knowe when the same tyme is already cum and present. The Lord who had already wedded out of his disciples all carefulnes for sustenaunce, delyce of reuengement, & prouidence of lyfe or foreca-styng howe to lyue, woulde also wede out of theyr myndes all suche curiositie as maketh a man ouer busy and inquisitiue, to knowe suche thynges, as nothyng appertaine vnto his saluacion. Therfore he so tempereth his wourdes, that by thesame he sygnifieth not onelye that the citie of Jerusalem shall one day be destroyed, but also that after his departuee, greuous stormes of persecution shal rise against the preachers of the gospell: and finally that the ende of the worlde, or domes day shall cumme. But as it is expedient for all men to knowe howe they shall one day make an ende of this present lyfe, to thentent they may euer make themselues redy against the same, so his will and pleasure was to haue his disciples fullye persuaded, that a tyme shoulde lykewyse cumme, when he would returne into the worlde agayne, a iudge bothe of the quicke and deade: but when that time shoulde come, because it was not expedient, he woulde in no wyse haue it knowen. Therfore he began to speake of these matters, in suche wyse as here ensueth.

And as he sat on mount Oliuete.

Beware, sayeth he, lest any manne deceiue you. For there shall manye come who wyll chalenge and take vpon them my name, and euerye of theim wyll fayne hymselfe to be Christe, and by his craftie delusion, deceiue manye vncircumspect persons.

The terte. When ye shall heare of warres, & tidynges of warres, be ye not troubled. For suche thynges must nedes be, but the ende is not yet: For there shall nacion ryse agaynste nacion, and kyngdome agaynst kyngdome. And there shalbe yearthquakes in al quarters, and famyne: these shall ther be and troubles. These are the beginning of sorowes. But take ye hede to your selues, for they shall bryng you vp to the counsayles, & into the Synagoges, & ye shalbe beaten, yea, and shalbe brought before rulers and kynges for my sake, for a testimonial vnto them. And the gospell must first be published amonge all nations.

The great busynes & rustlyng of the worlde, will shewe that my cumming approcheth, & the worlde is nighe at an ende. But you muste not strayght waye, when warres are moued, or when there is any terrible bruite or rumoure of warres to be moued, be so dismayed therwith, as though the same tyme were already present. For these thinges shall cum, and yet shall not thende of the worlde furthwith ensue. They shall only be preludes of the ende yt is to come, euen as in an olde mans bodye, diseases oftetymes chaunging, are foretokens that his body shal shortely decay and perishe. The temperature of the qualities is the thyng whiche preserueth bodely healthy.

But when by reason the same qualities, do stryue one agaynste another, the whole bodye is distempered, then is it an argumente that the destruction there of approchethe. There ſhall nacion ryſe agaynſte nacion, realme agaynſt realme, and one of them go about with great powers, and hoſtes of men, to deſtroye an other. Moreouer the yearthe it ſelfe, as thoughe it were not content to nozithe ſo wicked and vngodlye people, ſhalbe ſhaken with yearthequakes. and ſo ſhall there be in ſondrye places of the worlde greate dearthe and famyne, becauſe it ſhall denye men theyr naturall foode and ſuſtenaunce. Furthermore the ayre as though it were angrye with theſame vngodly folkes, vnworthy of life and breathe, ſhalbe noyſomme, and deadelye. When ye ſee manye of theſe ſignes and tokens, yet loke ye not hyanby for domes daye. For theſe euiles ſhalbe onelye the begynninge of the calamitie to come. Neyther ſhall youre ſelues be free from ſuche euils & troubles. And therfore loke well aboute ye, leſte ye be clapte in chenecheſ or ere ye be ware. For men ſhall accuſe you, and bryngе you before councels and ſynagoges: and yee ſhalbe preſented before kynges and rulers, to anſwere in cauſes of lyfe, and deathe: not for any offence, or euyl dede doen on your behalfe, but onelye for the profeſſion of my name: and this ſhall they do becauſe all the worlde maye knowe, howe they were worthy to caſte out of the kyngdome of God, ſithens they ſo perſecuted the preachers of theſame. But lette not theſe thynges muche trouble your myndes. The cruelnes of wycked perſons ſhall bryngе not thing to paſſe agaynſt the proceding of the gоſpell. Neither can anye man ſlea you before your tyme. For domes daye ſhall not come, before the gоſpell be preached throughout all the worlde.

For there ſhall nacion aryſe againſt nacion.

¶ But when they leade you, and preſent you, take ye no thought, neyther ymagine afore hande what ye ſhall ſaye, but whatſoeuer is geuen you in the ſame houre, that ſpeake. For it is not ye that ſpeake, but the holy goſt. The brother ſhall delyuer vp the brother to deathe, and the father the ſonne, and the children ſhall ryſe againſt their fathers and mothers, and cauſe them to be put to death. And ye ſhalbe hated of all men for my names ſake. But whoſo endureth vnto the ende, the ſame ſhalbe ſafe.

The texte.

For it is not ye that ſpeake.

You nede not therefore to prepare you any worldly ſuccours againſte the violence & tiranny of perſecutours, or take thought how to eſcape their iudgementes. When there is any accion commenced againſt you, loke ye goe, & appeare, leſte ye ſeme to deſpiſe the publike authozitie. For this thinge alſo ſhall make muche for the enlarging and ſpreading abrode of the gоſpell. But when ye are goyng to appeare, be you not carefull, ſtudying with your ſelfes what anſwere to make, and how to tell your tale, for that yeare not ſene in þ lawe, but men ignozaunt in ciuill pleas: as the common ſort of the people are wonte to be carefull in ſuche caſe, who make Oratours and Rhetozicians theyr attorneys, and procetours in pleadinge of matters. But whatſoeuer cummethe into your myndes, that ſpeake you. For your ſelues ſhall not be authours of the wordes as you ſhall ſpeake, but inſtrumentes onely. The holy ghoſte ſhall ſpeake by you, ſuche thynges as ſhalbe expediente for the buſynes of the gоſpell. But ſuche perſecutions muſt ye not onely looke for of ſtrayngers, and enemyes, but alſo of your frendes, and kynnefolkes. For one brother ſhall take the lawe of an other, and accuſe hym of deathe worthye crymes, all naturall loue and affection caſt aſide. And the father ſhall likewiſe accuſe the ſonne, contrary to naturall loue and kyndnes. Furthermore the children ſhall alſo riſe agaynſte their parentes, and cauſe them to ſuffer death.

The brothes ſhall deliuer vp the brother, &c.

And where as ye hurte no body, but bryngе the tydinges of ſaluacion to all men: yet shall ye be hated of all them that loue this world, one lye for the dyspleasure and malyce they beare to my name, whiche you shall preache. But in all these euils it shalbe nedefull for you to be armed with perseueraunce and constancie of minde. For whoso continueth in his good beginnings to the ende, shall be safe, because no calamitie is able to destroye him, that with constant harte and myude beleueth the gospell.

The texte. Moreouer, when ye see the abhominacion of desolacion (whereof is spoken by Daniel the prophet) stand where it ought not, let him that readeth, vnderstand. Then let them that be in Iewry, flie to the mountaines, and let him that is on the house top not go down into the house, neither entre therein to fetche any thyng out of his house. And let him that is in the fielde, not turne backe agayne vnto the thynges whiche he lefte behynde hym, for to take his clothes with him. Woe shalbe then to them that are with childe, and to them that geue sucke in those dayes. But praye ye that your flyght be not in the winter. For there shalbe in those dayes such tribulacion, as was not from the beginninge of creatures, (whiche God created vnto this time, neither shalbe. And except that the Lorde should shorten those dayes, no fleshe should be saued. But for the electes sake whome he hath chosen, he hathe shortened those dayes.

If ye require a sygne to geue you knowledge when this extreme calamitie hangeth ouer your heades: when ye shall see the abhominacion that maketh desolation standing in y place where it is not beseming it should stande, then let him whiche readeth the Daniels prophecy, vnderstande it. For then it shalbe hyghe tyme for euery man, al other thynges omitted and lefte vndone to flyghte for hymselfe by flyeng awaye and to saue his lyfe, not by wordelye artes, but by swyftnesse of flighte. Then lette al that dein Iewrye, the flouri-
Let hym that readeth vnderstand. shyng cyte, and moste famous parte of the countreye, flye vnto the deserte and wylde Mountaynes. If this calamitie take any man on the house toppe lette hym not goe downe into the house, nor enter into his parlioure, or chambre to fetche out any thynge from thence: but as he is founde, so lette him gette hym awaye and begone. And if at that season anye manne be labouringe in the fieldes naked, and without clothes, let hym not runne home againe to fetche awaye his cloke, or mantel, but flye strayght waye some whither els: so swifte shall the floud of ỳ miserie & calamitie be, whiche shal ouerflow this countreye.
Woe shalbe vnto them that are with childe. Therfore in so full case shall they be whiche are great with childe, & they also that haue chyldren sucking on their brestes, because nature will not let suche as are with child to cast away their burthen: nor natural kindenesse suffer the other to flye awaye from their children. And the onely way to saue the life shalbe to flye without anye taryinge. Therefore desire you of god, that this calamytie chaunce not in the wynter season, nor vpon the Sabbothe daye. For ye muste not onelye flye awaye as fast as your legges will beare you, but also a greate waye of. But winter season because the daye is than shorte, is an yll tyme to flye in. And the law forbedeth to trauayle far vpon the Sabboth day.
Pray ye that your flight. Yll that the lorde hitherto sayed, is spoken in suche wyse, that it semeth partlye to pertayne to the destruction of the citie of Hierusalem: partelye to the tymes of persecutions, whiche were moste sharpe, and behemente, at what season Stephan was stoned to deathe: and partely to the laste ende of the worlde or domes daye. Yet is there included in the same woordes, a morall sence, whiche teacheth vs, how we that beyng deliuered from all worldelye impedimentes, and encumbraunces, we oughte alwayes to wayte for the cummynge of that daye, when we shalbe presented before almyghtye god to receiue our dome and iudgemente. He canne neuer be prepared agaynste the same, who eyther for loue of temporall thynges, or els thorowe thenforce-

ment of carnall affections, that is to saye, for his parentes, wyfe, or chyldrens sake, is called backe agayne to the daunger of the losyng of euerlastyng saluacion. He is laden with a vessell, who beryng ouercharged and letted with worldly ryches, ceaseth to do those thynges which pertayne to eternall health. He is burthened with a mantell, who for takinge hede vnto the bodye, regardeth not the soule. He is slowe of foote by carying of an infant, who by reason of naturall affections, refrayneth not from those thynges whiche he knoweth ryght well are by all maner of meanes to be eschewed: he knoweth to chattayning of those, wt̃ whiche he knoweth ought (all letters and impediments set aside) greatly to be desyred. Moyster taketh them flying, who for the lyttel ryght that they wt̃ take fayth geueth, and because charitie is colde and fayntein them, doe not finish their iourney, and manfully goe forwarde whither they begonne to goe. Moreouer the superstitious obseruation of the Sabboth bryngeth those persons into daũger, who by reason of an vnright and awkeward iudgement, tremble and quake for feare, where there is no cause of feare: and where they ought chiefly to feare in dede, are feareles: as when a manne is bolde to transgresse the commaundement of God, for feare lest he breake mannes constitutions. For the Lorde himselfe taught openly that the Iewes Sabbothe was well contemned, and broken, for mans healthe and preseruation.

Furthermore the wordes that ensue, seeme rather to pertayne to the last day of the worlde, before the which day, great busynesse, and hurly burly shall vniuersally happen for the cummyng of Antichriste. Those dayes, sayeth he, shall be so full of miseries on euerye syde, that there hath not beene lyke tribulacion and affliction from the creacion of the worlde vnto this daye, nor hereafter shalbe. If this affliction shoulde long while continue, as it shall be fell, and cruel for the season, there shoulde not one man be saued. But God of his infinite mercye and goodnes hath prouided, that this storme shall shorte whyle endure, for their sakes, whom he hath chosen to lyue euerlastyng. For of hymselfe will he suffer none to perishe, what storme of euils soeuer shall arise. Wherfore there is no cause why any man shoulde feare himselfe, so that he perseuer and abyde still in the euangelike and christian fayth, as nighe vnto the shore anker or sure refuge. No puissaunce shall cast them downe, whiche haue a constant beliefe in me. For there shall be in those dates.

And then, if any man say to you, lo here is Christe, lo, he is there, beleue not: For false Christes and false prophetes shall arise, and shall shewe miracles, and wonders to deceiue, if it were possible, euen the electe. But take ye hede, behold, I haue shewed you all thynges before. The texte.

Onely take heede that in stede of me, you embrace not another Christe. There shall be more ieoperdy of receyuers, then of persecutours. For there shall arise in those dayes false Christes, who shall vntruly chalenge and take vpon them my name, and person. There shall arise also false Prophetes, whiche vnder a cloke and coloured shewe of holynes, shall fayne themselfes to be Prophetes: and in working of Magical wonders, and miracles cloked by craftie illusions of diuels, folowe the prophetes, and me, so that euen the very electe (if any power coulde preuayle agaynste God) maye be deceyued by sucheligier demayne, and iuglynge castes: Therefore if anyeman shall saye vnto you: Loe, here is Christe, beleue him not: or if any call you backe to another place, and saye: loe, here he is: what place, what apperaunce of thinges, or what maner of honour or seruing of god soeuer he shewe you, beleue hym not. For after that Christ hath once forsaken the worlde, he cannot be shewed nor pointed to with fyngers, but will lye hidin mens soules, and this shall be the signe and token to knowe where he is: when anye doth he with hys lyfe, & conuersacion expresse his doctrine, & put it in execucion. Howe beit he wyll not cumme at domes daye, so as he nowe cummethe, but wyll sodainly and vnloked for shewe himselfe from an hygh after the maner of a flashe of lyghtening, dreadfull to the wicked, who shall be cast into euerlasting fire: and againe amiable and louelye to godly persones, whiche shall be called to the felowshyp of the heauenly kyngdom. Therfore if you chaunce to liue in these dayes, beware ye embrace not in stede of me, sum counterfayte Christe.

Loe, I haue tolde you all thynges beforehande. There remayneth behynde, that you retayne and kepe my woordes in memory.

The texte. Cōsequently in those dares after that tribulacion, the Sunne shal ware darcke, and the moone shall not geue her lyght, and the starres of heauen shall fall, and the powers whiche are in heauen shall moue. And then shall they see the sonne of manne cumming in the clowdes with great power and glory. And then shall he send his aungels, and shall gather together his elect from the fower windes, from the endes of the yeartly, to the vttermost parte of heauen.

Nowe after these forsayed calamities, warres, persecucions, famyne, pestilence, and earthquakes be paste, there shall also ensue manye other wonderfull signes and tokens out of heauen, all the elementes beyng, as it were yrkully set to take vengeaunce vpon the wicked people. For the Sunne, the fountaine of light, shall were darke, therby as it were vnbraiding the vngodlye with theyr blyndnes, becausse they wouldē not see the euerlastyng sunne and lanterne of the worlde. Neyther shall the Moone, whiche is wonte to shine in the night, and put away the darknesse therof, geue her light vnto the bodyweth of the Sūne. Furthermore men shall see the starres fal downe from the firmament to the earth, which haue bene so many hundred yeares there fastened for mans behoue & commoditie. And besides this, the powers of the heauens (by vertue whereof those mercyfulle bodies haue cōtinued, euen frō the creation of the worlde, their courses and offices appointed thē of god) shalbe moued: so great shall the feare be of the dreadfull day of dome approching. These thinges done, all that be then alyue, shall sodaynly, and with the twynkelyng of an eye, see the sonne of man (whō is nowe taken for an vnderlynge, and not regarded) appeare in the hyghest cloudes with greate puyssaunce, & in the glory of the father, and with him innumerable multitudes of Aungels. Then will he sende out his Aungels, who wyll let none of his chosen be awaye, but wyll assemble thē altogether frō euery quarter, whether they be quycke, or els dead, but must sodainly be restored again: he wyll send them out, I say, to gather all the membres of the misticall bodie vnto their head, to thentēt that they which haue bene partakers of afflictions & persecutions for the gospelles sake, maye lykewyse be companions and partakers with hym, of euerlastynge ioye and blysfulnesse. It skylleth not whither that good mens soules haue gone, neyther into what place their karkases haue bene throwen: Aungeles shall fynde them out, and gather them together from the fower quarters of the worlde: and againe from the hyghest pole of heauen, to the lowmoste. Euery soule shalbe ioyned vnto his owne proper bodie, and all the electe and chosen people shall lykewise be conioyned vnto theyr head.

And then shall they see the sonne of man. &c.

Learne

Learne a similitude of the figtree, when his braunche is yet tender, and hath brought forth leaues, ye know that sommer is nere. So in lyke maner when ye se these thynges cum to pas, vnderstand that he is nye, euen at the doores. Verely, I saie vnto you, that this generacion shall not pas, tyll these thynges be done. Heauen and earth shall passe, but my wordes shall not passe. But of the daye & tyme knoweth no man, no not the aungels which are in heauen: neither the sonne himselfe, saue the father onely. The texte.

Now learne this day cum sodaynly vpon you, when ye are nothyng at all prepared, you maye gesse by certayne foresygnes and coniectures, when it is nere hande, euen as ye may coniecture and gather by the lygge tree that sommer wil shortly cum. For when the braunches of this tree begin once to waxe soft and tender, being about to bring forth their first fruite called grossi, and when the leaues be alreadye budded out, ye knowe that sommer is not farre of. But it is muche certayner that that day shall cum, then it is certayne, that sommer foloweth after wynter. This thyng do I auouche vnto you: This age shall not passe till all these thinges shall happen. Among corporall thinges there is nothing more stable & sure then heauen: nothing more unmouable then is the earth: but yet both heauen and earthe shall sooner alter and chaunge their nature, then my wordes be vayne, and of none effect. Be ye not careful to knowe certeynly when that same laste daye shall cum, forasmuche as it is not geuen vnto ỹ Angels to know it: no not yet to the sonne himselfe. For ỹ father hathe reserued this secrete knowledge to himself alone, because he perceiued it was expedient for your soule helth he should so do. Be you moste certaynly assured that it shall cum: but aske ye not when, leste by this meanes ye become careless.

Take hede, watch, and pray, for ye knowe not when the time is. As a man which is goen into a straunge countrey, and hath left his house, and geuen his substance to his seruauntes & euery man his worke, & cõmaunded the porter to watche. Watche ye therfore, ye know nor when the master of the house will cum, at euen or at midnight, whether at the cocke crowing, or in the dawninge: leste if he cum sodaynly, he fynde you sleepyng: and that I saye vnto you, I saye vnto all, watche. The texte.

Beware alwayes & take good hede: watche & praie continually, since you are vncertaine when that dreadfull date shall cum vpon you. You shal take good hede if you will not trust vnto worldly aides, neither put confidence in any worldly creature: but wholy hang vpon me, & my cõmaundementes. Ye shal watche, if by refraining leo superfluitie, & all bodely pleasures, you will wholy bend youre selues to holynes of spirite, & vertuous liuing. You shal praye, if you will most feruently desire those thinges, which are promised vnto thē that fill perseuer & cõtinue in the profession of the gospell. Satā hath his craftes to deceiue euen wise, & circũspect persons. Against these craftes you must vse the wysedom, & policy of the serpent. The world, & the flesh haue their entisinges, wherwith they so delite the mindes of reckeles folkes, that (as I maye call it) slepe, securitie, & forgetfulnes of thinges eternall, creepeth vpon thē ere they be ware. Of these thinges springeth eyther contẽpt, or els desperāce of the kingdom of heauē. God will not cleane forsake his chosē, but he loueth wakefull & bredefull persons: yet will he that whē they haue done what may be done by mans endeuoyre & diligence, they neuertheles cease not to pray, fully persuadyng thē selues how it is God ỹ geueth the beginning, proceding, & consummacion of euerlastyng blessednes. So watche you, as thoughe God wyll forsake you for a time: so praye you, as thoughe whatsoeuer ye go about, shall cum to none effecte, without he put to his helping hande. And because the Lord Jesu would the depelier fasten this doctrine in ỹ mindes of his disciples, he added a similitude

a similitude very fit for the purpose. When I shall forsake you, sayeth he, so demeane your selues, as faithful and wyse seruãtes would do, vnto whom the Lord being about to make a voyage into a straũge coũtrey, hath geuẽ auctoritie to order and guide his house: and hathe alligned to eche of theym his worke, and office. Furthermore he hath commaunded the porter to watche for feare of nyght theues. These seruauntes, because they be vncertaine of theyr Lordes returnyng home, do stil endeuoyre themselues to do theyr office and dutye, that whensoeuer it shall chaunce him to cum home agayne, he may finde theym watchyng. It is more certaine that I shall cum againe to you, then that theyr lord shall eftsones returne vnto them. There maye sum chaunce befall, that he misceary whiles he is from home in the straunge countrey. But as sure as God is in heaue, I will cum againe, albeit the daye when, be to you vncertaine. Therfore do you as good and thriftie seruauntes are wont to do. Euer watche and loke after my retourning. You cannot tell when the Lorde will cum, at euen, or at mydnyght: whether at the Cocke crowyng, or in the dawning of the daye, lest yf he cum sodainlye (as he wyll cum in verye dede) he fynde you slepyng, and slacke, or negligent in doyng of your duetie. That I speake to you, I speake by you to all that shalbe borne butill the worlde be at an ende: watche you. Euerye man muste watche that will be saued: Euery man must do the worke that the Lorde hath committed vnto hym, but especially and above all other, it behoueth the porter to watche, who watcheth for the safegard of the whole familie. And although the people doe sumtymes take a nappe, yet hath the the peter de no leasure to slepe. Nowe is all this present lyfe (wherein is no certaine difference betweene good thynges and bad, and wherin is exceding muche ignorauuce or blyndnesse, and very litle lyght) all this lyfe I saye, is in comparison of the lyfe to cum, nothing els but nyght. And albeit that in thende of the worlde the Lord will cum once for all, to all men generally, yet commeth he also to euery man seuerally at the houre of death. Therfore euery man particularly ought to watche against this his cummyng, because it is euen as vncertaine as the other. For he cummeth vnto sum late in the euenyng, as in growyng age: to sum at mydnyghte, as when they are in their flowers and best lykyng: to other sum at the Cockercrowyng, that is to wete, in olde age. Ye muste neyther truste to youre strength, nor to your age. The tyme and houre of death is lyke vncertaine to all menne.

As a man which is gone into a straunge coũtrey, &c.

And that I saye vnto you, &c.

The xiiij. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ After two dayes was Easter, and the dayes of swete bread: and the hye prestes and the Scribes sought howe they might take him by craft and put him to death. But they sayed not in the feast daye, least any busturste aryse amongst the people.

IN the nexte holye, and solemne feaste of Easter that nyghte, that is to say, of Pasche, whiche worde signifieth in the Hebrue tongue, a passing ouer, on the whiche daye the bloud of the vnspotted lambe should deliuer vs from the vengeaunce of the sleying swerde, and beynge brought out of Egipt through the redsea, and wildernesse of this world, bring vs vnto the heauenlye Hierusalem, into a countrey flowing with milke and honye. For the Iewes passeouer, whiche they yeare lye lye celebrate and kepe moste highe and holye, was nothing els but a figure and shadowe of this sacrifice, like as was this ceremony, that they did on these daies forbeare leauened breade, exhorting vs hereby, to suche puritie and cleanesse of lyfe, as becommeth a professour of ỹ gospel. After two dayes expired, the daye that they called the preparyng daye should be. But as the chiefe priestes and Scribes, deuoutly prepared and made themselues readie to celebrate this corporall passeouer: so did they like vnwise felowes, wickedly make haste to offer vp that same trewe lambe whiche that solemne sacrifice had so many hundred yeares figured. For now we were they at a full poynt to slea Jesus: but because they durste not openly do it, for feare of the people, they thought good to laye handes vpon hym, and put hym to death by gyle & treason. And for this their purpose, that daye of all other, was moste conuenient therto: for the tyme of the newe testament, shoulde agree with the figure of the old. They themselues, dyd not chose this day, but it was foreapointed vnto this sacrifice by the eternall decree and ordinaunce of the father. For they counseylyng together how to slea Jesus, saied: Not on the feaste daye, leste there arise any busyneste and hurly burly among the people. Doubtlesse it is a Jewyshe feare to stande in awe of meane, and all this whyle nothynge to dreade god at all. Jesus knowyng the tyme was cum, in the whiche it was the fathers wyll to haue that same euerlasting sacrifice to be made, departed not from Jerusalem, leste he shoulde haue semed to haue fayled at the place foreapointed vnto this busynesse. But they kept not in ỹ feaste daye. &c.

¶ And when he was at Bethania in the house of Symon the leper, euen as he sat at meate there came a woman hauyng an alabaster bore of oyntment, called Narde, that was pure & costly: and she brake the bore, and powred it on his heade. And there were sum that were not contented within themselues, and saied: what nede this waste of oyntmente? For it myght haue bene sould for more then three hundred pence, and haue bene geuen vnto the poore, and they grudged against her. The texte.

When he therfore feasted at Bethany with his frendes, in the house of Symon, surnamed the leper, one of the geastes that feasted with hym was Lazarus. Thys house presenteth vnto vs, the agreyng, and frendly felowshyp of the churche: the whiche being vncleane, he washed & purified with his precious bloude: and beyng dead through sinne, and vnrighteousnesse, he made alyue againe by his death and passion. With suche persones, Jesus loueth to sit at table, rather then with the priestes, & pharisets, who thought themselues cleane, and alyue, notwithstandyng they were suche in soule, as Symon, and Lazarus were in bodye. As they thus feasted, there came in a certaine womã hauing and alabaster bore full of pure, good, and precious oyntement, called the oyntment of ryght Narde: whiche brake her bore: and powred al the oyntment vpon the Lordes heade, as he sate there at the table. Jesus who was neuer delited with the pleasures and delicacies of this worlde, loueth to be anoynted with suche manoure of oyntment, after the spirituall meanyng. The churche is lauishe and prodigall in bestowing this oyntment vpon her dere and welbeloued spouse. What precious thing soeuer she hath, thesame refuseth she not to herselfe, but powreth it vpon Jesus heade, vnto whom all honour and glory is due. The house of ỹ churche is in most ample wyse enlarged & spred abrode throughout all ỹ whole world: but the swete sauour, and pleasaũt smell of this oyntment hath filled euery corner and part therof. This swete sauour allureth and causeth many a one to desyre that they maye be admitted

Witted into the ſame houſe, wherin Jeſus ſitteth at meate with his frendes. But there be ſum which of ſpite & enuy, ſpeake againſt the delicacies of Jeſus: as the Jewes, who rather ſeke theyr own profit, glorie, & cõmoditie, then the glory & honour of Jeſu Chriſt. For ſo did certaine of his diſciples ꝑ yet ſanctified of the fleſh, but ſpecially Judas Iſcarioth: who being not contented in his mynde, & muttering with himſelf againſte this womannes facte, ſayed on thys wyſe: what nede dit to waſt or caſt away this ſo pure good oyntment? for it myght haue been ſold for thre hundred pence, and with that money many a poore body haue been relieued. And the loſſe of this oyntment greued them ſo muche, that they made a great murmuring againſt the godly prodigalitie of the woman. That thyng is well loſte, which is employed vpõ Chriſtes glorie: Yea, to ſaye the trueth, there is nothyng that leſſe periſheth. The ſinagoge is ſparing to Chriſte ward, and waſtefull or prodigall to her owne perſon. Contrarilie, the churche regardeth not the price and valewe of that she hath receiued of Chriſte, but breaketh the veſſell, and raſhlye powreth out all that euer she hath vpon her ſpouſes heade. The poore wydowe whiche caſt a farthing into the treaſurie, pleaſed Chriſt hyghly. So doth this woman content hym alſo, whiche for his loue and ſake, hath loſt her precious oyntment. The wydowe knowleagyng her powertie, brought forth all the poore ſubſtaunce ſhe had, and caſte it into the treaſurye: and the other beyng now riche & wealthie thyough the lordes liberalitie, did not onely geue him all that euer ſhe had, but alſo ſuſtained the loſe of her veſſel. The one gaue her goodes and lyuyng: the other gaue euen body and ſoule, yf that can periſhe whiche is geuen vnto Jeſu. Where be they now that grudge and murmoure againſt this prodigalitie, whiche is ſo pleaſaunte and acceptable to the auctboure of grace? Chriſt geueth of his owne plentifully, to thentent that the good ſauour of his liberalitie, maye the more be ſpred abrode: He requyreth no rewarde for anye thynge he geueth: but here onely he is ambicious or deſirous of honour. He willeth that we knowleage his well doing and benefites, not becauſe he hath any nede of ſuche prayſe and commendacion, but it hath pleaſed hym by thys meane to geue vs his gyftes and riches.

What nede this waſte of oyntmẽt &c.

The texte. And Jeſus ſayed: let her alone, why trouble ye her? She hath done a good worke on me. For ye haue poore with you alwaies, and when ſoeuer ye will, ye may do them good, but me haue ye not alwayes. She hath done that ſhe could, she came afore hand to anoynt my body to the burying. Verely I ſay vnto you: where ſoeuer this Goſpell ſhalbe preached throughout the whole worlde, this alſo that ſhe hath done ſhalbe rehearſed, in remembraunce of her.

For ye haue poore. &c.

The Lord (of whome alone it is ſufficient to be alowed) defendeth the godly diligence of the woman againſt his diſciples muttyng and murmuryng againſt her. Why, ſaith he, make you this buſines with this woman? Suffer her to take her pleaſure. She hath done me a good turne. For whereas you cloke your couetouſneſſe with a pretence to ſocour the poze, knowe ye ꝑ what ſoeuer is geuẽ to me, the ſame is geuẽ to a poore body. Theſe commune poore folkes, and beggers, you ſhall euer haue with you, whom you maye do good vnto, and helpe as oft as ye will: but ye ſhal not alwayes haue me preſent, to wyn my fauour by ſuch coꝛpozall benefytes. I haue been but once in my lyfe tyme thus honoured, and the thing that is done, is not done to thentent that many ſhould take enſaple therby, to vſe ſuch manour of bodily reſreſhinges: but becauſe all men ſhould after the ſpirituall ſence and meaning doe the like. This womã wotteth not what she doth, & yet with a godly endeuour and diligence ligence doeth she as muche as lyeth in her to do. My death is nere hande, then will she deslyze to anoint my body that muste bee buried. And because she shall not then haue tyme so to do, she preuenteth the tyme: and yeldeth me that honour whyles I am aliue, which she cánot geue me whē I am dead. But so true is it that her godly endeuoire (whiche you speake and murmour against) shall not lacke it condigne and worthye prayse, that when my death shall by preaching of the gospel, be renoumed and spokē of throughout al the whole world, she shall lykewyse bee remembred and spoken of, because she honoured it wyth suche a gyft and present before I dyed.

¶ And Judas Iscariothe one of the twelue, went awaye vnto the hye priestes to betraye hym vnto them. When they hearde that, they were glad, and promysed that they wouldo geue hym money. And he sought howe he might conueniently betraye hym. The texte.

Wyth these wordes the Lorde causeth his disciples to cease their muttring. But Judas Iscariothe one of the twelue (who untruely dispensed the common money geuen for the relefe of the poore) could in no wyse suffer the losse of this ointment, but went streightwayes vnto the highe priestes, to betraye Jesus vnto thē. For it was not vnknowen vnto hym, how they studyed to take him by deceyte and treason. After the highe priestes hearde this, they were rychte glad. It pleased them very well that one of houseliolde with Jesu, shoulde bee the chiefe worker of this mischiefe. They agreed of the sum of money that Judas shoulde haue for his labour. And there was mutuall faith founde in that wicked counsell, and conspiracie, whiche is seldome kept in honest and leefull couenauntes. Judas beleued the bare promise of the priestes, without eyther weyghing, witnesses, or sureties. He ymagined with himselfe whiche waye he might betraye Jesu vnto the sayed priestes, and Scribes after such a sorte, as they desyred: that is to saye, in tyme, and place conuenient, leste anye businesse or insurrection should ryse hereof. For this condition was expressed in the couenaunt. In the meane time, whyles Judas, and the hye priestes counsayled together howe for to destroye him, Jesu went about the businesse of mannes saluation. when they heard that, they were glad.

¶ And the fyrste daye of Swete bred (when they offered the sacrifice) his disciples saied vnto him: where wilt thou that we go and prepare that thou maiest eate the passouer? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith vnto them: Go ye into the citie, & there shal meete you a man bearing a pitcher of water, followe him: and whither soeuer he goeth in, saye ye to the goodman of the houle, the maister saith: where is the geste chamber where I shal eate passouer with my disciples? And he will shewe you a greate parlloure paued and prepared. There make ready for vs. And his disciples weute forth and came into the citie, and founde as he had sayed vnto them, and they made ready the passouer. The texte.

Nowe was the fyrst daye of the feast of Swete breade cum, on the which daie the Iewes were wōt to offer vp their easter lambe. Therfore Jesus disciples said vnto him, Whither wilt thou that we go, and prepare thee thy easter souper? Jesus sent out two of them to make prouision therfore saying vnto them: Go ye into the citie, and allone as ye bee entred in, there shall meete you a man carying a pitcher of water: him folowe ye, & into what house soeuer he entreth in, saye these wordes to the good man of the house in my name. The maister saith, where is the souping chāber where I may eate my easter lambe with my disciples? and he shall straightwayes shewe you a large souping chamber, paued, and already prepared for the feast that shalbe made therin. There prepare you for vs our easter souper. Here marke me the simple obedience of the Apostles, suche an obedience as they also shewed before, when they were sente out to fetche the Asses foale. Marke also this, that there is nothyng hyd and vnknowē vnto the lorde: so that it is manifest and plaine hereby, that he both forsoke we, and willyngly suffered whatsoeuer he suffered for our cause. Further, marke his authoritie. At the naming of this worde (Lorde, or Maister) the asse was brandy let go. Againe at the naming of the same worde, the souping chamber was furthwith shewed them, so that it appeareth hereby, that it was in his power to do whatsoeuer he wolde: he could with a becke haue restrained the priestes, & pharisies, who went about cruelly to tourment hym and put him to death. The disciples went theyr waye, and came into the citie, and founde one carying a water pitcher: whom they folowed, and entred into the house where he went in, and declared vnto the goodman of the house, their maisters commaundement. He without any tarying shewed them a soupying chamber, wherin the disciples prepared theyr easter lambe, that is to saye, the last and mystical souper, whiche should both represent the fygure of the olde lawe, and also sacramentally present and exhibite vnto them, the sacrifyce of the newe lawe, and gospell.

The texte. And when it was nowe euentyde, he came with the twelue, and as they sate at borde, and dyd eate, Jesus sayed: Verely I saye vnto you, one of you (that eateth with me) shall betraye me. And they began to be sory, and to saye to him one by one, is it I? And another sayd, is it I? He answered and sayde vnto them: it is one of the twelue, euen he that dippeth with me in the platter. The sonne of man truly goeth as it is written of him, but woo to the mā by whō the sonne of mā is betrayed. Good were it for that mā, if he had neuer been borne.

In the euentyde Jesus folowed with his twelue disciples, whom only as chosen felowes, his pleasure was shoulde be witnesses of all that shoulde bee doen in this moste holy feast or maundye. When they were all set at the table, and takyng their repast, Jesus sayed vnto theim: I assure you that one of you that eateth with me, shall betraye me. As he had so sayed, euery one of them were stryken with great sorowe and pensiuenesse. For there was none of them all that knewe himselfe fautie, saue Judas only. But yet durste they not truste to the weakenesse and frailtie of mans nature. Therfore eche of them desyrous to be delyuered of this pensiue carefulnesse by the lordes discrying of the traytoure, sayed vnto hym: Is it I? Neyther was Judas, who knewe hymselfe culpable, ashamed to saye with the rest: Maister am I he? Jesus to the we vnto his disciples a perfite ensample of leuitie and mekenesse, thoughte it better to suffre them a while to be troubled with feauinesse, then to be wraye the traytoure: dyng all the wayes and meanes he coulde, to cause hym to returne from his wicked and mischeuous purpose. Therfore he sayd: He shall be one

It is one of the twelue, that I do. of the twelue, who is so familiare with me, that he dippeth in the same platter familiar entertainement. Nowe Judas perceiued that it was not vnknowen vnto the lord where aboutes he wēt: and he sawe also suche mekenesse in hym, as the lyke had not been heard of before. Jesus would not discrie him (of whō he should anone after be moste sadly betrayed vnto death) vnto the residewe of his disciples, because they would peraduenture if the treason had been opened, haue cruelly handled hym for theyr maisters sake. But oh vncurable malice. What stone, what diamōd, would not so great gentlenesse make to relent, specially of hym who could hurt and displease with a becke? But the same gētlenesse more encouraged the wretch to do this wicked and mischeuous dede. Then went Jesus forth with his tale in this wyse: howbeit as concerning me, nothing shall be doen other wise then I will my selfe: but as the prophetes

haue sayed and prophecied of the sonne of man, so shall it be. It is expedient for a great many that he be delyuered and betrayed to death. But yet woe bee to hym throughe whose malice and wicke dnesse, he shalbe betrayed. He procureth a thing which shal be soule healthy to other, and to himselfe vtter confusio. It had been better for him that he had neuer been borne. Howbeit this wicked myndes, & purpose of Iudas, was neuer a whit reformed, neither with so great mekenesse of the lord, nor yet for dread of the great horrible punishments whiche he threatned him withall: so great a michiefe is couetousnesse. But woo is that man.

¶ And as they did eate, Iesus tohe bread, and when he had geuen thankes, he brake it, & gaue it to them, and sayd: Take, eate, this is my body. And he tohe the cup, and whē he had geuen thankes he tohe it to them, & they all dranke of it, and he sayde vnto thē. This is my bloude of the new testamēt which is shed for many. Verely I saye vnto you, I will drynke no more of the fruyte of the vyne vntell that daye, that I drynke it new in the kyngdom of God. And when they had sayed grace, they went out to mount Oliuete. And Iesus sayth vnto them. All ye shall bee offended because of me this night. For it is wrytten, I will smite the shepheard, and the shepe shall be scattered. But after that I am risen again, I will go into Galile before you. Peter sayd vnto hym: And though all men be offended, yet will not I. And Iesus sayeth vnto him. Verely I saye vnto the, that this daye, euen in this nighte before the Cocke crowe twise, thou shalt deny me three times. But he spake more vehemētly: no, & I should dye with the, I will not denye the. Likewise also sayde they all. The first.

Furthermore in this souper, Iesus commended vnto his disciples that moste holy sacrement or signe of his death, and of the perpetuall couenaunt made with those that would continue in the euāgelike & christiā faith: for this cause he tohe bread, and after thankes geuen to god the father, brake it, and gaue it to eche of them, saying: Take, eate, this is my body. Also he tohe the cup, and after thankes geuen, gaue it them, and they all dranke therof. Then he said vnto them. This is my bloud of the newe testamēt which shall be shed for many. Be you well assured of this that I shall tell you: from henceforth I wil drinke no more of the fruit of the vine tyll that daie that I drinke it new in the kyngdome of God. When the souper was done, and grace sayde in the laude and praise of god, according to their manoure and custome, the same nighte they departed from Ierusalem vnto mount Oliuete. We must euer thanke, & praise God both in weale and woe. There Iesus knowyng the frailtie and wraknesse of his disciples, prepared and strēgthned theyr myndes, that they myght be able to suffre the stourme of persecution which hanged ouer their heades. All ye, saith he, shall be troubled this nighte for my cause. And this thyng did he say also prophecie of before. I will smyte, saith he, the shepherd, and the shepe shall bee scattered abrode. But dispayre ye not. As my death shall trouble you, and cause you to disperse and scatter abrode, so shal my resurrection recomfort you, and gather you together again. For I will retine, as I said, on the thyrde day, and being retined, will go before you into Galile. After ye haue there sene me, you shall put away all sorowe and heuinesse. When Peter, who as yet knewe not his owne weakenesse, heard him say so, he answered again very manfully, but yet rashely withal, saying: Although all the residewe be offended with thy death, yet truly will I not be troubled therwith a whit. Iesus desyrous cleane to wede and pluche out of our myndes all truste of our selues, sayth vnto him: O Peter, thou denyest that that thyng shalbe done, whiche both the prophetes, and I my selfe (whom it had bene thy parte to beleue, and in no wise to gainsaye or contrary with wordes) haue tolde before shall cum to passe. O thou rashe promiser: yea, the stronger thou thynkest thy selfe to be, the moze notable thy shalt thou be troubled about all other. This thyng I assure the of: before the cocke crow twise this same very night, thou shalt thrise deny me. Yet is the presumption of Peter nothing abated herewith, insomuche that he maketh a more stoute, and greater promise of himselfe, then he dyd before, saying: Yea, if there be no remedy, but I must nedes euen dye with the, yet I wyl neuer deny the. As Peter sayd, so sayd the rest of the disciples, to thentent that they erring together, shoulde bee all reformed together of their errour, and knowe howe vnable they were to do any thyng by their owne strength and power, and finally perceyue how it was not possible for any thyng to bee vaine or vntrue, which came out of Christes mouth. A litle before, they al agreed together in cõfessing truly who Christ was, and the cõmune opinion of them al was praised in Peter. Here they agree altogether in a rashe confidence and trust of themselues: and in Peter alone the rashenesse of them all is rebuked. Only Peter denied Jesu, and the rest would haue doen the like, if occasion had been geuen them so to do. For they would haue denied him, yf they had not fled away. The bolde stomache of Peter, the whiche was more constaunt in hym then in the other, brought him into this daunger. None of all these thynges chaunced vnto the disciples of any set malyce, as it happened to Judas, but onely through mans infirmitie and weaknesse. And therfore Jesus vsed the obstinate wickednesse of Judas, to our saluation: and would haue the weakenes and frailtie of his apostles diuersely declared, because to teache all other by them, how no manne shoulde warrant hymselfe ought of his owne strength, but whensoeuer the stormes of yuels and aduersities aryseth, wholely to hang vpon the heauenlye ayde and socoure: whiche so muche the more presently helpeth man, as he distrusteth his owne strengthe and power. The apostles couldenot yet bee reproued by worde: but the time would cum when the experience of the matter should at the lengthe make them to knowe themselues.

Before the cocke crowe twyse. &c.

The texte. And they came into a place whiche was named Gethsemany. And he saieth to his disciples: Sit ye here whyle I go aside, and praie. And he taketh with hym Peter & James, and John, and began to waxe abashed, and to be in an agony, and saieth vnto them: My soule is heuy, euen vnto the death. Tarye ye here and watche. And he went foorth a lytle, and fel downe flat on the ground, and prayed that if it were possible, the houre myght passe from him. And he sayd: Abba father, all thynges are possible vnto the, take away this cup from me: Neuerthelesse not that I wyll, but that thou wylt be doen.

Therfore they came into a place called Gethsemamy. This Gethsemany is a valey lying at the foote of moũt Oliuete. No man can mounte vp to the crosse of Jesu, vnlesse he first cum downe vnto this valey: vnlesse he humble and abase himselfe by renouncyng of all the aydes and socours of mans pride & loftinesse. Here commaunded he the other eight to tarrie, and takyng vnto hym three, that is to saye, Peter, James, and John, gate him awaye not farre of, because he would geue himselfe to praier and contemplacion. Behold here the engines, and artilerye of the gospell against the violence of persecucions. There were two thinges in Jesu moste contrarye: that is to wete, his diuine maiestie, the whiche there was nothyng higher, or of more excellencie: and his humayne weaknesse, then whiche there was nothing more vile, or of lesse reputation. Because vnto these three disciples he had giuen before some taste of his highnesse and diuine maiestie, it was his wyll and pleasure they shoulde nowe be witnesses of his greatest abasyng of hymselfe, and humilitie: to thentent that in the same Christe, they should learne, both what they ought to counterfayte and ensue, and also what to hope after. Here nowhere appeared his fact all

thynyng, and glisteryng lyke the Sunne: no where his apparaple whyter then the snow: no where Moyses and Helyas cõmunyng with hym: and to bee shorte, no where was hearde the fathers voyce as it was before, but as a man vtterly forsaken and destitute of all helpe and socoure, he beganne to bee soore troubled with feare, and disinayed with great anguish and agony of mynde: for he was a very natural man, and not ably expressed in hymselfe, what is wont to chaunce vnto those persones, who are nothyng els but men, whensoeuer any suche stormes hangeth ouer them. Neyther dyd he cloke and dissemble the thing amõg his frendes. I thynke wyly, sayde he, I feele in my minde, sorowe & heuinesse lykest vnto death. He sought for comforte euery where, & found none at all. But yet is it a certaine kynde of solace and comforte, to complayne vnto our frendes of our calamitie, though they will not helpe vs. Therfore he commaunded also these three to tarry here, and watche. That done, he went forth a litle, and as one cleane destitute of all worldly comforte, and vtterly forlorne and paste helpe (as touchyng mans helpe) fled vnto the father for socoure: of whom yet he should not byandby be eased of his griefe. Wherfore he fell down flatte on the grounde: and lying grouelyng, prayed the father, that (if it were possible) the tyme of this battraile might passe awaye. The nature of his body feared the tourment, & death that was nye hand. Abba father (sayde he.) Thou canste do all thinges: take awaye this cup from me, that I drinke not therof. Neuertheles let that be doen that thy will hath decreed, whiche wylleth, nothing but what is moste expedient and best: and not as the weaknesse of this body desyreth.

Why soul is deur, euē vnto the death

¶ And he came and founde them sleping, & saieth to Peter: Symon, slepest thou? Couldest not thou watche one houre? watche ye, and praie, lest ye entre into temptation. The spirite truly is ready. But the flesche is weake. And agayne he went awaye, and prayed, and spake the same wordes. And he returned, and founde them asleepe agayn. For their eyes were heauy. Neyther wyst they what to answere him. And he came the thyrde tyme, & sayde vnto them: slepe hence forth, & take your ease, it is enough. The houre is cum, beholde the sonne of man is betrayed into the handes of sinners. Ryse ye vp, let vs go. Loe, he that betrayeth me, is at hand. And immediately, whyle he yet spake, cometh Iudas (which was one of the twelue) and with him a greate nũbre of people, with swordes and staues, from the hye priestes, & scribes, and elders. And he that betrayed him, had geuen them a generall token saying: Whosoeuer I do kisse, that same is he, take him, and leade him away warely. And as sone as he was cum, he goeth streightway to him, and saieth vnto him, master, master, and kissed him. And they layed their handes on him, and toke him. And one of them that stoode by, drue out a sworde, and smote a seruaunt of the hie priest, and cut off his eare.

The texte.

When he had thus prayed, he returned vnto his three disciples whome he left behinde him and found them nowe sleping. And then called he Peter, who a litle before had made so stout a promyse, saying: Simõ, slepest thou? Couldest thou not watche as much as one houre with me? This tyme admitteth no sluggishenesse. For he sleepeth not that goeth about to destroye vs. Watche, and praye, lest ye entre into temptation, because ye shall bee in iopardy to be ouercomen therwith, if it cum vpon you when ye are nothyng prepared. The perill is like commune vnto vs all. I watche and praye for your health & saftie: doe you like wyse watche, and praye as I do, that you maye ouercome with me. The spirite is ready, and wyllyng, but the flesche is weake. The spirite must be stayed and stablished with watchyng, and prayer, lest the flesche haue the vpper hande. When Iesus had thus spoken, he went retyones to the place frõ whẽce he came, & made his prayers vnto the father, with like tenour of wordes as he dyd before: desyring hym, that he might not drinke of the cup which was at hand: and anon he returned to his disciples and founde them a gayne slepyng. They napped in the beholdyng of his maiestie, insomuch that Peter wiste not what he sayde. In like maner do they here slepe in the beholdyng of his infirmitie and weakenesse, and know not well what answere to make hym rebukynge them. Jesus returned the third tyme from prayer vnto his sayed disciples: and the thirde time he founde them a slepe. Bothe they and wehad perished, vnles Jesus had watched, and prayed for vs al. Therfore after they were wakened, he rebuked them because he would by them styrre vp and awaken all slewthfull persons. Slepe ye, saydehe, from henceforth, and take your reast. You haue slepte ynoughe. The thing selfe will now waken you whether you will or no. The very point, and momente of the tyme is already cumme. Lo, the sonne of manne shall anon be betrayed, and delyuered into they? handes that are all set on mischiefe. Ryse vp, and let vs go mete them.

And againe he went & spake the same wordes. Mat. 26.

For now the lord Jesus had by prayer made himself strong in mynde against the storme of afflictions that was at hand. Neither shewed he any time afterward any token of feare, or werines: but gaue vs an ensaple of moste costaunt and stedfast patience vnto the last houre. He had no sooner spoken these wordes, but Judas Iscarioth one of the numbre of the twelue chosen disciples, & amonges them taken for the chiefe, was cum, and with hym a great bende of souldiers fenced with swordes and staues, against Jesus being without armour and weaponlesse. Neither lacked there here authoritie. The hie priestes, scribes, and head men of the people, sent this power. Here marke me (good reader) the notable conflicte of the euangelicke and christian godlynesse against fayned and counterfayte holynesse. Thus is the truthe of the ghospell daylye assaulted: thus doeth it alwayes ouercum and get the victorie. There is none meter to betraye it then he, who profelling hymselfe to be a preacher & teacher of the same, teacheth those thinges that are of the flesche. There is muche more iopardie of false doctrine, then of the swordes and staues of souldiours, that are notorious and open misdoers. Yet dyd not Judas well trust to his owne strength and policie, when he should betraye the lorde. He ioyned vnto hym a great bende of souldiers wel weaponed, & besydes them, the authoritie of both the states, that is to saye, both of the spiritualtie, and temporalitie. And all these thynges dyd they in the night, hauing a wayted as well opportunitie of place, as of tyme. There muste nedes be moste horrible darkenesse, where Jesus is bound, and taken. This was the power of darkenesse: & Satan was suffered awhyle to seme to haue banquished and ouercum Christ. What greater blindnesse could there be then to go about by manners policie to betraye hym, vnto whom nothyng is vnknowen, then with swordes, and staues to assault him, who with a becke can do what hym luste. Judas dyd not openly shewe hymselfe to be the captaine of this vngracious compaignie, but gaue them firstes token, saying: whomsoeuer I kysse, the same is Jesus: Laye ye handes vpon hym, and leade hym charely. lest he stape frō you. The priestes were well ware of this, that the money should not be disbursed vnlesse Jesus were in their handes and custodie. Then began Judas to go a pretty waye before the souldiers, as though he had gone about sum what els: but yet he went so before thē, that he was euer in their sight. And anon as he was cū vnto Jesus, he saluted and kyssed him, according vnto his accustomed manoure. Neyther dyd Jesus here abate any parte of his lentilnesse towardes the traytour. He only nipped him by the conscience, saying: Why frende doʒ what entent art thou cummē? He knew right wel howe he would neuer tourne from his wickednesse, and yet dyd he all the meanes that myght be, to reformeme hym: teachyng vs hereby to vse all the gentlenesse, and layremeanes we can possible towardes synners, because we be vncertaine whether they will ond daye tourne and cum to amēdement. If they amend, then haue we wun the soule healthy of our euenchristen: yf they amēde not, yet shall not our gentle demeanure be vnrewarded. A kysse is a sygne of mutuall loue & charitie. Charitie declareth vs to be the disciples of Jesu. Wherfore there is no greater point of cunnitie, then a layned kysse. Certes such a kysse do false prophetes, eu ēin these dayes, gyue vnto Jesu, whiche vnder pretence of christian godlynesse, strue their belyes, and seke after the prayse of the worlde: and in stede of the spirituall fredōe, teache a very Jewishe religion. If the token of this dowynous kysse, the souldiers layed handes on hym, and bound hym. The disciples when they sawe this rustlyng and busynesse, waxed kumilhe and angrye. And newe Peter cleane forgettyng what ꝑ Lorde had tolde hym before, thought the tyme was cum wherin it thoulde be his part to do summe worthy feate, according as he had right courageously se and lyke a bolde man promised to do. He drewe out his swearde, and strake the high bishops seruaunt called Malchus, because he more fierse then the rest, first hailed to laye handes on Jesus. Howbeit the Lorde so ordred the stroke of his right hande, that he dyd Malchus no other harme, saue alonely cut of his right eare: the whiche the same moste gracious lorde anone as he had rebuked his disciple, restored a gayne, and so made hym aunendes for the hurt of this small and daungerles wounde. So beneficiall was Jesus to all men, that we ought to be ashamed to haue, so muche as a will or anentente to be reuenged vpon any man: I will not saye to hurte liche, as hath not deserued our displeasure.

And he that vncaped hym had geuen them ꝛc.

And one of them that dyde by ꝛc.

¶ And Jesus answered, and sayde vnto them: ye be cum out as vnto a theefe, with swerdes and with staues for to take me: I was dayly with you in the temple teaching, and ye toke me not. But these thinges cum to passe, that the scriptures should be fulfilled. And they all forsoke hym, and ranne awaye. And there followed hym a certaine young man clothed in lynnen vpon the bare, and the yong menne caught hym, and he left his lynnen garment, and fled from thence naked. And they led Jesus awaie to the hye preest of all, and with hym came all the hye priestes, and the elders, and the Scribes. And Peter followed hym a great waye of, euen tyll he was cumme into the palace of the hye preste, and he sate with the seruauntes, and warmed hymselfe at the fyre.

The textes

Further, as Jesus will not be defended with any other aydes, then with the sword of the gospel, the whiche pearceth to the innermost partes of mens hartes, so was it his wil that this armed company of souldiers should know that he could not haue been apprehended by any puissaunce or power of man, vnlesse he had both willingly and wittingly put hymselfe into their handes to be taken. Therfore he turned hym vnto them, and sayed: sirs what apieth you to cum out hyther to me at midnight, with swordes and staues, as vnto a theefe that would stand at his defence with lyke weapon? I was dayly at Jerusalem, not priuely, but openlye where euery body might see me: in the place where moste haunt and resort of people is, I meane in the temple: heayng syche folke, and teachyng the trueth. I was euer weaponlesse, and accōpanied but with a small number of disciples, who wer likewise without armour and weapon. Wherby dyd ye not there take me? Surely you might haue done it then with lesse businesse, if it had been so decreed.

I was dayly with you in the temple.

But this is your tyme: inſomuche that you may by goddes ſufferaunce, do nowe to me what ye luſte. And that it ſhoulde ſo be, the ſcriptures, whiche cā not lye, haue foreſhewed many yeares ſithens. Whan he had ſayd ſo, there was but who might firſte lay handes on hym: and anon the diſciples feryng themſelues, forſoke the yᵗ lorde, and rāne awaye, ſum to one place, and ſum to another. It is lawfull for weake perſons to flye, who are not as yet mete and able to ſuffre perſecucion. Albeit there chaunceth a tyme, when that to flye, is nothyng elſ, but to deny Chriſte. There muſt we not flye, bye cum of ours we accorde hasten to dye. Whē that by thy death the Goſpell taketh more diſpoſite, then commoditie, then flye awaye, and hyde thy ſelfe. But when that by the ſame, the ghoſpell hath muche profyte, and contrarily greate diſpoſicion and hinderaunce, if thou anoyde the daunger therof, then ſticke not to go and mete the hangman. There was among the twelue, a certayne young fry pyng ꝑ loued Jeſus more ẏᵗ the reſt, & folowed hym being led with his armes bounde like a captiue or priſoner: whoſe bace bodye was clothed with one fine lynnen garment only. Hym they ſawe, and toke. But he caſte of his lynnen veſture, and ſo eſcaped out of theyr handes, ſauing his lyfe by the loſſe of his garment. He that ſo flyeth after the ſpirituall ſence, flyeth happely. For what els is this bodye but the veſture and garmente of the ſoule? Is ofte as Satan layeth handes vpon the ſoule, paſſe not vpon the linnen garmente, and ſo ſaue thy ſelfe, and eſcape out of his daunger. Nowe beholde howe the euangelike verite is vanqueliſed after it is betrayed of a wicked diſciple. The cruell gariſon of ſoldiers leadeth it bounde to the chiefe mayne of bothe the ſtates, who are in a cōſpiracie to deſtroye it. Fyrſte it is brought vnto the hyghest priest. There is no more mortall an enemy vnto Jeſu, then is a wicked Beſhop. Nowe be cauſe the matters ſhould ſeme to be done with more auctorite, thither aſſembled all the prieſtes, Scribes and elders. This is the authorite of this world, whiche is in a conſpiracie againſte poore, ſymple, and playne veritie, but yet inuincible withal. All this while Peters herte fayled him not. Howbeit he folowed Jeſus a loofe, and was nowe a cloked diſciple: and no mervayle, ſithe the tyme did ſo require, when he would deny him. For mans bolde ſtomacke is good for nothyng els of it ſelfe, but to make the ſynner more outragiouſly to offende. Therefore he preaſed into the palace of the highest prieſt, & there ſate amidſt the lewde and ungracious companie of ſeruauntes, and warmed himſelfe by the fire, as one that would be rather a beholder of the Lordes paſſion, then a folower.

And there folowed hi a certayne young man

The texte. ¶ And the hye prieſtes, and all the counſel, ſought for witneſſe agaynſt Jeſu, to put hym to death: & found none, for many bare falſe witneſſe againſt hym, but their witnes agreed not together. And there aroſe certayne & brought falſe witneſſe againſt hym, ſaying: We heard hym ſaye, I will deſtroye this temple that is made with handes, and within three dayes I will builde another, made without handes. But yet theyr witneſſes agreed not to gether.

In the meane ſeaſon ſuche of the prieſtes as were chiefe in dignitie (amōg whom as euery one was higheſte in authoritie, ſo was the ſame more wicked then the other) and with them the reſidue of the counſell, leſte they ſhoulde haue ſemed to be rather murtherers, then aurngers of hereſye, and vngodlyneſſe, ſought for ſum witneſſe agaynſt Jeſus, wherby they might put him to death. They deſired nothyng els, but his death and deſtrucion, who freely offered all men life euerlaſtyng. Yet could there no mete witneſſe be found. Jeſus one ly was he, againſt whom mans craftines couldē fynde no conuenient witneſſe.

For

For no we there came in many before the Judges, who depoſed againſt hym, but their witnelle was ſo ſimple and fleder, that it appeared not to thoſe moſte vnlut ſclowes themſelues, ſufficient to condemne him, whome they hadde in very dede codemned alreadye among themſelues, before he was brought vnto his arraignement. At the lengthe there roſe vp certain perſons whō gaue fore euidence againſt hym, ſaying: we will denounce vnto you, ſuche thynges as we knowe certainly to be true. For we heard hym ſaye (with theſe eares) I will deſtroy this temple made by mannes handes, and after three dayes erected, I will builde another, that ſhall not be made with the handes of manne. They woulde that this ſaying ſhoulde appeare to be a blaſphemye ſpoken againſt the Lordes temple. Yet did not their witnelle (albeit to aggrauate the haynouſnes of the crime, it conteyned ſum truthe) ſeme lawfull and ſufficient. A man would haue ſayed, that the Iudges had taken conſtlence in the matter, and fauoured the defendaunte: Howbeit this diligence of the prieſtes was for nothing elſ, but bicauſe Jeſus ſhould not by any meanes be quit and eſcape this iudgement.

For many false witneſſes.

But yet there were witneſſes.

¶ And the hye prieſt ſtode vp amonges them, and aſked Jeſus, ſaying: anſwereſt thou nothing? Som is it that theſe beare witnelle againſt the? But he helde his peace & anſwered nothing. Agayne the highest prieſt aſked hym, and ſaied vnto hym: Arte thou Chriſt, the ſonne of the bleſſed? And Jeſus ſayd: I am.

The texte.

Yet all this while is there nothyng doen againſt hym. There nedeth the helpe of the highest prieſt or biſhop of all, to deſtroye Jeſu. Herefore perceyuing that the matter wet but raſſly forward, roſe vp in the middes of the counſel, and began to ſpeake vnto Jeſus, ſekyng ſum occaſion of his wordes, wherby he might condemne him. Heareſt thou, ſayeth he, what crimes are layed vnto thy charge? haſte thou no anſwere to make hereunto? Jeſus held his peace and gaue hym not a word to anſwere. For, for what purpoſe ſhoulde he haue anſwered to thoſe thynges, which themſelues iudged but light matters, and of no waygh? Therfore the highest Biſshoppe ſtyll ſought occaſion, and queſtioned with hym, ſaying: Art thou that ſelfſame Chriſte the ſonne of God, who is euer to be prayſed? Jeſus confeſſed he was. For it was not his parte to denye that thyng, whiche it behoued all men to knowe.

¶ And ye ſhall ſee the ſonne of man ſitting on the right hande of power, and comming in the cloudes of heauen. Then the hye prieſt rent his clothes, and ſayed: what nede we of any further witnelles? ye haue hearde a blaſphemy, what thinke ye? And they all condemned hym to be worthy of death, & ſum began to ſpyt at him, & to couer his face, and to beate him with fiſtes, and to ſaye vnto hym: Areade. And the ſeruaunces buffeted hym on the face.

The texte.

And becauſe he knewe they woulde not beleue in hym, or at the leaſt wiſe woulde contemne him, by reaſon of the weakeneſſe of his body: he added an other ſentence to feare them withall. Yon ſhall ſee (ſayeth he) the ſonne of manne ſitting on the right hande of the diuine maieſtie, and cummyng on hygh in the cloudes of heauen, with great glory, and many aungels wayting vpon him. He meant of his ſeconde cumming: when he will retourne, not lykewyſe lowe as he was then, but in diuine maieſtie a iudge both of the quicke, and dead. The wicked prieſtes were ignorannt in the lawe: yet might they haue learned of the Phariſeis, that both the cummynges of Meſſias, were prophecied of by the prophetes: the one not regarded and paſſed on, the other royall, and dreadfull. But they had no leyſure to compare Jeſus dedes, with the prophecies, and forſayinges of the prophetes. All that euer they wente about was nothyng els, but to bryng hym to destruction. Here the highest priest clobyng

Then the hye priest rēt his clothes. his wickednesse with a vysure of Godlynesse, rent and tare his clothes, thereby to make the blasphemy to appeare more haynous and detestable.

What nedeth there, saieth he, any further witnes: yourselues haue heard an open blasphemy. The wicked Bishop desyrous to set forth his owne glorye, coulde not abide to heare Christes glorye aduaunced: supposyng that what glory and prayse soeuer had been gruen to Christ, the same shoulde haue ben to the great derogation and minishyng of his maiestie. Wherfore he caused him a litle before to ryse out of his place: and yet in so doyng, he gaue reuerence vnto the sonne of god. Now doeth he rente his clothes, prophecying here by, how it shall cum to passe, that the true bishop raignyng the carnall and figuratiue bishoppode shalde cleane abolished and set aside. The glorious synagoge was rent, but Christes coate remaineth still whole. What is farther from blaspheme myng, then to set forth the glory of the sonne of God: then to testifie that all shall come to passe, whatsoeuer the Prophetes haue prophecied to cum? And yet the vngracious bishop iudgeth this to be suche a blasphemye, as nedeth no witnesses. What, saith he, thinke you here in? All they with one cōsent gaue iudge-ment that this saying was an offence worthy of death. Forsothe a mete and a worthy councell for suche a priest. Nowe is it to be considered howe the vnangelyke pertitie is entreated in such councels, where as a wicked priest, who faine
What thinke ye? would be taken for a god, cannot abide to haue the glorye of the sonne of god aduaunced: where the Scribes do not vtter what they haue learned of the prophetes: where the head men, and elders of the people, be in a conspiracie with the chief prelates of the temple: where suche waged seruauntes, & hyred soul-diers beare a stroke, as are of theyr owne naughtie disposicion enclined to all mischefe. For now some of them began to spitte at Jesus, as thoughe he had been lawfully condemned: and other some couered his face with a vayle, and after they had buffeted hym, sayed: Prophecie, and arede who hath striken the. Thus they reproched fully scorned hym, because he suffred the people to take hym for a prophete. Furthermore the prieltes seruauntes dyd lykewyse beat and buffet hym. These thinges were more fell, and cruell then death: but this ensample was ordeined for our enstruction. In sufferyng of reproche and bylany none passed Jesus: but in worshyng of myracles there were some, that went beyond hym

The texte. And as Peter was benethe in the palace, there come one of the wenches of the highest priest, and when she sawe Peter warming himself, she loked on him, and sayeth: wast not thou also with Jesus of Nazareth? And he denied, saying: I know hym not, neyther wot I what thou sayest. And he went out into the porche, & the Cocke crew. And a damosel (whē she sawe hym) began again to saye to them that stoode by: this is one of them. And he denyed it agayne. And anone after they that stode by, sayde agayne to Peter: surely thou arte one of them. for thou arte of Galile, and thy speache agreeth thereto. But he began to curse, and to sweare, saying, I know not this man of whome ye speake. And agayne the cocke crewe, and Peter remembred the worde that Jesus sayed vnto him. Before the cocke crow twise thou shalt denye me thryse tymes. And he began to wepe.

While all these thinges were doen vnto Jesu, Peter beyng a fearful beholder, sate in the neyther parte of the palace among the wicked bishop seruauntes. For there was a conuenient place for hym, sithe he woulde denye Jesus.
Hither came a certaine wenche of ỹ highest priest, whiche, after she had espyed hym warmyng himselfe with other by the fier, and hadi ryed hym diligently, began to know his shape and phisnamie, and sayed vnto hym: Yea thou too wast

wast with Jesus of Nazareth. Peter frayed with these wordes denied it saying: I knowe not the man, nor wote not what thou meanest. It was conuenient that this stoute promiser, because he might the better know his own frailtie, should be made afearde of a wenche, to thentent that he afterwarde boldly profelsyng the name of Jesu before rulers, and princes, should knowe that his boldnesse and constant courage of mynde, came not of mannes strength, but of the holy ghoste. He therfore beyng now afearde, and halfe mistrustyng that place, gate hym out of the hall, yet departed he not out of the bysshops palace. Whyles he abode here, the cocke crewe. Peter heard that, and yet remembred not what Jesus had tolde hym: so greatly was he afrayed. Then a certaine damosell (when the fawe hym) began to detecte hym again to them that stode about her, saying: This is one of theyr number. Peter eftsones auoyded her saying with a lye, denying flat that he was any of the apostles. And anon after when the seruauntes whiche stoode by whyles the damosell knewe and discryed him, had themselues well bewed his fauour and apparaile, they lykewise began to knowe hym, and sayed: Verily thou arte one of them. For thou arte of Galile. The firste that detected hym was a woman. Oh what a perilit is for Christes disciple to be knowen in bishops, and princes courtes. Unlesse he vtterly denye hymselfe to bee Christes disciple, he standeth in ieopardie to lose his life. Peter is also in ieopardie, by reason of his mother tongue & countrey language. Suche manour of courtes can abyde no fyucere and pureberitie. Nowe shall Peter at the length, be made a right courtier by and bowne, for he begynneth to sweare depely, and to curse withal, that he neuer in al his lyfe tyme knew this Jesu, who they spake of. And as he had spoken the word, the cocke crewe agayne. Peter came not to hymselfe agayn, before Jesus loked vpon hym. Therfore at the length callyng to his remembraunce the wordes that Jesus had spoken vnto him, when he sayed: before the cocke crowe twise, thou shalt thryse deny me: he wente forthe of Cayphas house, and braste out a weping. Yet went he not to hange himself, as Judas did, because he fell not of obstinate inwelnesse, but by mannes frailtie and weakenesse, and that by the sufferaice of God, because his fal should be our instructiō. But this showre of teares which braste out of his iyes, quenched the lyghtning of Goddes wrathe and danger. He wept not before he was goen out of Caiphas palace. For there the more naughtie packe that euery one is, the more he esteemeth and fauoureth himselfe.

Peter bewibed the worde.

The. xv. Chapter.

The texte.

And anon in the dawnyng, the hie priests holde a counsaile with the elders and the Scribes and the whole congregation, and bounde Jesus, and led him awaye, and deliuered hym to Pylate. And Pylate asked hym: Arte thou the king of the Jewes? And he answered and sayde vnto hym: thou sayest it. And the hie priestes accused hym of many thynges. So Pylate asked hym agayne, saying: Answerest thou nothing? Beholde howe many thinges they laye vnto thy charge. Jesus yet aunswered nothyng, so that Pylate meruayled.

AL ye nyghte was spent in Chyphas house, in destroying, mocking, and skorning of Jesu. In the morning earlye after they had coūsayled together afreshe, the hie priestes, with the elders Scribes, and all the whole assemblie, led him awaye with his armes bound, & deliuered hym vnto Pylate to be iudged: whō they had with theyr forediudgement already condemned. Now are they of iudges becum accuſars. Pylate, their accuſacions and complaintes heard, called Jeſu, and aſked him: Arte thou that ſame kyng of the Jewes? Jeſus anſwered. Thou ſayeſt: couertlye knowleadgyng and confeſſyng that he was the ſelfſame. Yet was Pilat not a whit moued with this anſwere, becauſe there appeared nothing in him wherby he ſemed deſyrous of any worldly kyngdom. Furthermore the hye prieſtes, leſt he ſhould by any meanes haue been quit, gathered together diuerſe criminall artycles againſt him, to thentent that amongeſt many matters, ſome ſhould at ſ leſt wyſe be ſum thyng in him which would moue any iudge, not being to vniuſt, and parcyall, to geue ſentence againſt hym. Pylate perceiuing how all was doen of priuate diſpleaſure and malice, ſought occaſion to diſtharge him of ſuche matters as he was arrayned for. Therfore whē he came again vnto Jeſus, & Jeſus wouldē geue him neuer a word to anſwere, thē ſayde he vnto him: Wherfore thou no anſwer, ſith thou art in ſo great daūger to loſe thy lyfe? Se how many artycles theſe felowes laye againſt the. Jeſus from thence forthe made no anſwere, who deſyred not to eſcape this iudgement, leſte the vtilitie of his death, ſhoulde haue been let or hyndered therby, & alſo becauſe he knewe right well that ꝑ malice of the prieſtes wouldē not yet haue ceaſed, although they had not this waye preuayled againſt hym. For this cauſe his wyll and pleaſure was ſo to dye, that it might appeare that he died willyngly. The Emperours deputie, albeit he were a paynim, yet dyd he abhorre the murthering of a man, whom he iudged to be an innocent and giltleſſe perſon: and therfore vſed he all the wayes and meanes he coulde poſſible to delyuer him. For he ſawe well there was no healpe to be had on his behalfe, whereby he myght ſo doe.

And Pilate aſked hym again.

The texte. ¶ At that ſeaſte Pylate dyd deliuer vnto them a priſoner, whom ſoeuer they would deſyre. And there was one that was named Barrabas, which laye bounde with them that made inſurrection: the had committed murther. And the people called vnto hym, and began to deſyre him that he would do, according as he had euer been vnto them. Pylate anſwered them, ſaying: Will ye that I let louſe vnto you the kyng of the Jewes? For he knewe that the hye prieſtes had delyuered hym of enuye. But the hye prieſtes moued the people that he ſhould rather deliuer Barrabas vnto them.

There was a cuſtome among the Jewes that at the ſeaſte of Eaſter, one of them ſhoulde be lowſed whiche laye in priſon for anye death worthy offence, whom ſoeuer the Jewes deſyred to be geuen vnto them. At that ſeaſon there was in duraunce a certaine notable felō, muche ſpoken of for his vngracious dedes, named Barrabas, who had been a ſtirrer vp of ſedicion in the citie, and in the buſynes, and hurly burly that he made, had committed mauſlaughter. Pylate determined with hymſelfe to vſe this occaſion to ſaue Jeſu. Therfore when the people were cummen together, accordyng to theyr auncient cuſtome to deſyre to haue ſome felon pardoned, in token of theyr ſafe deliuerance and ſcapyng out of Egypte, Pylate anſwered in this wyſe: I haue two priſoners, Barrabas whome ye know, and Jeſus who men cal the kyng of the Jewes. Will ye therfore that I lowſe vnto you Jeſus? Pylate perceyuyng that he coulde haue no ayde and helpe of the prieſtes, went vnto the people becauſe to haue had ſome ayde & aſſiſtence of them, truſting that by theyr fauour, Jeſus ſhoulde haue been deliuered. And ſo had he been without fayle, if the malicious byſhops (neuer weary to worke miſchiefe) had not moued them rather to deſyre to haue Barrabas pardoned, then Jeſus.

The texte, Pylate anſwered againe, and ſayed vnto them, what will ye then that I do vnto him whom whom ye call the kyng of the Iewes? And they cryed agayne: crucifie hym. Pilate sayde vnto them: what euyl hath he done? and they cryed the more feruently: Crucifie hym. And so Pylate willyng to content the people, let lose Barabas vnto them, and deliuered vp Iesus (when he had scourged him) for to be crucified.

When this thyng had so chaunced, contrary to the deputies expectation (for he heard say that Christ was highly in grace and fauour with the people) yet ceased not he to helpe hym, as muche as in him laye. What then, sayed he, will ye that I do with the kyng of the Iewes: lokyng to haue heard of them a more fauourable and gentler sentence. But these the wylye Bishops were ware circumspect, who had before hande infected the myndes of the comminaltie with their wicked counsell. Neyther is the auctorite of suche bishoppes good for any thyng els, but to moue Princes, and the people against the truethe of the gospel. The people therfore cryed agayn: crucifie hym. The bishops had also beaten into their heades, that the shamefullest kynde of death of all, should be chosen out for hym: bycause his name shoulde hereby be counted detestable and cursed among all the Iewes. And they brought him to a place named Golgotha. &c.

For the lawe pronounced hym cursed, whosoo hangeth in wood. So studied they not onely to bereaue hym of his life, but also vtterly to extincte & abolysshe his good name, which was a facte muche cruell er then death. They couldnot abide that any mans name shoulde be counted holy, saue their's. Neyther did Pilate here pride vnto their furie, but spake harde against them, saying: I am the Emperours deputie. It is not lawful for me to put any man to death, vnlesse he be duely conuicted. What offence hath he done wherfore he oughte to be crucified? Here the deputie not hyng preuayled. For they cryed outemore furiously: Crucifie hym, yet for al that Pylate thanke not in Christes cause, yf they layed vnto his charge treason against the Emperour. It was not conuenient that Iesu shoulde be doen to death, excepte the Emperours authozite had serued the fury of the bysshops. Pylate perceyuyng what daunger hanged ouer his head, on the one syde, of the Emperour, on the other, of the clamarous people, albeit he knewe ryghte well that Iesus was an innocente and harmeles person, yet willinge to yelde and confozme hymselfe to the mortall hatred of the bysshops, Scrybes, riders, and people, gaue sentence of death against hym: but with the same sentence he both cleared the innocent of all crimes, and also condemned the priestes, and the people. For he pronounced hym to be innocent and giltles, whome he let them haue to crucifie. Suche maner of Pylates shal the truth of the gospell euermore haue: & would to God there dyd not arise among vs some bysshops, which are farre beyonde those bishops in all mischeefe & vngraciousnes. When therfore Iesus was condemned to death, he was fyrst beaten with scourges. But whē the Iewes were not here with satisfied, Pylate deliuered hym to the garison of ꝑ souldiers to be crucified. So it pleased the high wisedom of God that Iesu the fountaine of al glory, should be put to all kyndes of vilany, by al sortes of people: to the entent we should not be disinaide vnto any maner of worldly euils or aduersities. Judas betrayed him: the bishops, Scribes, & headmen of the people counsailed together: the seruauntes toke hym: Cayphas the highest priest, chiefe worker of all this mischief condemned hym: the Counsell, and their seruauntes scorned him as a condemned person: the people cryed out against hym like mad folkes: the Emperours name maketh the iudge afraid: Herode despiseth: the Emperours deputie geueth sentence: and in al these is Cayphas, and in hym the deuyl.

And

The terte. And the ſouldiers led him away into the cõmon hall, and called together the whole ſtrude, and they clothed him with purple, and they platted a croune of thornes, and dyd crowne him withall, and began to ſalute him: hayle kyng of the Iewes. And they ſmote him on the head with a rede, and dyd ſpit vpon him, and bowed their knees, and worſhypped him.

Nowe remayneth there behynde, that the wicked gariſon of ſouldiers do lykewyſe playe their partes, and amõg the also was Cayphas. All the ſhame and villany that Ieſus was put vnto, all his deſtruction (if it maye be ſayed) he was deſtroyed) came of Caiphas, who vnwares wrought a thing moſte bleſſed and holy. For he made this ſacrifice, without whiche no mankinde coulde haue attayned ſaluation. When therfore Ieſus was caſte and iudged to dye, Pylates ſeruauntes led hym into the hall of the palace. For the Iewes, who were deſyrous to eate holy durſt not entre into the palace of a Gentile; becauſe they would come pure and cleane to celebrate their paſſeouer.

And yet was their mindes in the myddes of the palace, and in the verye handes of the ſouldiers, whom being of their owne enclination readye to do all miſchiefe, they prouoked and incenſed thereunto. After Pylate had once deliuered his handes of Ieſus, he thought it made no great force how he were dõe to death. So did Herode fauour the terme, and goodnes of John, that at the requeſte of a peuiſhe wenche he cauſed his head to be ſtriken of. Howbeit the fauour of Pylate was more conſtant then ſo, but yet in concluſyon he deliuered hym to be crucified. And this was dõe leſt any that profeſſeth the truethe of the ghoſpell, ſhould truſt vpon any worldly ayde and ſuccour. Then the ſouldiers, becauſe they would the more take their pleaſure on hym in puttyng hym to ſhame and villany, called together the whole gariſon of their compañeions: and in mockage, clothed him with a garment of purple, as it had been with a kynges robe: the put they on his head a croune platted of thornes, in the ſtede of a diademe, and being thus diſguiſed, they began with one voice to ſalute hym, ſaying: Hayle kyng of the Iewes. Furthermore they ſtrake his head with a rede, whiche they gaue him in his hande in ſtede of a ſceptre: & dyd alſo ſpit vpon hym, and bowyng their knees, worſhypped him. Ieſus all this while helde his peace, & patiently yelded to al their diſpitefull boynges, tranſpoꝛtyng vnto his owne perſone that ſhame and villanye, whiche was due vnto our offences, becauſe to aduaunce vs vnto his glorye.

¶ And when they had mocked hym, they toke the purple of him, and put his owne clothes on him, and led hym out to crucifie hym. And they compelled one that paſſed by called The terte. Simon of Cyrene (the father of Alexãder and Rufus) which came out of the felde, to beare his croſſe. And they brought him to a place named Golgotha, which is (if a man interprete it) the place of dead mens ſculles. And they gaue him to drinke wine mingled with Myrre, but he receyued it not.

Theſe thynges done, they toke of againe the purple garment, and put on his owne clothes: to thintent that carying his croſſe amõg mẽ of ſoo, he might be diſcerned, and know wen of euery body. And this the malycious prieſtes cauſed to be done, becauſe they would the more alienate and withdraw all mẽnes mindes from hym. As they were goyng to the place of execucion, they met a certayne fellow called Simon of Cyrene (the father of Alexãder and Rufus) cõmyng from his ferme: whome makyng refuſall to beare Chriſtes croſſe, the ſouldiers (notwithſtandyng he was a ryche man and of their acquaintaunce) did of a ſouldiourly malapertnes compell maugre on his head to beare it: not because

beeause to fauour or ease Jesus, but for the spedier finishyng of the execucion. Some men necessitie constrayneth to embrace the crosse of Jesu: But this is a blessed necessitie that driueth a man to saluacion. The apostles enforced no mā to go to Christ: but the souldiers vsed compulsion. Howbeit the violence of these naughtie packes hath bene many a mannes saluation. They broughte hym into a place slaunderous and reprouefull, by reason that suche as trespaced the lawe, there suffred execucion: called in the Syrian tong, Golgatha, & in Latine Caluaria, the whiche word implieth in Englishe a place of dead mēs sculles. There gaue they him wine mingled with myrre, to drinke. For wyne is customable geuen to men, when they be a pallyng. Howbeit that wyne, for so much as it was corrupted with the bitternes of the Jewes, Jesus receyued not when it was offered hym. For a lytle before he dranke with his disciples, and would not drynke agayne of the fruite of the vine, tyll he should drinke it newe in the kyngdome of God. He hated the bitter wyne whiche the vyne of the Jewyshe synagoge brought hym furth, that was becum bitter vnto her lorde, and tiller: and in stede of ripe grapes, yelded the fruite of the wilde vine. He hated the vine of wycked persons, and thirsted for another kynde of wyne. That was the newe wyne of the spirite of the Gospell, the whiche spirite after his ascending vp vnto heauen, he moste plenteously powred vpon his disciples.

And they brought him vnto the place Golgotha.

And when they had crucified hym, they parted his garmentes, casting lottes vpon them what euery man should take, and it was about the thyrde houre. And they crucified hym. And the title of his cause was written: the kyng of the Jewes. And they crucified with hym two theues, the one on the right hād, and the other on his left. And the scripture was fulfilled which sayth: he was counted among the wicked.

The texte.

When Jesu was lifted vp on the crosse, those that crucified him, parted his clothes among the: and for his coate (whiche was wrought in suche wyse yt it could not be deuided) they caste lottes, whose fortune it shoulde be to haue the whole. Nowe consider the poinctie of Jesus, who had nothyng left him in yearth. He hangeth in the middes betweene heauē and yearth. So must he bee naked: so must he be lyghted of all burthens: so must he be high, that wyll encountre with the enemy of mānes saluation. When Dauid should fyght with Goliad, he caste away al the armour and weapō of Saule, whiche dyd rather burthen hym, then do hym any stede. It was the thyrde houre of the daye when they nayled hym on the crosse. There was set vpon the crosse the tytle of the cause wherfore he suffered, which was this: The king of the Jewes: written in thre languages, that is to saye, in Hebrue, Greke, and Latine. And with hym they crucified two theues, in suche wise that one of them hong on his right syde, and the other on his lefte, on eyther syde enuironing hym hangyng in the middes. And this was doen by the procurement of the wicked priestes, because to make his name shamefull. The prophete Esai prophecied it should be, saying: He was reckened among the vnhust and wicked.

And they that went by, rayled on hym, wagaging their heades, and saying: A wretede, thou that destroyest the temple, and buyldest it in three dayes, saue thy selfe, & come downe from the crosse. Lykewyse also mocked hym the high priestes among themselues, with the scribes, and sayed: He sauld other men, himselfe he cannot saue. Let Christe the kyng of Israel descende now from the crosse, that we may see and beleue. And they that were crucified with hym cheeked hym also.

The texte.

Neyther could the malicious bishops, and Scribes yet be satisfied with these so great euyls and manyfold displeasures. For yyst the Jewes passing by the crosse, rayled on hym as he hong theron: and as it were vpbraydyng

hym

hym now ouer cum, sayde vnto hym in derision and mockage waggyng their heades withall: A wyrethe, thou that destroyest Gods temple, and buildest it agayne within three dayes: Nowe shewe what thou canste doe: Put furthe this might and power whereupon thou braggest: saue thyselfe if thou be able and cum down from the crosse. Neyther dyd the hyghe bysshops or priestes vse any gentler language vnto hym, who with the Scribes skorned hym among themselues, saying: He hath saued other, but himselfe he is not able to saue: he hath made his baune how he was Christe: he bragged that he was the kyng of Israell. If his promises be true, let vs see hym cum downe from the crosse, & then will we beleue on hym. The priestes entended by these reprothfull wordes, cleane to withdraw all men from the beliefe of Jesu. So are the Martyrs euen at this daye ofte tymes skorned, and with lyke reprothefull wordes rayled on in their martyrdome, and corporall tourmentes, so is the veritie of the gospel berated, & laughed to skorne of the miscreantes, whiche is many tymes so hardly handled, that it semeth to be vtterly oppressed. yet ceased not this outragious raphyng against Jesus. The two theues that were crucified with hym, rebuked the innocent as they honge on the crosse. But here also dyd Jesus accordyng vnto his name. For he saued one of them.

And when the sixt houre was ch, darckenes arose ouer all the earth, vntill the ninthe houre.

The texte. And at the ninthe houre, Jesus cried with a loude voice, saying: Eloi, Eloi, Lamazabathany, which is (if one interprete it) my God, my God, why haste thou forsaken me? And some of them that stode by, when they heard that, sayd: beholde he calleth for Helias. And one ranne and fylled a sponge full of vinegre, and put it on a rede, and gaue him to drinche, saying: let vs alone: Let vs see whether Helias will cume, and take hym downe.

At the sixte houre there arose a darknes, whiche couered all that lande: and endured tyll the nynth. Then Jesus destitute of all mannes helpe, cryed vnto the father with a loude voyce, reciting out of the psalme the prophecy whiche was spoken of hym before: Heloi, Heloi, Lamazabathany, the whiche wordes interpreted, are as muche to saye in Englishe, as, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? When some of them that stode by heard hym speake these wordes, and vnderstode not well the Hebrue tong, they sayde: he calleth vpon Hely. There be many suche false prophetes, and interpreters of scripture, euen in our tyme, and euer shall be tyll the worldes ende, which expounde the wordes of Jesu, no better then those skorners did. After that when he cried agayn: I am a thyrst: there ranne one vnto him, and raught him a sponge ful of vinegar, fastned to a rede, saying: Let hym alone: let vs see whether Hely will cu and take hym down from the crosse. When he had eftsones tasted the vinegre, he wouldde not drinke therof. He thyrsted another wyne, whiche they wouldde not geue hym, that refused to beleue the gospell.

The texte. But Jesus cried with a loude voyce, and gaue vp the ghost. And the vayle of the temple did rent in two pieces, from the toppe to the bottome. And whē the Centurion (which stode before hym) sawe that he so cryed, and gaue vp the ghost, he sayde: truly this manne was the sonne of God. There were also women a good ways of beholdyng hym, among whom was Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of James the lesse, and of Joses, and Mary Salome (whiche also when he was in Galile, had folowed hym, and ministred vnto hym) and many other women whiche came vp with hym vnto Jerusalem.

Jesus (all thynges fulfylled) gaue a great skryke, and therwith yelded vp the ghost. And vpanby the vayle of the temple which dissevered those thynges that the Jewes counted moste holy from the syght of the multitude or comon people, was rent from the vppermoste parte to the lowest. Shadowes crafe, and vanithe away, allone as veritie cummeth once to light. Neyther should it be any more nedefull for any prieft to entre into the ſanctuary, after that ſacrifice was once offred vp, and made: whiche alone was ſufficient to pourgethe ſynnes of the whole world. Nowe whē the capitaine that ſtode right againſt Jeſus, as a minister, and witnes of his death, who had ſene manye a one before put to execucion, ſawe howe that contrarye to the manoure of other, he yelded vp the ghoſte and dyed immediatlye as he had geuen this great ſtrike, he ſayd: Truely this man was the ſonne of God.

See here the fyrſt frutes of the gentiles, confeſſing the vertue, and power of Chriſte. Lye that confeſſeth hym to bee a man, and the ſonne of God: confeſſeth him to bee both God and manne. Albeit the captaine as yet vnderſtode by the ſonne of God, a man notably beloued of God. Marke this alſo, how our ſauiour is euery where a ſauiour. When he was a dying on the croſſe, he ſaued one of the theues. And anon as he was deade, he dyd wo the captaine vnto the profeſſion of Chriſten kayth. There were alſo women that ſtode a good waye of and beheld all that was doen: among whome was Mary Magdalene, & Mary the mother of James the leſſe, and of Joſes: and Mary Salome, the whiche all the while that Jeſus continued & taught in Galile, folowed hym, and miniſtred vnto hym of their ſubſtaunce: and beſides theſe, diuerſe other, whiche likewyſe folowed hym in his voyage to Jeruſalem.

And now when the euen was come (becauſe it was the daye of preparyng, that goeth before the Sabboth) Joſeph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble counſailour, which alſo loked for the kyngdom of god, came and went in boldly vnto Pilate, and begged of him the body of Jeſu. And Pilate meruailed if he were alreadye dead, and called vnto him the Centurio, and aſked of him whether he had been anye while deade. And when he knewe the truethe of the Centurion, he gaue the body to Joſeph. And he bought a Lynnen clothe, and take hym downe and wrapped hym in the lynnen clothe, and layed hym in a ſepulchre that was hewen out of the rocke, and rolep a ſtone before the dore of the ſepulchre. And Mary Magdalene and Mary Joſes, beheld where he was layed. The texte.

When the euentyde drawe nye, forasmuche as it was the preparing daye, ſo called, becauſe it was the euē of the great Sabboth: there came one Joſeph of the citie of Aramathia, a noble, and a right worthy ſenatoure, who likewiſe hoped after the kyndome of God. This man becauſe he had a good opinion of Jeſu: was bolde through affiaūce of his nobilitie, to go vnto Pilate and deſyre of hym the body of Jeſu. Pilate meruayled yf Jeſus beyng but a yong man, were already deade: becauſe manye had been wonte to lyue two or three dayes after their legges were broken.

Therfore he called vnto hym the Capitayne, who ſtode by the croſſe, and demaūded of him whether he were all ready dead, or no. And when by his information he was well aſcertayned that he was dead in very dede, he gaue the body to Joſeph. For Jeſus as long as he lyued, ſuffred hymſelfe to bee beaten and ſpit vpon of wycked perſons. But anon as he was deade, he claymed his dignitie, and would not bee handled but of godly perſons, no not ſomuche as bee ſeen but of his diſciples, who were apointed to lyfe euerlaſting: teachyng therby, that no man ſhoulde chalenge his dignitie in this worlde. Let a manne by honour, and diſhonour, by glory, and reproche, onlye endeuour himſelfe to finiſhe the buſineſſe of the goſpell. For dignitie beginneth neuer to florythe tyll after death. Joſeph beyng right ioyfull that he hadde obteyned ſo precious a gifte, bought a piece of fine linnen clothe, and therin wrapped the bodye, and layed layed it in a newe sepulchre hewed out of free stoone: and then rolled a great stone to the doore or entry of the sepulchre, that no man should lightly conuey awaye the body by stealth.

But of the women whiche beheelde the lorde when he dyed, two followed hym vnto the sepulchre: that is to were, Mary Magdalene, & Mary Joseph, marking where the body was layde, to thentent that they might at time conuenient thither repaire, and honorably perfourme the solemnities, and ceremonies belonging vnto burials, accordyng to the manour and vsage of that nacion.

The.xvj. Chapter.

The texte. And when the Sabboth was paste, Mary Magdalene, and Mary Jacob, and Salome, bought swete odoures, that they might cum, and anoint hym. And early in the morning, the first daie of the Sabboth, they came vnto the sepulchre when the Sunne was risen, and thei sayde amõg themselues: who shall rolle vs awaye the stone from the doore of the sepulchre: And when they loked, they sawe howe that the stone was rolled awaye. For it was a very great one. And they went into the sepulchre, and sawe a yong man sitting on the right syde, clothed in a long garment, and they were afrayde.

BEcause that on the preparyng daye (on the which daye the lord was buried a litle before the euentide, immediatly after the Sunne setting) it was not lawful to do any worke for the reuerence, and highe solemnitie of the Sabboth: these women ceased for that time to make further prouision for spices, as they began to do, awaytyng for the ende of the nexte daye following. And anon as the Sunne was gone to glade, and the time come agayne when men might lawfully returne to their businesse, then came Mary Magdalene, Mary of James, and Salome, with spices readie prepared, to enoint Jesus. And early in the morning vpon the fyrste daye of the sabbothes (the whiche followed next after the sabboth was ended, and was the third daye from the preparing daie) these well disposed women came to the sepulchre, what tyme the element waxed now faire & bright about the Sunne rysing, & sayde one of them to another: Who shall rolle vs awaye the stone, frõ the doore of the sepulchre? The stone was great, and houge: & it passed womans strength to remoue it. And they loked aboute yf they could get any body to helpe them, & in the meane while that they thus loked backe, they sawe the stone already remoued to their handes. The anone as they were entred into the dooze of the sepulchre, they sawe a yong man sitting on the right syde of it, clothed with a long white garment. With this sight though it were a right ioyfull syght, and a token of good lucke, yet because it appeared sodainly, & at vnwares, they were amased.

The texte. And he sayth vnto them: be not afrayed, ye seke Jesus of Nazareth which was crucified. He is rysen, he is not here. Beholde the place where they had put hym. But go your waye, and tell his disciples, and Peter, he goeth before you into Galile, there shall ye see hym, as he sayed vnto you. And they went out quickly, and fled frõ the sepulchre. For they trembled, & were amased, neyther sayed they any thyng to any man, for they were afrayed.

But byanby an Aungell recomforted them with swete and pleasaunt wordes, saying: you haue no nede to be afrayed. you seke Jesus of Nazareth, who was nayled on the crosse. He is risen: he is not here. Beholde the yonder place where they had put his body. Therfore all this that you haue prepared to honour and reuerence hym with all, is superfluous.

Get you hence rather, to shewe vnto his disciples, beyng greatly dismayed with with their Lordes death: but especially ye vnto Peter (who because he denied hym thryse, is twyse as sory as the rest.) Set you hence, I saye, to shewe them how Iesus wyll go before them into Galile. Thither let them folowe. There shall you se hym alyue, whome ye now bewayle as dead. But these women, what for great ioye and gladnes, and what for the feare they were in by reason of this straunge sight fled out of the Sepulchre, and spake not one worde as long as they were there: so greatly were they afearde.

¶ When Iesus was ryssen, earlye the fyrst daye after the Sabboth, he appeared fyrst to Mary Magdalene, out of whome he had caste seuen diuels. And she went and tolde them that were with hym as they mourned, and wept. And they, when they yearde that he was alyue, and had appeared vnto her, beleued it not. After that, appeared he vnto two of them in a straunge figure as they walked, and went into the countrey. And they wente, and tolde it to the residuaunt. And they beleued not these also. The texte.

As yet Iesus had not appeared to any bodye: but after he was ryssen, he appeared fyrst of all to Mary Magdalene, out of whome he had caste seuen diuels: and this appering was the fyrste daye after the great Sabboth early. She incontinent shewed the disciples (who wept and mourned for their lordes death,) what she had sene. But when they heard her tell howe he was alyue, and that she herselfe had sene him, and heardе hym speake, they gaueno credence vnto her wordes. So cleane out of memory was the thyng which he had so ofte tymes promised, that is to saye, how he would ryse againe on the thyrde daye. The same daye that he appeared vnto Mary Magdalene, he appeared also vnto two disciples in the likenesse of a straunger and wayfaryng man as they went from Hierusalem into the countrey. But they knowyng at the length that it was the Lorde, retourned to Hierusalem, and shewed vnto the residewe of the disciples, what they had sene. Neyther was suche thynges as they tolde, beleued of the moste parte.

¶ Afterwarde he appeared vnto the eleuen as they sat at meate, and caste in their teeth their vnbelefe, and hardnesse of hart, because they beleued not them which hadde sene that he was ryssen againe from death. And he sayde vnto them: Goo ye into all the worlde, and preache the gospell to all creatures, he that beleueth, and is baptised, shalbe saued. But he that beleueth not shalbe damned. The texte.

Laste of all when he was readye to departe hence, and returne into heauen, he appeared vnto the eleuen Apostles as they sate at meate (for Iudas was then dead) and hit them in the teeth with their vnbelefe, and hardenesse of harte, because they wouldenot beleue those persons, who had sene that he was ryssen agayne from death. For it was not requisite that all should se his death, and resurrection, but sufficient for the fayth and certaintie of the gospell, that the thyng was once proued by mete and conuenient witnesses: Els how shall the heathen gene credence to those thinges that were done, yf they would likewyse discredite the apostles reporte, as Thomas, and some other of them did at the begynning. And Iesus sayed vnto them. After all these thinges are now at the length proued, and right wel knowen of you by sure argumentes and proues: go your waye into all the world, and preache this gospell to all the nations therof. For I dyed for all men, and dyde wyse for all men haue I risen agayne. It is not nowe nedefull to kepe the ceremonies of the olde lawe. It is not nedefull to vse any mo sacrifices, and burnt offerynges to pourge synnes. Whoso beleueth the gospell (whiche throwe my death offreth to all that beleue in me, free remission of all synnes) and be yng washed with water, receyueth a signe or token of this grace, the same shalbe saued. He that beleueth and is baptised shalbe saued.

Who

Who so beleueth not the gospel (there is not why he should truste to the obseruacion of Moses lawe, or heathen learning and philosophie,) the same shalbe damned. This waye is open for euery manne to go to saluacion by: but it is but one waye only.

The texte. And these tokens shall folowe them that beleue. In my name they shall caste out diuels: they shall speake with newe tounges: they shall plucke awaye serpentes, and if they drinke any deadly thing, it shall not hurte them. They shall laye their handes vpon the sicke, and they shall recouer.

And leste your preaching shoulde not be beleued, there shalbe ioyned thereunto a power to worke myracles: so that there lacke not in you an Euangelike faith: and so that the thing selfe do require myracles. The chiefe power and vertue of the Euangelyke grace, lyeth hyd in mennes soules: but yet when for the aduaunsyng of the gospell there shall nede any miracles, the same shall not lacke for the weakes sake. They that will beleue in me, shal caste out diuels, not in their owne name, but in mine: they shall further, speake with newe tongues, and plucke awaye serpentes: and yf they drynke any deadly thyng or poyson, it shall not anoye them. They shall laye their handes vpon the sicke, and they shall be whole. When these thinges are wrought and done in mennes soules, then is there a muche greater miracle wrought, but the same is hid and not sene. Couetousnesse, pleasure of the body, ambition, hatred, wrath and enuy, be very poysons and deadly diseases of the soule. These diseases shall they cure and put awaye in my name, and that continually. But for the weakes sake, & suche as are harde of belief, the other miracles shall also be oft times wrought, to thentent the grosse sorte of people maye perceyue, that in my disciples is a spirite more puissaunte, then all mannes strength and power.

In my name shall they caste out diuels.

The texte. So then, when the lorde had spoken vnto them, he was receyued into heauen, and sitteth on the right hande of god. And they went forth, and preached euery where, the lorde worcheng with them, and confyrmyng the worde with myracles folowyng.

When the Lorde Jesus had spoken these, and other mo wordes to his disciples, he ascended vp into heauen, where he sitteth on the righte hande of god the father. The disciples after they had receyued the holy ghost, preached as they were commaunded, not only in Jewry, but also in all other regions and countreys: and the matter went forwarde, notwithstanding the world resisted, and was bent against them: the Lorde Jesus puttyng furthe his mightye power by his holy spirite, and their ministery: and euery where confirmyng with ready miracles, what soeuer they prompted to do with wordes.

FINIS.

To the moſt vertuous Ladie / and moſt gracious Quene Katerine, wife vnto the moſt puiſſaunt and moſte noble prince Henry the viii. kyng of Englande, Fraunce, and Irelande. &c. Nicolas Udall wiſheth proſperous healthe, and long continuaunce with grace, peace, and all ghoſtely coumforte in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

Lyke as our maiſter Chriſt in the ghoſpell, moſte gracious Quene Katerine, whan the woman that had liued wickedly, beyng now by his grace called fro his ſinneſull life to perfite repentaunce and amendmēt, came vnto him ſittyng at his repaſtein the houſe of Simon the lepre, and waſhed his feete with the teares of hir yes wyped the ſame with ꝓ heare of hir head, poured forth vpon his head a precious ſwete oynement, and alſo anointed his feete therewith, did ſo well alſo we his deuotion, hir earneſt zele, and his tendre cōpaſſion wiche he had to coumfort him, that he did not onely among all the cumpany declare hir preſēt coumfort in forgeuyng hir euen there all hir offences & wickednes afore paſte, but alſo promiſed that ſhe ſhould not leſe the condigne reward of remoume for hir tēdre gentilnes to him ſhewed, in ſo muche that afore all the preſence he openly proteſted, that wheroſoeuer throughout al the world the goſpel wer afterward preached, there ſhould ſhe in ſuche wiſe as al ages ſhall be had in mind, that the remēbraunce of hir good hart & thankefulnes ſo was pas him, ſhould neuer dye nor be forgotten. So Luke the euangeliſt, & Marke with the other apoſtles of Chriſt did in their holy writtinges, not onely make mēcion of ſuche men & preachers, as were faithfull workers or miniſters in Chriſtes vyneyard, but alſo by whatſoeuer good mātrones and deuout women they ſawe and herd eyther that god was glorified & his honour aduaūced, or ꝑ ghoſpell preferred, the word of god furthered, the preachers of the ſame maintened, the yongelinges in the faith cherished, the true chriſtias in their pouertie refreſhed, the rede of the faithfull releued, or the vnkowed beleuers in aduerſities cōforted & ſuccoured: to ſuche godly wemen they did not forget ne let paſſe to geue laude, praiſe, and cōmendation, as wel for the due reward of the parties ſelues, as alſo for the good enſuple and encouragyng of others to doe the lyke. For this cauſe doeth Luke in his goſpel more the one make mēcion of Marie Magdalene, of Johāna, the wife of Chuſa, of Suſāna, & Marie the mother of Iames. And in the actes he neyther forgetteth ne omitteth to cōmend Priſcilla, Tabitha, Lydia, Mainaris. For this conſideracion Paul cōmēdeth vnto the Romaines, Phebe, Marie, Tryphena, Tryphoſa, Perſis & others. For this reſpect did Hierome waite a whole treatiſe entytled of noble & famous wemē, whoſe nobilitie & alſo renoume he eſteemeth & meaſureth by none other thyng, but by their godlines, deuocō, zele, and endeuour to ſetforth Chriſtes holy ghoſpell, and by theyr godly conuerſacion loyned with moste feruentous diligence in readyng the holye wrytynges. Wherfore moste gracious ladie, although here nowe to reuewe the memory and prayse of the manifold moste excellent vertues, and ardent zele of your highnesse towardes the promouyng of the knowledge of gods holy word and ghospell, bee a thyng more due to your moste worthy desertes, than easy for my rude penne to expresse them, and more apperteynyng to my duetie, then it standeth with myne habilitie and power accordingly to set them forth: yet so to do at this present I thinke I ought partely a thyng needefull: because your excellencie doeth so ferre surmounte and passe all prayses whiche my slendre vtterraunce is able to geue you, that I should therein seeme to do a much lyke thyng, as if I would bring forth a smouldring smokie fyerbrand in a bright sunnie day, of purpose to helpe augment the clerenes of the sunne: and partly superfluous, because that all the one syde all men doe already know your incomparable vertues, and do with one accord magnify the same, and on the other side, for your highnes doth so muche reioyce and set her gods glory that ye euidently declare your self nothyng lesse to myn de or desire, the the vaine prayses or commendacion of this worlde. Yet lyke as the shadow doth remedilesse folowe and accompanie the bodye in the sunne lyght, so glory and renoume doeth ineuitably folowe and associate excellent vertue. And where the desertes of true vertue are so great and so iust, it cannot be chosen but that glory and renoume must aryse, and so muche the more, because your highnes, (as muche as in you lyeth,) doeth flee it. For glory (sayeth the philosophicall poinct,) is of the nature of a Crocodile, whiche beeing a beast in the floud of Nilus in Egipt, hath this propertie, that if one pursue him to suppresse him, he fleeth, & will not abide: and yet ye flee, than will the Crocodile folowe and ouertake you. And for as much as glory is by the philosophers defined to be, constaunt and perpetual prayse geuen to any parte by a common consent of good people, for the excellencie of vertue euidently shewyng it selfe in the same parte, as in dede vertue cannot be hidden but will appere: how can it be possible that your renoume should dye, whose manifold excellente vertues do from day to day more and more increase? How can your prayse decay, whose actes & monumentes are consecrated to immortalitie, as thinges not builded vpon the sand of ambicious seking not (like bubles in the ayre or water) puffed vp with as breckaun blast of worldly vanitie, but founded vpon the sure rocke of gods worde, from whence floweth the lyuelye and the same euerlastyng fountayn of true glorye in dede? Neythes may your highnesse in this case refuse any manner woordes of prayse and commendacion, for as muche as it is a matter as laudable to a liuelo welage the good thynges, whiche in dede are in vs prayse worthy, as it is vncommendable through vayne arrogancie to take vpon vs that we haue not. And though your grace is so farre fro all ambicion and also affection of this worldes rewarde, that ye haue no eye to any mortall mans recompence, yet cannot good folkes but extoller and magnifye the ineffimable aboundye of diuine gyftes of grace, so plenteously heaped and touched in so noble a princesse. Though ye would haue your well doynges, hydden and buryed of yet cannot the gratitude of the people hold the peace, or passe it with silence. Though your gracious benignitie require no thankes, yet cannot the louyng hertes of the people forbeare or refrayne by open protestacion to acknowelage by whom they daily receiue receyue incōparable benefites. Though your modestie nothyng lesse seketh then the fame of your good actes to be blowen abrode, yet cānot our duties but braid out into wordes of testifiyng howe muche we thynke our selues bound vnto your highnes: so that although the great and manifold benefytes whiche I haue priuately receyued at your graces handes, dyd not now moue me, yet could I not in this most iust occasion of the publique gratulatiō hold my peace. For your vertuous liuyng euē from your tēdre yeres enbraced, followed, and still continued, your pregnaunt wittines ioyned with right wonderful grace of eloquence, your studious diligence in acquiryng knowelage aswell of other humaine disciplines, as also of holy scriptures, not only to your own edifiyng, but also to the most godly ensāple & instructiō of others, your incōparable chastitie, which as a moste precious iewell ye haue by auoiding all occasions of idlenes, & by conteinyng prouocatyuing of all vayne pastimes kept not only frō al spot, but also from al suspicion of staining, your singular modestie coupled with passyng great integrite and innocency of all your behauiour, your other manifold vnestimable giftes of grace, and among them most principally your studious seekyng to promote the glory of God and of his most holy ghospell, haue been the thynges that haue moued the most noble, the most renowned, and the moste godly Prince of the vniuersall worlde, our most gracious soueraigne Lord kyng Henry the eight, to iudge and esteme your grace a mete spouse for his maiestie, and among so many women of nobilitie, of honour, and of muche high pyrce and worthinesse, you alone to picke out to be his moste deere beloued and moste lawfull wyfe. Neyther do we doubte, moste gracious ladie, but that as the prouidence of god hath fourmed and aptifed your grace to be a worthy and mete spouse for suche an housbande, so hath it by a speciall election deputed and preserued the same to sum high and notable benefite of the cōmō weale, and to be an instrument of his glory. The towardnes and likelyhode wherof, lyke as in mens opinions vndoubted, so doeth it already begin to shewe it selfe in a noumbre of thynges whiche otherwise were not to bee loked for to proceede from any woman: muche lesse from a woman of nobilitie brought vp in the courte of a kyng, where Fortune commonly nourreeth, cocherreth, & pampereth hir derlinges, suche as by hir will the myndeth and laboureth to corrupte with wealth, idlenesse and vanitie, and leaste of al from a Quene being set in place, where if she would becum fortunes wanton, she might without controllement swimme in the delices of all such prosperitie as might occasion hir to dote on worldely felicitie, and to forget god. But the Psalmes and contēplatife meditations, on which your highnesse in the lieu and place of vayne courtely pastimes and gaming doeth bestow your night and daies studie, and whiche ye haue set forth as well to the incōparable good ensaumple of al nobie women, as also to the ghostly consolation and edifiyng of as many as reade them, doe well declare not onely the thyng to be true whiche Socrates affirmed, that is to were: that women, yf they doe so apply theyr myndes, are no lesse apt, no lesse wittie, no lesse hable, no lesse industrious, no lesse actiue, no lesse fruteful and pitheby in the acquiryng or handlyng of all kyndes of disciplines then men are: but also howe godly ye bestow your time howe littell ye set by the worlde, howe muche ye thirst righteousnesse, howe carefully ye seke the kingdom of god in the middes of a thousand occasiōs, whiche otherwyse might withdrawe your high estate therefrom.

And because ye so muche tendre the glory of God, that accordyng to the lesson of Christe ye doe first of all other thynges and principally seke ye kyngdome of heauen: therfore hath he, accordyng to his promesse in the same place conteyned, and doeth, and still will of his owne prouision encrease vnto you all kyndes of necessary coumfoyte and consolacion, in muche better wise then your grace could deuise, in muche larger maner then your own self woulde wisshe, and in ferre other sorte then ye could imagine to lobe for. These blessinges hath his eternal truth and vnfallible promise performed vnto your highnes, because ye seke hym more then the worlde, because ye more myndе godly contemplacion then courtly solaces, because ye more tendre his glory than any temporal cómodities, because ye esteme the knowlage of his word more precious then perle, golde, or any treasoures subiecte to corrupcio, because ye preferre the aduauncyng of his holy word before and aboue al other thynges, because ye ceasse not with all your power, with all your diligence, and with all your industrie to sette forth to all mennes knowlage his holy ghospell and testament, the onely foode and coumfoyte of our soules. And not only doeth your grace with most ernest zele from the first houre of the daye to the twelfth, labour in the vineyarde of Christ, sustenyng the burden of al the whole daye, and the parchyng heate of the smouldring nonetide in your own person: but also at your exceding great cost and charges do hire other workemen to labour in the same vineyarde of Christes ghospell, to the ende the same may frutefully and so plenteously bryng forth, that al English people maye to their health and ghostly consolacion be aboundauntely replenished with the fruite therof. And as a good captayne partly to the encouragyng of his forward souldiers, and partly to the shamyng of dastardes, or false iarcked loyterers, leadeth and guideth his armie and goeth himself before them to your grace, ferre otherwyse then in the weake vesselles of woman ferre is to be looked for, doe ye we vnto mennе a notable exaumple of forwardenesse in settyng penne to the boke, partely to the great coumfoyte of suche as fainte would doe good yf they durste, and partely to the shame and contumelye of sluggardes, who hauyng good talentes doe kepe them faste lapped vp in their napkins, and liue idely. And by this meanes doth your highnes ryght well declare that all your delite, al your studie, and all your endeuoures be al possible meanes enploied to the publique commoditie of al good English people, the kynges moste louyng and obedient subiectes, to bee nouseled and trayned in the reading of Gods woorde, and in the meditacion of his moste holy ghospell. For this ghospell is the same treasoure hidden vnder the lobby hard grounde in the field of the letter, which your grace after ye had found, did forthwith sell al that ye had to bye that same fielde withal. And wel may such persons be sayed to haue solde al that they had, who sette lesse by al the worlde then by the ghospell, and as wel for the obteining of the knowlage to themselfes, as also of desire to helpe make the same common to others, doth not spare to spende oute the treasoures of their golde and substance. This is that same precious margarite that Christ speaketh of, which your grace seekyng for with great desire, whan ye had once founde, solde al that ye had to bye, thought your treasoures wel bestowed if it might so fortune that ye myght finde meanes to make all English men whiche would reade or heare

it, to

it, to bee partakers of the same. This is the grayne of mustardsede whiche whan it was so fine and so litle that the vnlearned sorte of Englishmē could scarce possibly sele or see it, ye of your exceding charitie & zele towardes your countrey folkes, did in such wise helpe to sowe in the field of Englande, and did so cherishe with the fatte dailemg yearth of the paraphrase, that where before it was in the eyes of the vnlearned, the least of all seedes, it is now shot vp and growē muche larger in bredth, thē any other herde of ỳ field, so that it now spredeth the braunches in suche a compace, that al Englishe readers may therin bylde many places where to lyght, and to bylde them nestes, in whiche their soules and consciences may to theyr ghostely comforte quietly repose them selues. This is the spirituall leauen whiche your grace beyng ghostly housewyfe for the behouffe of all the whole coūtaine of Englande, & other the kynges maiesties dominions, hath in suche wyse hydden in all the whole fower peckes of Englishe meale, East, west, North & South: that by the benefite and meane of this paraphrase, it is now al made sauoury and of a pleasaunt reliee to al Englishe peoples taste. Where the texte of the gospel afore was in sum partes (though alwayes specially good and holsom foode and very restoratiue to suche as were able to brooke it,) yet to the cōpersiō of grosse, rude and grene stomaked Englishmē disagreeyng and harde of digestion, yet ye by procuring the whole paraphrase of Erasmus to be diligētly translated into Englishe, haue minced it, and made it euery Englishmans meate, though his stomake be neuer so weake or tender. Where afore in sum partes agayn it seemed to be to light meate, that the grossest stomakes dyd no lesse forthe it, then the children of Israell dyd Manna in deserte, whan they sayed: Our soule is qualmishe ouer this meate beyng to to light, and is readie to cast it vp again, your godly cure in conseruyng it with the paraphrase of Erasmus in Englishe, hath made so lounde and substantiall meate for all complexcions of people, that it may be to euery body lyke the aboundaunce of quailles, rainyng downe in wildernesse from heauen, suche as best stoode with euery bodyes stomake, appetite, and most delite to be plētously fedde withall. Where of it self it is a meate most pure and simple, & therfore to sū delicate mouthes vsed to none but fine tetines, to the painted colours & eroticions of Rethorike, it semeth dry & vnpleasaūt, it is now dy ỳ agredulce sauce of the paraphrase made more liquide to rūne pleasauntly in the mouth of any man whiche is not to muche infected with indurate blindnes of herte, with malicious cancardnes, and with to to muche peruerse a iudgemēt. For Erasmus lyke as he doeth in all his workes excell and passe the most parte of al other writers: so in this worke of the paraphrase vpon the new Testamente he passeth hymselfe. Therfore most gracious Ladye although your demerites are so ferre aboue al prayses of man, that how fer soeuer I wade in magnifiyng your vertuous disposition, your deuout studyand endeuour to do good thinges, I shalbe sure not to incurre any suspicion of flatery: yet do I at this present omittyng al other thynges, onely in Englandes behalf make one emong the rest in rendring publique thankes to your highnesse, as well for your other godly trauaile in furtheryng the knowledge of Goddes worde, as also most specially in settyng men in worke to translate the Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon all the newe Testament, wherein ye do both to the young and to the olde, as well to the high as to the low, & no lesse to ỳ yyshe then to the poore, the wyche moze bounteous liberalitie in delinge about in makyng common vnto all good Englishe people the heauenly Iewels of Christes doctrine, then if ye shoulde open all binges cofers of worldly treasures, and deale to euery one suche abundaunce as might make them al welthy and riche for euer in this worlde. And as ye haue herein doen a dede woz-thy suche thankes and rewardes as lieth in none but only God to repay, and a dede to vs your most louing and obedient subiectes so beneficial as no herte can esteme, (muche lesse any tongue or penerpresse:) so doubte I not but that ye haue doen a good thyng to your most regal spouse the kynges maiestie to acceptable, that he will not suffre it to lye buried in silence, but wyll one daye when his godly wysedome shall so thynke expediente, cause the same Paraphrase to be published and set abzode in print to the same vse that your high nesse hath ment it, that is to say, to the publique commoditie and benefyte of good Englishe people now a long tyme shoze thirstyng and hongryng the syncere and playne knowledge of Gods word. For his most excellente Maiestie beyng a man after the hert of the Lord, being a right Dauid chosen to destroy Goliah the huge and cumbzous enemy of Israell without any armoure, and with none other weapon but the stone of Gods word cast out of the slyng of the diuine spirite wozkyng in him & his lawes made here in England, & being the elected instrument of god to plucke downe the Idoll of Romishe Antichzist, who folowyng the steppes of his father Lucifer hathe not onely vsurped a kind of supremitie & tyrannie ouer all princes on earthe, as well christen as heathen, but also hath enhourged against heauen, and hath lifte vp and exalted hymself aboue al thyng that is called God, making void the plain commaundementes for the aduaunceing of his own moze then pharisaical tradicions, peruertyng the true sence of the holy scriptures and wrestynge them to the maintenaunce of his abominacions beyng both afore God and manne detestable: his hyghnesse beyng our Ezechias by the prouidence of God deputed and sent to be the destroier not onely of al counterfait relypgions (whyche warmed amõg vs like disguised maskers & not mummers, but mumbers, who vnder the cloke of holines seduced ỹ people, and deuoured the houses of riche widowes, and were maintenuers of al superstition, idolatry & rebellion) but also to coore vp al Idolatry doen to dead images of stone and tymber as vnto God, and committed to other creatures in steade of the creatour, directly against the expresse woordes of the precepte: Thou shalt haue no mo gods but me, his most excellent maiestie (I say) from the first daye that he woze the emperiall Crowne of this realme, foresaw that to the executing of the premisses it was necessary, that his people should be reduced to the sinceritie of Christes religion by knowyng of Goddes woorde: he considered that requisite it was his subiectes were nousled in Christ by reading the scriptures, whose knowlage should easily induce them to the clere espyng of al the sleyghtes, of the Romishe iugglyng. And therfore as soone as myght ber, his highnesse by most holsome and godly lawes, prouided that it myght be leful for al his most faithfull louyng subiectes to reade the word of god, and the rules of Christes discipline, whiche they professed: he prouided that the holy Bible should be setforth in our owne vulgar language, to the ende that Englande myghte the better attayne to the syncerite of Christes doctryne whiche they might drawe out of the clere fountain and spring of the ghospell, running

renning euermore clere without any more or mud, rather then out of ꝑ muddie lakes, & puddles purposely infected with ꝑ filthy dregges of our Phylistines the papistes, who had stopped our springes to driue vs to their poysoned muddy gutters and forowes. By this his maiesties most godly prouision it hath cum to passe, that the people whiche long time had been led in errour and blindnes by blind guides, mõkes, freers, chanons, and papisticall preachers, do now so plainly see the clere light, that they do willigly abiure idolatry & superstition: they do now know their dutie towardes God & their prince: they do now embrace ꝑ veritie for verities sake: they see where and how the leauen of the papistes hath by continuaunce of time & for default of scripture, soured all the whole batche of Christes doctrine: they see how being led by blynd guydes and pastours in the derkenes of ignorannce, they fel daily in the depe pitte of manifold errours with the same guides, they see that lyke as the olde Phariseis in the time of Christes being vpon earth, had corrupted the sincere doctrine of gods word, and the pure vnderstanding of the lawe, teachyng the people to leaue their poore fathers and mothers destitute contrary to the playne commaundement, rather then to let their treasurie to be not enriched, whiche kynd of offring, themselues of mere conceite had inuented, and dyd apply the same to the maintenaunce of themselues in gluttony and sensualitie: so now had the wicked papistry deuised a meane to pike the riche folkes purses, & the poore vulgare people clene to deuour vnder the colour of goyng on pilgremage to this or that stocke of mans handy makyng, & vnder pretence of sekyng healh of the soule & remission of sinnes, at the handes of Peter, James, John, & Marie, which could not geue it, but whan suche thinges were asked them, blushed to heare god thonly autour & geuer of all good thinges to be so blaspheméd. They see now that lyke as ꝑ couetous Phariseis passed lesse at the violacio or breakyng of gods preceptes, then of their tradicions, and pur more iustice in washyng the outeside of their dishe or their cuppe, then in the innocencie of life and puritie of the conscience within, in offryng of myntes and rue for their lucre, then in perfourmyng the office of charitie to the neyghbour, sponer to wynke at their owne blasphemies against god, then to remit a small trespace committed by their weake brother against the fond ceremonies which they and the lawyers had deuised and added besides the lawe: so the beaste of romishe abomination to had clene subuerted the true interpretacion of Christes ghospell, and by his mere tirannie ioyned with most crafty delusion, to had inuected into Christes church and holy congregation, al thinges that were contrary to Christ, that is to were, in stede of pure faith such as Christ requireth, a faith lapped in a patched cloke of beggerly workes and ceremonies of his owne deuising, & steryng forth in stede of religion, superstition: offrynges in stede of charitie: buildyng of chauntries in place of releuyng and maintenaunce of the liuely temple and image of God in the poore: encensyng of images in stede of the pure sacrifice of an innocẽt life: in stede of trusting in gods mercies trusting in trentals & masses of scala celi: in stede of heauẽ, a purgatory consisting of materiall fier, & the same to be redemed w̃ money geuen to him: in stede of declaryng our free redemption in Christe and by Christ sealed with his most precious bloud, the Antichrist of Rome seduced the simple people to putte their assyaunce for remission of synnes and obteinyng the ioyes of heauen, by his pardones conteined in a piece of parchement or paper with a lumpe of lead hāging at it, and to be bought of him or of his generacion the monkes and fryers for money: in stede of the holy bible, legenda sanctorum, the miracles of our ladie, and martiloges, whiche themselfes deuised and neuer durst serue forth vntill the partie of whom they were made, had been an hundred yeres dead, for feare of beyng taken in a lye: in stede of obeiyng our liege lorde and soueraigne, to be subiect to forein potentates: with other abuses so innumerable, that no tyme or wordes may suffice to declare or reken them vp. And in this blindnes had England still continued, had not god of his infinite goodnes & bottles merey reised vp vnto vs a new Ezechias to confound al idols, to destroy al hillaters of superstition, to roote vp al counterfait religions, & to restore (as muche as in so litle time maye be) the true religion & worship of god, the syncere preachyng of gods word, and the booke of the lawe, that is to say of Christes holy testament to be read of the people in their vulgare toung. That if in so litle time hauing no more helpe but the mere texte of the bible, the people through the goodnesse of god and the instincte of his holy spirite haue had the yes of their hart and soule so opened, that they haue not onely espyed the abuses afore mencioned, and thousandes mo in whiche the Romyshe Babilon hath certain hundred of yeres holden all christendōe captiue and thrall: but also haue so cōformed themself to the syncere doctrine of Christe, that they do with most glad wyll, with most earnest zele, and with most studious diligence embrace the truthe, abhorre the errours wherin they were afore drowned, detest the superstitions wherwith they were afore delited, hounger and thirst the syncere knowlage of Gods word by the goodnes of God, and the gracious prouision of our moste noble Ezechias kynge Henry the eyght, nowe daily ministred vnto them: how is it likely that they would profite in godly knowlage if they had sum other godly exposicion or declaracio of sum good syncere writer vpō the new Testament for their ferther edifying? Of whiche sorte truely there cannot one manne be picked out more apt and mete then Erasmus, especially in this his Paraphrase, which your highnesse of a moste godlye zele hath thus procured to be tourned into Englyshe: whose doctryne as it is not in any poynte (after my poore iudgemente,) corrupte, so dooeth it without violence or extremitie of wordes better the doctryne, edifye the conscyence, declare many abuses, detecting the enemies of Goddes worde and supplanters of his ghospell, by suche true and liuely markes, that they maye be eaſilye knowen, so that it cannot bee doubted, but it should bee vncredible furtheraunce towardes the rypyng of the knowlage of Goddes worde, yf it myghte or shall so stande with the pleasure of our sayde moste gracious soueraigne Lorde, beeyng nerte and immediately vnder God our supreme heade. Whiche thyng verily I would wiche and praye to God myghte so frame for two consideracions, the one, because that the people hauyng the Paraphrase of Erasmus, shall haue the pyth of all the doctours and good writers, that haue any thyng setteforth for the declaracion of the ghospels, the Actes, and the Epistles, so that Erasmus may stand one alone in as good stede as a greate numbre of other expositours setforth together: and the other, because my herte dooeth wishe that ꝑ setting forth of gods glorye, the destroiyng of idols, the confoundyng and defacing of all popish trumpery, the publishing of the bible, & gospell of

Christe, so godly by his highnesse entended, so stoutely entred, and so luckily begon, might by the same our most gracious soueraigne be in such wyse prosecuted & brought to effect, that whan heauen no lōger willyng to spare him to the worlde, but that he must geue place to nature, shall call him to receiue a croune of immortalitie, and he for desire therof shal willingly surrender and geue vp this emperiall croune of worldly dignitie, to the moste regal Impe his sonne, our noble prince Edwarde, he may deliuer to the same a people so well framed, and trained to his hande, that the same may with al ease & prosperous successe, and without any let of stumblyng blockes to be layed in his way by papistrie, continue the godly trade nowe at this daye well begonne and (thankes to god) luckily proceding. I would wish (as in dede I hope no lesse) that he might not nede to be put to any further trauayl or cure, but wel to esse ue and kepe thinges in the same stay and order that his most noble father mindeth to leaue all vnto him. Our Dauid Henry the eight hath already so substancially cast the foundacion, and reised the buildyng of the Temple, that I trust it shalbe no burden for our young Salomō to consummate and fynyshe the same whan his tyme shall cum. But nowe I perceiue my selfe, while I entre into opening the desire & praier of my herte, to haue entered into so riche a large fielde of talke, which the experience of kyng Henries traumple concernyng the trade of religion, and the hope of prince Edwarde to be a right folower of so right a leadyng father, doth minister vnto me, that except I here sodainly breake of, I am drawen to wade to far in their praises, that I were not hable in long tyme to fynde any way out again. Omitting therfore at this present the moste worthye and moste iustely deserued prayses of them bothe, I shall eourne my style sumwhat to treate of Luke, whome it pleased your highnes to commit vnto me to be translated. Whiche cōmaundement whan it came firste vnto me in your graces name although I knewe how litle it was that I could do in this kinde, yet was I glad that your cōmaundemente dyd so iustlye concurre with the determinacion of myne owne minde and purpose. For I had long time afore with mature deliberacio and also with aduised electiō appointed with my selfe to trāslate this paraphrase vpon Luke, as soone as any such conuertible might be, and to make it vnto your grace a testificacion of my ductie and thankefull remembraunce of your manyfolde benefites afore doen to me of your mere bountie. And two thynges there were that had moued me to take this purpose most specially in hand, for bicause that as Luke is the longest of all the Euangelistes, so is he of all reputed to haue written his gospel moste exactely, as well by relation of the Apostles which were present and conuersaunt with Christ while he liued on earth, as also by the instructions of Paul, who was moste earneste and fulle in the iustificacion of feith, and most pithely against the institucion of workes (albeit they do al in this poynte of doctrine throughly consēt and agree.) The second was, for that Erasmus who did in this paraphrase bestow more diligence then in most of the others, had specially dedicated the same vnto our most noble king Henry the eight. And I thought I could not deuise any apter gift to present his most deere beloued wife withal beyng of the like zele, affection, godlines, & deuocion that he is, then the same worke, trāslated into English, whiche I certainly knew his maiestie to had singularly well allowed and moste graciously accepted in latine, and in perusyng therof to be daylye ereedyng muche delighted. And I nothyng doubt, most gracious Lady, but that the readyng therof should cause no lesse delectacion of mind to you, yf ỹ thing were so well doen as sum mā of moze learnyng perchaūce could haue doē it. And in this behalf none other refuge I haue but to your most benigne fauour and pardone well to accept mine honest herte, mine earneste zele, and willing labours. For as touching the translacion selfe, though I iudge and plainly confesse my self to be by many degrees inferiour in knowledge & facultie to all the others whom I heare that youthighnes hath appoynted to the translating of the other partes, and though I cannot of my self promette any hablenes to take such a prouince in hand: yet (my hart better seruyng me hereunto then perchaunce my hande hath doen) whan I sawe that your graces resolucion & pleasure did helpe to minister courage to myne own hertes desire, I conceiued boldenesse to attempt & enterprise the thing, & thought it most expedient to shew mine obedience & prompt good wil to do your commaundement, trustyng that though I haue not been hable in all behalfes and poinctes requisite, fully to discharge ỹ office of a good trāslatour, yet I haue expressed ỹ sēce & meaning of the autour. Ig for the grace of the latine tonge I thinke impossible to be lively expressed, as this autour doth it in the latine by reason of sundry allusions, diuerse prouerbes, many figures, and crossacions retorical, with Metaphores innumerable, whiche cannot with ỹ like grace be rendred in any other lāguage thē in the latine, or greke, besydes that an infinite sorte of wordes there be, whose full importyng cannot with one mere Englishe worde equiualently be interpreted. And this imperfection I haue to my litle power so laboured to redoub, that I trust there be not any poynte of pithythe signification any where contepned, whiche I haue not in one or other place of the sentence by sum meanes throughly touched. And for as muche as I consider it to be a paraphrase, that is to say, a playn settyng fooith of the sence of the texte with as many woordes as the circumstance therof for the better linking of one sentence to an other doth require, I haue not so precisely bonad my self to euery woord and sillable of the letter, but that I haue take moze respect to the playnacion and declaring of the sēce, thē to the noumbre of the latine syllables. In translatyng of the very texte I thinke it requisite to vse sum scrupulositie (& if the translatours were not altogether so pnctise as they are, but had sum moze regard to expressing of the sence, I thinke in my iudgemente they should doe better) but in a paraphrase, which of it selfe is a kynd of exposicio and of cōmentary, I thinke it nothing redefull to be so precise in the woordes, so the sence be kepte. And this I hope auouche, that yf any interpretour shoulde in sum places bee as breefe in the English translacion as the autour is in the latine: he should make therof but a darke piece of worke. For that is the onely thyng that maketh the very texte selfe so derke as it appeareth to be. In Lithe I haue had sum what the more busines, because that the Latine exemplaries (throughe whose defaulte or negligence I am vncertayne) do vary and not well agree, sum hauyng more or lesse then others, sum hauyng an other woorde then an other copye hath, sum beyng otherwyse poynted then the rest. Whereby I haue in sum places been driuen to vse myne owne iudgement in rendryng the true sence of the boke, to speake nothyng of a great noumbre of sentences, whiche by reason of so many membres, or parrythcles, or digressions as haue cum in place, are so are so long, that vnlesse they had been sumwhat deuided, they wouldе haue brent̄s hard for an vnlearned hearer to cōceiue, much more hard to conteyne and kepe it still. As touchyng the stile (because the iudgemētes of readers be diuerse, and sum loue length, sum desire breuitie, sum can well away e with elegaunte speache, sum hate all curiositie, sum commend an eloquente style, sum thynke nothyng to be plaine enough, sum will be busie iudges, of other mens writtinges and do nothyng themselfes:) it may please your most gracious patience to suffer me to say my poore iudgement, for the satisfiyng of them that are reasonable. First I would not haue euery reader to require in euery writer to be like his owne witte or conueyghaunce, or style, or phrase of speakyng: but rather to consider that euery man hath a beme of his owne, rather by imitation so confirmed, or by long vse so rooted, or of desire to be playne and clere, so growen into an habite: that he cannot otherwyse write then he doeth. Sum wryters hate breuitie, and sum thynke al long thinges to be tedious, and yet is neither of these two sortes to be reproued, so y mater be good, the making fine, the termes apte, and the stile flowyng with out curiositie or affectatiō. For like as Cicero was so copious that nothyng might be added vnto him, so was Demosthenes so breefe that nothyng might be taken away. The same in latine is betwene Cicero and Salustе. But Tully would not leaue till the eye, the eare, and also the mouth of the reader wer full euen in euery sentence: Salustе was loth to tyer any of these with a whole oracion. The Lacons could abide no length, the Sophistes of greece could not enough their copiousnes make an Elephaunt of a flye, and a mountayne of a molehill. And this I speake rather in commendacion of eloquēce, of copie of elegantie of stile where it is, then to clayme that there is any such here.

Beside, Tullie, Erasmus could haue proceded in any their inuention euē infinitely, sum other wrtters could not so. Sum loue it whanne is style like, & sum care for no more but the bare sence. But eloquence of it selfe, and copie (that is to say thikk of termes) is a vertue in an oracion, and that thing chiefly geueth to bokes that the latine men call genium, that is life and continuāce, that euery mā will an hundred yeres after set store by it, and esteme it worth many times readyng ouer. What other thyng commendeth Chaucer & causeth his woorkes to be more set by then thousandes of other breathe hastlye bokes hastily shotyng forth lyke May flowres, and not wythstanding but utterly dying with the first readyng? Neuerthelesse no man of our tyme and in our Englishe tounge (which none but our selfes for our own vse do muche passe on,) writeth so ornately, but that he hath in sundry woordes & phrases sum smatche of his natiue countrey phrases, that he was borne in. Yet this notwithstanding sum there be, whithe haue a mynde to renewe termes that are now almoste worne cleue out of vse, whiche I do not disalowe, so it bee done with iudgement. Sum others would ampliate and enrich their natiue language with mo vocables whiche I also commend, if it be aptely and wittily assayed. So that if any other doe inmouate and dryng vp a woorde to me afore not vsed or not heard, I would not disprayse it: and that I do attempte to bryng to vse, another man should not cauyple at. For an easy thyng it is to depraue, and a small glory for one man, in matters of nothing, to laboure to defame an other. But for as muche as both do our beste, we ought rather thus to thinke the one of the other.

This

This man hath seen that I have not: I see no man is so bare, but he is able both with wordes or other to helpe garnishe his mother tongue, with other like fairynges proceding from humanitie and fauour to encourage suche as are studyous. And what if one labour to enrich his countrey language, as Tullie gloryeth that he did amplify the latine tonge, is he therfore to be blamed, and not rather to be commended? Thus muche I say for the defence of writers and styles in generall. As touchyng mine owne stile in this present worke, if I should be so straightly examined, I am (as the Greke prouerbe saieth) in like case as a mice that should hold a wolfe by both eares. For yf he hold him still, he hath a thewe in handelyng: & cannot so continue euer: if he let him goe, he is in ieopardy to be deuoured. Euen so I in this matter stand in a straite: eyther to incurre suspicion of arrogancie, if I maintein mine owne, and by standyng in defence therof to be deemed opiniatre, or ambicious of singularitie: or els I must be driuen to graunte an error, where perchaunce none is. Letting passe therfore all suche kynde of trauersyng, I shall remitte this whole cause (as Tullie doeth of his booke which is entitled Deoffic.) to the iudgement first of some righteous, whome if my labours doe satisfie, I shall the better like my self, and than of others. Others I haue in whō resteth humanitie to take all in interprete all thynges to the best: in whome is moderacion rather to pardone fewe faultes, than to condemne the thyng whose thongh they can, they will not amende: in whom is faculte and knowlage to iudge right: in whom resteth fauour to wynke at a litle trippe or stumbling in a long piece of woorke: in whom learnyng and skilfulnesse doeth worke indifferēce of affection: and finally in whom dwelleth reasonable consideracion of maners in mistrust, that the best learned doeth sumtimes erre, and no man at all tymes doeth all thynges right. For vnto suche an one as will be a seuere and heauy iudge on an other mans labours, then hymselfe eyther would bee, or would haue others to bee on his own, I can say nothing but this: I for my part can do no better, if I could I would, and in case ye will either for respecte of the publique benefite which is ment herein, or els for loue to wardes me, or els for any other iust consideracion take your pēne and amend any fault that ye shall see: I shall not onely not thinke any wrong done to me, but also I shall with all my hert geue you thankes for that ye so muche tendre eyther my poore honestie, or the thyng selfe, that ye would put to your helpyng hand to make it well. And thus I surceasse with my bayne talke any longer to detayne your highnesse from the fruitefull reading of Erasmus, whereof may redounde suche edifiyng and encrease of knowledge to thesame, as the labour of readyng maye be well bestowed, and the boke through your graces commendacion bee one day set forth to the publique vtilitie and benefite of all the whole deuout congregacion of this churche of Englande. Yeuen at London the last day of Septembre, in the yere of our Lord. M.D.xlv.

The preface of Erasmus vnto his paraphrase vpon the ghospell of Luke.

Vnto the mooste puissaunt and most victorious Prince Henry the eight, king of England, Fraunce, and Ireland, and defendour of the Catholike faith, Erasmus of Roterodame wisheth long health, with all honour and prosperous continuaunce.

MOoste regall and princely kyng Henry, I sende vnto youre highnesse Luke the physician, not any other Luke then ye had of him heretofore, but the same Luke speakyng somewhat more plainly and also more at large vnto the eares of suche as are vsed to good latine. Neyther do I suppose it any thyng nedefull for me here nowe in this matter, to spende labour appeacyng and satisfiyng these kynde of people, which commonly allege vnto suche as I am, that it was a centēce by right great learned mē, very well taught, that in geuing of giftes or presentes menne ought to haue a speciall eye and regarde, that the thynges whiche we geue, be apte for the parties that they are geuen vnto. For my parte vpō this thyng not long sence, at what tyme I dedicated the Paraphrase vpon Matthewe vnto Charles the Emperour: yea and before my tyme also it hath of ryght excellent clerkes, by prescripcion of auncient custome and vsage, been plainly declared, that any kynde of argumente what euer it bee, is rightly and well dedicated vnto princes, whom though we know that they will neuer read it, yet is thus muche vtilitie and benefite gotten therby, that vnder the title of their names, the worke is the better habled to the cāles of studious persons, according as Plinius finely writte, certain thynges euen for suche onely respect to be reputed very precious, because they are dedicated for iewels in temples. But certes the wayward nesse of suche persones towardes bokes, when they commewely forth, is so greate, that they wyll bidde away with the bokes out of their sight, ere they take any assay or tast of the same. And by this meanes there perisheth a wel to the wyter & fruite whiche he hoped to haue therby, as also to the reader, his due profite & honestie. And at suche mens hādes, one thing at least wise shal the title of noble princes obtein whan it is set in the first frount of any booke, that they wyll not geue sentence on it to be vtterly naught, that they will not disdain it, that they will not spet on it before they haue red it. Albeit euē otherwise also the godly zele and affection of such princes doeth make, that whoso sendeth the ghospell to any kyng for a present, shall not seme to do against good reaso. For by men of right good credite, and suche as vse not to lye, it hath been reported vnto me, a wel that Charles the Emperour, in case any bacat tyme of leysure maye in so great vnquietnesse and troubleous state of the worlde be gotten, doeth gladly bestowe the same in readyng the ghospell boke: as also the moste renoumed Prince Ferdinando, brother to the same Charles, muche and often to haue in his handes the Paraphrase vpon the ghospell of Saincte John, whiche not very long agon I dedicated vnto hym: yea and further-furthermore that ỳ right noble kyng of Denmarke Christierne, which thing maye to your grace also be well knowen, hath bokes of christian religion often tymes in his handes, and that he with greate deuocion vseth to rede my paraphrase vpon the ghospel of Matthew. Why than shoulde the ghospel seme to be vnaptly sent vnto those whiche are handlers and louers of the ghospel, whiche ghospell certes is to be had and vsed in the hades of all persones as many as remembre and thinke themselues to be Christyans. Nowe although after the rate of worldely dealyng, suche a thyng is moste chiefely to bee geuen, as the partie hath nede of ỳ whom it is sent, yet after the rule of the ghospell, whoso hath already, to hym muste nedes be geuen, that he may haue plentie. Wherfore me thought I should do but as myght best stande with congruente, to sende this Euangelical physicion vnto your highnesse, for a stuffe as the same is so farre from disdaynyng holy scriptures, that (as your owne writinges dooe testifye,) ye haue aboue the meane rate profited in the same, so that ỳ a man geue vnto your grace any thing to holy scripture appertaynyng, he shall not seme so muche to geue a gifte, as to make amendes and recompence for a pleasure receyued. Moreouer if this be a thyng specially aboue others in all haste prouided for, that in the kinges & Emperours courtes there may from tyme to tyme be physicions ready and prest at hande, beyng men exactly learned and of approued fidelitie) to take charge that the princes be dyr be preserued and kept in health: howe muche more doeth it stande with congruence, that Luke the physicion should there be resiauue, who doeth not with seamnony or ellebour preserue the healthful state of the body, but doth with an heauenly poticon deliuer the soule fes diseases that lyolently hale men to death euerlastyng, that is to were, ỳ vnknowyng of the truthe, mistrustfulnesse & vnbeleefe towardes God, the loue of this worlde, ambicion, auarice, riottous excesse, hatred, enuye, and suche others. For these diseases is all the life of mortall men subiect vnto, & dayly in daunger of falling into them, as John the apostle sayeth, where he bewayleth that all the whole worlde is set in naughtinesse, ne yther any thing els to reigne therin, but concupiscence of the flesh, concupiscence of the yes, & pryde of the lyfe. And in so muche the more peril and hasard of the said diseases do the princes stand, as they are more then others made wantons & dereliynges of fortune, and haue lyberrie without checke or controllemente to fulfyll their owne sensuall lustes and appetites. But nowe me seemeth I shall not spende my labour in vayne but to good purpose, if I shal in a fewe wordes commend and sette forth vnto your highnesse, first Luke himself being the physicio, and then the potio or medicine that he bringeth with hym, albeit I put no doubtes but ỳ as well the one as the other is already (as in dede they ought to be) vnto your godly zele and deuocion in most best wyse accepted. For of both the fame is that excellent man Luke an Antiochian by the countrey & nacion that he was borne in. And Antioche is a citie whiche was in old tyme of so great fame and power, that so muche parte of al the countrey of Syria as reacheth vnto Cicilie & buttreth vpon it, had the name geuen it thereof; And the saied Antioche was in this behalf more happie and fortunate then herre Rome it self, ỳ Peter ỳ apostle had his first see here in this citie of Antioch: and that Paule, and Barnabas dyd in the same citie receiue their dignitie of the charge and functio Apostolical. Now to our present purpose this Luke

was of familiar acquaintaunce and conuersacion with all the Apostles, but moste specially a folower and disciple of Paule, and also a companion of his trauell his peregrinacio, neuer separated nor deuided from his compaine. Bp lyuyng in coumpany with the Apostles, he wrote his ghospell: and by the chynges which Paule wrought and did, Luke beyng a parteine witnesse of theim, he wrote the booke which he entytled, the actes of the apostles. And that hys storie of the Actes, he determined vntill the second yere of Paul abydyng at Rome, that is to say, vntill the fowerth yere of Nero, the Emperour there.
Wherof men gather a conjecture that the boke was writte in the same citie.
And fully agreed it is amonge the learned men, that this same verye Luke is, of whom Paul the Apostle doeth so often tymes make mencion: as for example, in his second epistle to the Corinthians, where he thus saith: We haue sēt with him our brother, whose laude is in the gospel throughout all the congregacions. Again, where he writeth to the Collossians, he sayth: dere Lukas the physicion greeteth you. And agayne in the seconnd epystle to Timothe: For Demas hath forsaken me, louing this present world, & is departed vnto Thessalonica: Crescens, is gone into Galacia: Titus into Dalmacia: onely Lukas is with me. Yea and this point moreouer is leaft to vs by auncyent writers, that as often as Paul talketh it by name of his gospell, as he doeth to Timothe, where he saieth: Remembre that Jesus Christ of the sede of Dauid arose again from death accordyng to my gospell, &c. he meneth of the ghospel of Luke, because that like as Marke writes the history of the gospell at Peters woorde, and by his settyng on, so dyd Luke at the word and bidding of Paule. Hierome is of the opinion and iudgement, that Luke was more expert in the greke tongue then the other were, and by reaſō therof wrote the discourse and processe of the story after a more exact and groundely sorte then the others dyd, that is to weete, takyng his entreaunce at the first conception of Johns the Baptist, and makyng relacion of very muche matter touchyng the natiuitie, and concernyng the babehoode, yea and certayne poyntes furthermore concernyng the childhood of Jesus, makyng also rehersall of many parables and miracles which the other euāgelistes for loue of brieuenes had let passe ne any thing spoken of. And where vnto one of all the others went any whit further then the tyme of the Lorde Jesus being assumpted into heauen, this man alone did in an other seconde booke make a further continuacio of the story concernyng the churche, how it first sprong vp, and how it grewe more and more to spreade and shew it self.
This muche more ouer the writers affyrme: that lyke as Matthew wrote his ghospell, and Peter his epistles, chyefely vnto the Jewes: so dyd Luke write his gospell most specially to the Gentiles, as one that was a disciple of Paules, which Paul as he was the teacher of the Gētiles, so did he write his epistles vnto Gentiles, except the only one epistle to the Hebrues, of the authour & writer wherof he hath euermore been doubted whether he were Paule or not. He wrote his ghospel after Marke, but yet before that John wrote his, by reason wherof beyng but a disciple, he is set before John who was an Apostle. And to conclude, it is written that a long lyued manne he was, whiche thyng was in a physicion, euen as of congruence it ought to be.
For he folowed the callaile of Paul, which wrote: It is good not to touche a woman: he lyued a syngle man fower score and fower yeres.

The

The bones of him after he was dead, were remoued and conueied out of Achaia, to Conſtantinople, together with the bones of Andrew the apoſtle, in the twētieth yere of Cōſtantius. We haue no we a phiſition for the ſoule of a phyſition for the body, a man by his familiaritie of conuerſation, with the Apoſtles bahied, and by mo teſtimonies then one of Paul the apoſtle, commended and prayſed, and by the whole conſent of all the faythfull congregatiōs allowed. For where the goſpels of many were reiected and refuſed, Luke was by the conſent of al the congregations voices reſerued, to make vp that ſame holy and miſtical quaternitie, which Moſes in old tyme imprinted out, whan he expouded vnto vs the ſower ſtuddes or riuers welling vp out of one ſpryng in paradiſe, whiche ſtuddes do water al the earth vniuerſall: and the whiche quaternitie the Prophet Ezechiell afterward ſaw, whā he playnly ſet out vnto vs (as it had been in a picture) the ſower myſtyall beaſtes & the ſower wheles in one. Nowe if it be ſo thought good, let vs in fewe wordes, ſum what ſpeake of the portion or medicine that he hath geuen vs. We had been wonte out of Hypocrates to take medicines wherewith to remedie diſeaſes of the body, but this medicine of the ghoſpel, wherwith to cure and heale our ſoules, he toke of the Apoſtles, whiche had both ſeen and heard Chriſt, yea or rather of the verey holy ghoſt himſelf.

There was among the phyſitions of olde time, a certain kind of medicine of paſſing great efficacie & vertue, whiche medicine they called in Greke χειρ χριστὸς, that is to ſay, Gods handes, lyke as there is now a confection that is called manus Chriſti. But yet was there neuer any medicine inuented by the phiſitions, that was able to remedie al diſeaſes of the body, though they make neuer ſo muche bauntes and boaſt of that ſame which they call panacea, a medicine (as they affirme) effectual and of muche vertue, but vnto yet to no man. Once the ſickenes of olde age geueth place to no phiſike. But this ſame medicine of the ghoſpel is in very true dede, the manus Chriſti, wherwith thorough ſyncere faith doth once for altogether take away all diſeaſes of the ſoules, & geueth immortalitie: which thing apperteineth onely vnto god to do. And certes it was a thyng not vnfeatly ne vnſkilfully ſpoken in the prouerbes of the Grekes, that woordes and talke is the phyſition of a mynde beyng diſeaſed and ſicke: yea and ſum there hath been, which beleued that the diſeaſes of the body alſo myght be driuen away with certayne hartie wordes aduyſedly ſpoken, hauyng a certain magicall vertue & efficacie in them. The Lord Jeſu was a phiſicio, who while he liued here on earth, did with his wordes put away diſeaſes of the bodies, were they neuer ſo ſore, or of neuer ſo log continuance rooted in them. Yea and with his woordes he raiſed dead folkes to lyfe agayne. For his woord was no woord of magike: but the almightyful word of the omnipotēt father. The ſame Chriſt did alſo with his word driue away diſeaſes of the ſoules, whan he ſayd: Sonne thy ſynnes are forgeuen the: and in an other place: Goe thy wayes, thy fayth hath made the whole. And in conſideration hereof the prophecy had afore promiſed, Chriſt ſhould be a phyſition. For it ſayeth in the booke of Sapience: For neither any herbe ne any ſupplying plaiſter hath healed them, but thy word, o Lord, whiche healeth all thynges. This ſame verily is that true panacea, that the phiſicions ſpeake of, as afore ſayd. Alſo the myſtical pſalme hath this ſentence. He ſent his woord, and he healed them from their vtter perylthynges. The

liuelye woorde of the father is Christe. He had sent Moses and the prophetes: and by them was the nacion of the Iewes taken in cure to be loked vnto, but they were not clene healed. Onelye the woorde of the father was of sufficiente vertue and efficacie to heale the diseases of man, and not onelye the lighte dyseases, but also the mortall and deadly sickenesses. For it is a marke whereby to know that it speaketh of deadly sickenesses, whan the prophete addeth, from theyr bitter perisshynges. At suche tyme as the stomacke is so clene fallen awaye that it abhorreth and refuseth all kynde of meate, than groweth the sicke partie towardes his death, and of suche maner a disease was all the whole vniuersall worlde sicke, before the cumming of the heauenly physician. Whyche thing had the psalmiste a litle before spoken: Their solle abhorred all kynde of meate, they were drawen nere euen to the gates of death. There had bene manye soondry dyets tempered by the philolophiers, as for exaumple, by the secte of Pythagoras, by the Academikes, by the Stoikes, by the Epicureans, and by the Peripatetikes, promisyng perfect healthe of the myndes, yea and heauens blisse too. Moses tempered many potions, preserybyng and appoyntyng soondry ceremonies of religion and of seruyng god: the prophetes also made muche and many temperynges to the same ende and purpose: but by reason of diseases growyng strong and preuaylyng, the phisicke and medicines auailed not, ne dyd any other good, sauing that it encreased the diseases, and bewrayed the same that it might appere. The stomacke of the soule beeyng corrupte with naughtie delyres, as it had beene with euell and hurtefull humoures, dyd on the one syde turne theyr face awaye from the moral preceptes and lessons of the philosophiers compoled with greate labour and studye: and on the other syde by the ordinaunces and preserypcions of Moses, they were made the more superstitious, but nothyng the better men. As for the bitter chydyng whiche the prophetes ministred, had no good relice ne taste in theyr mouthes, and therfore was there no credyte geuen to theyr promises. Whyche thyng the father of heauen whan he sawe, because he wouldе not haue any thyng to perisshe of all that he had created: sente foorth his woorde who should with an heauenly medicine delyuer all people from all diseases of theyr soules, onelye requiryng of vs to acknowleage our diseale, and put assured trust and confidence in the phisician. And lyke as the louyng & frendely phisicias, if at any time they cannot spill remayne to bee euermore present with theyr patientes, doe commonly vse to leaue some boxe or receypt of phisicke with them, whereby the parties that are sicke maye be theyr owne phisicians, if the case shoulde so require: so the loyde Iesus when he returned into heauen, leafte vnto vs by his Apostles a medicinable electuarie of the gospell, bothe easye and readie for euery bodye that will take it, but of great vertue and effecte, if a man receyue it as it ought to be: and certes to take it to ones profite and benefite, the chiefe thyng that worketh it, is his assured trust and assaunce in the phisician.

Neither is it enough to haue taken a slendre taste or assaye thereof, but it muste be receiued and conueyghed into the verye bowels, that as soone as it is receyued within the stomacke, the vertue therof maye haue full course to renne euery waye throughout all the veynes. At suche tyme and neuer till than it beginneth to roumble and shake all the partie from toppe to toe with the hatred of his former life: but after this great troublyng and confusion, immediately ensueth greate tranquillitie of myndе and quiet of the conscience. The phiſicians of the bodyes, haue practicioners, and potcaries that dooe miniſtre theyr arte vnder them: and theimſelues are the preſcribers and appoynters what it is that muſt bee geuen to the ſicke: Chriſt alone it is and none els, that hath preſcribed the medicine of euerlaſtyng ſaluacion. The Apoſtles, and their ſucceſſours the biſhops, are no more but miniſters, they temper in due proporcion, they kyne and beate to powder, they laye to the places diſeaſed, not receiptes of theyr owne, but of Chriſtes. They baptiſe in water, but Chriſte it is that waſheth the ſoule cleane: they teache the thynges whiche he taught and deliuered vnto theim, but Chriſtes owne ſelfe it is, whiche maketh that theyr wordes maye take effecte. The cozpozall phiſicians dooe often tymes varie aſwell in their iudicials of the diſeales, as alſo in appoyntyng medicines foz theſame: yea and many tymes in ſtede of medicines they appoynte thynges that are betrap popſon to the ſickenes, accozdyng to the ſaying of the greke Poete.

Many of the medicines be good that are wzought,
And many of theim again are ſterke ſtarpng nought.

But of the phiſicke and medicine Euangelicall, there is but onely one receipte, whiche ought of no moztall creature to bee either cozrupted oz altered. And finally to conclude, it is confect of no mo but one ſimple, ſo that althoughe they, whoſe parte and duetie it were to be miniſters of the ſame, wouldе bee ſlacke to dooe theyr office, euery man maye take it and miniſtre vnto hymſelfe, ſo that he haue a mynde feithfully truſtyng, a mynde ſyncere, and deſirous of health. Foz euen that ſame chiefe and head phiſician of all, who alone and none but he is of power hable to heale all the whole manne, did at ſome ſeaſons geue health by hymſelfe in his owne perſone, and many tymes alſo by the miniſterie of his Apoſtles and diſciples. Now feithermoze all the whole facultie and arte of phiſicke, hath two markes that it principally ſhoteth at: the one that it maye deliuer the bodye from diſeales, and from ſuche thynges as doe brede diſeales, & this parte is by the phiſicans terme, called therapeutica, that is to ſaye, the arte of curyng oz healyng diſeales: ſecondelye theyr arte is to preſerue and continue the healthfull ſtate of the bodye, and to encreace the ſtrength: and this parte of phiſicke they place in the ozdreing of the diete.

Foz the phiſicians dooe not euermoze lere with hote pzons, oz cutte, they dot not euermoze geue pocions of ſcammonie to conſume and waſte the fleaſhe as men in manier fleaghyng and mattering the bodye, to kepe it in ipfe: but ſometymes they miniſtre ſuche thynges as maye make the herte lyghte and merie, yea and alſo they geue the bodye ſuſtinaunce at large: So there is firſte of all miniſtred vnto vs the pocion of faith, whiche troubleth the ſoule and conſcience with repentaunce, and emptying vs, dooeth diſcharge and vnlade vs of ouer ſynne. Than immediatly therupon is geuen an electuarie of conſolacion, of exoztyng and of moze perfeict doctrine. Foz if a phiſician, as ſoone as he hath made the bodye emptie by purgacion, ſhould ſoodaynely geue vp the ſicke patient and leat hym alone, it is an hazarde and leopardie leſte whan it is deſtitute of all the ſtrength, ſome power and rage of a greater ſickeneſſe maye take it, as foz example, the paulſey, the generall taking oz diſſolucion of all the limmes and ſenewes, wherupon men lye bedzed, oz a conſumpcion. So after that repentaunce hath caſt downe our combe, and hath well ſhaken out diſeaſe, whā baptiſme hath ſcoured oz pourged vs and made vs emptie and bodye from al ſynnes, there bee ſuche thinges miniſtred, and geuen to vs, as maye holſomlye

replenisshe the soule agayne beyng now well clensed and made boyde. Wrathfulnes is boyded out, and rentilnesse and mekenesse is in stede therof infused. Enuie is sucked out, and taking of all thynges to the best, put in for it. Dicking and polling is boyded out, and in place therof succeedeth liberalitie. The feruent desyre of makyng warre, is consumed awaye, and the earnest zele of peace to reigne in for it. The loue of sensuall pleasures of the flesshe is expelled, and in their stede entreth the loue of thynges celestiall. Wyll ye heare what is the sammonie euangelicall? Doue ye penaunce. The axe is nowe alreadie sette at the roote of the tree. An euerie tree that bringeth not fourth good fruicte is cutte vp. And Paule in lyke maner: Mortifie your membres whiche are vpon yearth: whoorehuntyng, vncleannesse, wanton lust, euill concupiscence, and auarice. And within fewe woordes after it followeth: spoylyng your selues of the olde man with all his actes. He hathe now voyded out the ill humoures, how doeth he fill vp the emptie place agayne? Doue vpon youre selues, (sayth he) as the saintes & the elected of God, the bowels of mercie, bountefulnesse, submission, humilitie, pacience, supportyng one another, and forgeuyng your selues emong you if any person haue a quesele agaynste an other, lyke as the Lorde also hathe giuen to you. And aboue all these thynges haue ye charitie, whiche is the bande of perfection, and leat the peace of Christe reioyce in your heartes. Suche maner an house he sayeth is cleane with broomes and replenished on euery syde with suche ornamentes, the euill spirite shall not entlones entre vpon, whan he returneth with seuen worse then hymselfe. Thus than the Euangelicall medicine hath wone of it owne, wherewith to couere the matter of oure woundes that they smarte agayne. Auaunt, come behynde me Satan, thou sauourest not the thynges whiche are of God, but whiche are of men. Now see the lappyng vpe of the same. Haue ye a perfecte trust and confidence, for I haue ouercommed the worlde. A heare of your heade shall not perysshe. Be ye not afearde litle flocke, for yours is the kyngdome of heauen. Paule hathe meate, wherewith he coumforteth and cherisheth suche as are but newlye conuerted to Christe, that they maye not fal agayne into diseases, forasmuche as they are yet weake: he hath also founde and substanciall meate that maye kepe them in perfecte strength, growyng forewarde from daye to daye vnto the measure of the fulnesse of Christe. Those persones had gathered perfect strengthe, of whome it is thus written in the actes of the Apostles: They went reioycyng oute of the sight of the counsell, in that they had been reputed worthie to suffre reproche for the name of Jesu.

That man also had gathered perfecte strength whiche sayed: I can doue all thynges in hym that maketh me strong. And for this consideration the Lorde Jesus in the ghospell exhorteth menne to the eatyng of the breade that was come from heauen, the eatyng whereof geueth immortalitie. He exhorteth men to the eatyng of his flesshe, and to the drinking of his bloude, meanyng vndoubtedlye of his doctrine, whiche beyng as breade to the soule, dooeth make the same lustie and strong and (as effectuall strong wyne) doeth inebriate men and byng them in a godly kynde of dronkennesse, euen to the contempte of this worlde, in lyke maner as stealthe hath found nourishemente for the bodye, and lyke as bloude hath a vertue and effecte vnto lyke. And though all the scripture of god haue a medicinable vertue and power in it: yet hath it none a more effectuall electuarye or receipt then that pertaineth to the ghospel. One and the same spirite it is, that is in all the Scriptures of God, but yet in the ghospell especiallye his pleasure was, that the thyng should remaine, wherin he might specially shewe fourth his owne power, because there shoulde appere some difference betwene the structuures and the matter, betwene the puddels or litle gutters, and the

spryng or fountaine. And truely it is a labour well bestowed, to consider how great a thyng the vertue of this medicine is. Euerie common weale is (as ye woulde saye) a certayne body. The pestilent diseases and sicknesses of a common weale, are euill maners. Against whiche diseases suche men as haue excelled others in wysedome, haue in soondrye regions ordeyned and set lawes, as it were certayne medicines and remedies for the same, as for example, emong the Athenians, Solon made lawes: emong the Lacedemonians, Lycurgus: emong the people of Crete, Minos: emong the Romaynes the tenne Commissioners called in theyr tounge, Decemviri. Yet not one of all these men, was able to bryng to passe, that other nacions also would embrace and receiue the lawes that he had made. No neither dyd any of them so muche as attempte suche a thyng, leste besides spendyng of labour in vayne, he shoulde also haue wonne an opinion of a shamelesse acte in his so doyng. Solon was fayn to liue tenne yeares a banished man for thrustyng his lawes into the citie of Athens alone to be vsed there. Plato a man so well learned and so eloquent, could neuer bryng the people of Athens in mynde to receyue his lawes. And yet is there no doubtes to bee made, but that euerye one of theim perswaded themselues, that the lawes whiche they hadde made were true, and that they willyed (yf it myght possibly haue been brought to passe) that all the world should haue embraced and receyued thesame. No nor the lawes of Moses neither were spred abrode or receyued any ferther then within onely one nacion, although in dede the Pharisees did with great highe supt hunte to wynne and gear vnto them a fewe proselites, that is to saye, foreyns and aliens wonne to their religion. Pynalip, not the violent autoritie of the Emperours neither, was able by violence or compulsion to obteyne, that theyr lawes might haue weight and force with all nacions. And the thyng whiche all the sayed persones by the lawes that they made did endeuoure to bryng about, thesame did also the Philosophers attempt by theyr morall rules and lessons, with great iudgement, and with incomparable diligence and labour wrytten and published. Of al which neuertheless, not one hath there been so eloquente or so well learned, that he hath been able to bryng any one nacion in the mynde that he wouldе haue theim in, so wretche and vneffectuall was the vertue of the medicine of phylicke which they broughte. Onelye the trueth Euangelicall dyd in processe of a fewe yeares possesse, perswade, and ouercome all nacions of the worlde full and wholle, drawyng vnto it the Gretes, and the barbarous peoples, the learned and the vnlearned, the inferiour common people, and kynges and all. So pithilye and so effectuall was the electuarie of this trueth, that somany thousandes of people forsakyng the lawes of their owne countreyes, renouncyng the religiō that theyr forefathers had vsed, leauyng aswell the sensuall pleasures and liues, whiche from their cradels they had been accustomed vnto: they embraced a new and a forein doctrine, and out of diuerse tounges, and ordinaunces of contrarie sorte, they did consente to the receyuyng of a certaine lowe and basse philosophie: especiallye at suche a tyme as neuer was there any of the lyke sorte furnished nor armed either with the maintenaunce and suppoztation of learnyng and eloquence, or with the power and autoritie of princes: and at suche a time ferthermore whā al the worlde with al the strengthe that it had, fought against the trueth of the ghospel beeyng vnarmed and naked: yet neuertheless it could not possible vpon to passe, but that the sayed truethe after that it firste entred possession vpon the countrey of Greece, inuaded also the citie of Rome, and the verye courte of Nero, and forthwith spred it self abrode throughout all and singular the prouincies of the Empire of Rome, euen vntell the Iles called Gades, lying in the farthest parte beyonde Spaigne, and vnto the Indians, vnto the peoples of Affrike, and the Scithians, and the Isle of Britannia now called Englande, beyng a countrey betwene diuided and cutte of from all the rest of the worlde. These nacions and peoples dyd verye muche differ one from another in theyr languages, lawes, rytes, vsages, ordeynaunces, Goddes, religion, and factions: and anon beyng from suche great discorde brought to a generall vnitie or amitie, they begonne to syng all one song, extollyng with laudes and prayses Iesus Christe the onely lorde and saueour of the worlde.

And all this while, the spoylyng of their goodes, their banishementes, emprisonynges, tormentes, deathes, were none other thing but good procedyng and goyng forewarde of the ghospell. What persone hath there euer been founde, that hath been content to suffre death for the lawes of Solon, or the morall preceptes of Zeno? But for the simple and playne doctrine of Christ, how many thousandes of men, both olde & young, how many thousandes of matrones and virgins, haue willyngly offered and holden out their neckes to bee chopte of? And yet how muche more wonderfull, and more abhorryng from commune reason, are the thinges whiche the ghospell teacheth, then whiche the Paradoxes, that is to saie the straunge opinions of the philosophiers, dooe teache? And the sayd philosophiers doctryne not one of the princes did euer make anye a doue to destroye or suppresse, and yet of it owne accorde it banyshed awaye, lyke as did also theyr lawes, and the arte magicall, and the rites of sacrifices. For what creature dooeth at this daye sacrifice vnto the Gods of the heathen, or slaygheth beastes in sacrifice as the Iewes did? What persone dooeth now knowe of Zoroastes? What man setteth an heare by the mysticall riddels of Pythagoras? Who readeth the lyfe of Apollonius Tyaneus any other wyse then as a certayne dreame? Yea or rather who vouchesaluefh to reade it at all? For where Aristotell is at these dayes of greate name and fame in the scholes, learnyng neuer thanke his owne sorte therefore, but the Christians. For euen he had perished too, yf there had not been made a medley of Christe and hym together in our schooles of diuinitie. Against the philosophie Euangelical, beeyng, yet but tender and euen but newly sprungyng vp, the worlde arose at the first chop with all his force and power, by meane of the Iewes, vnder the pretexte and coulour of religion fightyng agaynst the fountaine of all religion, by meane of the philosophiers beeyng hable muche to doe in all kyndes of learnyng, by meane of the Sophisters beyng felowes vnpossible to bee ouercomed in stiffenelle of holdyng argumentacions, by meane of the rhetoricians beyng meruaylous in the force of eloquence, by the tyrannes beeyng armed with all sortes of shewyng cruelties, by meane of kynges, lieutenauntes, magistrates, by suche as were cunnyng in magike and sorcerie, and perfecte in the sleyghe of castyng mistes ouer mennes eyes and other senses, and by meane of vnpure spirites beeyng the lordes of this worlde. All suche tumultuous bustynesse, as these, (as a sea of clouds swellyng vp and ouerflowyng,) dydde the power of the truethe Euangelicall receiue, endure, breake throughe, and vtterly ouercome. For at the lighte of the ghospell whan it came, it was reason that all counterfaictes of worldly power ſhould clene vaniſhe awaye. Vp ſhot that ſame ghoſpell and ſpred it ſelfe beeyng plaine and lowe, whiche all men with great adoe endeuoured to ouerthrowe and kepe downe. The bokes of ſuche perſones, as with ſingular high witte, with woonderfull learnyng, and with exquiſite eloquence wrote agaynſt the ghoſpel, vaniſhed awaye of theyr owne accorde as it had been certayne dreames, ſo muche that they are not at this day remaynyng to bee had neyther, excepte if any fragmentes or ſmall pieces haue been ſaued of the Chriſtians, by reaſon of wrytyng agaynſt them in confuting them. The kynges and princes dooe nowe bough downe, to honoure the thyng whyche to fore they wer about to deſtroie: the power of magike is vaniſhed awai and gone: the euill ſpirites are caſt out that they howle and roze agayn: philoſophie hath confeſſed her ignorauunce: and geuyng ouer the foolyſhe wiſedome of the world, it hath embraced the wyfedome of the croſſe: the rethoricians wryte oracions in the prayſe of Jeſus Chriſt: the poetes do hiſſe the olde goddes out of place, and in the lieu and place of Goddes innumerable, all their ſong and compoſyng is nowe of Jeſus Chriſte alone. Thiſſame ſo great a chaunge of the world, be goonne within a fewe yeares after Chriſt was putte to death, to be made generall and common through al the whole worlde, and without any maintenaunce or ſuppoztacion of mā, it encreaced from tyme to tyme ſtill more and more, vntyll the piece of leauen beeyng mengled in three peckes of meale did leauen and turne al the whole batche, and vntill the graine of muſtard ſeed beeyng digged into the yearth, did ferre and wyde ſpreygh his boughes abzode ouer Aſia, ouer Affrike, and Europe. And ouer and beſydes all this, thoſe perſones who leyed theyr battrey agaynſt the trueth Euangelical to caſt it downe and to deſtroye it, not onely had diuerſe and ſondzy kyndes of terrowres, wherwith euen very manly ſtomakes alſo might haue been quayled, that is to wite open cōmaundementes by proclamacion, conſiſtories & places of iudgement, kozfaityng of al theyr goodes to the princes, attaindzes and deprivacions, baniſhementes, priſons, tozmentes of burnyng platys, ſcourgyng with roddis, arcs wherwith to choppe of theyr heades, teobettes, fiers to burne them, wylde beaſtes to caſt them to, that thei might be deuoured, beaſtes: but alſo they had diuerſe and ſoondzye allurementes, wherewith an herte though it wer right cōtinent might bee corrupted. Ceaſar would ſaye to ſome one of them: Renoūce thou and forſake Chriſt, and be thou the chiefe emong all my piers, and creipe thou ſo do, all thy gooddes ſhall be forfayte to my behoufe. I wyll ſhewe all extremitie of rigour towarde thy wyfe and childzen, and thyſelfe for thyne owne part ſhalt bee caſt to wylde beaſtes in a denne. Who did in ſuche caſes as theſe perſwade ſo many thouſandes, and byng them in mynde with reioycyng to take it whan theyr promocions and dignities were taken from them, whan theyr gooddes were ſpoyled, that whan they ſawe thoſe parties haled with all violence to huge tozmentes and execution of death, who nexte after God were moſte derely beloued vnto them, they ſhould geue thankes to God: and finally that themſelues whan they might eaſly haue eſcaped, and whan they might haue enioyed ſuche high commodities, ſhould of theyr owne voluntary wylles offre themſelues to bee cruelly martyred? No power of humayne eloquence could this haue dooen: but the godlye power of the trueth was hable, whiche laye hidden in the graine of muſtardſede. Neither did the philoſophers doctrine lacke allurementes. The Stoykes promiſed libertie and fredome, true

rychesse, health, reigne, & other thynges magnificent and royall to be spoken. The Epicurcans made highe wordes and promises of pleasure to the eares of men. The Peripatetikes dyd couple the good giftes of the bodye with vertue. But the doctrine of the ghospell as it did not promise any body vnto it with any worldly terrours: so on the contrary parte, how feare was it from hauyng any thyng commendable in outwarde shewe to set to, naye rather howe many thynges did it conteine vtterly incredible? It telleth newes of one Jesus nailed on the crosse, who had by his death deliuered mankynde, and this Jesus to be bothe god and man, borne of a virgin, and one that had returned agayne from death to life, and was nowe sitting at the right hande of God the father, and the same Jesus to had been a man that had taught suche persones to bee in blissed case, as for the profession of his name did mourne and waile, did suffre thirst or hungre, were put to affliction, wer cuill spoken of, or were putte to death: and that all men shall in time to come arise to life agayn, and that the godly sorte at that daye (the same verye Jesus beeyng their iudge,) shall haue immortalitie to their lotte, & the wicked shall haue the peines of hell for euer without ende to endure. What philosopher durst haue entreprised to propounde suche thynges as these so feare contrarye to all mennes opinion or thinkyng, and thynges so vntouthsome for menne to bee fond on, or to make anye great countenaunce vnto? Yet all these thynges neuertheles dyd the law talke of, the ghospell dyd in suche wyse persuade, that suche an one is taken for mad and cleane out of his wittes, as doeeth not beleue it: and that so manye thoulandes of people will sooner forsake their life, then the profession of the trueth Euāgelical. And by what maner felowes at last dyd so great a chaunge of the worlde first come vp? by meane of a fewe disciples beeyng menne vnknowen, men of lowe degree, men of powerte, & vnlearned. To what purpose is it to speake of the rest, whan Peter the chiefe of them was a fisher, and of no further knowlage but his bare mother toungue, Paule a feather sewer, and not one of them all, a man of rychesse, or a man of power, or a gentle man? And either nothyng at all had they of this worldes, or in case they had afore tymes had, they clene forsooke it. And by what wayes was it possible for suche men to bryng so great a matter to passe? erres they brought a medicyne in a vile boxe but it was through godly vertue, a medicine of great power and efficacie.

The talke euangelicall is of a playne homely sorte, and of no eloquent compasyng, whiche in case a manne examine and eye by the storie of Thucidides in greke, or of Titus Liuius in latine, he shall fynde a lacke of many thynges, & with many poynctes shall he be offended. What a nouelrye of thynges dooe the Euangelistes feat passe, howe manye thynges dooe they touche with three woordes and no more, in how many places dooeth the order disagree, and in how many places dooe they appere to be one contrarie vnto another? It was possible that suche thinges should haue turned awaye the mynde of the reader from the readyng of it, and should haue caused it neuer to be beleued. Contrariwyse they that haue written storyes of worldly affaires, how carefull are they wherof to make the first begynnyng of the matter, what labour & diligence do they bestowe, that they maye not tell anye thyng otherwyse then is semyng, that they maye not tell any thyng vnlykely, that they maye not tell any thyng not standyng together, or any thynges contrary vnto reason?

Than ferther with what euidence dooe they laye the thyng playne before mennes ipes, with what swete pleasaunt knackes and conceiptes do they con-tente and reteine the readers mynde, that no pointe of tediousnesse maye come stealyng vpon hym: But the monumentes of all this sorte of wryters hauyng been compoſed with great labour and studie, are a great portion of them lost, and thole that remaynne are reade neither of all persones, and yet without getyng any credite vnto them. For what persone is there so light of beleefe, that he will auouche and warraunt, that in all Titus Liuius there is no poynte coteyned of telling an vntruth? But so many thousandes of people there haue been found, whiche would with better will tenne times suffre death, then to admitte or graunte any one false clause to bee contained in the writynges of the gospell. Haue we not than of theſe premisses an euident marke whereby to know the matter not to be of worldly auctorities or wisedome, but of the bertue and power of God? There is a secrete vertue and efficacie lying hidden in the medicine, whiche whan it was once poured into the body, spred it selfe abrode ouer all the vniuersall nations of the worlde, as if it were by resemblaunce, throughout all the membres. We haue nowe the cause, why the bertue euangelicall did within so fewe yeares by men of lowe degree, spredde it selfe abrode all the world ouer, whan theſame worlde rebelled against it with all bondes of extreme cruel-tie. And now wale it come in some mannes mynde greatly to meruaile by what reason it hath come to passe that in thole later seasons, whan the worlde had Christian princes, Bishops, men of learnyng, welthie and riche persones, and endued with great authoritie, the diction of Christe is so shrounken together into a narowe roume. For the cause of this matter beeyng well knowen, a remedie might perhappes the sooner be founde. But I hauyng a good while sence forgotte my selfe, do passe the limites & boudes of a preface. I therefore returne now to our phisition Luke, whome Ipke as I houbte not to be right acceptable vnto your grace: so woulde I by my good wyll haue hym by meane of theſame your grace to be made the more acceptable vnto all people. The wyse Eccle-asticus speaketh in this maner: Honour thou the phisition for necessities sake.

How muche more than ought condigne honour to be shewed to this phisition, who hath tenfully geuen vs so effectuall a receipt of phisicke, whiche is to euery creature necessary, except if any suche persone there bee, whiche is without all faulte and hath no nede to wate a better man than he was? And certes it will also bee effectuall, if we beeyng brtrely weryed of our diseases and infirmities, shall oftentymes byte of this medicine, if we shall continually chawe it, if we shall conueye it to passe into our stomake and into the botome of oure herte, if we shall not vomite vp agayne that hath been taken therof, but shall kepe the-same still in the stomake of oure soule, vntill it cast a brode the bertue that it hath, and chaunge vs altogether into it selfe. This poynte by experience haue I founde in myne owne selfe, that litle fruite there commeth of the gospell, if a man reade it but sluggishely, and superficially tenne it ouer. But in case a mā do with diligent and exquisite meditacion kepe hymselfe occupied therin, he shal fele a certaine bertue and pith suche as he shall not fele the lyke in any other bookes. Nowe to preuente mabyng of myne aunswer vnto the suspicious de-mynges of menne, for that I haue dedicated euery particular paraphrase of the ghospels seuerally to particular princes, it is berap chaunce and not anye ambicion or sekyng on my behalfe. For theſame thyng hath foztuned vnto me in this matter, that foztuned in the epistles Apostolicall. Whan I wrote the paraphrase

paraphrase vpon Matthewe, I loked for nothyng lesse, then that John should bee earnestly required, and immediatly after hym this Lukas. But nowe to thentente there shall not any glasewyndooze or gappe bee seen emong the Euangelistes, I wyll adde Marke also vnto the other three: albeit he that dedicateth sondrie ghospels to sondrie men, maie seme to do neuer a whit more contrarie to reason, then did Sayncte Hierome, who dedicated, yea euen the lesser Prophetes, vnto seuerall persones. I haue elswhere geuen aduertisemente, and do now ettsons geue warning vnto the reader, that he esteme no more auctoritie to be in any paraphrase of myne, then he wouldе geue to the commentaries of other wryters. For I do not for any suche purpose wryte paraphrases, because I would shake or strike the gospell out of mennes handes, but to thentente it maye be read the more commodiously to a mannes mynde, and with the more fruite, lyke as meates are sauced to the ende they maye be taken with the better will and the more delectacion. Yea and of one ferther poynte also must I here warne a reader that is somewhat grosse of vnderstanding, whiche is, that it bee not myne owne woordes that I do anywhere speake in the paraphrase, leste the thyng whiche vnder the persone of the Euangelistе is humbly and truely spoken, maye seme to bee arrogauntlye spoken vnder myne owne persone. The lord Jesus geue his spirite vnto you, moste noble kyng, to the ende that vnder your protection keepyng a true Christian Prince in dede, the veritie of the gospell maye from daye to daye more and more reigne and flourishe.

The life of Saynt Luke written by S. Hieronie.

Luke a phisicion, and borne in Antioche, was not ignoraunte of the Greke tounge: (as his wrytynges do shewe) he was a folower and disciple of the Apostle Paule, and a companion of all his peregrinacion: He wrote a volume of the ghospell, of whome the same Paule sayeth in this maner. We have sent with him a brother whose praise is in the ghospell throughout all the congregacions. And agayne to the Colossians: Moste derr Luke the phisicion greteth you. And to Timothie, Luke is with me alone. Se forre fourth also another specialle goodlye booke whiche is entitled the Actes of the Apostles, the storie whereof came euen full to Paules tyme beeyng and tarying two yeares at Rome, that is to saye, untill the fourth yeare of Nero the Emperour there. Whereby we do well perceyue that the sayde booke was made in the same citie. Therfore as for the circuites of Paule and of Theela the virgin, and all the tale of Leo by him baptised, we reken emong the scriptures that are called Apocrypha. For what maniee a thyng it, that a companion whiche neuer went from his eldome, should emong his other maters ber ignoraunt of this thyng alone? Tertullian whiche was nere unto that tyme, reporteth that a certayne priest in Asia beeyng an affectionate fauourer of the Apostle Paule, was caught before John for beeyng authour of the same booke, and that the priest confessed him selfe to had done the thyng for the loue that he bare to Paule, and the booke by reason therof to had escaped hym. Some writers deme, that as often as Paule in his Epistles saieth according to my ghospell, he signifyeth of the worke of Luke, and that Luke learned the ghospell not onely of the Apostle Paule, who had not been conuersaunte with the Lorde in the fleshe, but also of the rest of the Apostles, whiche thyng Luke himselfe also declareth in the begynnyng of his owne worke, saying: As they have deliuered them unto us whiche from the beginning sawe themselues with their eyes and were ministers of the thynges that they declared. The ghospell therfore he wrote as he had heard: but the Actes of the Apostles he compiled as he had seen. He lyued lxxiiii. yeares not hauyng any wife. Buried he was at Constantinople, unto whiche citie his bones were remoued and conueyed out of Achaia, together with the bones of Andrewe the Apostle in the xx. yere of Constantius the Emperour.

The Paraphrase of Erasmus vpon the Gholpell of S. Luke.

The prologue.

¶ Forasmuche as many haue taken in hand to sette foorth the declaracion of the actes that are come to passe emong vs, lyke as they delyuered them vnto vs that first sawe them themselues, and were ministers of the woorde: I thought good also (now that I had gotte the knowlege of all thynges from the begynnyng) to wryte the diligentlye vnto the most excellent, good Theophilus, to the ende that thou mightest knowe the trueth of those woordes, of the whiche thou art enstourmed.

AS the historyes of worldly affaires, vpon consideracion, that not a lytle, aswel delectacion as also profite, is take of the knowlege of thynges: there is customably requyred an vpright trueth of reporting thesame. But muche more oughte this vpright trueth to be in makyng relacion of the Gholpell: the whiche not onely doeth muche delite the mynde hauyng litle eels to do, or is very commodious and profitable vnto this transitory lyfe: but also is necessary vnto true godlinesse, without the which no man atchieueth eternal saluacion, and the blisse that neuer shal decaye of the lyfe euerlastyng. For it were no matter of daungier, thoughe a manne did not knowe what man Hannibal was, or Alexander: what actes Epaminondas or Scipio hath done: what matters Solon, Lycurgus, or Draco haue writen: what doctrine Socrates, Plato, or Aristotle taughte, albeit the knowlege of these thynges also, after the rate of mans state and cuse in this worlde, hath their fruits. But whatsoeuer person shall not knowe the father, the sonne, and the holy ghoste: whosoeuer shall not learne what actes the sonne of God Jesus Christe hath dooen on yearth for the saluacion of mankynde, what he hathe taughte, what he hath promised vnto suche as doe constauntely cleue to the doctrine of the gholpell, what he hath threatned vnto suche persones as doe either litle regarde, or els doe playnely despise thesame: suche an one shall not possibly bee hable to auoyde, but that beeyng excluded out of the coumpanye of Gods children, and shut out from the toyes of theheauenly lyfe, he shalbee adiudged with the wicked, to the tormentes of the diepe pitte of hell, whithe neuer shall haue ende.

And in dede at the first, by meane of thapostles beeyng therunto chosen of our Lorde hymselfe, and by the residue of his disciples beyng enspired with the holy ghost, the gholpell (in dede by liuely voice and by mouth onely, but yet with moost vpright certaintye and assured trueth) is begonne to bee spred abrode throughout all coastes and countreyes of the worlde, and dooeth daylye yet still ferther and ferther renne abrode. Yet forasmuche as the synceritie of reporting the whiche goyng from man to man by mouth onely ylleueth successiuelye (a great noumber) is more lightlye corrupted, then suche reporte as is sette out and left from one to another in wryting: therefore Mathew the Apostle, one

one of the twelue, whom our Lorde Jesus beeyng yet conuersaunte on yearthe, had specially appointed and chosen to this office: and also Marke the disciple of Peter the Apostle, were by inspiracion of the holy ghoste admonished to put the summe of the whole storye of the ghospell in writyng: not myndyng ne goyng about by preuencion to take awaye from others any libertie to write of the same: matters: but rather, leste any person beyng craftilye deceiued by false Apostles, shoulde folowe the Jewes factions, or fonde fables in stede of the gospell. Notwithstandyng, lyke as not euery manne did at that tyme with equall syncerities and pureneste preache the ghospell, so those that write doo not euery man with lyke fayethfulneste and trueth handle the storye of the ghospell. For many an one hath attempted after like sorte to patche and to make a medley of the discourse of repentyng Christes ghospell, as other writers are wonte of mortall mennes actes: that is, entremedlyng otherwhyles false thynges emong the true, and tellyng for matters of approued certaintie, suche thinges as they had afore taken onely of the vncertaine rumours and bowres of the common people, yea, and many tymes inuentyng of their owne braynes some thyng to tell, eyther of a delite and lust to lye, or els beeyng corrupted with some other affection. And (as mortall mennes matters are of nature apte and readie to bee corrupted) there shall perchaunce hereafter also some persones sterte vp, whiche through makyng lyes on the actes and doctryne of Christe and of his disciples, shall cause, that true matters shall not be credited neither. Therfore the spirite of Jesus hath (as it were) nipped my herte also with a litell twynge, that after Matthewe and Marke, (whiche two with all possible trueth and vprightnesse, wrote as muche as at that tyme they iudged to bee sufficiente, and yet neuertheleste of a sette purpose and entente, left vnto others certain thinges to be written, supplying in the meane tyme with the office of liuely voyce, that lacked in theyr writtinges:) and after some others whiche haue not with semblable vprightnesse attempted the same: of whiche persones some haue euery where entermyngled many poyntes muche contrary to the doctryne of the gospell: and many haue rather had an eye to fyll vp the holes of the storye with fables and tales vnseemyng for the grauitie of the ghospell, then to tell suche thinges as the holy ghost hath iudged to be auailable towardes the blisse euerlastyng: I Luke also (should by compasyng a certaine ordre and processe of the storye euangelicall, bothe supplye suche matters as haue been omitted by the others, and also debarre the authoritie of other persones, whiche eyther hertofore haue written, or hereafter shall wryte for matters of certaynetie and for matters of euident trueth, eyther fatalyes of theyr owne imagining, or els thinges none otherwyse knowen but by the rumoure and bruite of the people, whe is commonly an authour and bringer vp of thynges not all of the synest. And yet do not we our selues so frame the processe of this storie, that we scarte passe no maner poynte at al of the thynges that haue been sayde or doen: But we make relation of suche thinges onely, as we know to conterne the godly deuotion of the gospel, and the fruicion of the lyfe euerlastyng. For an infinite and endeles matter it were, throughly to write euery thyng that Jesus hath doen or taught. Some poyntes there bee, whiche without the preiudice of saluacio may not bee vnknowen, some other thynges agayne there bee, the knowlage wherof bringeth very muche profite to the zele and desire of perfect godlinesse: and some poyntes finally there bee, that maye bee vnknowen without anye

perill of saluation, and without any greuous empechemente or hinderaunce of a christen mannes perfection: as in dede (for an exaumple) all that euer we knowe in diuine matters, is but a litle litle porcion, in respect and comparison of that that we knowe not. Therfore neither wyll we touche and treate of euery matter to the vttermoste, nor yet tell or recite thinges vncertayne: but those thynges onely wyll we declare, of whiche there hath been moost assured and euident certaintie shewed vnto vs by the vnpartial Apostles and disciples of Christ, the whiche had not onely theimselues with their owne yes seen a great parte of the thynges that they tolde vnto vs, and hadde hearde theisame with their owne eares, and had the handeling and doyng of muche parte therof with theyr owne handes: but also hadde theimselues been a parte of theisame actes that they reported were doen, as men that had doen many thinges at the commaundement of the Lord, and had suffered not a fewe thynges for his sake, because they were in all matters inseparable companions and folowers of Jesus Christ, almoste neuer out of his presence. Neyther ought there the lesse credite to bee giuen vnto me, for that I do wryte suche thynges, not as I haue seen my selfe, but as I haue learned of others. It was requisite to a matter being so feerre out of all vse, and so straunge, and so vncredible: that feith should first be acquited and wonne out of all the sences of the body, and than theisame feith to be confirmed with euident wonders and miracles. Of the actes that are to passe emong vs.

But this kynde of tokens or prouffes cannot euermore continue ne endure. For on the one syde Christe didde not long exhibite himselfe to bee seen in this worlde, and on the other syde miracles are thynges but for a time geuen to menes hardnesse of beleefe, and afterwarde once to ceasse and to haue an end. It is sufficient that the rudimentes and first principles of the feith proceded from suche beginninges as these. Thomas the Apostle sawe Christ after his resurrection, hearde hym and felte hym with his handes, and than beleeued: but oure Lorde and maister Christe pronounceth suche persones to bee blissed, whiche although they haue not bodyly seen the thynges doen, yet neuertheleese dooe geue as muche credite to the woordes of the gospell, as if they had personally been presente at the dooyng of theisame. For otherwyse, if onely the yes should bee beleued, euen beraye they that were bodyly conuersaunt with our lorde, doe repoyte many matters, at the dooyng of whiche themselues were not presente, but learned it of other persones beeyng substantiall, credible, and true of theyr repoyte: as (for an exaumple) of the natiuitie and peregrewe of Christe, of the wyse men that were called Magi, (whiche came from the Easte to see Christ beeyng newe borne) of the flyeng of Joseph & Marie with Christ into Egipte, of Satan how he tempted Christe. We Euangelistes, though we sawe not the begynnynges of thynges, yet haue we seen the sequeles and endes of them. We haue seen in the Apostles, al that euer oure Lorde had promised of them in the gospell. We haue seene theim beeyng enspired with the holy ghoste, geue theisame holy spirite of God to other persones also beeyng baptised, by laying their handes ouer them: yea, and in our owne selues haue we found and felt the effectual power and strength of the holy ghoste. We haue seen diuilles dryeuen out of me at the name of Jesus: we haue seen diseases put away: we haue seen poysons voyde of al effecte or force to dooe harme. We haue seen that the mirakle of the gospell, by men of slendre substaunce in worldely ryches, by men of lowe degree borne, by men priuate, that is to saye, by men hauyng no seculare autoritie at al, is yet neuertheleese in a fewe yeres famously notified throughe- That it might not bee deemed but that they hadde seen hearde and felte these thynges.

throughout the whole vniuersall yearth, and that the great and mighty princes of the worlde haue in vaine striued and wrastled to suppresse it.

And verayly euen the same thyng also, had our Lorde spoken afore and pro-phecied: whan I shall be lifted vp from the yearth (sayeth he) I shall drawe all thynges to my selfe. Suche autours and auouchers of thynges, and the growyng of the same thynges to suche an ende and proufe as afore is sayd, doth not suffer vs to doubte, neither of the thynges that haue passed before our tyme, ne yet of suche thynges, as for many hundredes of yeres to come are promyded.
Whatsoeuer had of long tyme afore been forsayed by the godly sayinges of the prophetes, Iesus at his cummyng into the worlde did performe and ful-fyll: and whatsoeuer thyng Christ toward his departure from hece vp to heauen, sayd afore to thapostles that it should come to passe, hath in dede comen passe: neither is it to be doubted, but that he will with semblable vprightnesse and trueth, accomplishe all other thynges, whiche he hath differred vntyll his second comming to bee performed, concernyng the resurrection of our bodyes, and concernyng the rewardes of the godly persones, and of the wicked. Therfore as for the ordre and processe of the gospell matters, I haue with earnest study throughly boulted out of the mouthes of suche, whose wordes are in-doubted and certain to write vpon. And out of these haue I picked suche passages as semed to be moste effectuall and moste helpyng to the fayth, and to the deepest godlynesse of the gospell: not geuyng it but a litle touche here and there as it were at rouers, and as men gather floures here and there one, at auenture as they come to hand: but folowyng the ordre of the tyme, and the due course of processe of matters. I haue diligently compyled the storye, yea euen somewhat ferre fettyng the matter from the first grounde, that is to wete from the conception of hym, whiche went before the cummyng of our sauiour, bothe in byrth, lo in preachyng also, and in death. And than furthermore I treate of the straunge conception of Christ within the wombe of the virgin, of the byrthe of the childe, of his circumcision, of the purification of Marie, of sondre prophecies spoken vpon the childe, of certayne tokens of godly towardnesse whiche euen very than already did like certayne litle sparkes appere in the childe: of whiche thynges the other Euangelistes that with vpright trueth and certaintie wrote before, had touched almoste nothyng at all. After al this, how Iohn baptised and preached, and than of the baptising of Iesus, of his beyng tepted, of his doctrine, of wondres that he wrought, of his death, of his beeyng layd in voyce, and wourde of mouthe, and mayest refuse the fablinges of a great sorte whiche doue at this present, under the false counterfeicte name of the gholpell, set out theyr owne peynted sheath: and not thou alone, o Theophilus, (for we doue not wryte these thynges to any one sole person onelye) but also all other personnes, either at this presente tyme beyng, or hereafter to come, whiche either be or shalbe the same in dede, that thou arte called in name, that is to wete, the louers of god: whiche renouncyng and vttrely geuyng vp the deuyll, doue with prest readinesse of beleuyng, and with godlye applying themselues, sue to the frendeship of god: and the whiche despising alwell the ciuilles as also the good thynges of this transitory worlde, do bend al their desyre to those thynges, that are euerlastyng and heauenly.

Theophilus is Greke is in englishe the louer of god.

The first Chapter.

When the tyme by the purpose and appoyntemente of God prefixed, and by loondrye sage sawes of the Prophetes aforetolde and promised, and by the space of so many hundred yeres, greatly wished for of holy and deuout people, was now come, that the sonne of God shoulde take vpon hym the nature of manne, for to redeme mankynde by his death, and alwell by his doctrine as also by his example of doyng, for to enstructe vs towardes the knowledge of the trueth, and the earnest loue and desyre of the godlye trade of the gholpell, and finally by his promyses for to set vp oure hertes towardes the hope of the lyfe euerlastyng in heauen: for because all this same that was to bee doen was straunge, nor the lyke heard of, in any age or tyme afore, (the wysedome of god by secrete wayes and meanes ordeyning all thynges) there was leate passe no poynte at all of any tokens or euident signes, whiche mighte to a matter of it selfe incredible, purchase credite, and cause it to bee beleued among men. For who hath euer heard a man to haue been borne of a woman on earth, which should for euermore reigne God in heauen? The hystories euen of the Gentiles also be full of straunge thinges that haue happened against the comon course of nature. In the bokes of the olde testament we learne that fyer hath been cast downe from heauen: we learne the sea to haue opened and deuided it selfe into twoo partes: water to haue been gotten foorth of a drie stone by touchyng it with a long rodde, and deade menne to haue been restored agayne to lyfe. But who hath euer hearde a virgin to haue brought foorth a chylde without mans helpe. Yet in dede the chiefe article of our saluacion it was, that this same point were to all persones throughly perswaded, that is to wete, Jesus to be the same Messias, whose cummyng, all foretellynges of the Prophetes had promysed, and whom all the lawes of Moyses had by waye of a shadowe expressed, and of whome onely all persons muste hope and truste to haue theyr saluacion.

¶ There was in the dayes of Herode the kyng of Jewry, a certayne priest named Zacharie, of the course of Abia, and his wyfe of the doughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth. The texte.

Wherfore by the high wysedome and prouidence of god, there was one prepared, the whiche beyng for his owne parte also borne into this worlde after a woonderfull straunge sorte, shoulde goe before the heauenly chylde bearing of

the virgin Marie: and the which through the nobleneſſe of his linage, through ſuche his holyneſſe of liuing as had not afore that tyme bene hearde of, and by his auctoritie, through his rare gyftes of grace gotten among all the people, might vnto Chriſt beyng not yet borne, procure the Lyſt knoweleage and faith among the Iewes whiche were harde of beliefe euen as the doctrine of the goſpel (wherof Chriſt was the heade, the firſte founder, and firſte byrynger vp) was at the firſte beginnyng made acceptable vnto the worlde, by the teſtimonye of the olde lawe, the figure of the whiche olde lawe, Zacharie and Iohn did repreſent. But in ſhorte proceſſe of tyme, (the courſe of thynges beeyng chaunged a contrarie waie) lyke as Chriſt whan his vertues & gyftes of grace were ſhewed forth, did derken the glorye of Iohn: ſo the brightneſſe of the maieſtie of the ghoſpell, as ſoone as it once opened it ſelfe vnto the worlde, dyd (as ye woulde ſaie) clene abrogate the auctoritie of Moſes lawe. And ſo it was that where Iacob the Patriarke a litle before he ſhoulde dye, beyng endowed with the ſpirite of prophecie, did forſeare betray many thynges which ſhould afterwarde come to paſſe, whan it was now come to the mencioning and namyng of Iuda, (out of whoſe tribe our Lorde Ieſus ſhoulde iſſue and proceede by lineall diſſent) he ſpake theſe wordes of the prophecie, folowyng. The ſceptre (ſayed he) ſhal not be taken from Iuda, ne the head rewler from the thighe of hym, vntyll he come that muſt be ſent, and betray he ſhalbe the expectacion of all nacions. This prophecie did cuidently enough betoken that Meſſias ſhould at ſuche tyme come, whan the people of the Iewes (whiche had afore from tyme to tyme euermore been rewled and gouerned by capitaynes, iudges, kynges, and prieſtes of their owne nacion) ſhould now be ſubiecte to a prince borne in a forayne countrye.

Of Herode the kyng.

And theſame prophecie did al vnder one geue a token, that the grace of the goſpell (whiche the Iewes would deſpyſe and ſette at nought) ſhoulde paſſe and go from theim vnto the Gemyles. But firſte of all others, Herode the ſonne of Antipater, whereas he was neyther deſcended of the bloud of the Iewes, and yet was beſide ſorth an vngodly and a wicked perſon, was not onlye entraunchiſed and called to the honour to be a denizen of the countrey of Iewrie, but alſo through the fauour of Ceaſar Auguſtus than Emperour of Rome, obteyned the kyngdome and rewle ouer the Iewes. Therfore euen by this token alone, (though there had been no mo, nor no other) the Scribes and the Phariſees, (whiche tooke vpon them the exacte and perfite knowleage of the lawe,) might haue geaſſed, that the tyme was now come, whan that ſame man ſhould bee borne, who deſtroyng and vanquiſhyng all terrene or yearthly kyngdomes, ſhould bryng into the worlde an heauenly kyngdome, and whiche in the place and ſtede of tyrannes, ſhould create paſtours, and in ſtede of lordely maiſters, ſhould make tender fathers. Furthermore whereas the dignitie of the Iudaicall prieſthoode was in exceadyng high honour and in wondereful eſtimacion emong al perſones: the holy ghoſt had by the prophetes declared afore, that this prieſthood alſo of the Iewes ſhould be abrogated and abolyſhed, after that he were once come, the whiche not beeyng enoynted by men with materiall or bodelye oyle, but beeyng enoynted by God in ſpirite with the oyle celeſtiall, ſhoulde through a ſacrifice (beeyng in dede no mo but one ſole ſacrifice, but theſame neuertheleſſe a ſacrifice of moſte abſolute efficacie & vertue) take awaye all the ſynnes of the worlde: and ſhould through the feyth of the goſpell, and the bountyous geuyng of the ſpirite of God, ſanctifie and make holy all thynges.

For

For Daniel had prophecied, that after the wrekes or seuen doubles of yeres, Daniel. 9. that is to say, after seuen times seuen yeres by God prefixed, it should come to passe, that the holy of all holyes should be enoincted, and than from thenceforth should the hostes and sacrifices of the olde lawe ceasse. When the thyn-ges eternall shall be once come, thynges transitorye shall haue an ende: when ghostely thynges shall be come, thynges carnall shall ceasse: when the trueth shall be come, feyned counterfeytes shall geue place: when the lyght shall be come, shadowes & darkenesse shall banische away: when Christe shall haue begonne to speake, the voice of the grosse lawe shall playe mum, vntill that it too, do openly professe hym, whom vntill nowe, it did rather (as who should saye) with certain tokens of becking, nod at, or poynte vnto, the by expresse wordes pronounce and declare to be he. At suche tyme therfore as Herode, beyng first a forreinour and an aliene borne, and secondarily a wicked person, and with many manslaughters and hainous murders, polluted, had all vnder his rewle and obeisaunce emong the Jewes, not by the authoritie of God, but by the fanour of Ceasar Augustus: & at what time the religion of the Jewishe temple, which consisted in externall figures & ceremonies, did moste chiefly of all flou-rishe emong men: at what time extreme wickednesse & all vngodly factions did before the face of God reigne emong the Scribes, the Pharisees, the elders, & the bishops, vnder the false pretensed colour & cloke of holinesse: euen than dyd the coming of the Lord Jesus, after this sorte as we shall now tel, begyn first to be knowen to the worlde. There was vnder a wicked king a godly priestes, Named Za-euen (as ye would saye) the last remaines that was left of the olde ordre of charie.
priesthood, not beeyng yet corrupted with so many vices: this priestes name was Zachary, whom the ordre of lottes cúming about again by course, did at that present time call to the ministryng of the sacres & holy rites in the temple.
For so had Dauid sorted all the whole ordre of priestes into two principall families, that is to were, of Eleasar, and of Ithamar. The other families being subiect vnto these two, he deuided into fower and twentie lottes, that euerye of them in ordre one after an other, should in theyr courses minister the sacres in the temple, eight daies space a piece: abstéining all that while from all thin-ges, which by the rites of Moyses prescripcion, semed to make a mā vncleane:
refrayning also frō cumpanying with their wiues, nor cumming once within their owne house, but abydyng still in the temple, to the ende that they myght with the more chastitie & with the more puritie handle the seruice of God: but to all the residue of the priestes (besides him whose course it was to minister for that weeke) it was lefull in the meane space to attende to their wiues and their childrē & to be occupied about their owne secular affaires, so that it were thynges necessarie and requisite to be done. And so it was, that whyle this ordre was thus in deuiding by lottes, emong the fower and twentie families, the eight place fell by lotte to Abia, of whom Zacharye was lineally descended, Of the course and into whose place Zachary had by course succeded. All thissame, though it of Abia.
semed to be doen by mere chaunce at auenture, yet was there no one poynte therof, but it was wrought by the high wysedome and prouidence of God, yea not so muche as the very numbre of the course, but it was for a purpose and a consideracion. For lyke as the numbre of seuen for many causes hath the figure & signification of the olde lawe, so doeth the numbre of eight well uenis nowe geuen, not through the workes of the lawe, but freely and frankly through feith. And Zacharie had also a wife named Elizabeth, not only the better to be estemed for the respecte of her noble birth (for she came of ꝑ stocke and blond of Aaron the first prieste of the people of Israell) but also worthie to be had in reuerence and worship for hir integritie and perfecte goodnesse of behaueour, to the intente that suche an holy man as Zacharie was, should not be without a wyfe accordyng.

The texte. ¶ They were both righteouse before God, and so walked in all the commaundementes and ordenaunces of the Lord, that no man could fynde faulte with them. And they had no childe because that Elizabeth was baraine, and they both were now well stricken in age.

For it was in verey dede an holy wedlocke knitte and made vp, not so much by copulacion of their bodies, as by lykenesse of theyr mindes and herres, and by the felowship of godlines, because they were both of them verey good folkes and iust, not with the iustice of the Pharisies (whiche Pharisies vnder a falsse coulour and counterfaite shewe of holynesse, did serre footyth theyr peynted cheathe to the yes of men for lucre and for worldely prayse, defourmyng their faces and makyng them vnlightly for the nons, a troumpette blowyng before them, at all suche times whan they gaue their almes, seking to be estemed holy by reason of long prayers made in corners of the stretes, whan their herte was drouned in all fylthinesse of hainous offences and trespacys against God:) but Zachary and Elizabeth with vncorrupt herres, dyd in suche wyse obserue and kepe all thynges whiche the Lord had commaunded by the lawe: that neyther they gaue vnto men any holde or tytle to fynde faulte with them, and yet (the which is a poynte of no small difficultie) they did also by the puritie and clenesse of their liuyng, shewe themselfes pleasyng in the sight of God. Yea and this verey poynte also was wrought by the high wyfedome of God, of a speciall prouision, to the ende that suche a one as should afterwarde geue testimonie vnto Christe at his cumming, might on his owne behalfe be in all maner degrees worthy acceptacion emong the people of the Iewes: first, for the noblenesse of his linage being descended of the ordre of priesthood aswell on the fathers syde as on the mothers syde: secondarily for the liuyng of both his parentes beyng vnreprouable: thirdly for the vertues & giftes of grace in his owne selfe, beyng wonderfull, and suche as were but in fewe persones to be found: and finally for his glorious deathe, whan he should suffre for the truethes sake. Suche a cryar beryly it was mete ꝑ he should haue, which came to allure to hymselfe the whole worlde, with the sauor, as it were, of the good fame and opinion that should spryng of hym. Furthermore by the prouidence of God, this poynte also was wrought, that the straunge maner of his natiuitie should steere vp the myndes of men to haue a speciall regarde of Iohn: and no suche common matiers or facions as were in other folkes to be looked for at his handes, the whiche was borne into this worlde not after the common course of nature, but by the onely benefite of God. For although the holy conuersacion of Zacharie and Elizabeth was specially well approued & allowed of all persons: yet in this one poynte their godlynesse semed to haue but hard happe, that both of them were verey ferre growen in age without hauing any issue or childe in all their tyme. For emong the Iewes lyke as the fruitfulnesse of matrimonie was reputed for a certayne thyng of great Royalte: so was barainnesse in as muche reproche as any thyng, and was rekoned in the number of the chiefe mischappes and euils of this lyfe. For the moste parte of the people people did interprete and take thole perlons to bee reiected and cast out of the fauour of God, whiche had not had the foztune and happe, with some kynde of issue to encreast and multiplie the people of the Jewes, beeyng a people specially chosen & dedicate vnto God. For the Jewes beyng altogether grosse and carnall, had not yet learned, that a spirituall and ghostely people it was, whiche God would haue by an heauenly generacion styll from tyme to tyme more and more to be multiplied with continuall succession of issue. They had not yet heard that blissed were tho persons, whiche had gelded themselues for the kingdome of heauen. And this matter dyd not a lytle greeue them bothe in theyr mindes, & especially Elizabeth, who was now euen already by a multe reprochefull name in euery bodyes mouth called baraine, and was reknoned in the number of women of hard happe, as one of suche baraineste, that she was nowe past all lykelyhood or hope to haue any chylde, because that verap many yeres hauyng passed in the coumpanie of her wedded housebande, she had yet bzought foozth no fruite of matrimonie. For the reprooche of barainneste is woont moste specially to light on the wome. And this despaire of hauing any chyld, the old age of them both had encreased. But the bountrous goodnesse of God, did of tendre fauour geue vnto the deuoute prayers and desires of theyr hertes, that thyng which the strength and power of nature dyd not geue to the coumpanying of theyr bodyes.

They were both righteouse before God.

Because Elizabeth was barai.

And they bothe were nowe well stricken in age.

And it came to passe, that whan Zacharie executed the priestes office before God, as his turne came, accordyng to the custome of the priestes office, his lotte fell to burne incense. And he wente into the temple of the Lorde, and the whole multitude of the people were without in prayer, whyle the incense was in burnyng.

The texte.

Therfore whan Zacharie executed the office of the prieste in the order of his course, whiche (as we haue sayed) was in the course of Abia: and continuing within the temple in the sight of God, attended the ministryng of the sacres, lyke a pure and a chaste man: and now accordyng to the custome and maner, there was one to be chosen to goe into the innermoste and priuiest place of the temple (which is called Sancta sanctorum, that is to say, the holy of holyes, or the principall holy place) the chaunce of the lotte so fell, that he was chosen to entre into the principall holy place, (which it was not leefull for any person to entre except the bishop, or suche an one as were appointed in the bishops stede) and there on the altare that stood in the secrete inner part of the temple, to lay holy incense made of certayne swete odoures in the olde lawe appointed, that is to wete, of balme, onycha, swete galbanum, and frankyncense of the clerest sorte. For this kinde of sacrifice was estemed emong the Jewes to be the moste holy aboue all others, insomuche that to the seeyng of this sacrifice whan it was in doyng, the lay people were not admitted to come in, no nor yet any of the leuites neither. But al the residue besides the priest that did execute, taried without, beyng separated and diuided from that place with a baile, makyng theyr deuout prayers all the meane whyle, that God would vouchesaue to tarrie the ende of that, that was than in offeryng for the helth & safegarde of the whole people: and so remained they without, vntill the priest after the sacrifice in the inner place cõpleted, came forth againe to the people, to finish the residue of thinges, which to the ordenarie obsequies and rites of sacrifice did appertcine. And the priest did not only pray for the people, but also for himselfe, accordyng vnto the prescripcion of the lawe, as one beeyng a mortall man himselfe aswell as the others, and in daunger of falling into the errours and vices of this worlde.

The texte. And there appeared vnto hym an Iungell of the Lord, standyng on the ryghtsyde of the altare of incense. And whan Zacharie sawe hym, he was abashed, & feare came vpon hym.

Therfore whereas Zacharie had many yeres afore often tymes with moste earneste desires, cryed vnto God to deliuer a sonne from the reproche of barrainesse, as also hymselfe from the griefe & penifulnesse of beyng without issue: yet (not withstanding a certaine despaire of hauyng any children many a day sence conteined in his minde, he did euen at that present tyme with moste ardent prayers, require of God as though he had than been present before his face, the publike redepcion of the people, which had now many hundred yeres been looked for. And in dede the fume of the incense mounting vp from the altare, was cast abrode in the aier on euery syde, but the desire of this deuoute dishoppe, preced vp euen to God, the Iungels carryng it, whose office it is to conueigh vp to almightie God the prayers of the godly, and agayne to bryng downe to vs his bounteouse largesse. An Iungell therfore that had been sente from heauen, stood at the ryght ende of the altare, on which the swete sauours of incense was burned, as one ready to declare some glad tydinges (because thynges that chaunce to be on the ryght syde, haue commonly a luckie signification of some good happe to come.) Zacharie, whan he had soodainly espyed this Iungell shynyng with celestiall brightnesse (for he came not in openly in a bodily fourme as men vse to do, but soodainly and vnware shewed himselfe visible) truly he was sore dismayed in his minde, and taken with a great feare: not that the Iungell made a thewe of any maner thyng to be feared, but for that the infirmitie of mannes body is not able to abyde the maiestie of the spirites or Iungels of heauen.

There appeared vnto hym an Iungell.

Whan Zacharie sawe hym, he was abashed, and feare came vpon hym.

The texte. But the Aungell saied vnto hym: feare not Zacharie, for thy prayer is heard. And thy wyfe Elizabeth shall beare a sonne, and thou shalt cal his name Iohn. And thou shalt haue ioye and gladnesse, and many shall reioyce at the birth of hym. For he shall be great in the syght of the lorde.

But lyke as it is a poynte of mannes weakenesse to fall in a trembelyng and quakyng at the soodaine syght of an Iungell, so is it the propertie of the great goodnesse of them, with ientle and familiar speakyng vnto vs, to take awaye our feare. The Iungell therfore with a gracious looke, and with ientle faire woordes speaking vnto Zachary, saied in this wyse: Zachary, there is no cause why thou shouldest be afeard, but there is cause why thou maiest be glad & ioyfull. For I bryng glad tydinges bothe vnto thee, and to all the people for whom thou art nowe makyng intercession. God hath graunted thy deuoute and godly petition. The same Messias the deliuerer and sauer of hys people, whiche long and many dayes gonne hath been prompted, and many hundred yeres already looked for, is nowe at hande to come in dede. And not only that thyng whiche thou haste made petition for is obteyned: but an other thyng also doeth the goodnesse of God adde to the heape of thy desyres, which thyng thou durst not bee so bolde to aske, because thou were nowe cleane out of all hope that it myght by any possibilitie come to passe. Thou madest petition for the redeiner of the worlde: thou shalt receyue also, one that shall declare and publysshe the redeiner vnto the worlde.

And the Aungell saied.

Feare not. Thy prayer is heard.

Thy wife Elizabeth shall beare a sonne.

The fruitefulnesse of thy wyfe Elizabeth that hathe been hitherto by the wyse dome and prouidence of God delaied and put of, shall bryng vnto the no smal increase of ioyes: and a generall gladnesse of al the people, shalbe coupled beyng the worker and doer of it. In dede thy wyfe shall bryng forth to thee a child, but she shall not bryng forth child to thee alone: she shall bryng forth to the whole people in generall: she shal bryng forth to God, by whose prouidēce all this matter euery whyt of it is tempered and wrought. So muche the more to the wondre of the worlde shall she bryng forth, that it is so ferre past tyme of her ageere she bryng forth: so muche the more to the pleasyng and re-ioyeryng of all parties, that she had no suche hope: so muche the more to her good happe and fortune, that she shall bryng forth a sonne, and not a sonne at all aduentures, but the great publisher, and forgoer, and (as who should say) too, lyke as he shalbe muche inferiour to the other: so shall he in dignitie excell and passe all the reste of the other Prophetes that hitherto haue been. For he shall in veray dede be great, not only in the opinion of men, but also in the eyes of the Lorde, vnto whom no man is great. but by the vertues and gyftes of grace whiche himselfe doeth frankly geue. For he shall be great, not in worldly richesse and ruffleyng porte of this lyfe, or in worldely dominion, but rather by the contempte and despisyng of those thinges, which make certayne persones great in the eyes of men. And the lesse that he shall desyre the commodities

For these filthy delites of sensualitie haue no place in such an one, in whose breste the holy ghost hathe taken possession afore to dwell in: which holy ghost shall repleniche the mynde and soule of thy sonne euen whyle he lyeth secrete within the enclosure of his mothers woombe, that he may play the parte of a Prophete in gesture, before he be able to haue any vtteraunce of woordes by speakyng. And in short processe of yeres, whan the gyftes of the spirite of God shall haue growen as his yeres and age shall do, he shall worke woondres: on the one syde, by the exaumple of his moste holy life, and on the other syde, through suche his preachyng as men shall marueyle at. For (accordyng to the prophecie of Malachias,) many of the children of Israel breyng fallen from the fauour of God, (by reason that whyle they bearyng themselues bolde on the carnall lawe, tooke no regarde to do those thynges, whiche the figures of the lawe do signifie) he shall conuerte to theyr Lord God, preaching with great frankenesse and plainnesse, the kyngdome of God to be at hande: exhortyng them to the repentaunce emendyng of theyr former lyfe: makyng without warde baptisyng in water, a foreprofet to the abolishyng of synne, whiche abolishyng of synne was to come through Messias: and finally vnto all persons openly shewyng that same manne, whom God for this purpose would shortly after send into the worlde, that by hym alone and onely, euerlastyng saluacion should come vnto all men. Thissame Messias shall first come as a poore humble mā of lowe degree, to the ende that he may conferre a gene euerlastyng saluacion vnto all persons putting their trust & affiaunce in hym. Then afterwardes shall he ecthones come in maiestie to geue rewardes vnto euery one accordyng to their dedes, that is to weete, to the good and the godly euerlastyng lyfe, and to the vnbeleuyng and wiked persons euerlasting death.

Many of the children of Israel shall be turne to their Lord.

Malachi. iiii.

And lyke as by Malachias prophecie, Helias shall be the forerenneagier of his second cumming, to prepare the heartes of mē by his preaching, agaynst that same great and terrible daye of the Lorde, ryght so shall thy sonne be the forerenneagier of the former cummyng, in whiche God by his sonne Messias shall descend downe into the yearth, to lure & prouoke all persons in generall without exception, by Johns preaching, vnto the knowledge and loue of himselfe. And for this poynte he shall of a great many, be thought to be Helias. Neyther shall he without good cause be sayd to be Helias, in that he shall in the spirite and power of Helias come before the cummyng of the Lorde, to the ende that (as the Prophete Malachias hath wrytten) he may turne the hartes of the fathers to the children: wher by the Jewes, who haue so farre growē out of kynde and fallen from the holy trade of their forefathers, may amende, and come agayne to better grace: and that the same Jewes beleuyng in the woordes of Messias (by whom God shall speake vnto them) may truely deserue to bee called the children of Abraham, in that they folowe the prompte readynesse of beleuyng, whiche was in Abraham: and also that suche persons, as whyle they cleaue fast to the outwarde ryndē or barke of the lawe, do not vnderstand the minde and effectuall pith of the lawe, he may conuerte and bryng vnto the wysedome of the iust, whiche haue learned, that vnder the letter playsterer or pergetyng of the lawe, there lyeth hydden some higher pointe, and some holyer matter, the whiche shall ere long, be vttered abrode by the preaching of Messias, who shall perfectely accomplyche and fulfyll the lawe in the right kynde as it ought to be, but thy sonne beeyng as a ware leader vnto the Iewes

wenly preaching of chriſtiane Meſſias, ſhall prepare the heartes of menne, that he may deliuer vp vnto Meſſias at his cumming, a people not vtterlye vnpre-pared or vnentred in his diſcipline, but ſomewhat prepared alreadi, and inſtruc-ted therunto with the agnilyng and knowledgyng of theyr owne ſynfulneſſe, with the expectacion of the kyngdom of heauen, and with feling a great miſſe and lacke of the Meſſias to come. For ſo was it thought beſt vnto almyghtye God, by caſtyng forth of all, certeine entreinges and principles, to bryng man, whiche had been fallen to vtter ignorannce and wickednelſe, a lytle and a lytle by degrees, vp to the highelt poynes of godly perfection. Do make redy a per-fect people vnto the Lorde.

And Zacharie ſayed vnto the Aungell: by what token ſhall I knowe this? For I am olde, and my wyfe is well ſtricken in age. And the Aungell aunſwered, and ſayed vnto hym: I am Gabriell that do ſtand in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeake vnto the, and to ſhewe the theſe glad tydynges. And beholde, thou ſhalt be dumme, and not hable to ſpeake vntyll the daye that theſe thynges come to paſſe, becauſe thou diddeſt not beleue my woordes whiche ſhalbe fulfilled in theyr tyme. The texte.

The Aungell bſyng all thiſſame frendely talke, Zacharie hath nowe putte awaye the feare that he was in. But forbecauſe it were great high poynes that the Aungell promyſed, and by courſe of nature, not credible: Zacharye bothe after the maner and vſe of the Iewes, and alſo repreſentyng a figure of theyr Synagoge, requireth to haue ſome matter of weight to be annexed to the promiſes, by ſome euidente token, to the ende that one miracle ſhoulde ob-tayne aſſured credite vnto an other. Wherfore he aunſwered, and ſpake vnto the Aungell in this ſorte. By what preſente token nowe out of hande maye I knowe, that thiſſame whiche thou doeſt promyſe to come, is a matter of per-frite certaynte? For other wyſe the very feleyng of nature ſayeth the contrarye. For I for my parte am already a beray ged man: and my wyfe alſo is alre-dye ouer ſore ſtricken in yeres, to haue any childbearing hoped for of her bo-dye. Howe ſhall that thyng nowe chaunce vnto me and her, beyng both of vs olde and paſt hauyng any fruite, the whiche dyd not chaunce vnto vs whan we were young, and in perfeite luſtineſſe of our bodyes? Then ſayed the Aun-gell agayne: If a mortall man beyng ſent from another mortall man ſhould promiſe vnto the ſuche thynges as theſe, thou mighteſt well, and not without good cauſe, doubt of the promyſe. For I graunt that thiſſame thyng, whiche I promyſe, is aboue mans power, and aboue the common ordre and courſe of nature. But neyther is it poſſible for an Aungell to bryng a meſſage of ba-nitie, nor any thyng there is ſo incredible among menne, but that God can ea-ſily perfourme it vnto them, that beleue in his promiſſes. For I am olde and my wyfe is wel ſtricken in age, &c.

For I am thesame Aungell Gabriell, many yeres gone, ſente to the Prophete Daniell, the whiche from tyme to tyme do ſtande in the ſight of God, among the ſeuen prycipall ſeruitours of heauen, in a readyneſſe to do all maner obe-dient ſeruice at the wyll and pleaſure of God: and at this preſent tyme eſpeci-ally deputed and appoynted by God vnto this office, to bee the meſſagier be-twene God and man in this preſent matter, then the whiche, neuer was there at any tyme any other acte done, moze greatter, or moze to be meruayled at. Therfore that thou maieſt not be in any maner diſtruſte, it is God that is the maker of this promiſe: and I the meſſagier ſent from theſame, to make rela-tion of the matter vnto thee, and to bryng thee glad tidynges. I am Ga-briell that ſtande i the preſence of God.

And ſence thou dooeſt ſo muche require, thou ſhalt haue geuen vnto

And behold thou shalt be dumme.

there, that shall both bee a true token of the promyse in tyme cummyng to bee performed, and also a punishemente for thy mystruste vnto at this presente declared. Behold, thou shalt soodainly, euē from this instant become dumme, nor shalt not haue power to bryng a woorde out of thy mouthe, vntyll thy sonne beyng borne into this worlde, shall haue discharged my credite and promise, of the which there ought not any doubt to haue been made on thy behalf. For the tyme is nowe at hande, that the Synagoge whiche is so harde to be brought to beleue, shall kepe silence, and no persons shall haue tong to speake with at libertie, sauyng onely suche as with ready towardnes to beleue, shall obey and folowe the preachyng of the ghospell.

The texte. And the people were awaiting for Zacharie, and meruelled that he taried in the temple. And when he came furth, he could not speake vnto them. And they perceyued that he had seen a vision in the temple. And he beckened vnto them, and remained dumme.

Whyle these thynges were in doyng betwene Zacharie and the Aungell, within the innermoste tabernacle of the temple, all the whole body of the people stode awaytng and lokyng, that the priest should come forth accordyng as the maner was, to execute and minister the rest of the rites that were yet to bee done abrode in the presence of the multitude. And truely they were stricken in a great wonder, that he made suche tarying in the tabernacle a longer space, then the wonte vse was. At length furth cummeth zacharie, with a countenaunce in dede, shewyng an vnwoonte gladnes, but the vse of his speache cleane taken from him. By the whiche thinges the people right well vnderstood, that some vision had appered vnto him while he was within. For the presence and beyng together with any parte of the maiestie of God, or with any Aungell of heauen, is wonte to make a great alteracion in the state and moode of a mortall mans face and countenaunce, as in olde tyme it chaunced also vnto Moyses. And whan he had no power to speake with his tongue, he wrought by signes and tokens of poyntyng and noddyng with his head, whiche was, that the sacrifice had been done to the contentacion of God, and that God was highly pleased therwith, and that they should therfore rendre thankes vnto hym, in that he had graciously heard the deuout prayers of his seruauntes.

And then dyd zacharie (euen dumme as he was) remayne still within the temple executyng his office in ministryng the sacres, vntyll the number of his eighte daies were completed & ended. The people of the Iewes, all that meane while duryng, had a priestе that could not speake, as an inckling and a token of the lawe in shorte processe of tyme afterward to ceasse, and to geue place vnto him, whiche bryngyng the trueth abrode to lyght, should putte awaye all the dowes of thynges, and make them to banishe.

The texte. And so it was, that whan the dayes of his ministryng were expired, he departed into his owne house. And after those dayes, his wyfe Elizabeth conceyued, and hidde her selfe fiue monethes, saying: Thus hath the Lord delt with me in the dayes wherin he hath loked vpon me, to take awaye my reproche emong men.

And after those dayes his wyfe.

But the ordinarie tyme of his ministeryng in the temple beyng expired, zacharie returned home to his owne house: and there, vpon confidence and trust of the Aungels promise, he embraced his barayne & aged wyfe Elizabeth. For here in this case, there was no geuyng of themselues to the wanton desire of the flesshe, but great lacke & desire there was of ỹ child which should bryng the glory

And in the ſixth moneth was the Aungell Gabriel ſent from God into a citie of Galile, The texte.
the name whereof is Nazareth, to a virgin eſpouſed to a man, whoſe name was Joſeph, of the houſe of Dauid, and the name of the virgin was Mary. And the Aungell came in vnto her, & ſayd: Haile thou full of grace, the lorde is with the. Bleſſed art thou among women.

These thinges thus done, it remained, that the holier & greater piece of this miſterie, ſhoulde bee procured by the Aungell, that is to wete, that the ſonne of God beyng God immortall, should of a virgin, beyng a creature subiecte vnto death, bee borne a man mortall: the like wherof neuer had afore ſence the creacion of the World been heard, ne to the laſt ende of the world again ſhould bee heard. Therfore when the tyme from without begynnyng by God prefixed, drewe nere, that God the father would by his ſonne deliuer the whole vniuerſall worlde from the tyrranny of death and of ſynne: he ſent the ſelfſame Aungell Gabriell, as a broker or procurer and a maker vp of this godly copulacion and ioynyng with the ſayed virgin. And this was done in the ſixth moneth after that Elizabeth was conceyued with John. Vnto this heauenly matter there was ſpecially deputed a tendre yong virgyn, not ſet forth to the worlde with aboundaunce of richys or poſſeſſions, not by famouſnes of name, not with pozilyneſſe of lyfe, ne with the other thynges whiche this worlde vſeth to haue in high regarde: but endued with excellente vertues of the minde, the whiche do make a manne acceptable in the ſight of God: that is to ſaye, with puritie of lyfe vndefiled, with maidenly demurenes, and with godly deuocion. Her habitacion was in an homely baſſe little toune of Galile called Nazareth, a people not hyng regarded ne ſet by emong the Jewes. And the virgin was eſpouſed vnto a man of no fame ne poze in any behalfe to the worldes eſtimation: but for his vertues of the mynde, a man to be accepted afore God, a carpenter by occupacion, and his name Joſeph, beyng lineally deſcended of the ſtocke of David, from the which ſtocke of David, ſhe eſpouſed virgin alſo had her progenie, to the ende that the caſe might not diſagree with the prophecie, whiche had promiſed that Meſſias ſhould be borne of the ſtocke of David kyng of Iſrael. And the name of the virgin was Mary. God had for the nons picked out two perſons of lowe degree and of ſmall poure, to thentent that the worlde myght not in this heauenly matter, clayme or chalenge to it ſelfe any poynte or part therof. He had alſo picked out perſons of moſte faultleſſe and moſte pure behauiour, to the ende that no poynte of crymne myght be layed to theyr charge. He had picked out perſons coupled together in chaſte and lefull matrimonie, to thentent partely that the priuetie of a childe to bee borne by a pure virgin myght be ſecrete bityll the due tyme therof: and partly that the caſe beyng other wyſe vnbeleuable, (whiche was, that a virgin had without coumpaynying with any manne brought furth a chylde,) myght not lacke a witneſſe conueniet. At a tyme when this virgin was in her contemplacion within her priuy cloſet (as virginitie loueth to be ſecrete) the Aungell Gabriell apperyng viſible with muche bryghtnes came in vnto her, and hayled her with a ſtraunge loze of ſalutacion. Reſt thou well (ſayth he) and reioyce, o virgin beeyng full of grace, and highly in fauour. Thou haſt the Lorde eyght fauourable vnto thee, and muche thy frende. And therfore ſhalt thou be ſingularly renoumed, and of a laudable name among all women.

And in the ſixth moneth was the Aungell Gabriell ſente from God.

Into a citee of Galile.

And the name of the virgin was Marie.

Haile thou full of grace.

The texte.

¶ When ſhe ſawe him, ſhe was abaſhed at his ſaying: and caſt in her mynde, what maner of ſalutacion this might be. And the Aungell ſayd vnto her: Feare not Mary. For thou haſt found grace afore God. Beholde, thou ſhalt conceyue in thy wombe, and bearе a ſonne, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus. He ſhalbe great, and ſhalbe called the ſonne of the higheſt. And the Lord God ſhall geue vnto him the ſeate of his father David, and he ſhall reigne ouer the houſe of Jacob for euer, and of his kyngdome there ſhalbe none ende.

But the virgin, at the ſodayne ſight of the Aungell, and agayne alſo at the fourme and tenour of his ſalutacion beeyng ſtraunge and ſuche as neuer had bern heard of afore, forasmuche as she on her owne behalfe conceyued no great opinion of her selfe, was right muche dismayed in her minde. For that she was sore adrad at the entreyng of one in the likenesse of a young man not loked for, was a poynte of a certeine verye true maidenly & tender shamefastnesse: that she made not answere out of hande, but cast with herselfe in her mynde, what thyng so straunge and so high a salutacio might meane, was partely a poynte of wysedome, and partely of demure softenesse. But forasmuche as the Iungell right well knewe what she was casting in her mynde, he would not suffre her any longer to stande in doubt or perplexitie: but both toke away her frare with speakyng iently vnto her, and also declared at large the cause of that his vnquod and straunge gretyng. Mary (sayeth he) there is no cause why thou shouldest beafeard. The iewell of thy virginitie and mayden hood, which thou art sigularly in loue withall, is safe vnto the without any daunger of lesyng it. Neyther am I come to please the, or to set the agog with a vaine salutacion: but I am come vnto the as a messagier of a matter both passyng ioyfull, and also verye great. Ponder not thine owne deseртes, Of the mere fauour of god it is that is offered vnto the, & not of thine owne merite. And euen in this verye poynte thou doest please God, that thou standest in no concepte of thy selfe. And the Angell sayth vnto her. Feare not Mary.

And let this suffice the, that thou haste atteyned grace & fauour at Gods hand. And nowe herken a thing neuer heard afore, but yet a true thyng. Thou shalt conceyue a babe in thy woombe, and shalt bryng furth a sonne, and shalt call his name Iesus, because he shall bryng saluacion vnto his people. Beholde, thou shalt conceyue in thy wombe.

And although he shalbe borne in an homely place, and of a mayden ettemed to be of lowe degree: yet by reason of his heauenly gyftes of grace, he shal euery waye be moste greatest: insomuche, that after he shall once be knowen to the worlde, he shalbe called, not by the name of a Prophete, but the sonne of the hyghest. The surname shall be greater then any other manne maye haue. for because the chylde that must be borne, shall ferre surmounte the common rate and degree of mortall mannes state. In this chylde certes wyll the Lord God perfourme and accomplishe the thyng, which the prophecie, being to thee not vnknowen, hath promised. A man borne of the stocke of Dauid shall sit in the throne of his father. He shall not throughe the ayde and mayntenaunce of the worlde, vsurpe or take vpon hym a translatorie dominion and reigne of this worlde: but his heauenly father will geue him the heauenly reigne of Dauid: and he shal reigne ouer the people of Israel for euer without end. Neither shal there euer come any ende of his reigne, as the Prophete Esay hath prophecied. And of his kyngdome there shall be no ende. Esay. ix.

Than sayed Mary vnto the Aungell howe shall this come to passe, seyng that I knowe not any man, and the Aungell answered, and sayd vnto her: The holy ghoste shall come vpon thee, and the power of the highest shall ouershadowe thee. And therfore the holy that shalbe borne, shalbe called the sonne of God. The texte.

The hearte of this virgin did not throughe these so high promises of the Aungell, weaxe any whit the more haulte to take vpon her: neither dyd she of the highnes of the matters conteine any distrust. She conceyued not in her mynde any suche presumpcion, that when her sonne should be a kyng she on her partie also should be made a quene: neyther was she vnknowyng, that nothyng there was of suche high difficultie to bee done, whiche God was not hable with a mere becke to bryng to passe. All her care and thought was onely onely for the loue of her virginitie, on whiche she had so muche set her loue. And therfore she doeth not requyre a token of the Aungell, as Zacharie had done: but doeth with maidenly chamefastnes, and also according to wisedom no more but enquire, to knowe of the Aungell the maner how the thing should be wrought and doen: and maketh answer vnto him in this maner: By what meane or waye shall it come to passe (sayeth she) that I shall byyng furthe a sonne, for as muche as I am in suche sorte espoused to my good man whom I do nowe lyue withall, that yet nenertheleſſe I haue no conuerſation of his bodye, suche as wedlocke requireth: For continencie lyketh vs bothe, and this poynte of vnſyfulneſſe, yf it myght be, we would full faine haue perpetually to endure betweene vs.

Than ſayd Mary to the Aungell, &c.

And the Aungell anſwered, and ſayde vnto her, &c.

The Aungell therfore teacheth howe it should be doen, and taketh awaye from the virgin all doubtfulneſſe concerning her virginitie. O virgin (sayeth the Aungell) nothyng shall in this matter be doen or wrought after the common course of nature. In heauenly chylde bearyng shall it be, and by an heauenly worker shall it from the firſte ende to the laſt be executed. Thou shalt continue in chaſte loue towardes thy chaſte spouse. Fruitefulneſſe of issue the happieſt that euer maye be, shall come to thy lotte without any detrimente or violacion of thy virginitie. For thou hast not an houſband geuen vnto thee for any suche purpoſe, either that he should make thee a mother, or els thou made him a father: but the prouidence of God hath thought good by this meanes to make a sure waye for thy ſafegarde and preſeruacion, for thy good name and fame, for thy virginitie and maidenhood, and for thy conuenient quietneſſe. It was goddes pleasure that an vndoubted witneſſe of this straunge chyldebearyng should be both preſent and aſſiſtente to the thyng: he would in no wyſe, but that thou shouldeſt haue one, who with chaſte and continente lyuyng in thy coumpany, and with all poynres of feithfull fruitefulneſſe, should geue diligent attendaunce aſwell on thee, as on the chylde that is to bee borne: and finally, it was his pleasure, that by this deuiſe + pretence, this miſterie should bee kept ſecrete from the vnbeleeuing sorte, and also kept ſecrete from the wicked ſpirites. And this holy copulacion of the diuine nature with the nature of man, shall not violate thy chaſtitie, but shall make it altogether holy. The father of heauen hath determined, after a straunge sorte, ere sones to begette his sonne on thee. Neither shall there any sede of a manne moreall bee requiſite or nedefull to this diuine concepcion, but the holy ghoſt shall from heuen come downe into thee: and in thy woombe, (as it were in an heauenly workehouſe) shall accompliſhe the worcking of this holy babe: and in ſtede of the bodelye or carnall embracing of an houſeband, the highest shall ouershadow ther, in ſuch wyſe tempering and qualifying his infinite power and vertue to the meaſure and capacitie of mannes nature: that it maye be hable to abyde the metyng together and the conioyning therof. Where filthy luſt is in the carnall copulacion of man and wife, there whatsoeuer is borne, is borne vncleane, and thrall to ſynne. But this that shall be borne of thee, (because it shall be conceyued of the moſte holy embracing of the highest: because it shalbe conceiued by the worcking of the holy ghoſt, who maketh all thynges holy: because it shall be conceiued of a virgin moſte pure, whom of all women God hath purpoſely heretofore picked out, being clere from all ſporte of ſinfulneſſe) shall immediatly be holy as ſoone as it shalbe conceyued. And at the firſt, by reaſon of the humaine body taken of the substaunce of thy body, it shall rightly be called the sonne of a virgin, and the sonne of man: but after the misterye of this byrth once perceiued and understanded, he shall not be called the sonne of Joseph, but the sonne of God: and that truly, not after the common guyse, as iust persons beyng purged from sinnes, & iustified by the free fauour of God, are by adopcion called the sonnes of God: but he shall by a syngular reason and maner, be called the sonne of God, of whom he is in veray true dede double begotten: once without beginning or time, & eternall, of his eternall father: and now in time, mortall, of a mortall mother, and a veray naturall man of a veray woman. And lyke as in this ioynyng together, the diuine nature shall be vnited and knitte with the nature humayne: so shall the chylde resemble the nature bothe of the one parent, whiche is God, and also of the other, whiche is man. This misterie of goddes deuise and conueyaunce is of an higher sorte, then that it may be perceyued euen of the veray Aungels. It is for thee sufficient, to shewe a mynde beliefull and ready to obey. All the residue shall he accomplish and bryng to effecte, who is of power to do whatsoeuer his will is.

¶ And beholde, Elizabeth thy cousyn, she also hath conceyued a sonne in her olde age. And this is the fyft moneth with her that is called barayne. For nothing shalbe vnpossible with God. And Mary sayed: beholde, I am the handmayden of the lorde, be it vnto me according to thy woorde. And the Aungell departed from her. The texte.

And nowe to the ende that both thy ioye may bee moze aboundaunte, and thyne assuraunce of the moze certaintie: take a fresh example euen heray neere at hande. Beholde, thy cousyn Elizabeth, that aged woman, beyng nowe a long tyme of barainnesse vncurable, hath (euen I my selfe beeyng the messagier) otherwise then euer the hoped for, and aboue the power of nature, conceiued a sonne, whiche shall be as a troumpette and an opener of thy chylde bearyng. her beyng conceyued with chylde is now a good while sence of vndoubted certaintie: her bealy is vp, and the chylde is quickened & stirreth within her. For this same is the fyft moneth, sence she hath conceiued which was comonly called by the name of barain, euen before that she was feere stricken in yeres, yea and nowe ferther growen in age, then that she myght hope to haue any issue, although she had not ta fore been barain. This to almighty God hath so been thought good, to thentent that all creatures maye vnderstande, nothyng to be so vnbelieuable enoug menne, whiche the power of God is not able to bryng to effecte, yf it bee his pleasure. As easile shall he geue conception to thee a virgin, as he hath geuen to her beeyng barain, sauyng that it hathe pleased hym, that thy example should be singulare and piecelesse, because thy chylde must be alone without piere. Certayne barain women haue heretofore by the special gyft of God, brought forth childe, but thei haue brought forth nothing but mere men. Neuer hath any virgin yet vnto this daye brought forth childe, nor neuer shall any do after thee, because that he which beyng but one person, shall in himselfe comprehende both the nature of God, and the nature of man, is no moze but once to bee bozne. After that Gabriell had all this sayed, the maiden made answer in fewe woordes. but woordes of such sorte, as might bee a witnesse of exceding great demurenesse coupled with passyng great assiaunce and zele to wardes God. I know it (saieth she) to haue been promysed of the lorde, by the mouth of Esay, that a maiden should conceiue and bryng forth a sonne: For nothing that shalbe vnpossible with God.

And Mary sayed, behold I am the handmaide of the lorde.

and

and I haue no doubte, but that God is able to do all thynges that his wyll is, and that he will not be falſe in his promiſes. That if it hath ſo pleaſed him, to the executyng of this miſterie, to chooſe and depute me, beyng a mayden of the loweſt ſorte and degree of all others, there is nothyng that I can herebye chalenge or claime vnto my ſelfe, either of merite, or els of grace. It ſhall euery whit come of the goodneſſe of God: it ſhall euery whit come of the myghtie power of God. I do nothyng but willyngly offre my ſelfe as an handemayden to the lorde, (vnto whom I am for altogether dedicated) redy to be at all his commaundementes. I do beleue, that thou doeſt promyſe: and I woyſhe that with all ſpede it may fortune vnto me, as thou doeſt promyſe. And euen with the woorde ſpeakyng, that ſame heauenly concernyng of chylde, was without any her feleyng or perceyuing accompliſhed: ſhe had in her woombe the ſonne of God: ſhe was replenished of the holy ghoſt. And anon the Aungell kraſte her. Of this holy communicacion of a virgin with an Aungell, it was the wyll of God to begynne all the matter of reſtoryng mankinde, becauſe that ſame firſt peſtiferous talking of a virgin with the ſerpent, had brought into the woorlde the grounde and matter of manners confuſion and miſchiefe.

Be it vnto me accordyng to thy woorde.

¶ And Mary aroſe vp in thoſe dayes, and went vnto the mountaynes with haſt, into the citie of Juda: and ſhe entred into the houſe of Zacharie, and ſaluted Elizabeth. And ſo it was, that when Elizabeth heard the ſaluacion of Mary, the babe lepte in her woombe. And Elizabeth was filled with the holy ghoſte, and cryed with a loude voyce, and ſayed: bleſſed art thou emong women, and bleſſed is the fruite of thy woombe. And whereof happeneth this ſame vnto me, that the mother of my lorde ſhould come to me? For loe, as ſone as the voyce of thy ſaluacion ſounded in myne eares, the babe leapeth in my woombe for ioy. And bleſſed art thou, that thou haſte beleued: for thoſe thynges ſhalbe perfourmed in thee, whiche haue been bolde thee from the lorde.

Mary beyng vp reaſon of this gyfte of God, become the more ſad and womanlye, and alſo the more tender and readie to do any thyng that ſhe ought to do, becauſe ſhe had of the Aungels woordes, learned Elizabeth to bee with chylde, and this nowe to bee the ſirſte moneth therof: ſhe lefte her owne houſe, and tooke her voyage vppe into the high countrey, and with great ſpede came into the citie of Juda where Zacharie dyd enhabite: and entryng into his houſe, ſhe offred and gaue vnto her couſin Elizabeth, woordes of greting, and how that ſhe did ſtill the reioyce and was verye glad that Elizabeth was with chylde. For true godlyneſſe doeth rather reioyce at the happie fortune of an other bodye, then for the myndе to make baunes or byagges of it owne. Virgynitie loueth ſecrecie: it cummeth not forth of the inmoſte partes of the houſe for any calling, vnleſſe duetie moue it thervnto: and beeyng abrode it maketh haſte, in doyng any poynte of duetie it taketh more layſure. Mary in all her iourney viſited ne ſaluted not one bodye by the waye, but yll ſhe was come to Elizabeth. Neither was that ſame a ſaluacion or greting of the common ſorte. All good happe and diſſolueneſſe dyd of this greteyng eyther other, encreace vnto them both, and the efficacie of the ſpirite of God, dyd in them bothe the more plenteouſly abounde. Mary carryed with her in her woombe the fountayne of all ghoſtely gyftes of grace, and through the inſpiracion of the babe in her bealy, ſhe was not ouercome altogether in caſe that nothyng came out of her harte or her mouth, but onely of God. Therfore it came ſo to paſſe, that as ſoone as the ſaluacion of the virgin Mary had once ſounded in the eares of Elizabeth, the babe, whiche ſhe beyng an aged woman had than in her bealy,

And ſaluted Elizabeth.

dyd leape and spryng, (as ye would say) happyng for ioy and gladnesse, Iohn not yet beyng borne, felte the diuine power of his Lorde but euen in the wombe conceiued: and within the enclosure & tabernacle of his mother & wombe both with gesture magnifie him, whom he should afterwarde set forth & magnifie with his voice. Neither did Elizabeth without fruit perceiue and feele the holy leaping of her litle babe within her. Through her babe enspired from heauen, the mother also is inspired, and altogether is full and whole & dayntly taken with an happy and blissed kinde of infection. Through the voyce of Mary, the heauenly power of God perceth into the babe within the wombe of Elizabeth: and through the babe with this so dayne blastyng so taken, the mother too is addlasted, in suche sorte, that she on her partie also beeyng replenished with the holy ghoste, did not nowe kepe in the ioyes of her herte: (although she had afore kept hee selfe within dooores, and had no talke with her, as one that would not for shame be acknowen to be conceyued with chylde:) but with a mighty great voyce (which voyce her mighty great affection and zele did worke in her) she cryed out, and uttered suche thynges through the motion of the spirite, as she neither could deme of the swellyng of her bealie, ne yet had learned of any mortall manne. And euen as though she had heard the Aungell talkyng with Mary, thus doeth she beginne her gratulacion. O happy and blissed mayden (sayeth she) thou shalt haue and enioy the chiefe prayse emong all women worthy commendacion. And holy is the fruite also of thy bitginly wombe, out of whiche shall come forth that same woondrefull floure, who by the voyce of all nacions, shall be preached throughout all the whole vniuersall worlde: of whom long and many a day gone, the Prophetes haue prophecied: and he shal haue the chiefe laude and prayse emong all thynges, bothe that are in heauen, and that are in yearth. I acknowlage it to bee a greater thyng, and of more excellencie, then a mortall man, that thou beareste enclosed within the chambre and tabernacle of thy wombe. If age or yeres only be esteemed in vs twaine, it is not vnmete for a young damisell or mayden to come to an aged woma: but if the dignitie or worthynesse of both our babes that we go withall, be compared: it had been my duetie in all haste to come and visite thee. I truly on my parte was happie and fortunate enough, with this benefite of God, that I go with a chylde, the whiche shall in tyme to come, be a person of no small dignite and estimacion: but of what my bestrete is so great happinesse chaunced vnto me, that the whiche muste bee the mother of my Lorde, shoulde thus of her owne accorde take paines to come to me? for by an vndoubted token I felt the cumming hither of my Lorde. For lo, immediately when the voyce of thy salutacion sounded in mine eares, I felt my young chylde skiere and leape vp in my wombe, as one the whyng an earnest desire, and gladnesse to go mete his Lorde, and to do vnto him his bounden duetie of reuerence and homage. And thou too forsouth beeyng a mother, doest not vnlyke to the chylde in thy bealie, for he beyng the Lorde and maister, doeth vouchesafe to come see hys seruaunte, of purpose to sanctifie hym, and to replenysche hym with the holye ghoste: and thou beeyng so ferre the superiour in dignitie, doest not thynke it painfull to come to me that am thyne inferiour: so muche the more lo welye behauyng thy selfe, as thou doest surmounte and excelle in heauenly gyftes of grace, wyhiche gyftes, thou doest beray well, in that thou doest not impute them to thyne owne merites, forasmuche as they are thynges geuen thee of

And so it was, that why Elizabeth with, heard the salutacion of Marie. &c.

And bleſſed art thou that haſte beleued. the free bountifulneſſe of God. And certes in this behalfe art thou much happie, for that thou diddeſt not miſtruſt the promiſſes of the Iungell, though they ſeme vnſtable ſo muche vnlykely to be beleued. Thou haſte conceyued without helpe of man, and doubt is there none, but that the reſidue of thynges whiche the Iungell hath promiſed vnto thee in the lordes name, ſhal with ſtedfaſt truetie and ſurrtie be performed vnto thee.

The texte. ¶ And Marie ſayed: My ſoule magnifieth the Lorde: and my ſpirite hath reioyced in God my ſauiour.

Whan Elizabeth had by the ſpirite of prophecie ſpoken theſe wordes, Mary alſo, (who through mayden ly ſhamefaſtneſſe had hitherto cōceled the ioyes of her harte,) being now ſodainly rauiſhed with the holy ſpirite of God, of whom ſhe was full and had been a good whyle erſt, could no longer temper herſelfe ne forbeare, but that with an himne of reioycing and thankes geuing, ſhe muſt braſte out into the laude and prayſe of God, to whoſe goodneſſe it is to be attributed, whatſoeuer high or eſpeciall good thyng doeth chaunce to manne or woman of this worlde. O Elizabeth, ſayeth ſhe not without good cauſe doeſt thou reioyce in my behalfe: but yet this ſtanneth euery whit of the gyfte of God, yea and of his free gyfte, and not one iote of it there is, that I can preſumptuouſly impute to myne owne deſertes. And therfore not my tongue onely, but alſo my ſoule, acknowledging it owne weakneſſe, doth euen from the botome of my harte rootes, magnifie & exalte the lorde with prayſes: and howe muche the leſſe of merite it acknowlageth in it ſelfe, ſo muche more vehemently doeth it mervayle at the greatneſſe of Goddes benefites. I haue cauſe wherfore to geue hym thankes, I haue cauſe why to talke largely of his beneficiall goodneſſe, but cauſe haue I none wherfore to reioyce to my ſelfe warde. Yet neuertheleſſe my ſpirite beeyng enflamed with the ſpirite of God, doeth for ioy not poſſible to be vttred in wordes, ſkyp and leape within my body, not in it ſelfe, but in God, who is both to me and to all perſons the onely cauſe and worker of all ſaluacion.

My ſoule magnifieth the Lorde.

And my ſpirite hath reioyced in God my ſauiour.

The texte. For he hath loked vpon the lowe degree of his handemayden: for behold, from henceforthe ſhall all generacions call me bleſſed: becauſe he that is mighty hathe done great thynges for me, and holy is his name.

For whereas I was the moſte abiecte of all women, yet he of his owne mere goodneſſe, hath caſt a mercifull eye on his poore handemayde beyng of lowe degree, and hath vouchefaued to geue me ſuche a great and high gyfte, that from this time fourthwarde accordyng to the woordes of the aūs of the Iungell, I ſhall in folkes talke, be called a woman moſte happie & fortunate, not onely of the Iewes that are nowe at this preſent daye aliue, but alſo in all yeres and ages to come, and of all nacions of the whole worlde, to whom a ſauiour ſhall happen to be borne of my bodye. For we maye truly be called happie & bliſſed in anyſuche thyng as is beſtowed vpon vs, not by meanes of our owne induſtrye, not for our owne merites, but of the free fauour of God. All the laude and prayſe therfore of this happie fortune, ſhall redounde to hys laude and commendacion, that hath freely conferred & geuen the ſame. I ſhalbe reputed happie and bliſſed, but yet happie through his mere bountie & goodneſſe. And what ſhall the nacions of the whole worlde in all the proceſſe of yeares to come talke of me? verayly that he whiche by his exceedyng great power is hable to doe all thynges, hath in me beeyng the meaneſt of all maydens, wrought wrought and performed a thyng wonderous, and such as neuer tofore hath been hearde of. And therfore shall my name be numbred emong the wemen of good happe: but his name shall euerie where bee holye, and to be adoured and worshypped: at the which name euery knee of thinges heauenly, yearthly, and also infernall, shal humble it selfe and bough downe: and through which name onely, saluacion shall come to the vniuersall worlde. For the profession of thys name, shall perfectlye geue saluacion and holinesse vnto all creatures. At the callyng on of thys name, shall diseases be driuen awaye, venomes shall leese theyr strength, deuils shal flee, and dead bodyes shall reuiue agayne.

From hence forthe ſhall all generacions call me bleſſed.

Becauſe he that is mighty hathe done great thynges for me.

And hys mercy endureth from generacion to generacion vpon them that feare hym. The texte.

And this also shalbe a thyng of free gifte and mere gratuitie, and not of dette or duetie: it shall bee of mercie, and not of merite: whyche he shall moste largely poure forth, not onely to the nacion of the Iewes, which hath looked for hys cummyng to themselues and no mo, ne to one age alone, but his mercy shall spreade abrode euery waye, and issue from nacion to nacion, vnto the verie ende of the worlde, and from age to age vntyll the laste daye of thys worlde. In dede the Israelites only were once they that looked for this saluacio whyche was promysed by the prophetes: but whatsoeuer person (in what nacion soeuer it be) hath forsaken vices, and beginneth to haue in him the feare of god, the same shall be reconed in the felowshyp and brotherhed of ỹ Israelites. This saluacion shall extende vnto all suche, as myldlyng themselues, shall submitte them throughe feyth vnto the lord, whether they be Grekes, or Frenchemenne, or Englishemen, or Scithians. And contrary wyse, suche persones as puttyng theyr affiaunce and trust in their owne dedes shall proudely sette by themselues agaynst the greatnesse of god: shallbe repelled and put away from the felowshyp and partakyng of this benefite, yea though they shal be descended euen of Abrahames owne selfe, or els of Dauid. For this benefite of god is not bestowed or geuen, eyther for the valuacion of substaunce and ryches, or for the estimacion of kynred, or for the woorkes of the lawe, or for anye other deserues or ablyng of manners power, but by the commendacion of an humble herte, & an herte that is lowly in it selfe, that it is so corrupt, & suche an herte, as throughe syncere and perfect feyth, dependeth on goddes mere mercye.

He hath shewed strength in hys arme, he hath scattered the proude in the imagination of their owne harte. The texte

For god beyng in mynde and wyll to caste downe the arrogant presumcion of worldly wysedome and power, hath stretched forth the strength and puissaunce of hys arme throughe his sonne beeyng nowe brought in flate and fourme of humilitee: and the wisedome of this worlde he hathe made folyshe, and banquished: declaryng hymselfe euen whan he doothe humble hymselfe moste lowly of all, yet neuertheleese to be of moze myght and puissaunce, then the hyghelle state emperiall of all worldlye power: and that same whiche in hym semeth folyshe, to bee moze wyse then anye wysedome of this worlde be it neuer so wonderfull greate. Yea and those persones, who bearyng themselues bolde on theyr owne wisedome, and trustyng in theyr owne power haue hurdely lyfted vp theyr neckes agaynst god, he hath wonderfully disperpled & scattered with theyr verye owne deuises and appoyntmentes, accordyng as he had long afore promised by the prophet, saiyng: I wyl take and enfnare the wyse in their owne wisedome. For whyle they do with their subtyle wyly-nesse striue agaynst the purpose & worckyng of God, they haue both bewrayed theyr owne foolishenesse, and also vnawares renounced the sapience of God. And whyle they do by the mayntenaunce and supportation of thys worlde, attempt and labour to oppresse the ordinaunce of God, theri haue declared, howe much vnhable this worlde is, any thyng at all to doe against the puissaunce of

He hath put downe the myghty from their seate, and exalted them of lowe degree,

So, (the course of thynges beeyng chaunged the contrary way,) suche persones, as afore tymes sate lyke men of hye estate in theyr thrones puffed in pryde of theyr worldly wisedome, and to be feared as touchyng the power and authoritie of man, he hath plucked downe out of theyr high seate: & suche as to the worldward were of low degree, those hath the bounteous goodnesse of God exalted vp and sette aloft. They that appered to bee in the top of the castell of godlinesse, are manifestly found to be wicked, and they that semed to bee suche as had nothyng to doue with God, nor God with them, are now so daintyly made the children and sonnes of God.

The texte. He hath filled the hongry with good thynges, and the ryche he hath lear gon emptie. His seruaunte Israell he hath taken to hym in remembraunce of hys mercye. Euen as he spake vnto our fathers, Abraham, and to the seede of hym for euer.

Suche persones as acknowelageyng theyr owne vnryghteousnesse did honger the iustice of God, those hath god plenteously filled with hys heauenly treasoures of all goodnesse: and on the other syde, suche as in their owne conceiptes thought themselues to be great ryche men, and hyghly to abounde in good worckes, (and therfore dydde nothyng hunger the grace of the gospell:) those hath he cast of from him, houngrestarued. For circumcision is turned into vncircumcision and vncircumcision hath succeded into the glory and honoure of circumcision. The Israelite borne trustyng to hymselfe, is shut a parte and debarred from the kyngdome of god: and the gentiles are elected and taken to the honour of the children of Abraham. The proude Pharisee is refused & cast of, the harlotes & the lowely publicane is receyued and taken in. The stif standers, and the sturdy holders vp of theyr snoute he hath cast downe: those that laye as outcastes nothyng regarded, and such as were in perill of miscarrying, those he puttyng forth hys mercefull hand hath reised vp and holpen. Suche as had theyr syght, he hath made blynde: and to such as lamented their blindnesse, he hath opened their eyes. To those that acknowelage their infirmitye and sickenesse, he hath geuen health: and suche as in theyr own conceiptes semed to bee perfectly whole, he hath euen leafte to theyr disease. Those that haunted themselfes to be the children of Abraham, he hath plainly declared to bee the children of the deuill: and suche as had no poynte of kynred with Abraham as touchyng the fleashe, those hath he throughe the fayth of the gospell, made the veray true chyldren of Abraham in dede. Those that haunted theimselues by the glorious name of Israell, those hath he renegued and put away from the inheritaunce of the promisses made vnto Israell: but whatsoeuer persone of whatsoeuer nation, whether beeyng bond or beyng free, dyd willyngly offre hymselfe to the ghostely seruyng of God, hym hathe God taken vnto hym, and in euery suche hath he perfectly shewed hys long delayed mercy, which mercy he had afore promysed by his woorde (beeyng vttered by the mouthes of the prophetes) to the people of Israel, whom as a people more derely beloued and fauored fanlyed euen for hys owne tooth, he doeth in the holy scriptures call hys kynsuume. He had neuer been forgetfull of his promysse, but by reason of the long delaye, as though he had forgotten it, desspayre had creped vpon men, but now hathe he euidently declared hymselfe to be in no poynte vnmyndefull of hys people. For this is that same verye true succession of Abraham. This is that same true Israell, whom not the nereneselle of blould dooeth make acceptable to God, but the sincerittie and pureneselle of feith, by which feith onely is God fern. And these thynges are not wrought ne dooen by chaunce or by casualtye, but the thyng is now shewed in facte, which long and many yeres past, God hath promysed vnto our fathers, Abraham, and hys succession. For to Abraham it was sayed: In thy sede shal all nacions be blessed. And to Dauid it was saied: of the fruicte of thy body wyll I sette vpon thy seate. These thinges, long time afore promysed, of good men looked for, and of manye an one despaired, it hath pleased God nowe in these dayes to performe vnto the true posteritye of Abraham, the stocke and kynred of whiche posteritie, shall neuer decaye ne fayle vnto the ende of the worlde. And to the kynd of hym. For euer.

Dys seruaunte Israell he hath taken to hym.

And Marie abode with her aboute three monethes space, and returned again to her owne house. And returned againe to her owne house.

All these thynges which wer yet to come, Marye dydde in the spirite of prophecye, speake foorth in playn wordes, euen as though it had been come to passe and effect already. And than muche lyke aboute the space of three monethes dyd she make her abode with her cousin Elizabeth, coumforting the olde woman bothe with holye and vertuous communication, and also with all louyng and frendly attendaunce. And euen but a litle before the tyme of her sayd cousins deliueraunce, Marie returned home to her own dwelling place again, for on the one syde to helpe playe the midwifes parte at a womans labourre, was no litte nor decent office for a maiden that had neuer borne childe: and on the other syde, she gote her awaye from the great resorte of wromen that were to come shortely after, to be at Elizabethes childe bearyng. The texte. And returned againe to her owne house.

Elizabethes tyme came that she should bee deliuered, and she brought foorth a sonne. And her neighbours and kynsfolke heard how that the Lorde had shewed great mercie vpon her, and they reioyced with her. The texte

And now was the full tyme come, that Elizabeth shoulde bee deliuered of childe. And a sonne in dede borne, did assuredly verifie the promisses of God. The matter was by a common bruite or noyse spred abrode by meane of her neighbours and kynsfolke, whome, euen lyke as the barainneselle of Elizabeth had grieued afore, so dyd it now reioyce the same, that of the greate mercye of God, by reason of a manchylde now borne, the name of a mother hadde happened vnto an olde woman of barainneselle desperate, and seemyng to bee passe all retourye, to whom it had been an happye chaunce to haue brought foorth a wenche, but a muche more luckie happe it was, to haue brought forth a sonne. And euen in thys poynte also appered the promyse of the Iungell, who hadde saied, that it should come to passe, that manye an one shoulde bee gladde in the birth of that childe. For thither came renning many an one, and declared themselfes to reioyce that she had well sped, and hadde brought foorth a sonne. And good reason it was that many shoulde reioyce in the byrth of hym, who hadde been borne to the hygh benefite of a verye great maygnie. And they reioyced with her.

And it fortuned that on the eight daie they came to circumcise the child, and they called The texte

hym Zacharye after the name of hys father. And hys mother makyng answere, said: not so, but he shall bee called John. And they sayd vnto her: there is no man in thy kynred that is called by that name. And they made signes to hys father how he would haue hym named. And he called for writing tables: and wrote saying: John is his name. And they did all meruayll. And immediatly was hys mouth opened and hys tounge also, and he spake and praised God. And feare came vpon all them that dwelt nyghe vnto them. And all these sayinges were noysed abrode throughout all the whole countrey of Jewrye. And all they that heard the same, layed them vp in their hearses, saying: what manner a chylde, trowe ye shall this childe bee? And the hand of the Lorde was with hym.

And they call hym Zachary after the name of his father.

And they sayde vnto her: there is no man in al thy kynred that is called by that name

And they made signes to his father how he would haue him named.

John is his name.

And nowe was come the eyght day after Elizabeths deliuerance, in the whyche day by the prescription, and appoyntement of the lawe, the chylde must bee circumcised, and haue hys name geuen hym. Her kynsfolkes therefore resorted thyther, whiche by the order and course of myght it their partes to see that the childe wer duely circumcised as it ought to bee. And because the chyldes father had hys speche taken from hym, (who commonlye vseth at hys pleasure to appoynte howe the chyld shall be named,) the kynsfolkes supposyng and demyng the father to be of the mynde and wyll, to haue eyther that commonly is woont to bee moste to mennes contentations: called him Zacharie after the name of hys father. But hys mother contrary wyse beeyng taughte that thynge by the inspiracion of the holye ghoste, whyche of her house bande beeyng chaft dumme, she could not learne, contended that he should not be called Zacharye, but John: wherin the holy ghost did signifie, that he which was borne should be a publisher of a newe lawe, whiche newe lawe should abrogate the traditions of men of old time, and should ouerne the carnal vsage thereof, into grace of the spirite. For Zacharias souneth in Hebrue myndefull of the Lorde, and IOCHON hath hys name of grace. The eyghteousnesse of the law old consiste in woorkes prescribed and appoynted: and the eyghteousnesse of the ghospell consisteth in grace thzough feythe. The kinsfolkes did not geue place to the authozitye of the mother, but on the contrarye parte contended that he ought rather to be called zachary, because that in al the flocke of zacharies there was not one that was called John. And in any childe it is a common vse, that the remembzaunce eyther of the father oz of the graunde father, oz of the vncle by the fathers syde, oz of some other nere kinsman, bee renewed. Yea and yet at thys present daye, some suche there bee, whom the name of zacharie dooeth moze delite, then the name of John: thanks to wete suche persones as cannot yet well abyde, that circumcision, newe chaunges of the moone, washynges, holy dayes, fastes, chose oz difference of meates, and sacrifices, should be abolished, euen as it were men in dede and facte crying with open mouthes: The name of John, we will none of it: our olde zacharye will we haue. Foz al muche therefore as the woman that laie in childbed, and her kynsfolkes could not agre, it was requisitie to haue the autozitye of the father to ende this contention. The father had not yet the vse of hys tounge, although it was nowe muche necessaryе foz hym to saye hys mynde. In such sozte therefore as it myght be, he badde beckes and sygnes made vnto hym to declare by some meanes what name it pleased hym to haue geuen to his sonne, Zachary as soone as he vnderstoode the matter, made sygnes to haue writing tables, to thentente he myght by dumme letters, in writyng signifie vnto them the thyng, whiche he had as yet no power with liuely voice to expzelle.

Whan the tables were bzought him he wzote in this wyse. John is his name, signifiyng and meaning that same name to had been geuen vnto him by the Aungell before he was conceyued. And they dyd euery one of them marke woondze, alwell that a straunge newe found name dyd lyke hym, as also that the mother whiche had her tounge at liberty, and the father who couldc not speake did so agree vpon the childes name. And nowe did the tyme draw nere, that the lawe of Moyses should begyn to speake, whiche hytherto onely, by figures and dum paternes, had after a sozte poynted and marked out the grace of the ghospell. The tyme was now come, that beliefe should open the mouth of zacharie, whiche the hardnes of beliefe hadde accozdyng to the promysse of Gabriell, shutte vp. As soone therefore as he had writen in the tables, by and by also was the tyng of his tounge loosed. And the first power that he had to speake, he dyd of none other thyng begyn, but of praisyng Godde, by whose free bounteousnesse so great an heape of toyes had chaunced vnto him. Onles the Jewishe tounge kepe silence, beyng bothe the doctrice and auaunter of carnall obseruatnices, and also an auoucher of mannes tightcousnes, the euangelicall tounge hath no power to speake, which is a preacher, and a setter sozth of grace, of feyth, of charitee, and preacheth not the wozkes of the law, whiche lawe doeth not recouer oz geue vnto any man the prayse of reighteousnesse by hys owne facres, but preacheth the ryghteousnes of God by innocencie freely conferred, and geuen through feyth. But al these thinges, first, of an aged woman beating a chylde, of the straungenesse of the same chyldes name, of a soonne bozne by the promyse of an Aungell, of the father of the chylde fyrste made sodaynly dumme where as he couldc afoze speake wel inough, and than agayn of a dumme man soodaynely made eloquent to the praisyng of God: al thissame was by a bruite and a common rumour spred abzode, not now emōg their kynsfolkes and neyghboures onelye, but also throughoute all that same coaste of Jewry, that is called the hylle countrey, into muche that not onelye a greate woondzeyng, but also a certayne kynd of beyng amased, and of being in a tremblyng feare, (which was conceyued by reason of so many & so vnwont miracles) did possesse the heertes of al folkes in those partyes. For of these pzemaubles they gathered in theyz myndes, that thys chylde whiche was nowe bozne, was lyke in pzocesse of tyme to doe greate thynges, and thynges that had afoze not been heardc of, forasmuche as his conception and birth too, was so soone made notable by woonders and miracles. They saw hys father to be so ferre stryken in age, that he was verap vnlyke to haue been a geatter of children: and as for hys mother, beslydes that she was an olde woman, they sawe her barennesse to be such, that euery body thoughte it paste all hope that euer she shoulde haue bzought forth any childe: they considered the myracle of zacharias speche, whiche had been sodaynly taken from him, and sodainly restozed again, they had heard that the Jungel Gabriel was a wozker & a doer in the matter: they wel perceyued the insperacion of the holy ghost to be both in the father and in the mother of the childe: they perceiued euery whit of the matter to be aboue the common rate and sozte of the birthe of other chyldren, and euery parte therof to haue great tokens of the vertue and power of God. And these poyntes euery bodye in theyz owne herte, earnestely considering and weighyng, saied secretlye within themselfes: what manyer one is thys chylde lyke to bee an other daye: Not one of the Prophetes was bozne after suche a woonderfull straunge sozte. Openly to be shewed and spoken (sayeth he) is the goodnes of God, and with all kyndes of prayisynges to bee magnifyed: who whereas he is the God of all peoples, yet his pleasure was to be of a speciall purpose called the God of Israell, not, as though he were not the Lord of al other nations also, but because it hath pleased hym that the people of Israel shal be a figure of that heauenly people, whiche by renouncyng and despising the yearthlye thynges of thys worlde, doo labour to atteyne and to come vnto that eternal citie of Hierusalem, where God is worshipped with thinges inuisible. That we be deliuered outs of our enemies. &c.

the

Neyther dooe these thinges by chaunce or at aduentures come thus to passe: but the thyng that god doeth nowe perfourme, the same had he many a longe yere sens promysed by the mouthes of al the prophetes, whom he had endewed with his spirit, as many as haue prophecied sens the first creatiō of the world. For he had made promise, that by a captain of might & puissaice, which should one day be sent, we should be saued from our enemyes, and should be deliuered out of the handes of them all, whiche did beare vs suche extreme malice, that they did continually wrastle and laboure to drawe vs vnto deathe euerlasting.

That he would deale mercifully with our fathers, and remember his holy couenante. And that he would perfourme the othe, whiche he swore to our father Abraham, for to geue vs, suche holines and ryghteousnes, as are accepted before him, all the dayes of our lyfe.

And yet was not thys of the meryte or deseruyng of vs, that are nowe at these preſēt dates liuig, to whō god hath perfourmed this same so hygh a benefite: not yet of the deseruing of oure fathers, to whō he had afore promised the same thing which he hath now doen vnto vs. But thus hath it pleased his gracious goodnesse, bounteously to geue this so greate a thyng vnto vs not deseruyng the same. Thus hath it also semed good vnto his ryghteousnesse: at suche time as best pleased hymself, to perfourme the thyng that he had promised, to the intent he might thereby of all creatures bee perceyued to bee not only mercifull and beneficiall, but also true and iuste in keeping hys promisse. For besides his earnest promisse, he did also make a plain bargain and couenaunt with our fathers. For beeyng delited with the woonderfull affiaunce and truste of oure chefe father Abraham towarde hym, (whiche was for greate, that beeyng hymselfe bolde vpon goddes promysse, he made no manner bones ne sticksyng, but wente in hande to offer vp hys onely sonne Isaac in sacrifyce,) he swore by hys owne selfe, to the same Abraham, saiyng in this wise: I make an othe, and do sweare by my verye owne self, because thou hast dooen thys same thyng, and for the respecte of me and my commaundement hast not spared thine onely begotten sonne, I shall blisse thee, and I shall multeiply thy posteritie and issue, as the sterres of the skye, and as the sandes that are liyng on the sea shoores. Thy sede shall possesse the gates of theyr enemies, & thyough the name of thee, shall all nations on the yearth be blissed, because thou hast bene obedient vnto my voice. For in verai dede, this is þ true posteritie and the right sede of Abraham, whiche is obedient vnto God, not by the ceremonies of the lawe, but by the obedience of beleuing in God, who, by the meane of the ghospell, dooethe speake vnto the world. And loe in the botomeles nyght of dispayre is nowe arisen vp vnto vs that same euerlasting sunne: to direct and to set the fete of oure hertes into the waye of the ghospell, whiche is the waye of peace, that throughe faythe and charitye maketh a perfecte agreemente and vnitye betwene god and man: breakyng the stryfe and enmitie that was afore betwene them: knittyng all nations of the world together in the profession of one name, and of one fayth: and finally in such wise qualifyng and appeasing all the troubleous affections of the mynde, that euery man may be at a perfect laigh of quietnes, and of attonemente within hymselfe.

These thynges did this godly olde man pronounce out of his prophetical breste: and folowing the exaumple of the olde auncient prophetes, dyd in such a playn soze declare and sette forth ỹ same thinges before thei came, as though all together had been euen at that verye presente houre alreadye doorn. And with these so woonderfull begynnynges of the matter, the proceedinges of the same dyd in moste beste wyse agree. For the chylde John whiche had bene after a woondeerful straunge maner borne, like as he grew in body accordyng to the rate of his yeres, euen so did he throughe the inspiracion of God, from time to time, prosper stil better and better in stedfastnes, and strength of the spirit. Neither did he any lōg time kepe himself at home with his father and mother in theyr house, but euen hyandy frō his childhood withdrewe hymself away from the common haunte of people, to the entente that he myghte not take soe much as the least spotte of vnclennesse that maye bee, by coumpaignyng with the multitude, for almuch as he had bene sanctified in his mothers wombe. He neuer dronke wyne nor any other strong drynke, whereby to be distempered: he neuer tasted of any worldly pleasure: he neuer tasted of any worldly honoure. In thys place did he kepe himselfe out of knowelage by the space of manye yeres, here did he lyue in silence, to the ende that whan hys due tyme should be, he might shewe himself, and speake with the more authority. He did not of hys owne head hastily steppe forth to the office of a preacher: but at such tyme as the spirite of God had putte in hys minde to shewe forthe his lyghte, and to open vnto the people of Israel howe greate a man he was: then dyd he streight waies begynne to doore the parte of a foregoer, with no small autority.

And it chaunced in those dayes, that there went out a commaundement from Augustus the Emperoure, that all the worlde shoulde bee taxed. And this taxyng was the fyrste, and executed whan Syrenius was lieutenaunte in Syria. And euery man went vnto hys owne cite to bee taxed. And Joseph also ascended from Galile, out of a citye called Nazareth, into Jewrye, vnto the citye of David whiche is called Bethleem, (because he was of the house and linage of David,) to be taxed, with Mary hys spouse wyfe, whiche was with childe.

THus haste thou heard the woonderfull birthe of John, whiche was as a foregoer to Christe, and as a messagier afore hys comming: nowe haste thou heare the muche more woonderfull birthe of Jesus Christe hymselfe, who shoulde afterwarde bee the onely Prynce of all the whole worlde, and shoulde moue all nacions on the yearth to the profession of his name, not by meane of threatenyng or putting the in feare, but with benefites and with holsome doctryne. By the worldyng thereforse and prousion of God it was so conueighed, that vnder the Emperoure Augustus, (who at that tyme was Lorde of manye countreyes and realmes in all parties of the worlde, and all thynges beeyng euery where in perfecte peace and tranquilitie, held and gouerned the Empire of the Romaines,) al the prouinces and countreyes, as many as helde of the Empire of Rome, shoulde be surueighed and noūbred by the polles, to thentente they myght ackowleage Augustus for theyr Lorde & kyng, and that (as we call it here in Englande) they myght be sworne to be true lege people to themperoure Augustus, & to his successours Emperours of Rome. So wyche thyng god wrought euen of purpole, that it myghte appere howe much wyder in circuite and larger the dominion of Christ did reache, then the dominion of Cesar: and howe muche more quiete and gentle Christes maner of reignyng ouer men is, (who taketh nothyng awaye from vs, & yet geueth vs heauenly thynges too) then þ reigayng of Cesar, who although it lye not in hys power to geue heauenly thynges, yet neuertheleste catcheth awaye our worldly commodities, & by terrot power enforceth men to take hym for theyr kyng, whereas the heauenly Emperour Christe, doth gentilly allure men vnto hym by hys beneficiall goodnes towardes them. That they are regystred or booked booked emong the subiectes of Ceasar, what other thyng doo they, but acknowlage a verai state of seruitude and bondage, and daily find their worldly substaunce pared away and diminished. But they that registre themselues as seruauntes to this newe prince, do receiue perfecte freedome, with a sure warraunte of euerlastyng saluacion. And, fewe wordes to make, the Emperoure Octauius Augustus, although he was emong all the Emperours of Rome, a manne of moste good policie and conueighaunce in passing all his affayres, yet many nacios there wer, which he could not subdue for al his great armies, and for all hys valiaunt men of warre: where as oure capitayne Christe hathe without any force of armes, & without anye garrisons of worldlye puissaunce, gathered together into one churche, as into one kyngdome, all the whole vniuersall worlde, so many sundry languages, so many sundry rites, so many sundry sectes of seruyng this god and that god, of mens owne deuisyng, and soe manye barbarous nacions liuyng in sundrye pryuie corners. But nowe (to goe forth in our matter,) for the executyng of this general serueighe and taxe that shoulde be taken in the countrey of Syria, there was sent aswell by thautorite of Ceasar Augustus, as also by a decree of ỹ whole Senate of Rome, one Quirinus, the rewler and lieutenaute of that pryouince. And this was euen the verey fyrst taxe that euer this rewler toke in Syria, for diuerse and sundry others were taken afterwarde in thesame pryouince within the tyme of thesame mānes being lieutenaunt there. At the cōmaundement thā of Ceasar, whiche this Quirinus had causedto be euerye where proclamed, all persōs take theyr iourney, and goe euery one to theyr owne tribe and hyred that they came of, and to the citie that pryorelye belonged to thelame tribe. And thither reiorted they euerye one to acknowlage Augustus the Emperoure of Rome, for theyr Lord and head gouernour on earth, as the custome was to do. And to it was, that Joleph the spouse of the birgin Marye, whereas he was of the tribe of Juda, and hys wyfe Marye of thelame tribe also, yet neuertheleſſe dwelled in Nazareth: whiche was a poore little citye in Galile. Joleph therfore shutteyng vp hys doores & leauyng his house, reiorted warde his owne tribe, that is to witte, into Jewrye, towardes a litle prearty citie called Bethleem, of kyng Dauids buildyng, because ỹ bothe Joleph & also the birgin Marye, did not onely belong to the tribe of Juda, but also were by lineall descente come of the progenye and stocke of Dauid, of whose seede it was promised that Christ should be. But of all thynges was there no one poynt that chaunced by mere casualtye, your euery whit of it was pictured and purpoſely dooen by the pryouidence and determynacion of god, to thentente that thende and conclusion of all thoge thyngs whiche shoulde in euery behalfe agree with the holye saiynges of the Prophetes, whiche diuided the glory of so great, and so high a matter betwene two cities, that is to were, the kyng of the worlde to be conceiued and bred vp in Nazareth, and thelame king to be borne in Bethleem according to the prophecie. To the same place than dyd the birgin Marye also beeyng great with childe, and nowe euen beray nere her time, accompaigne her spouse husbande Joleph. This birgin thoughe she had a greate bealye, yet refused not to trauaill suche a great iourney with her husband: the feare not to be ill to come in ỹ sight of men kuowyng herselfe in her owne conscience to bee clere from all spotte of synne: she thought not scorne to be obedient and serviceable to her husband, though ỹ tyme was at hande, whan she should be a mother, and bryng forth

¶ And it fortuned, that whyle they wer there, her time was come that she should be deliuered. And she broughte foorth her first begotten sonne, and wrapped him in swadlyng clothes and laied him in a maungier, because there was no roume for them in the ynne.

And so, whyle they by occasion hereof made their abode there for certaine dayes, and remained in the citie of Bethleem: it fortuned that the ful monethes of her goyng with chylde expired, and the time of her deliueraunce was now come, whiche thyng God wrought to thentente it myght the more euidently be knowen and seen to all persones, that he which was then borne there, was naturally verye man in dede. The Lord of heauen and yerth picked out for himselfe to bee borne in a slender and base litle toune, in whiche neuerthelesse he had no house at all: he chose out parentes of the poorest and lowest sorte. It was also his pleasure to be borne in a straunge place frō his own home, to the entente that we should be ashamed both of our pryde, and also of oure auarice, and that we might at leste wyse by his exaumple learne, that mans felicitie is not to bee measured or estemed by these common goodes of thys transitorye worlde, whiche if they bee not taken awaye from vs, yet we fyrst or last are taken awaye from them: but the bliſſe of man to bee estemed by suche good thynges and treasures, as endure for euer: yea and that it myght ferther be a lesson for vs to gather and laye vp treasures to that same countrey ward, to the ende that we maye there continually pe without ende, haue the fruicion of them. For yf we wyll depyghtely make comparison of the matter with true iudgemētes, there was more dignity and high estate, more power, & more maieſtie, in this same moste humble and poore birth of Christ, then in all the pompes, triumphes, and solemne shewes of royaltie, of all the Emperours that euer were.

And the brought forth her fyrst begotte sonne,

Thus than in Bethleem (which is called the house of bread) did this holy yōg virgin bring foorth vnto vs, that same heauenly breade, of whyche whoso eateth, doth neuer dye. And this was that same onely chylde bearyng of a virgin, the like pfelidēt or ensaūple wherof, was neuer afore, nor neuer after folowed. And the chyld was to his mother her onely sonne, and in respect to vs her fyrst begotten, in respecte of vs (I saye) whom he hath in spirite ioyned to himself, and made vs bothe hys brethren and also partakers with hym of hys euerlastyng inheritaunce, because he would not come alone to his father, but he, as the fyrst begotten sonne on his owne partie, would bring with him many mo brethren beſydes hymself to the felowshyp and partakynge of euerlasting saluacion. Now whan this litle babe was borne, the mother did not put it forth to the nourcing of other women, (for on the one syde, for tender motherly loue that she bare to it, she would none other nourtes but herselfe, and on the other syde, by reason of her pouertye she had none,) but her berap owne self with her owne handes, lapped it vp in swadling bādes and cloutes suche as the babde.

And layed hym in a maungier because there was no roume for them in the ynne.

And because that in the common ynne, where hostery and lodgyng was kept, there was by reason of the great resort of welthier geastes, none other roume ne place void for her, beyng but newe deliuered of child, she layd doune her pōg babe in a maunger that was there by, in stede of a cradle. Geue eare thou proud tyche man what euer thou be, that heapeste together possessions and landes vpon landes: and that art in euery corner a builder of houses, of fermeholdes, of mainours, and of palaces. He that is bothe the Lorde and also the maker of of heauen and yearth, and to whome thou thy selfe haste in baptisme professed and acknowleged thy selfe a disciple and seruaunte, is bozne in a straung place from his owne home, and hath not ne canne geat so muche as a litle corner of good roume in a common hostelrie. If thou acknowleage thy soueraigne Lord and maister, whose commaundementes thou hast by a faithful othe bound thy selfe to obey and fulfyll: leate it not greue the to folowe his exaumple, but rather bee thou ashamed of thyne owne pzoude myndе.

And the aungel sayd unto them, be not afrayed: for beholde, I bryng you tydinges of great ioye, that shall come to all people. For unto you is bozne thys daye in the citie of Dauyd, a saluetour, which is Christ the Lorde. And take this for a sygne: ye shall fynde the chylde wrapped in swadyng clothes, and layed in a maungier. And streyght way there was with the angell a multitude of heauenly souldiers praysyng god and sayyng: glozye to god on hygh, and peace on the yearth, and unto men a good wylle.

Yet ben we in what sozte this humble poozenes of birthe is altogether full of all princely royaltye. There was a tour not ferre from Bethleem, called in the Hebzue tounge the toure of Ader, (as ye shoulde saye in Englishe, the toure of the flocke) and it was soe named, because that by reason of the good pasture groudes that late in those parties, there was beray great store of shepe and other cattall pastured there. And in dede of thys toure Ader doeth the Prophete Micheas also make mencyon, lyke as he doeth of Bethleem. There were therfore in those quarters diuerse shepeherdes that watched abzode in p nyght seasons for safegarde of their flockes. Verily euen by the thyng selfe geuyng a good lesson, what thyng byshops ought of their bounden duetye to doe for the helth of the people committed to their spirytuall charge, yf they wyll folow & ensaumple of steppes of Christ the Pzince and head of all shepeherdes. And in the night time was that same most bzight sunne of rightеousnesse bozne, which should on euery syde, put awaye the darkenes of the wozlde. And his pleasure was fyrst of al to haue his byrth knowen, rather to men of low degree, because he was bozne after a poore sozte, and to shepeherdes, because hymselfe was a ghostly pastoure, then to Emperours, to kynges, to rulers oz deputies of coũtreyes, to Pharisеis, to Scribes, to byshops. And loe, sodainly the Aungel Gabriel stoode on high directely ouer their heades, and beside him also a certain straung light sodainly flushed and shone round about the shepeherdes, which was neyther the lyght of the sunne, noz of the moone, ne of any candle. But although thissame were a thyng that semed no lesse then to betoken some good luckye thyng to be toward, yet the shepeherdes, by reason of the bnwonte and sodain miracle, wer all at ons thzoughly taken with a beray great feare. But the Aungel anon taketh away this feare with speakyng amiablte unto them. Bede awaye all feare (sayeth he) there is no cause why ye should dzede. For I bryng you tydinges of great ioye as neuer yet hath bene heard of, do I bryng, not to you onely, but also to all the people of Israel. The godly mouthes of the Prophetes long and many yeres gon had prompted you a saluetour. Many a long yere hath Messias bene loked for. And this night is that same Messias bozne, and bozne he is unto you all. And this is the berayе true Messias, the Pzynce and Lozde of all, a king & a pziest anoynted of God frō abour. And in dede bozne he is in the citie of Dauyd nid called Bethleem, accordyng to the holy saiynges of the Prophetes, euen thilkame verey nyghte. Go ye, and enquire of hym. I wyll geue you a token wherebye he maye be knowen. Go ye to the common Inne, and there shal ye find the litle suckyng babe lapped in swathyng cloutes, and layed doun to rest in a maungier. Allone as Gabriell had thus much layed, immediatly was heard a great multitude of heauenly souldiers, that is to say, of Aungels, who are the ministers and seruauntes of the Lorde keepyng myghtye and puissaunt in battaill, and the which also do warre and fyght for vs agaynst the Princes of this worlde. These Aungels with suche an heauenly armonie and with such a melodious sweete noyse as no tongue can expresse, dyd lyng songes of prayse vnto God, magnifyng and settyng furthe hys vnspeakable loue towardes mankynde, and declaring the great ioye and gladnes that they had conceiued on the behalfe of the same mankinde, to whom so great blissfulnes had through Goddes mere fauour and mercie so happened. And the hymne folowyth which that same heauenly quier of Aungelles with such swete tunes syng all togyther in one cherme, was thys: Glorye on high to god, on yearth peace, and in men good Wille.

For unto you is bozne this daye in the citee of Dauid a saueour which is Christ the Lorde.

Prayfyng God, &c.

Glorye to god on high

Whiche song of the Aungels dothe muche in effecte signifye vnto vs verailye that in thys matter no poynte at al of glorye is due neyther to the Aungelles nor yet to man, but al the whole glorye and laude therof is due vnto the onely goodnes of God, who of hys mercye and loue towardes vs whom he hath created, doeth by wondzefull wayes and conueighaunce prouide for vs from heauen, to the entent that we should wel perceiue, that whatsoeuer thing either for our honoure and auauncement, or els for our helth and saluacion dooeth happpye chaunce vnto vs it cummeth vpon vs from heauen: and that we ought here on yearthe to wishe or desire none other thyng but peace, whiche maye abolyshe

And peace on yearth and to men good wyll.

lynne, and dyng vs into the fauour of God, and the whiche maye knit vs together with mutual loue and charitie of one towardes another. For thilkame is truely the peace, (not of the worlde, but of God) whyche dooeth excede and passe al the compace and reache of mans vnderstanding, and kepe our weigheth all poyntes and degrees of any difficull state that may be in this present worlde. And this peace is freely offred vnto vs through this reconciler and maker of atonemente betwene God and man, not by anye meane or helpe of oure owne merites and deserues, but of the ready and willing goodnes of God towardes vs, whome it hathe pleased after thys woondzefull maner, to prouide for the recouerye and sauyng of mankynd.

The tecte.

¶ And it fortuned, allone as the Aungels wer gone awaye from them into heauen, the shepeherdes sayde one to another, Let vs goe nowe euen vnto Bethleem, and see this thyng that we heare say is happened, whiche the Lord hath shewed vnto vs. And they came with hast and founde Mayre, and Joseph, and the babe layed in a maunger. And when they had seen it, they published abroode the saiyng whyche was told them of that chylde. And al they that hearde it woondzed at those thynges whyche were told them of the shepeherdes. But Mayre kept all those saiynges, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepeherdes returned, praising and laudyng God for al the thynges that they had heard and seen, euen as it was tolde vnto them.

The shepeherdes talke one to another.

The Aungels allone as they had with their moste ioyfull and gladsome noyse begonne vnto the shepherdes with syngyng this song in honour of the childes birth, returned agayne into heauen. This done, the shepeherdes being a sort of good homely plain folkes, came and talked their heades together in counsell, not doubtyng of the wordes that the Angels had spoken, but coueting more fully

to

to knowe the thing that they had heard. Thus therfore spake they emong thē-selues, and sayde one to another: Leat vs dooe as the Aungel hath aduertised vs, leat vs goe hence euen streight to Bethleem, that the thing which we haue with oure eares heard to be happened, we maye euen there presentely see & be-holde with our eyes, to the entent, that we may with the more readie and perfect truth and credite, speake and declare vnto others the thyng that the Lord hath vouchesalued to geue vs knowelage of, by his Aungels. This godly de-uise lyked them all.

Let vs goe now eue by to Bethlem and see thys thyng &c

And so furth on they? way go the shepherdes with all haste: deuocion, and godly zeale was a spurre to they? heartes to pricke them forewarde: auon were they come to Bethleem, & come they were into the vyne appoynted. And there (euen as the Angel had promised) they finde Marie newly deliuered of childe, and Joseph a witnes of the virgins deliuerance, and the babe also bound vp in swathyng clothes, and layed therby in a maungier. These deuout and godly shepeherdes are nothyng at all offended, neyther with the bare pouerty of the tender young virgin, nor with her housband beyng to the syght and estimacio of the world a man of the meanest and basest sorte, ne yet with the poore, litle babe, whom for defaulte of a more commodious place, the parentes wer faine to laye doune in a maungier, (which thynges would haue made ? proud Pha-riseis and Scribes to take bitter scorne & displeasure at the matter,) but ? shepeherdes are by all these thynges the better confirmed to beleue the matter more stedfastly, whan they by witnesse of they? owne eyes perfectly knewe & founde that it wer no fables ne lyes that the Aungel had tolde them tydynges of. And here maye we note, that tender loue and zele towardes God, hath in all persones (be they neuer so slender or lowe of degree) a certain wisdome and worldly cast of it owne in thynges. For these shepeherdes dyd not euen byandye publish abrode the thyng that they had heard: but assoone as they perfectely knewe the thyng to be certayn and out of doubt: than did they not feare to talke the thyng that they had heard, abrod also emōg other companies. Christ loued to haue the talke of his birthe, and cummyng, fyxte to aryse and begynne of suche reporters, and publishers, as wer men of suche simplicitie and plainnes, that no man would suspect or mystrust any of them eyther of fablyng and lying, or els of clokyng and counterfeyting. They hadde no suche wit as to inuent a lye of they? owne braines, they could no skylle to deuise or to put any thyng more the trueth to: but that they had seen, but the thyng that they had heard and seen, euen as they had heard and seen it euen so and none other wyse dyd they shewe tidinges of it vnto mē of good heartes and disposicions. And among so smal number of menne, did the wordes of the shepeherdes fynd credence, in so muche that it made a great mayntē berape desirouse and fayne to haue a syght of the thyng. And here in thys behalf marke thou and consider the wise soberne & and demurenes of the holy tender virgin Mary. She learneth of the shepeherdes what newes the Aungels tolde them, and what song the quier of the heauenly souldiers did syng, and she alone on her owne partie, holdeth her peace, keping close in her brest, and with diligente consideracion weighing and conferring in her owne hearte, all these thynges that had forturned as well now at this present, as also afore whan the Aungell appered vnto her selfe. She kepeth secret (vntyl the due tyme should come to open it,) all the misterye of her breyng conceyued with chylde, she was yet a pure virgine, she maketh no bauntes ne bragges

And whan they had hearde it, &c.

But Marie kept al those sayinges. &c braggest in companye emong other folkes, of her happy fortune. She hadde afore vnto the Iungell Gabriel, prompsed herselfe a readye handemayden for God to worke hys wyl vpon, and euen lyke an humble handmayden she vseth herselfe. She maketh no woordes at all, but depelye considereth in her mind, the straunge course of Goddes weorkyng and dirke in thys matter. She considereth all thynges to bee full of straunge miracles, she seeth in euery parte of it two extreme contraries myngled together, that is to were, on the worldes behalfe exceadyng lownes, pouerty, and abiection, and on Goddes behalf vnestimable highnes and maiestie. For a young babe is conceiued in the wombe, but an Iungell was the messagier that so it should be, and the holy ghost the worker of it: A chylde is borne, but the mother of it, is a mayde: it is laied in a maungier, but the Iungels beeyng full of all godly reioyyng doe syng from heauen in honor of it. It lyeth vnknowen in a blynde corner of no regarde, but all heauen boughteth downe to worschyp the maiestye of it, alsoone as it is borne.

Nowe these thynges thus beyng done, the sheperdes returne backe agayne to their flockes, glorifyng and prayesyng God as concernyng all the thynges that they had heard of the Iungels, and for that they had truely found euery thing euen as they had heard afore of the same Iungels.

The texte. ¶ And whan the eyght daye was come, that the chylde should be circumcised, hys name was called Iesus, which was named of the angel, before he was conceiued in the wombe.

But assoone as the eyght daye after her deliueraunce was come, at the whiche eyght daye, the lawe of Moyses commaundeth euery man childe to be circumcised, that is to say, to haue the foreskynne of hys flesh pared away rounde about (for thys thyng from Abraham furthwarde it pleased God, that it should be þ sygne and the marke of all suche as should bee reputed or taken to bee of hys Gene. xvi. b lede and generation) the lawe was satisfyed in thys poynte also, in consideracion that he was not come to breake or to fordoo the lawe, but to fulfyll it. Neyther dyd he disdeigne to take the accustomed remedye appoynted by the lawe euen as though he had been subiect to sinne as his parentes wer, whereas he alone and none but he was fre and clere from all corruption of sinne, and he alone that should take awaye al the synnes of the world, and should chose vnto hym a newe people, whiche should haue an hearte well clensed from all the delites of the flesche: and that not wyth baptyme of blounte stone, but with the sharpe sweorde of the woorde euangelical, whyche purgeth and clenseth all thynges through fayth. Yea, and a name was geuen hym too, as the custome and þ manier was to do to others. For he was called in Hebrue Iesus, which soundeth in Englische, sauiour. And thys name was not by a casual chaūce at al auentures, ozels by mannes wylle geuen vnto thys childe, but by the authoritie and commaūdement of God it had bene appointed and geuen him afore of the Iungel Gabriell, ere he was conceyued in the virgins wombe: whiche was done to the ende that men myght euen at the firste, by the verye woorde of his name, be aduertised and doen to were, that thilkame was verye he which should throughly geue vnto all persones true healthe and saluacion, and should in suche wyse represent the true guyde & capitayne Iosue, that whan his people were cleane pourged from al filthines of vyce and synne, he should conueyghe and bryng them into the lande of heauen, flowyng moste plentifully wyth ioyes euerlastyng.

His name was called Iesus. ye.

Matth. i.

And

¶ And whan the tyme of theyr purification (after the lawe of Moyses) was come, they brought hym to Hierusalem, to presente hym to the Lorde (as it is written in the lawe of the Lorde: Euery manchylde that fyrste openeth the matrice, shall bee called holy to the Lorde) & for to offre (as it is sayd in the law of the Lord) a payre of turtle doues. or.ii. young pigions. The text.

Hytherto (that is to say vntyll the circumcision of Jesus, the eyght daye after hys birthe,) all that was done, was nothing but as it were making of signes and prefers vnto the ghospell vnder certayne fygures, the which ghospell was of necessytie to bee preached fyrste vnto the people of the Jewes. On the fifth day after the circumcision, there came three Magians (that is to say, Philosophiers of hygh learnyng in the priuyties of Astronomie, and the other sciences mathematical) and these Magians had by the shewing & poynting of a certayne new sterre, bene halfe enforced to come from a farre place out of the East countreys, purposely to see hys childe. They kneled downe and worshipped the newe borne soueraigne of the worlde, and honoured theſame with mistical presentes or gyftes, signifying by a certayne shewe and semblaunce of thynges, (suche as myght bee made,) that the Gentiles shoulde in tyme to come, embrace the grace of the ghospell, whan the Jewes being manquellers and murderers of Jesus, had wilfully caste of and forsaken the same. Agayne whan the .xl. day from Maries deliueraunce was come, at whiche .xl. daye, the law of Moses willeth and biddeth any manchylde, being the fyrst borne childe of a woman, to bee presented vnto the Lorde, and ferther appoynteth a gyfte or a presente to be offered for the purifying & well of the chylde newe borne, as of the woman that lay in (because the common childbearing and deliueraunce that women haue, is not without muche vncleneſſe of the bodye) thys tender young bergyn beyng one of moſte syngular demurenes and myldeneſſe, refuseth not in thys behalfe, neyther to seme lyke vnto other women, whiche after the common course of nature doe byring furth chyldren, ne auoydeth to doe as they doe: whereas in this her childbearyng there was nothyng at al defiled with any spot of vncleaneſſe, but euery parte of it replenyſhed with heauenly puritie and with holineſſe. For what poyncte of vnpureneſſe coulde ſuch a woman haue in bearyng chylde, as without so muche as once touchyng of any man had conceiued by the only power & vertue of god embracing her through the working of the holy ghoſtee. And as touching the childe, I pray you, was it poſſyble for any ſpotte of fylthyneſſe to bee in ſuche a chylde, as beyng borne from heauen, was come into thys worlde euen for thys onely purpoſe, that he alone and onely might pourge all mankinde from all filthynes of sinne. But partely it was the will and pleaſure of God, by ſuche notable exaumples of lowlynes and humilitie as theſe bee, to breake the pryde of manne: and partely it was conuenyente that he whiche was come to pergette and cloſe by bothe the broken walles, that is to saye, was come to ioyne and knytte the people of the Jewes and the people of the Gentiles bothe together into one profeſſyon of the ghoſpell, ſhoulde in all behalfes and in all poyncres ſatyſfie the lawe of Moyſes, from whiche the firſte fayth and authorytie ſhould afterward proceede and come vnto the ghoſpell. And whan the tyme of theyr purification, &c

The mother therfore and Joſeph, (who by the determinate and aduiſed working of God was yet ſtil thought and ſuppoſed of euery manne to be the father of Jeſus,) brought theyr young babe vnto Hierusalem, to the ende he might in the temple there bee preſented in the ſighte of the Lord, to whome he was dedycated and halowed: not as thoughe God were not Lorde and true They brought him to Hierusalem, to preſent hym to the Lorde.

E.i. owner

owner of all thynges, but by a mystycall fygure to teache vs, that suche hertes and none others, bee thoughtye accepted afore God, as after the subduing and banquyshyng of all the inordynate desires of the fleashe, (in whiche Exod. xiii. 4, 5. xxii. b. reigneth naught but the corrupcyon of nyce tendernesse) doo with mannelye strengthe of the spirite, stoutely sette furth towardes those thynges which are heauenly and euerlasting. The law of Moyses meaning this same thing, had prescribed and appointed, that euery male kinde, as sone as it had once opened the matrice of the dame, & were come into the world, should be reputed & taken Nume. viii. b. for halowed and consecrated to the Lord, whether it were brought furth by a woman or by any brute beastes, to the entente that euen of these also the firste fruites shoulde be allotted vnto the prestes, and yet vnder suche condycyon, that the fyrste borne of mankynde myghte bee redemed with a small offreyng and boughte out of the prestes handes, excepte it were a chylde of the trybe of Leuit. xii. a. Leui. But the lawe selfe doeth openly discharge and deliuer this holy childe wife from the bande of the lawe, whan it sayeth in the thyrde boke of Moyses entitcled Leuiticus: If a woman haue conceiued, and borne a manchilde, &c.

Exod. xiii. a. For thys mother was neyther properly to be called a woman for as muche as she knew no parte of any mannes body, nor had broughte furth chylde by receiuing seede from any other partie. And agayne whan it sayeth: Euery one of the male kinde that first openeth the matrice. &c. It doeth sufficientely declare it selfe to meane of the common mannier of deliueraunce that mothers haue of their children, whiche mothers, by reason that the seale of their virgynnytie is broken vp afore by the manne, doe byrng furth chylde neyther without muche vnclenesse, nor yet without a certayne kinde of being put to shame. And as for this heauenly childe, neyther whan it entred, nor whan it came furthe, dyd by anye meanes pollute the enclosure and tabernacle of the mayden lye woumbe of his mother, but rather did consecrate the same and seale it vp that from hencefurthe neyther her bodye beyng a temple once for euer dedycated vnto God, ne yet her soule being (as ye would say) a closet for the holy ghoste, replenished with all odoryferous swete sauours, might bee open to receyue any staynyng or corrupcion of worldely filthinesse. Hee therfore whiche was the Lorde of all thinges that are bothe in heauen and in yearthe, was presented and offered in the temple, as one subiecte and bounde vnto the lawe.

And he was agreed for and redemed out of the priestes handes agayne for a small price, whiche shoulde afterwarde redeme all the whole vniuersall world with the price of his bloude. For the lawe had prescribed, that the parentes mighte bye out the first borne manchilde with a lambe of one yere olde, which was geuen to bee a burnte offeryng: and than besides the lambe there shoulde bee broughte a male Pygyon or a turtle doue for the pourgyng and dooyng away of sinne if any spotte thereof had bene gotten, eyther in the carnall copulacion at the begetting of the chylde or elles afterwarde. For it ought on euery side to bee pure, whatsoeuer thing is to bee offered vnto the lorde. That if the penurie and lacke of substance on the parentes behalfe, coulde not wel suffer a lambe to bee geuen, than in stede of the lambe there was geuen a turtle doue, or a young pigion for the redeming and dying out of the chylde, and the other byrde was offered for the pourgeyng of sinne. They offred therefore the gyfte of poore folkes. And there is no doubte but that they would haue geuen a more bountifull offreyng, had not they: pouertie beene a lette thereof.

They hadde hertes ryche with good loue and zeale towarde godde, but for an

Therefore whan the tyme shoulde come that the chylde Jesus shoulde bee brought into the temple (as we haue sayde, the blyssed olde manne afore named, being secretly warned by the mocyon of the spirite, came euen a litle before into the temple. And whan Marie the mother of the chylde, and Joseph, who was yet styll beleued to bee hys father, brought the babe into the temple, there to execute and to doe suche thinges as vnto the accustomed rites of purifycacion dyd appertayne: as

Nowe will I be willing and glad to dye: For nowe thou geuest thy seruaunte leaue to departe with a restfull and a quiete mynde, not helping me hauing any ferther wante at al or lacke in this life, but euen desirouse rayn nowe to passe out of this feble olde carkas, vnto the blissed company and felowshippe of the godly persones,

My prayers are nowe more aboundauntlye satysfyed, who haue had the happe euen with my bodely yes also to see, and to whome it hath beene geuen in myne olde armes to embrace, thyne only sonne, by whome, and through whome, it hath pleased thee to geue true healthe and saluacyon, not onely to the people of Israell, but also to all

I acknowlage this babe to bee the lyghte of the worlde promised by the holye sayenges of the prophetes. I acknowlage thys childe to bee the bryghte sonne, whiche it was thy holy will and pleasure to haue spring vp and arise vnto the worlde, that it myght on euery side dryue cleane awaye the darkenesse of all the Gentyles, and that thy people Israell mighte haue whereof, not without good cause, to glorye: thy people Israell (I saye, begyng in true dede thy verye owne, not after the flesshe onelye, (wherehence in dede the begynnyng of thys saluacyon hathe proceded:) but after a spirituall kynred, whiche is acquired and purchased throughe the faythe of the ghospell. For suche an one verayly pets to bee called by the name of Israel, wholoeuer earnestly fireth deuout and godly ies vpon this same lyght, and with the violence of faythe, forceably breaketh into the kingdome of heauen. In tymes paste hytherto, the people of the Jewes hath gloryed and made all their bauntes vpon Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: they haue gloryed and made great bauntes of Moses, of theyr temple, and of the prophetes: but now from henforth the gostly Israel, (which is here and there in sundry places dispersed throughout all the worlde,) shall glorye on thy sonne, whome thou hast vouchsalued to sende after all the others here mencyoned, as one that in greatnesse, in vertue, and in power, is ferre aboue them all. Nowe at thys presente in dede he lyeth hidden in a corner, not knowen as he ought to bee, but of verye fewe persons: but in tyme to come the lighte of hym shall blase abrode, and he shall with hys bryghte shynyng beames, lyghten all quarters and coastes of the worlde. A light to lighten the Gentiles, &c.

And his father & mother merueiled at those thinges, which were spoken of him. And Symeon blessed them, and said vnto Marie his mother: beholde, this childe is set to bee the falle and ryssing again of many in Israell, & for a signe which is spoken against. And more ouer the sworde shal perce thy soule, that the thoughtes of many hertes may be opened. The terme.

Nowe the mother of the infaunte, and Joseph, keeping all thys to bee spoken of the olde manne Symeon, by the inspiracion of the spirite of god, conferring it also with the other thinges that had gone afore, said neuer a worde but, merueyled in theyr myndes what the olde mannes wordes might meane. But Symeon, whan he had blessed the chylde, and also had prayed god to sende the parentes muche ioye of hym, turnyng hymselfe vnto Marie, sayde vnto her. This sonne of thyne, although he hath bene geuen vs of god, to the ende that he may geue vnto all persons euerlasting saluacyon: yet throughe the defaulte of manne it shal so chaunce, that lyke as he shall lift vp to the hope of euerlasting health a great multytude, whiche shall willingly embrace the gifte of God: euen so a greate number of the people of Israell, vtterlye despysing the bountyouse goodnesse of god cummyng towardes them, and offreyng it selfe vnto them, shall bee cast downe to eternall damnacion. For whan the trueth shal be thys thy sonne be opened and published, manye shall fall whiche afore seemed to stande, and many shall aryse vp, that seemed to lye in the duste. He hath bene looked for of all the Israelites: but he shall not bee receyued of them all. For he shall be set vp vnto all for a signe, suche an one as neuer hath yet beene set vp sence the beginning of ye world: but yet shal he be one that shal haue many a man to speake against him & deny him. For the cruelitie of them shall not lyght vpon suche persones onely, as shall beleue on thy sonne: but also thy verye owne hearte and soule, shall the sweorde of doloure and greefe perce. Suche a syghte hath it pleased God to shewe furth before the eyes of al menne, that the cleare light of the trueth being once shewed furth to shine abrode, the thoughtes of men might and should be discouered, which afore lape hidden in their hearttes: and that the course of thinges shoulde in suche wyse be turned the contrarie waye, as the thyng selfe might playnelye declare, that they were ferre of from the true ryghteousnesse, which in the sight and iudgemente of men, seemed to sit euen in the high chaire of righteousnesse: and suche to bee manifestelye founde wicked, as had gotten and taken into their owne handes, the doctrine and teachyng of true relygyon towarde god: and contrarye wise suche as afore were reputed for men ferre out of the waye of true religion and godlinesse, might be playnely declared to haue bene muche more nere vnto true relygyon, then the others: and suche as semed vnto the worlde to bee reiected and paste all grace or hope of recouery, suche shoulde the vnfeigned readynesse of beleuing in god, admitte and receaue in firste of all to the kyngdome of heauen. But the wily and wicked thoughtes of suche, the light of the trueth of the ghospell whan it aryseth, shall playnely synde out and detecte. Publicanes, harlottes, and sinners, are by these counterfaictes of holynesse, debarred from all sacres or holy rites of the temple: But suche shall god receiue firste of all into the kyngdome of heauen. The Gentiles whiche haue bene geuen to idolatry, sodaynly chaunging their life, shal with gredy zeale & affection embrace the doctrine of true godlynesse: the Pharisies and Bisshops in whose handes and power the keye of the lawe and of relygion dyd reste, shal with most obstinate endeuoure, resist it and be agaynst it. The night hath no perfect iudgemente of thinges, but okte times in stede of the thynges selfes it sheweth to the eye the onely shadowes and vayne counterfaites of thinges: but the sunne, whan it is vp and geueth cleare lyghte, it driueth awaye all blinde casting of mistes before mennes eyes, shewing euery thyng in his owne likenesse, and geuing to euery thing hys owne coulour. Al this dyd that same godly olde manne speake, reioysing and making glad chere from the botome of his hearte, whiche the holy ghoste had throughly enspired.

And euen whyle the aforesayde rytes and ceremonies of purificacion were in doing within the temple, in the verye houre whyle Symeon is in hys prophetycall talke, in the verye momente whyle all thinges are full of holye and godlye wordes, both of retoylyng and of thankes geuyng for thys heauenlye young babe: thys Anna too, (euen as god wolde haue it) commeth emong them, that she also might be a witnesse of the same childe, that borne he was, and that she myghte ioyne the affeccyons of her hearte with the ioyfulnesse of the others, extollyng and hyghelye prayssyng the bounteouse goodnesse of god for that he had caste so mercifull an eye vpon his people. Neyther did she, whan she was in coumpaigny and presence of others, kepe secret the thing that she had seene with her eyes, and the whiche she hadde learned by Goddes inspiracyon: but she wolde euermore bee speakyng and talkyng of thys childe, vnto all suche as were in Hierusalem, and loked for the redempcion of the people of Israell. And thys was enough for a womanne being a wedowe, onelye in the temple to talke and to auouche that Christe was come, and the same to entimate and disclose vnto a fewe persones abyde beeyng desyrouse and hungrie of it. For that same tyme was not yet come, which was reserued for the Apostles whan they shoulde bee replenished with the holy goste of the whiche Apostles it is sayde in the Psalme of Dauid:

Psalm.xix. Into all the yearthe is their sowne gone forth, and their wordes into all the endes of the worlde throughe out.

All thinges being at the last fully and orderly executed, as muche as the lawe of Moyses had prescribed for the puryficacyon of women late delyuered of childe: they returned into Bethleem, where the chylde was borne. But whan king Herode beeyng doone to wete by the Magians, that there was a newe king of the people of Israell borne, had commaunded all the infantes to bee slayne, as many as within two yeres daye, nere afore passed, had bene borne in Bethleem, and in all the circuite of the same lordshyp or countie: Joseph being aduertised and warned in his slepe so to doe, conueighed awaye priuelye bothe the childe and the mother that borne it, into Egipte, and there made their abode vntill the death of the wicked kyng. That thyng done, they eftesons returned at the warnyng of an aungell, not into Bethleem, leste some occasyon of shewing ferther crueltie mighte perchaunce thereby haue bene geuen to the sonne of Herode (who had at that tyme succeded his father in a portion of his kyngdome) but they returned into the countreye of Salyle, vnto the cytye of Nazareth, where the babe was firste concepued in hys mothers woumbe. For his minde was to liue in a corner out of the way for a time: and in dede keping himselfe in the poore citie of Nazareth, it was an easy thing for him to beguile the crueltie of them that dredde the arising of a newe king. And thus hitherto that same oure heauenly soueraigne lorde and prince, who had for oure sakes abassed and humbled hymselfe downe euen to swadlyng cloutes, to the cradle, to cryyng in his swathing bandes as other children doe, to the strengthlesse babehoode of the bodye, was preached and declared to the worlde by the onelye testymonie of other folkes talkyng. strength of his body: in whiche body as in a tabernacle, there clearely appered a certayn wonderful towardnesse and natural inclinacion to vertue, euidently declaring that somewhat there was in him, more then a man. The strength also of the spirite continually encreased in hym, daylye more and more shewing it selfe to: the in hys countenaunce, in hys passe, in hys talke, and in hys domges: in all whiche, there was not so muche as any one poincte, but it was euen full of the spirype of myldenesse and humplytie, of chastytie, of ampablenesse, and of godlye zeale. For: he was nothyng subiecte to those vices, whiche the peres of childehood is commonly woonte to bee encoumbred with: that is to wete, fondenesse of speaking, and doyng thinges, wantonnesse, inconstauncie, and folye: but the heauenlye wysedome wherwith he was replenyshed, not carying for: the peres and age that discrecion ought to bee in, dyd euen than already in such wise shewe it selfe, that whereas he was afore commended, and set further by the testimony of others, nowe by his owne vertues and giftes of grace (being suche as fewe other men had,) he was made bothe wonderful to all persones, and also worthy to be loued. Wisedome, holynesse, perfeccyon of liuing, ripenesse of discressyon, being in hym suche and so greate as cannot in any other man of right aunciente peres be founde, made him wondzefull vnto all men: and the delectable sweteneſſe of his conuersacyon, his gentle familiare facyon towardes all folkes, and hys humble softeneſſe, made hym vnto all men amiable. Neyther was the fauoure that men dyd beare hym, fauoure of the common sorte, or for a lytle season, suche as that same age of chyldehoode doeth ofte tymes gather through humayne qualities, (as in ensample, for: the respect of beautie and welfauouredneſſe, or otherwise for: aptitude and quickenesse of taking that is taught them, whiche is in some chyldren beefore they: tume) but in hym there shined a certayne godlye and wondzefull grace, mightly drawing all men to the loue of hys vertuousenesse.

And was filled with wisedome.

¶ And his father and mother wente to Hierusalem euery yere at the feaste of Estur, And whan he was twelue yere olde, they wente vp to Hierusalem after the custome of the feaste daye. And whan they had fulfilled the dayes, as they returned home, the childe Jesus abode still in Hierusalem, and hys father and mother knewe not of it: but they supposyng him to haue bene in the compaygnye, came a dayes iourney, and soughte hym emong theyr kinsfolke and acquaintaunce. And when they founde him not, they went backe agayn to Jerusalem and soughte hym. And it fortuned that after three dayes, they founde him in the temple sitting in the middes of the doctoures, hearyng them, and opposing them. And all that hearde him, were astounded at his vnderstandyng and aunswers. The texte.

to earneste applying of true godlynesse, whyle they? age is yet tender, and they? naturall disposicion yet gentle, softe, and pliaunte vnto all maner trayning in vertue. The childe Jesus neded not the counsell or ayde of any other persone: but it was an example or doctryne for other parentes, howe to bring vp they? children in chastesye and vertuousnesse: and also a fourme or trade shewed vnto all young children, how they ought to vse themselues obedient to they? parentes, whan they are by the same exhorted and aduertysed to thynges that are holye and godlye. But whan hys childehood by reason of a more noumber of yeres, was nowe growen to a litle more strength, and begoon to drawe wel towardes the stature of a younge strieplyng, he beeyng of the full age of twelue yeres olde, and hys parentes, according to the auncyente custome had gone to Hierusalem at the day of Estur, and the childe awaytyng on them in they? compagny: as soone as al thinges were finyshed that to the solemne obseruyng of that feaste dyd appertayne, and the dayes thoughlye expired, in whiche due attendaunce muste bee geuen to the dyuyne seruice in the temple: whereas his mother and Joseph were returned homewarde towarde Nazareth, the childe Jesus remayned styll at Hierusalem: euen than before his full age, shewing hymselfe glad and ready to accomplyshe the commaundementes and message of his father, for the doyng wherof he had bene sent into the worlde. But hys parentes knewe nothyng of hys tarying behynde. But whan they sawe that he came not home agayne to Nazareth, they according to the common rate of care that other parentes take for they? children, greatly mused and wondred, what had befallen. And in dede at the firste, they demed that he had hanged on the compaignye of some of his felowes and kinsfolkes, and by reason therof had bene the slacker in cumming. They geat them therefore backe agayn euen the same way that they had come, to the mountenaues in manyer of one whole dayes iourneye, making searche for hym emonge they? acquayntaunce and kinsfolkes, in coumpany of whome suche litle children are often times woonte to make tarryaunce and lyngeryng, because the affeccionate desire of they? kinsfolke, or alltaunce, doth commonlye kepe them backe and maketh them to tary. But emongst al these, was Jesus not found, who taughte men euen than alreadye as young as he was, that suche an one as is willing to take vpon hym the profession and teachyng of heauenlye doctrine, muste renounce and clearelye forsake all worldlye or carnall affeccions bothe of father and mother and also of kinsfolkes. They? hope therfore beyng beguyled in seekyng Jesus here emong hys kynsfolkes, nowe that carefulnesse for they? childe did somewhat more earnestely pricke they? stomackes (as in tender parentes it wil doe) backe they wente agayn to Hierusalem, deming and supposing it to bee possyble enoughe, that he had there remayned styll in the house of some frende or acquayntaunce of they?s. But whan the childe was in vayne sought here also emong they? acquayntaunce and kynsfolkes: after three dayes space, it chaunced, that hys parentes whan they had no suche hope at all, founde hym in the temple, not idle, nor playing thys or that childishe toye: but sitting still in the middes emong the doctours, whome he being but a childe, did by course bothe heare teachyng, and also did appose, and being by course opposed of them agayne, did make answere: not for that it was nedefull for hym to demaunde of any mortall creature what to learne: but to the ende that by wisely ministring his oppositions, he might rightely constructe and teache them, that professed the perfecte knowelage of the lawe,

And whan he was twelue yeres olde, they went vp to Hierusalem.

The childe Jesus abode still in Hierusalem.

And whan they found him not they went &c.

And it fortuned that after three dayes they founde hym in the temple. &c.

wheras

wheras in dede they knew not the strength, the pith, and the effecte of the lawe and all vnder one, enflampng vs vnto an earneste zeale to take good instructyons: and also geupng a good lesson, that no age is ouer younge or ouer soone putte to the learnyng of suche thynges, as maye auayle or serue towardes godlye perfection. For some artes and occupacyons there bee whiche euerye age is not apte, but ouer young to learne: onely deuocyon and godlynesse is to bee learned by and by from the cradle, and the earneste dilygence in applying the same, not to bee slacked or releassed at anye tyme vntyll the verye laste daye of a mannes lyfe. For there is in it higher degrees and hyghter to growe vnto, as long as a mannes life dooeth endure. And as for Jesus, although he were vnknowen bothe to the doctoures and also to the people that stode about, yet did he make them all to meruayle at hym, that beyng a chylde of a smal age, and stature, he coulde in his sayinges & aunswers shewe furthe a certayne woonderfull wysedome: yea and ferre exceedyng the wysdome of sage olde menne. They sawe the age of his bodye to bee tender, and ferre vnrype to haue any great wisedome, and they hearde a young chylde with singulat humilitie and sobrenelle, vttering furth and speakyng such thynges, as the great doctoures of auncyente yeres, and they that semed now to be as high in wisedome as any menne myghte bee, thoughte not tedyouse to leathe. And yet all the while there was in hym no pryde ne haultenelle, there was in hym no malapertenelle of cockyng or geuyng tauntes, there was in hym no mannier holstwittes are rype beefore they tyme. But he woulde question with them, as one desyrouse and fayne to learne: and beyng demaunded anye questyon, he woulde aunswere with all possible sobrenelle, yea and also with most excellent wisedome. And on thys mannier taughte he them without anye spyce or semblaunce of arrogancie, that is to saye, of presumpteouse taking of autoritie vpon hym. And by these thynges it came to passe, that as well the doctoures with whome he disputed, as also the partyes that stode rounde about, were witnesses of the same disputacion, were verye muche astouned, not onely for respect of the chyldes wisedome, (being suche as had not afore bene hearde of,) whiche he in demaundyng any questyon, and in shapyng any aunswere, dyd playnely declare: but also for the rare and syngulare sobrenesse of his countenaunce, of hys gesture, and of hys tongue, whiche thynges gaue a more fervent grace of acceptacyon vnto hys vnderstandyng. And yet is not thys poynete neyther without a fruictfull mysterye, that Jesus, who coulde not with any seking be founde emong his familiare acquaintaunce & kynsfolkes after the flesshe, was sodaynelye founde by chaunce at Hierusalem within the temple. For the sayde citie of Hierusalem, being of greate name and fame, (by reason that the worlde had conceyued an opinyon, that god was serued there beste of all places,) did represent aswell the churche militaunte on yearthe, as also triumphaunte in heauen. For this same Hierusalem is our countrey that we make all our sighyng to bee at, forasmuche as we dooe well vnderstande that here in thys tranſytorye worlde, we lyue but as it were in a place of exile or banyshemente, not hauing a citie wherin to dwell for euer. Wherefore all goeth by carnall affeccyons of manne, wherefoeuer the earneste studie of the minde is applyed vnto such thynges as perish and dye with this worlde, in suche a place neyther is Hierusalem (whiche Hebrue worde is to say in Englishe, the sighte of peace,) neither a temple dedicated to the Lorde.

And al that hearde him were astouned at his vnderstanding and aunswers.

And

And therefore is not Jeſus in any ſuche place to bee ſoughte, who is altogether heauenlye. But whereſoeuer is a byeſt and an herte, whiche deſpyſeth the thinges that pertaine to the carnalyte of fleaſhe and bloude, and paineth for haſte that he maketh towarde that ſame bleſſed tranquilitie and quietneſſe of mynde, whiche the bounteouſe goodneſſe of god dooeth through the fayethe of the ghoſpell aſſure and warraunte euen here in this preſente life, and maketh perfecte in the heauenlye Hieruſalem aboue, in ſuche a place is Hieruſalem: in ſuche a place is the temple that Jeſus is delited with: in ſuche a place there is bothe prpounpng of queſtyons and aunſwerpng enterchaungeablye, not concerning howe a roumde circle maye be made iuſt ſower ſquare, not of that whiche in Triſtotles philoſophie is called Metecie prime, (as if ye ſhoulde ſay in Engliſhe the firſt orginall ſtuffe wherof and out of whiche all thinges in the worlde are produced and made) no; of that that the ſame Triſtotle and other doe call primum mobile, whereby they meane hym that gouerneth the worlde, and rolleth the ſkye aboute without begynning or ending, not naminge it god but eſtempng it to bee ſome other naturall thyng of it ſelfe) of all whiche thynges a manne maye be ignorraunt, and yet come to heauen well enough: but in ſuche place as we ſpeake of, the oppoſeyeons and aunſweres are concernyng the knowlage of holy ſcripture, by the which god ſheweth vnto vs, the way wherby we maye attayne euerlaſting ſaluacion. In ſuche a place are ſlayne hoſtes and ſacrifices moſte acceptable vnto god, that is to wete, carnall luſte, enuie, wrathe, deſire of worldely auaunceмente, and auarice. In ſuche a place there is with all godlye percyons and with pure prayers, contynuall burnyng of ſweete ſauoures and incence to the moſte hyghe contentacyon and pleaſyng of god. It is therfore the parte of euery body to ſee and prouyde that he haue Hieruſalem within hys owne breſte, and that he there make readye a temple mete for the holy ghoſte, to the ende that he may bee worthy to haue Jeſus to his geaſte,

The text. And when they ſawe him, they meruciled. And his mother ſayde vnto hym: Sonne why haſt thou thus deale with vs? Beholde, thy father and I haue ſoughte thee ſorowyng. And he ſayd vnto them: howe is it that ye ſought me? Wiſt ye not that I muſt goe aboute my fathers buſineſſe? And they vnderſtoode not that ſaying whiche he ſpake vnto them. And he went downe with them, and came to Nazareth, and was obedyente vnto them. But hys mother kepte all theſe ſayinges together in her hearte. And Jeſus proſpered in wiſedome, age, and in fauoure, with god and men.

And beholde, euen in the meane tyme whyle the ſayd mercuſiouſe chylde Jeſus dooeth with this foundacion and entreing make a prparatiue to the executing of the heauenlye buſineſſe of reſtoring mankinde to ſaluacion, whiche to doe he was come downe from heauen: hys father and mother commeth ſo dayneli in place, to whome the myſtery of gods intente and purpoſe was not yet fully knowen. There was yet ſtill remaynyng in them, ſome litle ſpyece of humayne affeccion, although they had with a naturall louing carefulneſſe, ſoughte aboute for the chylde. And Joſeph for hys parte holdeth hys peace, who knew very wel in his conſcience, that he had no right ne title to the chylde that hys eſpouſed wyfe had borne: but the mother, as ſhe thoughte ſhe might well doe by autorite, maketh halfe a quarele to hym: Sonne, ſayeth ſhe, why dooe ye handle vs after ſuche ſorte as thys? why dyd ye priueclye ſtealе away from vs? loe, your father and I beyng nowe by the ſpace of two or three dates in greate care and heauynneſſe, haue bene ſeeking all about for you, fearing our pour behalfe the daungier and perill of all ſuche miſaduentures, as the naturall tenderneſſe of parentes dooeth commonlye vſe to feare the chaunceyng of, vnto theyr children that they loue, whan they bee abſente from them. To theſe woordes of Marie, whiche had proceded of an affeccyon in dede right tendre naturall, but yet ſomewhat humayne and worldelye (for reſpecte whereof it was not conueniente to interrupte or breake the godlye talke, that was than in hande) Jeſus aunſwered halfe roughelye: not that he was in anye fume or indignacion with hys parentes, but to ſhewe, that in the affayres of the gholpell, (which to doe he was ſente of hys heauenly father,) no mannier autoꝛitie of any man (what euer he be) ought to haue place. The auctoꝛitie of parentes ouer their children hathe certayn due lymytes and boundes howe ferre it maye extende, whiche autoꝛitye it is lawefull and alſo neceſſarye to renounce and vtterly forſake, as often as any matter of eternal ſaluacion commeth in place.

For mete it is, that thynges woꝛldelye geue place vnto godlye thynges, and that the reſpecte and regarde of God (to whome we are bounden debtoures aſwell of bodye as of ſoule, and of whole bounteouſe lyberalytie we looke for the inheryteaunce of the lyfe euerlaſtyng,) be aboue them, of whome after the fleſhe we are borne and brought vp, to ſuccede them, but in ſome poꝛcyon of good and ſubſtaunce woꝛldely. In dede greatly bounden we are euen to oure parentes too: but a greate deale moꝛe are we bounde to god, to whome we are bounde euen that euer we had any fatherꝭ oꝛ mothers at all. So lykewyſe at an other time after this, he made an aunſwere not all of the tenderneſſe manyer vnto hys mother, whan ſhe at a mariage ſpake vnto hym, and moued hym of ſome wyne for the feaſte, and dydde with a certayne autoꝛitie, becauſe ſhe was his mother, requyre hym to ſhewe a miracle, whereas miracles were not to bee ſhewed but to the glory of hys heauenlye father. So dyd he alſo at an other tyme moꝛe ſnappyſhelye make aunſwere vnto them, that from preachyng the goſpell, called him forth of the thꝛong & preſſe of the people, in the name of his mother & of his kynſfolkes. But the aunſwere that he made at thys tyme, was in maner and fourme here folowyng. What was the cauſe (ſaye he) why ye dyd with ſuche penſyfe carefulneſſe ſeeke aboute for me? dyd ye not remember in your myndes that I muſte nedes bee aboute my fathers buſineſſe, as often as he calleth me to the office and function appoynted vnto me? But what thyng theſe woꝛdes of Jeſus myghte meane, his parentes dyd not euen berape well vnderſtande. For it expreſſed in hym a certayne excellencie aboue the common rate of a man, eſpecially at ſuche a tender age of childehood. And albeit that of a likelyhod of thinges that had afoꝛe paſſed, they loked for no common trade, ne yet no meane thing at the handes of theyr chylde: yet for all that dyd they not fully and thꝛoughly vnderſtande the highe excellencye and maieſtie of the power of god, they diddе not yet perfectely knowe by what woonderfull boꝛyſte and conueyghaunce, god the father had determyned to redeme mankynde by his owne ſonne. They hearde in theſe woꝛdes of Jeſus, a nampng of his fa-affayres he had neuer ſpoken woꝛde ne made mencion to them afoꝛe that day.

But they, thoughe they were the parentes, are all ſuſhte, and ſpeake not a woꝛde, but doe reuerently take the woꝛdes whiche they vnderſtode not. And Jeſus ſeeing thys, humbled hymſelfe and ſhewed hymſelfe obedyente to his

of obedyence, but of hys owne goodnesse he submytted hymselfe for a season to them; weakenesse, to be ruled and ordred by them: and therewithall he also gaue vnto all chyldren a fourme and an exaumple, with what earnestenesse and with what greate reuerence they ought to bee at their parentes commaundemente: forasmuche as the chylde Iesus, who ought no seruice ne obedience to any bodye, saupng onely to hys heauenlye father, dyd in suche wise obeye a father that was but counterfeycte and hys mother that bore hym withoute any hatme or displeasure of empayrpng her chastytie and maydenhood thereby. Thus did the Lorde Iesus thinke it good, in suche wise to temper all hys sayinges and doynges: that nowe he woulde shewe further, (as ye woulde saye,) certayne lytle sparkes of hys godlye power: and an other tyme agayne would he humble hymselfe to the lowe degree of a man, poorely borne into this worlde. Verayly his so doyng was expediente for vs, to the ende that it myght by all mannyer wayes be perswaded vnto mankinde, the veritie and true substaunce bothe of the dyuyne nature and of the nature of manne, to bee coupled together in hys one persone. The felowshyppe of a nature keeping common both to him and vs, did greatly make for the purchasing of loue. We doe more earnestly and also more fruytefully loue thinges that be nere to oure owne nature and familyare to deale with: euen by the olde prouerbe, whiche sayeth: that lyke will euermore vnto lyke. But as for puttyng oure affiaunce and truste, we dooe more safely put it in god, who, (forasmuche as lye he cannot and is of power all thinges to dooe,) may in no manner wise bee doubted of, but that he wyll performe whatsoeuer he dooeth promyse. And in dede oure loue towardes Christe doeth firste springe vp of the cousynage and lykenesse of oure nature: but from these begynninges it groweth better and better to the loue of thynges beyng hyghest aboue vs. For lyke as the common sorte of menne, is at the firste begynnyng by the onely seeyng of the beautie of ones bodye, enflamed and sette on fyer, to beare hys good wyll to the partye, and shortely after, whan by keeping of coumpanye and by talkyng with the same partye, the good qualytyes of a moste beautyfull mynde and soule lying hydden in hys beautifull bodye, are once throughelye perceyued, they begynne more truelye and also more ardentelye to bee in loue with the thyng that they see not, then with the thyng that they see: euen so the felowshyppe and equalitye of oure humayne nature in hym, was vnto vs, as ye woulde saye, a lure to the conceyuyng of loue towardes the Lorde Iesus, but from thys loue we growe vp more hyghest to the loue of hys diuyne power, and of hys godhede. Therfore whether he humble himselfe down to oure weakenesse, or els mounteth vp to his owne hyghnesse aboue, he busilye attendeth the labourynge and worckyng of oure health and saluacion. So than Iesus wente from the temple and from Hierusalem: and obeyng the gouernaunce of his parentes, returned home agayne to Nazareth. Let chyldren ȝong strieplinges whan they heare this, be ashamed, as many as make lyghte at the good lessons and counsayles of their parentes erhortyng them to honest wayes, seeyng that Iesus dyd for a space leaue of from dooyng hys fathers busynesse, because he woulde not shewe any exaumple of a disobedyent sonne. Let the priuate commoners and partisheners blushe, that vse to rebell agaynste their godlye pastoures, beyng their spirituall fathers: seeing that Iesus being the greater in dygnytie, was contente to bee ordred by his inferiours, and beyng God, submytted hymselfe to the gouernaunce of creatures mortal. But the mother agayne on her parte,

for

forasmuche as she perceyued and founde a certayne power of the goddeheade to glitter and shewe furthe in hym, was well contente to folowe the minde and ordering of her soune: and being myndefull of her owne wise and discrete sobrenesse, dyd as yet make no blabbyng out abrode of any thing, as other women vse to bee full of clatteryng and babblyng, ne take vpon her to geue anye sentence or iudgement vpon these matters, whiche she did rather meruayle at, then vnderstande the misterie of it, what it ment: but all that euer had chaunced from the begynnyng aboute or concernyng the chylde, and all that euer was by him sayde or dooen, she gathered and conferred altogether, and layde it vp safe in her breste: coniecturyng and castyng of these wonderfull begynnynges, what ende of all mattyers was lyke to ensue. Neyther dyd she leaue any one poynete vnmarked, to the ende that she myghte afterwarde with the more perfecte truethe and assuraunce, make reporte of all thynges vnto the dysciples, that shoulde in tyme cummyng preache the lyfe of Iesus all the worlde throughoute. In the meane whyle Iesus beeyng yet hitherto knowen but vnto fewe folkes, continued dwelling in ỹ poore citie of Nazareth, liuing (as ye myghte saye) vnder the gouernaunce of hys parentes, vntyll the tyme shoulde come, that was sette of hys father, in whiche he shoulde with myracles and with preaching, shewe furth himselfe abrode vnto the worlde: geuing to vs in the meane while a lesson by his owne exaumple, that no man shoulde vnadutsedly and vndyscretely, or els out of tyme and wythoute due occasyon come rushing in, or make pryese to take in hande thoffice of preaching the gospell, before that he doe throughe sufficyente groweth of yeres, throughe vnculpable behauyoure, throughe due learnyng and knowleage in holy scriptures, and throughe Goddes vocacyon, gather vnto hymselfe a good authoritie to become a teacher. For Iesus vntyll he was in mannier full thirtie yeres of age, neuer did anye very notable acte, saueng that aboue the rate of other mortall men, like as he grewe and prospered in stature of bodye, in strengthe, and grotweth of yeres: so did that same heauenly wisedome styll more and more plenteouslye shewe furthe it selfe in hym, and so dyd his other manyfolde gyftes of grace also, throughe whiche, lyke as he was moste highlye accepted with god, so did he daply more and more growe in fauoure and estimacion with menne: an vnlyke manne veraylye and of a mache contrarie sorte vnto the Scribes and Pharisees, who by a counterfeite pretence of holynesse and of wysedome, vsed to sette out themselues to the yes of menne, whereas in the syghte of god they were as full as they myghte swarme of all filthe and vncleanesse of vyce. Neyther was it onelye auayleable to the saluacyon of mankynde, (who was to be redemed by a straunge conueyghaunce, and suche as the lyke hadde not beene hearde of afore,) but also to the good instruccyon and trayning of oure lyfe, that Iesus did by litle and litle, and by certayne degrees, shewe furth to the knowledge of men, hys heauenly gifres of grace that he was most abounddauntly replenished withall. For that thing veraylye he dyd to geue vs a lesson that from those first preceptes and rules of righteousenesse, (which we ought, euen streight way while we be young cradle children, to drinke in,) we should with continuall going forwarde successfully, doe al oure possible endeuoure to attayne vnto thinges of more and more perfeccyon. For lyke as the bodye hath his degrees of growing bigger and bigger to the full rate of his stature, and to hys full strengthe, that is to wete, shootyng vp firste from infantcie or babehood to the stature of a young striplyng: from the stature of a striplyng

But hys mother kept all these sayinges togeather in her herte.

And Iesus prospered in wisedome and age.

And in fauour with god & man. may be full growen vp to the perfecte sub∫tauncyall strengthe of the fulnesse of Chri∫te. For Chri∫te groweth bygger and bygger in vs, and shooteth vp more and more to mannes state, whan we from the fyr∫te enstruccyons and articles of the fayth doe encroche forwarde to a more depe hydden wisedom of the scripture of God: whan we forsake the milke of the fleashe, and begin to haue a stomake or appetyte to the sounde and stronge meate of the spirytt: when we leaue the vnlaweryge letter, and vnderstande the mystycall sence and meaning: whan we nothyng esteme ne regarde thynges yearthly, but mounte vp and take our flight to thinges celestiall. For it is euen playne settyng the cart before the horses, yf the body shall by the course of nature growe from tyme to tyme forewarde to better and better, and the soule shall by oure sluggyshenesse continually reune headlong backewarde to wurse and wurse. For thus do we see it commonly come to passe. Big laddes and stryplynges grow quite awaye from the purenes of babehood to boyshe wantonnesse, the youth than againe groweth forewarde a pace to brabling in the lawe, and to making of affrayes, mans state emendeth to ambicion and couetise. And so cummeth it to passe, that euery manne the nerer that he draweth to the state of age, so muche the ferther goeth he backewarde from innocente liuyng. But such persons as haue once put on Chri∫te on theyr backes, oughte accordyng to the craumple of the same Chri∫te, with all theyr strengthe to heaue forewarde vnto better and better: to the ende that they maye bothe with the pure clenesse of the soule make themselues acceptable in the syghte of God: and also by the vnco∫ruptnesse of theyr liuing, geat themselues an honest fame and repo∫te emong men.

¶ The.iii. Chapter.

The texte. ¶ In the fyfteenth yere of the reigne of Tyberius the Emperour, whan Poncius Pilate was lieutenaunte in Iewry, and Herode the Tetrarche of Galilea: and hys brother Philip the Tetrarche of Iturya, and of the regyon of the Trachonytes: and Lisanyas the Tetrarche of Abilene, whan Anna and Cayphas were the hygh prycstes: the woorde of the lorde came vnto Johyn the sonne of Zacharie, in the wyldernesse. And he came into all the coastes aboute Iordane, preachyng the baptyme of repentaunce for the remyssyon of synnes, as it is wrytten in the boke of the woordes of Esaye the prophete, sayeng: The voyce of a crier in wyldernesse, prepare ye the waye of the lorde, and make hys pathes streyght. Euery valley shal be filled, and euery mountayne and hill shal be brought lowe, and thynges that be croked, shall be made streight, and the rough wayes, shal be made playne, and all fleashe shall see the saluacion of God.

Thou hast heard, good Theophilus, with what begynnynges both Johyn the forerenner, and also the lorde Iesus made a way, and a preparatife vnto the office of preaching the gospel. Nowe heare by what meanes, and with what succesfe they enterprysed, and entred the matter, to the ende that thou mayest well vnderstande, that nothing was doen by happe or casualtie, ne through mannes wisdome, but euery whit by the prouidence of god tempreing and ordreyng hys owne matter after a newe maner of facion of hys owne. For nowe was the tyme already come, that the heauenly kyngkingdom beyng reuealed and published, the worldly kingdom should abate and decaye: the spirituall priesthood beyng disclosed, the shadowie priesthood, (wherin the Iewes had vntill that time made many glorious bautes and braggues of themselues) should vanishe cleane away. Ceasar the emperour of Rome surnamed Augustus, had now ended his life, by whose proclamacio the whole world had afore been surueied, and the names of euerye bodye within the empire registred in bokes, and in the tyme of his reygne Iesus Christ was borne. Wicked Herode also was now deceassed, who had sought Iesus being an infant for to haue slain him. And Archelaus Herodes sonne for his behauiour ouermuche reseblyng his fathers wicked prankes, was exiled frō his kingdom into an other countrey. Tiberius Cesar had succeded Augustus in the empire. And in the fiftenth yere of his reigne, Poncius Pilate a Romain was president of Iewry. And Herode the brother of Archelaus by the election and apointment of the said Tiberius the emperour, had Galilee allotted vnto him. Philip had the rule and gouernaunce of that part of Syria, whiche is called Ituria: and it was called also Trachonitis, of the roughnesse of the mountains, because the countrey is full of hylles and downe hilles, and almost no part of it euen or plain champian grounde. For it goeth al alongst in hilles and dales frō Libanus, and frō the mountains of Idumea, vnto the west coaste of Syria. Thā moreouer the part that is called Abilena, (of Abila the principall citie of the same region,) was by assignement cum to thehādes of Lisanias for his portiō, who afterward chaunged the name therof, and called it Lysanio. For Augustus in his time, because he would so what breake and enfeble the puissaunt force of that kingdō, had made a diuisiō of it, and distributed it amōg foure brethren, Herode, Philip, Antipater, and Lysanias, which therfore were called Tetrarches, that is to say in English, the foure princes or the foure head rulers. For the name of a kyng was long afore abolished by a lawe of the Romaines, who would haue no kynges. And this was a token or rather a figure that the kingdom of the Iewes should shortly after vanishe awaye accordyng to the prophecie. But the holyest parte of Iewrye (wherin Hierusalem and the temple stoode, and in whiche the lord of al was borne,) one Ponce Pilate a Romain, had the administracion and gouernaunce of: beeyng as it were a figure plainly betokenyng euen by the verye case and thing as it stode, that the Gentiles should breake into the kingdom of heaue, which the Iewes would reiect and vtterly despise. Likewise the priesthode as a thyng that should soone after ceasse and haue an ende, wente wandrynge and shiftyng from one to an other out of due order, and was bought, and solde, and made euē a market mater, wherin at that time two notable vngodly mē, Annas, and Caiphas had the highest and the chefest roumes. Emiddes these matters of diuiding and mangleyng the countrey into sundry rewlers handes, and in the middes of this very troublesome state of thinges emonge the Iewes, the kingdome of heauen, and a new priesthode sprang vp, wherof Johu the sonne of Zacharie was chosen and specially appoynted to bee an open preacher and proclaymer. This John before laye hydden emong the wylde beastes, and passed a life of wonderfull streightnesse, cladde with a Camels skine, girt with a belt of a rough leather thong, feeding vpō wild honey and grashoppers of that countrey, not so muche as tasting any wyne or stronge drinke, to the entent he might be a mete preacher of repentaūce: and might teache

the people by his life, before he should teache them by his wordes: & might be clere without al crimes himself, who should so freely reproue the faultes & transgressions of other mē: but now beyng inspired with the holy ghost, & admonished by ꝑ same, he came out of the desertes of wildernes, & gat him not into the tēple, which place was reserued vnto Christ, but into al those quarters & coastes, which lye about the riuer Iordane, to the end that he might haue the more plēty of water for such as should be baptised. And he preached that the kingdom of heauē was at hād, exhortyng that the people should prepare theselfes to the saluatiō, (which approched) through repentaunce of their former liues, & that with the baptisme of water (which he in his persō gaue, being but as a foregoer & a messēger of Christ) they should make them selfes mete for the baptisme of ꝑ spirit, whiche spirit he should geue, whose cūming approched. These thinges were thā doen by inspiracion of the holy ghost, who lōg before had prophecied the same by the mouth of Esai ꝑ prophet. For in this maner speaketh he of Johns preachyng. The voice of a crier in ꝑ wildernes, the lord approcheth, prepare his waies, make his pathes streight, iesse being offēded w̄ the vntoward crokednes of your conditiōs & behauiour, he spedily sterr backe away frō you. He cūmeth to al, al must goe forth to mete him. All thinges must be made plain and euē. Euery valey shal be filled vp, & euery mountain and hill shalbe brought down and made flatte. They whiche wer high emong mē, because they were in a great opinion and estimacion of righteousnes, or wisedom, shal abate their stately and proude coūtenaunce that they may be hable & apte to receiue the righteousnesse, and wisedom of God: & they which as idiotes or mē of no knowlage ne regard, & as sinners, wer out of al reputatiō, vtterly despised as abiectes amōg mē, shall sodainly through their obedience to the ghospell, be reysed vp vnto the felowshyp and communion of the kyngdome of heauen: Suche thinges also as to fore wer warped & writhed sundry waies, & stoode all croked, shal in a moment be made euen & streight again w̄ the squiere of the ghospel: & where places wer rough by reason of the thornes of manifold vices, and naughtie desires and lustes, they shall nowe be made verye smooth, and plain wayes. For by and in suche mindes dooeth the lorde ioye to walke. And to suche extreme contraries shal the courses of all thynges at the cummyng of hym bee chaunged. They that were in despaire shall be set vp in coumfort and hope again. Suche as trusted in themselfes, not carying for any other healper or sauour, shalbe cast away and perish, vnpossible to be recouered again. They that were before tymes esteemed and reputed for wyse, shal become fooles: and suche as were accoumpted for fooles, shall bee endued with the gyft of heauenly wysedome. They whiche to fore were idolatres, shall become true seruers and worthippers of the lyuyng God: and they whiche in outwarde semblaunce appered to be true worthippers of God, shalbe found idolatres. Those that before were wrathefull, shall bee quiete of mynde and beneficiall to others: and suche as serued the lustes of concupiscence and lecherie before, shal now loue and embrace all chastitie. They whiche before were pollers and catchers away of mens gooddes, shal now freely without sparynge geue awaye of their owne. To this manne therfore that shall make suche an alteration and chaunge of thynges, prepare your selues. The lorde wyll euen within a litell whyle be here present in this worlde: & not only ꝑ Iewes shall see hym, but all the nacions of the whole worlde shal with the yes of faith beholde him that is the autour and geuer of saluacion: by and through whom, God maketh a free offer of the blisse of heauen, unto all such persons as through godly promptnesse and readinesse to beleue, and through correccion and amendment of their former iyues, shal receiue hym whan he cumeth.

Then said he to the people that were cum forth to be baptised of hym: O ye generacion of vipers, who hath taught you to flee from the warthe to cume: bring ye forth therfore thy owne fruites of repentaunce, and begin not to say with your selues: we haue Abraham to our father. For I say unto you: God is able of these stones, to raise up children unto Abraham. Now also is the axe layed unto the roote of the trees: euery tree therfore which he bringeth not forth the good fruite, is hewen downe, and cast into the fyer. The texte.

All this had Esai so many hundred yeres before prophecied of Iohn: & nothing there was, but in the end it came to passe, and proued agreable unto the prophecie in euery behalf, and in euery pointe. For at Iohns preachynge, a great multitude of people leauing their houses (and declaryng by the same their doing as plainly as if they had spoken it in wordes, that whoso ernestly minderh or desireth to attain to saluacion, must doe away and forsake the carnall affeccions that he hath at home in the house of his herte,) did by heapes resort unto the shore of flume Iordane, that they might be diepped in water by him: not that Iohn was a forgeuer of sinnes, or could so doe: but because that he with this beginyng and preamble, did prepare folkes hertes and mindes unto the redempcion and saluacion that was cuming. For a good great part and towardnes of health it is, to ackno wlage ones self to be sick: and a great auauntage and forderle towardes recouerie hath that persone, whiche is apte and willyng to take that maye bee a remedye for his disease. And forasmuche as the first steppe and degree to amendment springeth oute of the feare of god, (so that we first feare the iuste punishment at the handes of the righteous auenger, & than loue the liberalitie of so bounteous a lord,) Iohn eryed out with a great boldnes and plainnesse against ỹ proude Pharises, and Scribes, who tofore had euer sticked fast & continued in the steppes of their wicked fathers, and through the false persuasion of righteousenes wer puffed up in pride, though they wer strage enemies unto true religion, setting other mē at naught, and standing highly in their owne conceytes, for none other cause so muche, as for the respect that they wer descended of Abraham, by the lynage and discent of the flesche, as thoughe God esteemed men after their kinred or linage, and not rather according to the beetues and godly qualities of their mindes. O ye generacion of vipers (saith he) moste vicious and corrupte children, descended of moste vicious and corrupt auncestrie: whereby haue ye perceiued and found out that the vengeaunce of god hangeth ouer you, vnlesse ye in season amend your liues? What person hathe geuen you any bywarnynge or watche worde to flee from the moste sharpe punishement and scourge of god, whiche shal spare no age, whiche shall pardone no nacion, nor shall shewe fauour to no degree, or estate of men highe or lowe? Lyke as remedie is offered unto all suche as will yelde themselues to be cured and healed: so dooeth punishement abide all persones indifferently without exception, as many as refuse to amend from their olde naughty behauiour and conuersacion. Why dyd not entier loue towardes god allure you hither before, as well as the feare and dread of punyshemente doeth violently hale you hither nowe at this present? your mindes and hartes are as And he said to the people.

yet nothyng chaunged at all. Wherefore yf ye without any feynyng or dissimulacion bee penitent and sorye for your wicked life past, chaunge your conditions, & be ye of an other sort of conuersacion, thē heretofore ye haue been, & declare plainly by your very dooinges, that ye are reformed and emended. Ye haue vnto this day hitherto lyke wylde trees, brought forthe the soure & pestilent fruites of euyll workes, that is to wete, pryde, wrathfulnesse, auarice, enuie, hypocrisie, & contencion. Now if ye bē in very dede tourned from euil trees vnto good trees: bryng ye forth good fruites, suche as maye testifye your hertes to be truly altered vnto a better frame. It is not here now requisite nor any thyng material that ye chaūge your garmētes, or to leaue & take this or that kind of meat, but ye must chaūge the euill lustes of your hertes. This is in very dede the roote of the tree, which roote if it haue a bitter and a venemous sape, thā spryng there none but euill fruites out of ỹ braūches: but contrariwyse if the roote minister & sende vp a pleasaūt & holsome sape to the boughes, than do there grow forth vpon the braunches those fruites of the spirite, that are semely for god, & worthy acceptacion, that is to wete, entier loue instede of hatred: for bitter frouning, godly ioye and lightnes of hert: for discord, peace: for fiercenes, sufferaunce: for snatchyng and polling liberalitie: for lecherousnes, chastitie: for deceitful craftinges, simplicitie and plain dealyng: for presūpteous taking vpon him, humble sobrenes: for superstizion, true godlyneſſe. These are the thynges whiche declare who be the true and vncounterfayted Iewes: these be the thynges that declare who be circumcysed as they ought to be, and who are the verye true chyldren of Abraham in dede, these sacrifices they are, that god is delyted withal.

And begyn nor to sarc with youre selues: wee haue Abraham to ourre father.

Now is the lyght at hande, let shadowes passe awaye: the truthe is in place, away with al counterfait hipocrisie: doe away your payne confydence whiche the figures of ghostely thynges haue nourysshed in you, and not the thinges selfes: as for exaumple, whan ye say in the way of glorifyng: Hierusalem that holy citie of ours: the lordes tēple, the lordes temple, the lordes tēple: also such figures of thinges as here followeth, that is to wete, slaughter of bruite beastes in sacrifice: ordeining and solemne halowing of sabboth dayes: obseruyng of newe moones: choice and difference betweene one meate & an other, bode borders vpō vestures (wherwith ye call your phylacteries) fastyng and abstinence, with heuinesse & louring of countenaunce: & the residue of obseruaunces a great manye, whiche eyther the lawe did for a tyme prescribe and apoint as figures of thinges, to be referred to the myndes: or els ỹ Pharisees haue inuēted for a vain pretense of holines: al these thynges euery one, with circumcision it self, and altogether, shal ceasse and be abolyshed. And suche an one shall from henceforth bee esteemed for a Iewe of the right sorte, whatsoeuer he be, that shall confesse and acknowelage him, whose comyng shall now ere long be seen to the world. And suche an one shall bee taken for a man rightly circumcised as he shoulde bee, whosoeuer shall haue an herte pourged through fayth, from all inordinate lustes and desires. Let it therfore no more enter into your hertes to thynke with your selues vainglorioufly: It is we that are the heritage, the succession and children of Abrahā, it is we and none els, to whom the inheritaunce of saluacion hathe been promised, the Lorde wyll not forsake vs that are his people. Nay I say vnto you, that like as the wickednesse of your forefathers shalbe nothyng preiudiciall no⁹ hurtful to you, in case ye amend and take better waies: euen so shall the holinesse of your progenitour Abraham nothyng auayle you, yf ye wyll still continue in your olde vngodlinesse. Ye will be caste away, ye will surely bee disherited, ye will vtterly perishe to eternall damnation, onlesse ye beyng conuerted and turned to better life, ye bryng fo⁹th e fuche fruites, as maye semely and wo⁹thily stand with the ghospell. Neither shall Abraham be destitute of posteritie o⁹ succession, no⁹ god want a people of his own, of whō to bee condignely wurthipped and serued, and to whom to performe the inheritaunce by him p⁹omised, though ye should shrinke and fall awaye from him. Fo⁹ this dare I be bolde to auouche and assure vnto you, God is not vnhable, but hath power enough, euen of these stones here, to reise vp chyldrē vnto his frēde Abraham, to whom he p⁹omised issue and successiō, like in noumbre to the sandes of the sea, & to the sterres in the skye. In time hereafter to cum, the children of Abraham shalbe estemed & accepted, not after the kinred of bloud, but as euery one shall folowe, and resemble Abraham in faith. Abraham shal acknowelage and accepte fo⁹ his children, euen the Sogdiās, the Gotthyans, and the wylde Scythians, if they embrace Messias: & shall coumpte and repute you fo⁹ aliens and straunge bo⁹ne bastardes, onlesse ye turne to the faith & beleue. God hath hitherto shewed pacience & sufferaūce towardes you, though ye haue but euē so so b⁹ought fo⁹th ꝑ outward fruites of the lawe, such as they wer: that is to say, sacrifices, bowes, fastiges, washinges, difference of meates: and paryng away of the fo⁹eskin in circūcision. But these thinges had no mo⁹e but superficially an outward apparaunce of religion. And these are but leaues of the tree, detestable afo⁹e God, except ꝑ fruites of the spirite bee ioyned therewith. But no we from hensefo⁹th shal euery body be estemed according to the true treasures of the hert & the soule euen as they shalbe founde good o⁹ euill.

God is able of these stones to reise vp children vnto Abraham.

Now is there cum a mo⁹e streight and precise iudgemente of God: and cum he is, that seeth the botome of the depest secretes of the herte. Fo⁹ now is the axe euen ready set hard by ꝑ roote of the tree, that hath so long time been sufered. Abrahās people shalbe hewed away frō the stem therof, & the heathen (so many as in prompte readynes of beleuing shall resemble Abraham) shall be graffed in their places. Moses had no eare geuen vnto him: the prophetes were not harkened vnto, of whome a great many ye slew and put to death: at the boyce of the lawe, ye haue hitherto been of dull and deaf eares: now is he cum, whose greater there can none be sēt, and after whom there is none to bee loked fo⁹. Utter perysshing fo⁹ euer hangeth ouer the whole nacion of the Israelites, except ye repente betime and grow to mo⁹e goodnesse: Fo⁹ euery tree whiche shall not now bryng fo⁹th the good frute of faith, shalbe felled downe, and cast into the fyer. Meane is there none, no⁹ respect is there none: but either thro⁹ugh true godlynes, to make haste vnto euerlastyng saluacion: o⁹ not so doyng, remediles and vtterly to be damned fo⁹ euer.

Nowe also is the axe layed to the roten of the trees.

Euery tree therfore.

And the people asked him, saying: what shal we do then? He answereth, faith vnto them: he that hath two coates, let him part with him that hath none: and he that hath meat, let him do likewise. The texte

The commonmultitude of the Iewes beeyng sore adrade with these terrible, and manacing wo⁹des of John, saied vnto him: If it be so as ye saie, what thynke ye than good fo⁹ vs to dooe, wherby to auoyde and escape the wrathe of God, and to atteyn saluacion? Now beganne they to ware sum-what curable & toward to be healed, whē they acknowlaged their diseases, and earnestly desyred remedie. John therefore sheweth them a remedye of perfecte strength and efficacie at all assayes. For he calleth them not nere hereto, but leadeth them to the sacrifices of beastes, and suche other iudaicall meanes of pourging their synnes: but vnto the workes of charitie. God is with no sacrifice in the worlde more sooner pacified, then with beneficiall doyng to our neighbour. God hath no nede of any benefites of ours, but he suffereth it to be reckened as done to himself, whatsoeuer we bestow vpon our neighbour deyng in necessitie and nede. He that hath two coates (sayeth John) let hym couer his naked brother with the one of thē. And he that hath as much meate as may suffise for twayne, let him gene halfe therof to an other that is hungrie. With these two exaumples John taught the people of the grosse and blockishe ignoraunt multitude, that the most strongest and effectuall meane to appeace God beyng offended with vs, is, if we by all meanes be cēāke and bountiful in doyng good to our neighbour, whatsoeuer thyng he hath nede of: whether it bee apparell, or meate, or drinke, or harbourgh, or ayde & succour against violence, or counfortable wordes in time of sorow, or doctrine for his instruction, or good exhortation and counsayll. And bounden we bee to helpe the present necessitie of our brother, not only with part of those thinges whereof our selfes haue superfluitie or more then we neede, but also we ought to cut of a litle share of suche thynges, as myghte otherwyse stand vs in good stede for our own vses and occupiyng, as often as our neyghbours necessitie requireth present helpe out of hand. This remedy than it was that was geuen by John to the common multitude, whiche remedie neuertheles serueth for all men indifferently.

De that hathe two coates, &c.

Than came the publicans also to be baptised, and said vnto him: master, what shal we do?
The texte. And he said vnto them: require no more then that which is appointed vnto you.

Than came also the Publicans, that is to saye, the customers and takers vp of tolles, beeyng semblably stryken with great feare of Johns preachyng, whereas otherwise they were a kynde of people geuen to pollyng, & rauine, and getting all that they might for their owne singuler aduauntage, and lucre, with all others memes losse and dammage, and hinderaunce, mē nothig passyng on religion or on the feare of God, but more ready to obey the commaundementes of worldly princes, then the preceptes of God: whiche sorte of men, where as they haue an euyll name among all nations, and bee commonly yll spoken of, yet among the Jewes they wer specially aboue al other sortes of men abhorred and reputed abominable. And yet ꝑ sore sharpe preachyng of John had stryken suche an horrible great feare into theym all, that euen they too, as euill as they were, came to John, requiryng baptisme, and desiryng to learne how and what way thei might appeace the wrath of god. And John ꝑ true foregoer & messenger of him, who would driue back or put away no man (were he neuer so muche spotted or defiled with sinne) made a soft and a iemle answer euen to Publicans also: yf ye cannot yet (saith he) fynde in your hertes to gene out to the poore & nedye sum parte of that that is your proper owne: yet at lest wise make ye this one steppe towardes a better life, that frō henceforth ye holde your handes from pollyng and catchynge awaye the goodes of other men. Ye haue an annuall stipende and an ordynary fee of Cesar: and it is rated out vnto you by a playne rule, howe muche or lyttle litle ye ought to require of the people for any duetie.

¶ The souldiers lykewyse demaunded of him, saying: And what shall we do? And he sayd vnto them: hurt ye no man, neither trouble any man wrongfully. And bee content with your The texte wages.

After the Publicans, came souldiers also, an vnruely and an vngodly kynde of people, hauyng no regarde ne care of any lawes, ready and yaste to do wrong, and felowes that vsed to sell their life and soule for money, setting al their delite & felicitie in catching and robbing frō other mē, fierce and presumptuous through ouermuche libertie and sufferaunce. Neuertheles the feare of Gods vengeaunce fell vpon these mē too, and therfore they also came to John. They acknowleaged their wicked state of souldiership (as they vsed it, they desire baptisme, and require moreouer to be enstrurned, what possible meanes they might make, to haue god appeased towardes thē. It was surely in this kynde of mens great point of furtheraunce towardes healthe, that they would acknowleage their dyseale, and were pricked with desire of a better life. Therfore John would not at the first day aduenture to require in suche as they were, that they should shew beneficiall liberalitie towardes their neyghbour, because he thought it to bee a steppe sufficient and great enough for the first settyng forwarde towardes God, yf suche as they were would honestly refrain and kepe themselues from doing mischief aboute in places where thei cāe. And to speake more of this sort of mē, in dede thei are wont to be noysom and hurtfull in thie poynts especially, that is to were, in violent oppression, in laying to mens charges, and burdenyng them with false crimes: and in pillage or robberye. For oftentymes the weapōs which the prynces haue deliuered vnto them for defeuse and mayntenaunce of the publique tranquillitie, they tourne to the hurte of their very own countreye men bring true subiectes, and do auenge theyr owne priuate malice with the same weapon, where with the safetie of the wholle people in general ought to haue been defended. So that oftentimes they goe on theuing for booties, and spoyle the countrey, they burne, they driue away mennes cattell, thei rauishe women, they breake vp mennes houses, they turne the good man of house where they haue been lodged or interrained, thei turne him cleane out of his owne doores, and pumble him about the pate.

And because they doe oftentymes play these partes, and haue nothynge sayd nor doon to them for it, they thynke they may doe it lawfully. Agayn, sum of them promote false playntes against honest simple men before their princes or captains, for none other purpose, sauyng that a portion of ỳ parties gooddes beeyng seased as a forfayte, maye cum to their snapshare in rewarde of their false accusacion maliciously and slaunderously prepesed. And at suche vngracious prankes the princes do oftentymes wynke, whyle they ernestly tendre the gratifiyng of theyr seruauntes. Furthermore sum of this sorte of people, whan they prodigally consume and waste out vpon harlots, vpon dice, or in banketeyng, and reuellyng at the wyne, all that euer theyr Prynce dooeth in the name of a fee or stypende allowe theym, they make vp their losse agayne with pillyng and pickyng: and dooe not onelye leaue suche duties as they owe styll vnpayed, but also doe by playne extorcion pull frō poore house bandmen that that is no duetie at all: and so vnder the name and colour of warre, they thynke nothyng what euer it bee vnlawfull for the to do, whereas in very dede there is a due lawe of armes seruing for battail and warre, which in dede is not vtterly to be disallowed, in case it be attempted for a iust and a rightful cause, that is to saye, if it be made for the defence & mayntenaunce of the publique tranquillitie of a realme and countrey: yf the case so stand, that it cannot be auoyded: yf it bee enterprysed by godly Princes: yf with the consent of them, for whose behoue it is expedient or necessary that the warre should be made: yf it haue been denounced or proclaymed with all rytes and circumstaunces according to the lawe of armes: yf iustice and moderacion be vsed in it, that is to say, if warre be so kept, with a muche sparyng of bloudshed as possibly may be: if as fewe be slayne, as may be, especially of them that neuer gaue any cause to the warre: if the warryers without rashnes and hastines of the souldiers be ordered by the captaines: if there be no buckling together of the two armes, sauing only by such souldiers and men of armes as haue geuen their othe aforetyme to do as they ought to do and neuer otherwise: nor without a signe to bee geuen by commaundement of the captaynes whan they shall buckle together in fight: if euery body immediately hold their handes from fightyng, assone as euer the trompettes haue once blowen retraicte: if also as soone as it possibly may, the warre be ended and so breake vp. Vnto this sorte of men therfore doeth Iohn nothyng but shewe, what their accustomed vse is to do, and what thing from henceforth they ought to eschew, if they mynde to escape the vengeaunce of God. Strykyng beate ye no manne (saieth he) accuse no manne falsely for lucres sake: but bee ye contented with your ordinarie wages that is allowed you.

The texte. As the people were in a doubte, and all men mused in their hartes of Iohn, whether he were very Christ, Iohn answered and said vnto them all: I baptise you with water, but one stroger then I shall cum after me, whose shoe latchet I am not worthy to vnlooce: he shall baptise you with the holy ghost, and with fier. Whiche hath his fanne in his hand, and he will purge his floore, and gather the corne into his barne, but the chaffe will he burne with fier that neuer shal be quenched: and many other thinges in his exhortacion preached he vnto the people.

And with suche great authoritie were the premisses handled and doen by Iohn, that the people begoonne halfe to bee in opinion, that himself was the very Messias, of whose cummyng he preached vnto the. And this did a great many of the ym with secrete thynkynge caste in their hertes, though Iohn on his owne behalfe, by reason of his singular humilitie of hert, did as much as he could to hide his owne greatnesse. For this is the lyght and cockebrained fashion of the common multitude, that suche persones as they haue a speciall mynde and regarde vnto, they sette more pryce by, then there is cause or reason why: and suche as they beare hatred agaynst, suche do they mooste slaunderously repoze, finding fault with all thinges in the. But this earnest good fauour and opinion of the people, did well declare verye perfite humilitie in this most holy man, who was so ferre from taking vnto him the aduauntage of an other mans praise, that he stoutely refused the same, beeyng geuen vnto him of the peoples own voluntary offre. And the wrong opinio that the people wer in, did muche good for this one pointe, that the dignitie and worthynes of Christ being as yet knowe but to a few, was there alowed with a substanciall and an open testimonie in the face of the worlde. For Iohn assone as he by inspiracio of the holy ghost, wel perceiued the secrete thoughtes of the

For he that cummeth after me, is ſo ferre better thẽ I, that I (whom ye all beleue to be ſum great hygh manne of price) am vn-worthy to vnbuccle the latchet of his ſhooes. And euẽ very this that I haue, I haue of his bounteous goodneſſe. My doctrine is but very waſhe, yf it bee compared vnto his doctrine: my baptiſme is of no vertue, yf it be ſet by his baptiſme.

And loke how muche the ſpirite is of more ſtrength to entre and to perce, then is water, loke how muche the fier is of more ſtrengthe and effecte then is water, of ſo muche more power ſhal his baptiſme bee, then mine is: hytherto hath it been vnknowen, who were the true folowers of godlynes. In eaſye thyng it is to bee waſhed w̃ water, a light matter it is to ſyll a beaſte in ſacrifice: an eaſye poynte it is to forbeare eatyng of ſwynes fleſhe. But now dooeth ſuche doctrine cum to light, ſuche tymes dooe approche euen here at hand, that they can no longer be vnknowen who bee good folkes in very dede, and who bee otherwiſe. For he will cum to do thẽ thing that he hath ſo oftentimes thretened in the prophetes, which is, by a preciſe ſtreight iudgement, to diſcloſe a perfite difference betwene ỳ godly and the wicked. For he wyll haue in his hande a fanne, (for vnto this man is geuen all power in heauen and on yearth,) and with his fanne, whiche no man ſhall bee able to auoyde, he ſhall make cleane the flooze of his winno-wyng place, and there winnowe euery creature, tryng them with the wynde of the croſſe and afflictions.
